After a most careful consideration of the case and all of the authorities cited in the briefs of learned counsel, and also of other authorities not cited, we are of the opinion that the surety company cannot be held liable. We do not think there was any real or apparent authority vested in McCormick, the city clerk, to receive these moneys, and this fact was well known to Mr. Rivers when he paid the same to the clerk. It is the contention of appellee that the money was paid to the city clerk under color of his office. A careful examination of all the authorities in Mississippi, and those which have fallen under our observation in other states, however, leads us to the conclusion that before the bondsmen can be held in a case of this character there must at least have been some apparent authority for the receipt of the money by the official whose bond is in suit. In Adams v. Williams, 97 Miss. 113, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 835, 52 So. 865, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1129, the moneys came into possession of Williams by virtue of his being the treasurer of the levee board. In the case of Lewis v. State, 65 Miss. 468, 4 So. 429, it was the duty of the circuit clerk to issue witness certificates under certain circumstances. He had the real authority to issue these certificates in proper cases; he therefore had apparent authority to issue any witness certificates, and the forged certificates in that case were therefore issued under his apparent authority, or colore officii. In the case of Adams v. Saunders, 89 Miss. 799, 119 Am. St. Rep. 720, 42 So. 602, 11 Ann. Cas. 327, Saunders was the tax collector of Oktibbeha county, and had the apparent authority to collect the taxes therein collected by him. These taxes were therefore collected by him colore officii. In the case of State use of McLaurin v. McDaniel, 78 Miss. 1, 50 L.R.A. 118, 84 Am. St. Rep. 618, 27 So. 994, the mayor was acting within the apparent scope of the authority of his office, in the line of his official duty. His action was merely in excess of his jurisdiction, and, for that reason, what he did was done colore officii. The same rule was reannounced and affirmed in the case of Lizana v. State, 109 Miss. 464, 69 So. 292.

Under the above ordinance it is perfectly clear that the city clerk had no more apparent authority to receive this money from Rivers than did the city marshal or any other city official. He had no more right to receive it than a circuit or chancery clerk would have to go out and collect taxes. In the case of Matthews v. Montgomery, 25 Miss. 150, a suit against the sureties on the official bond of the clerk of Madison county, wherein it was alleged that the clerk had collected certain fees belonging to the sheriff, the court, in part, said: "The only question made is whether the action can be maintained on the bond. The bond is conditioned that the clerk shall faithfully perform those duties required of him by law. It is no part of his duties to collect or receive the fees due other officers of the court. He is not in such case the officer of the law to receive the fees, or the agent of the officer for that purpose, but only the agent of the party paying."

See also Lewis v. Johnson, Walk. (Miss.) 260; Furlong v. State, 58 Miss. 717; Brown v. Phipps, 6 Smedes & M. 51; Brown v. Mosely, 11 Smedes & M. 354.

It was held in the case of Brooks Oil Co. v. Weatherford, 91 Miss. 501, 44 So. 928, that, where a judgment debtor pays money to the sheriff in order to satisfy a judgment, but before any execution has been placed in the hands of the sheriff, this constituted no payment of the judgment. The court, in part, said: "When the payment was made to the sheriff, he was simply the agent of Weatherford, and, if he did not pay it over, Weatherford must look to him for it."

In the case of Alcorn v. State, 57 Miss. 273, it was held that the sureties on the bond of a chancery clerk are not liable for money received by him as a commissioner, though his appointment as such commissioner was by virtue of his office as chancery clerk. See also Denio v. State, 60 Miss. 949. The case of San Luis Obispo County v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 562, 41 Pac. 445, is similar in principle to the case under consideration: "A cause of action is stated against Farnum independently of the allegations relating to the bond, which may be treated as surplusage. That the money in question, having been collected by the tax collector for licenses, belonged to the county, is not questioned; but that it came to the hands of defendant Farnum as auditor is a conclusion of law wholly unsupported by the facts found. There is no provision of law authorizing the auditor to receive it, nor any authorizing the tax collector to pay over such moneys to him, or to anyone except the county treasurer. Having received the money, it was Farnum's duty to pay it over to the treasurer; but such duty did not arise out of his office, nor was it at all different from the duty which would have rested upon him to pay it over had he been a plain citizen, not holding any county office. Farnum did not even receive the money colore officii, for under on circumstances was he authorized or required by law to receive it. The condition of the bond sued upon is not that Farnum should be personally honest, or pay his personal debts, or discharge those private duties and obligations which he may have assumed; but the condition is that he 'shall well and faithfully perform all official duties required of him by law.' The 'official duties' here specified are the duties required by law of the county auditor, and none other."

The overwhelming weight of authority is in line with the decision above quoted. Before an act is done under color of office, there must be an appearance of right given under the law to do the act; or, in other words, there must be at least apparent authority for the doing of the act. When the city ordinance provides the only way for the handling of the street car fund, then there certainly can be no apparent authority for the payment of this fund to the city clerk. Rivers directly violated the ordinance when he did so. The city clerk violated the ordinance when he received the money. It was the duty of Rivers to have paid this money into the city depository. He failed so to do, but, by paying it over to the city clerk, he thereby merely made the clerk his agent to pay the money into the proper depository.

The money was not paid to McCormick either by virtue of his office or under color of his office. Before the surety can be held liable on this bond, it is necessary for the city to prove that the money came into the hands of the city clerk either virtute officii or colore officii, and this the proof fails to show. The decree of the lower court is reversed, and a decree will be entered here in favor of the appellant.

Suggestion of error overruled.

Annotation—Liability of public officer's bondsmen to public corporation for money received or collected by him without authority.

On right of public to fees unlawfully collected by officer for his own benefit, see note to State ex rel. McNary v. Dunbar, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1015.

On recovery of fees exacted by public officer for performing act for which he was not authorized to demand compensation, see note to Trower v. San Francisco, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 183.

And on liability of public officer or his bond for interest received on public money, see notes to Adams v. Williams, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 855, and State v. Schamber, L.R.A.1918B, 803.

The position taken by the court in UNITED STATES FIDELITY & G. Co. v. YAZOO CITY, ante, 395, that the bond of a public officer does not ordinarily cover money received or collected by him without at least "some apparent authority," is supported by practically all the cases cited in this annotation; but the question whether "apparent authority," without real authority, is sufficient to bind the sureties, is not so well settled, assuming, as the court apparently holds, that "apparent authority" constitutes color officii.

Thus, the court in State use of Board of Education v. Griffith (1906) 74 Ohio St. 80, 77 N. E. 686, 6 Ann. Cas. 917, said: "But it is insisted that the receipt of these moneys by the clerk was colore officii, if not virtute officii, and that for acts colore officii sureties are held responsible in this state. While there has been confusion of terms in some cases, and possibly a confusion of classification in some instances, yet this conclusion results from the cases in this state and elsewhere, that there are three classes of cases against sureties on official bonds: One class in which the officer acts, virtute officii, within his official authority, but unfaithfully or improperly exercised his official duties; and another class, in which the officer, while acting colore officii, with pretense of official authority, is guilty of trespass upon person or property. Of this class illustrations are found in State use of Story v. Jennings (1854) 4 Ohio St. 418, and Drolesbaugh v. Hill (1901) 64 Ohio St. 257, 60 N. E. 202. In both of the classes already named, the sureties are generally held to be liable. The third class is of those cases in which the officer has been guilty of misconduct which is wholly outside of the line of his official duty as defined by law. In this class of cases the sureties have generally, and we believe upon the soundest of reasoning, been held not to be liable."

Some courts have held that the sureties on the bond of a public officer are not liable to the public corporation for money received or collected not colore officii, raising a strong implication that they would be liable if the money had been so received or collected. State v. Cottle (1904) 29 Ohio C. C. 32; State use of Board of Education v. Griffith (1906) 74 Ohio St. 80, 77 N. E. 686, 6 Ann. Cas.

917; Sauer v. Madisonville (1908) 30 Ohio C. C. 681. If the cases holding official sureties liable to the individuals from whom they received the money can be regarded as analogous, many cases could be cited directly supporting this implication. See quotation from State use of Board of Education v. Griffith (Ohio) supra. See also cases cited in the note to McLendon v. State, 21 L.R.A. 738.

In State v. Cottle (Ohio) supra, it was held that the bondsmen for a school official who had received money that should have been paid to the treasurer, under an illegal order of the board of education, and had failed to account for it, were not liable, the court remarking that the money was not received colore officii, "because there were no other similar acts pertaining to his office prescribed by law."

In San Luis Obispo County v. Farnum (1895) 108 Cal. 563, 41 Pac. 455 (see quotation from this case by the court in UNITED STATES FIDELITY & G. Co. v. YAZOO CITY, ante, 395), it was alleged that the county auditor had received money from the license tax collector due to the county, but under the law the duty of the collector was to pay the money to the county treasurer, and the county auditor had no authority to receive it. The court held that the money could not have been received colore officii; hence the auditor's official sureties were not liable to the county, even though it never received the money from the auditor.

Where a county assessor collected taxes that should have been collected by other officials, according to statute, and failed to account to the county for the same, the county cannot hold his official sureties liable, since the collection was not made colore officii. Bute v. Bennetts (1915) 51 Mont. 27, 149 Pac. 92.

"Color of his office," as used in a statute providing that "every official bond is obligatory on the principal and sureties thereon . . . for the use and benefit of every person who is injured as well by any wrongful act committed under color of his office as by his failure to perform, or the improper or neglectful performance of those duties imposed by law," means that whenever a public officer claims that a fee is due him for services which he claims he rendered as a public officer, the claim is made under "color of his office," and if he receives that fee, he receives it under color of his office, and his bondsmen are liable if he receives such fee illegally. Mobile L.R.A.1918C.

County v. Williams (1913) 180 Ala. 639, 61 So. 963.

Other courts have held that money collected colore officii, but not by virtue of office, is not within the rule that the sureties on the officer's bond are liable for money lost or misappropriated. State v. Porter (1903) 69 Neb. 203, 95 N. W. 769; People v. Pennock (1875) 60 N. Y. 421; Lowe v. Guthrie (1896) 4 Okla. 287, 44 Pac. 198; McCrory v. Woods County (1915) 48 Okla. 684, 150 Pac. 683; Hughes v. Oklahoma County (1915) 50 Okla. 410, 150 Pac. 1029; Creek County v. Vaughn (1915) — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 115; Shelton v. State (1917) — Okla. —, 162 Pac. 224.

So, in Hughes v. Oklahoma County (1915) 50 Okla. 410, 150 Pac. 1029, supra, where the officer had presented excessive claims for fees and emoluments, and the county had paid more than was allowed by law, the court said: "But it is said that the clerk received these sums by virtue of his office, because he had the lawful right to present his claims for compensation. It is granted that he had such right, but it by no means follows that, because he had the right to claim lawful compensation, this right would embrace a claim for sums to which he was not entitled, and the payment of which to him would be in violation of law. Therefore we are fully convinced that in claiming and receiving from Oklahoma county these sums to which he was not entitled, he was a mere trespasser, if such a term may properly be applied to this kind of conduct; in other words, these sums came into his hands in no sense virtute officii, and the most that can be said would be that they came into his hands colore officii. An officer's bond was not intended to, and does not, cover all the things he may do or fail to do while in office. Its purpose is to guarantee the officer's conduct and good faith in performing his official duties; and its obligation, as has been seen, extends only to such officer's sins of commission and omission in the performance of, or failure to perform, some duty of his office. It was not the duty of his office to get money illegally from the treasury of Oklahoma county under the claim and guise of compensation. Besides, the board of county commissioners are in a sense managers and administrative agents of the county; they have charge of the expenditures of the county funds; it was their business to safeguard those funds and see to it that they were not paid out improperly to officers or anybody else who might see fit to make a claim. This loss has occurred, primarily, through their dereliction: it was their error. While the clerk participated to the extent of making the claims, the grievous fault was with the board of county commissioners in erroneously paying them. To extend the obligation of this bond to cover sums so paid seems to us too much like holding it for the default of other officers, for which they had no intention to become surety. Therefore it seems quite clear to us that the items under discussion are not covered by the obligation of the bond."

So, where the secretary of state collected money under a statute which purported to authorize the collection, but which was held unconstitutional by the court, it was held that the collection was under color of the office, but not by virtue thereof; hence the sureties were not liable. State v. Porter (Neb.) supra.

And where the statute directs that taxes levied by the board of supervisors for the relief of the poor to be paid to the overseers of the poor, and those levied for highway purposes be paid to the commissioners of highways, the official bondsmen of a supervisor are not liable for money collected for these purposes, paid by the collector to the supervisor and misappropriated by him, for the reason that the money was not received by virtue of the office, but merely colore officii, even though the warrant issued to the collector directed him to pay the money to the supervisor, the condition of the bond being that the official should account for all moneys coming into his hands "as supervisor." People v. Pennock (1875) 60 N. Y. 421, supra.

Sureties on the bond of a justice of the peace are not liable to the county for money received by the officer through the illegal action of the county commissioners, since such money is not received by virtue of the office. Creek County v. Vaughn (1915) — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 115.

Where the county, after the expiration of the term of its county clerk, and after his successor has taken charge of the office, pays him money to which he is not entitled, but which is supposed to be due him for fees earned while in office, and he fails to return the money, the sureties on his official bond are not liable for the amount, since he does not receive the money by virtue of his office. People use of Logan County v. Toomey (1887) 122 Ill. 308, 13 N. E. 521.

The sureties on the official bond of a county attorney are not liable to the state for money collected by him on notes given by farmers for seed furnished by the state, which the law requires to be collected by the county commissioners, it not being the official duty of the county attorney to collect the money. Wilson v. State (1903) 67 Kan. 44, 72 Pac. 517.

In view of the difference of opinion among the courts not only as to what constitutes colore officii, but as to the effect of receiving or collecting money under color of office to make the officer's bondsmen liable, the more practical way would seem to be to decide each case upon the particular facts, having regard to the wording of the bond in connection with the statute under which it was given, and applying the well-settled rule that sureties are entitled to a strict, although perhaps not a technical, construction of the instrument. This method of dealing with the question necessarily involves the question, not treated in the present annotation, of what constitutes authority. A few cases are set out below for the purpose of illustration, but the list is not intended to be exhaustive.

The sureties of the auditor of the District of Columbia are not liable for moneys received by the clerk in the auditor's office as money for street improvement under the rules promulgated by the commissioners of the District, for the reason that the commissioners had no authority to make rules on the subject; hence the taxes were not public money, and the auditor's office had no authority to receive the money as a public fund. District of Columbia v. Petty (1913) 229 U. S. 593, 57 L. ed. 1343, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881.

The official bond of a county judge does not cover money that he received over and above his salary for work which he had no legal right to perform, and for which the county had no right to pay him. Clark v. Logan County (1910) 138 Ky. 676, 128 S. W. 1079. The same is true of fees received by a county clerk under orders that the court had no legal authority to make. Elliott v. Com. (1911) 144 Ky. 335, 138 S. W. 300. But the official bond covers the amount that such clerk received from the county on forged warrants drawn upon the treasurer. Title Guaranty & S. Co. v. Com. (1912) 146 Ky. 702, 143 S. W. 401.

Likewise, it was held in Furlong v. State (1881) 58 Miss. 717, that the bondsmen of a sheriff are not liable for money received by him from the state for boarding prisoners, even though his statement of claim upon which he obtained the money was false and the money thus fraudulently secured. The decision is based upon the finding that the claim was that of the individual, and not of the officer.

And where the duty of collecting insurance fees is, by the Constitution, imposed upon the state treasurer, the sureties of the state auditor are not liable to the state if the auditor collects such fees and fails to account to the state for them. State v. Moore (1898) 56 Neb. 82, 76 N. W. 474.

"The sureties on the bond of a county clerk are not liable for the proceeds arising from the sale of vacant lands, where there is no order of court authorizing him to receive such funds." Hoover v. Wortham (1880) 1 Ky. L. Rep. 59. It is not clear from the abstract report of this case whether or not the effort to collect was made on behalf of an individual.

In State use of Baltimore v. Norwood (1858) 12 Md. 177, it was held that, since it was no part of the duties of the clerk of the court of common pleas to collect the license fees of taverns, his official sureties were not liable for money which he collected for such licenses, for which he failed to account to the public authorities.

Likewise, it was held in State v. Moeller (1871) 48 Mo. 331, that the sureties on the bond of the clerk of the county court were not liable for money collected and appropriated by him, as moneys arising from the sale of swamp lands and as moneys received under the Stray Act, it not being the legal duty of the clerk to receive such moneys.

But it has been held that, although there was no law authorizing a county auditor to receive the fees for issuing marriage licenses, his sureties are liable on his official bond if he receives such fees and embezzles them, since the fees were paid to him by reason of his official position. Skagit County v. American Bonding Co. (1910) 59 Wash. 8, 100 Pac. 199.

The proceeds of bonds and fines in criminal prosecutions, payable to the county treasurer upon receipt of them by the state's attorney for the county, are "moneys belonging to the state," within the meaning of the bond given by the state's attorney conditioned that such officer shall "annually account for, and pay over according to law, all moneys belonging to the state which he may receive as attorney for the state," so that the sureties on such bond are liable in an action by the state treasurer for all such money collected by the state's attorney, even though he has accounted for all money that is by law payable to the state treasurer. Gilbert v. Isham (1844) 16 Conn. 525.

Where a city treasurer reported to the council, as required by statute, the amount of money he had collected as treasurer, including some collected illegally,—some that neither he nor any other official had a legal right to collect,—it was held, in Philipsburg v. Degenhart (1904) 30 Mont. 299, 76 Pac. 694, that his official bondsmen were liable for the money at the suit of the city, it alleging a failure to account, for the reason that the report was an acknowledgment that he had collected the money "as city treasurer," and all such money is covered by the bonds. J. W. M.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

WILLIAM G. BARRETT et al., Respts.,
v.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Appt.

(220 N. Y. 423, 116 N. E. 99.)

Game — protection of beavers — destruction of property.

1. The state may protect wild beavers although they are destructive to private property.

For other cases, see Game and Game Laws, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For constitutionality of game laws as affected by the fact that the game protected is destructive of private property, see annotation following this case, post, 404.

L.R.A.1918C.

Same — police power — protection of beaver dams.

2. Forbidding the destruction of beaver dams is a proper exercise of the police power, although the beavers will destroy trees on neighboring land for food, if the owner of the trees is not prohibited from protecting them by fencing or driving the beavers away from them.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

State — liability for injury by animals.

3. The state is not liable for injury to private property by beavers which it imports and attempts to protect by statute, whether the statute is constitutional or not. For other cases, see State, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 17, 1917.)

APPEAL by the State from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a determination of the Board of Claims in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for losses alleged to have been due to negligence of the State in not properly protecting trees on their lands from destruction by wild beaver. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edmund H. Lewis, with Mr. Egbert E. Woodbury, Attorney General, for the State:

The statutes enacted for the protection and preservation of beaver were within the proper exercise of police power.

Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600; People v. Bootman, 180 N. Y. 1, 72 N. E. 505, 2 Ann. Cas. 226; Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 10 Am. Rep. 140; People ex rel. Hill v. Hesterberg, 184 N. Y. 126, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 163, 128 Am. St. Rep. 528, 76 N. E. 1032, 6 Ann. Cas. 353, affirmed in 211 U. S. 31, 53 L. ed. 75, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Lawton v. Steele, 119 N. Y. 226, 7 L.R.A. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 813, 23 N. E. 878, affirmed in 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; People v. Griswold, 213 N. Y. 92, L.R.A. 1915D, 538, 106 N. E. 929; People v. C. Klinck Packing Co. 214 N. Y. 121, 108 N. E. 278, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1051; People ex rel. Knoblauch v. Warden, 216 N. Y. 154, 110 N. E. 451.

The protection of beaver being a valid exercise of police power, the injury for which claimants seek relief herein is damnum absque injuria.

Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140; Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385; Uppington v. New York, 165 N. Y. 222, 53 L.R.A. 550, 59 N. E. 91, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 115; Fries v. New York & H. R. Co. 169 N. Y. 270, 62 N. E. 358; Muhlker v. New York & H. R. Co. 173 N. Y. 549, 66 N. E. 558; Chase-Hibbard Mill. Co. v. Elmira, 207 N. Y. 460, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470, 101 N. E. 158.

Where an injured party has it within his power to take reasonable measures by which his loss may be prevented, his omission to avail himself of such means defeats his recovery.

8 R. C. L. p. 442; Milton v. Hudson River S. B. Co. 37 N. Y. 214; Beattie v. New York & L. I. Constr. Co. 196 N. Y. 346, 89 N. E. 831; Rexter v. Starin, 73 N. Y. 601; Hogle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 28 Hun, 363.

Messrs. Burns & Fenno, for respondents:

The state owned and was in actual physical possession of the beaver liberated on Eagle creek. The act of the state in liberating the beaver, knowing of their natural propensity to destroy trees, makes the state liable for the damage done to claimants' property by the beaver.

Cooley, Torts, p. 122; State v. House, 65 N. C. 315, 6 Am. Rep. 744; Keshan v. Gates, 2 Thomp. & C. 288; Worth v. Gilling, L. R. 2 C. P. 3; Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. 516, 49 Am. Dec. 346, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 428; Earl v. Van Alstyne, 8 Barb. 633; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 25 L. ed. 487, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 375.

The legislature has the authority to make reasonable regulations as to the preservation of game. It has not the right, however, under the guise of police power, to protect an animal such as the beaver which is known to be destructive to property. This is an unreasonable exercise of the police power, and the acts protecting the beaver are unconstitutional.

People v. Bootman, 180 N. Y. 1, 72 N. E. 505, 2 Ann. Cas. 226; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L.R.A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 533, 40 L. ed. 798, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At one time beaver were very numerous in this state. So important were they commercially that they were represented upon the seal of the New Netherlands and upon that of the colony as well as upon the seals of New Amsterdam and of New York. Because of their value, they were relentlessly killed, and by the year 1900 they were practically exterminated. But some fifteen animals were left scattered through the southern portion of Franklin county. In that year the legislature undertook to afford them complete protection, and there has been no open season for beaver since the enactment of chapter 20 of the Laws of 1900.

In 1904 it was further provided that "no person shall molest or disturb any wild beaver or the dams, houses, homes or abiding places of same." Laws 1904, chap. 674, § 1.

This is still the law, although in 1912 the Forest, Fish, and Game Commission was authorized to permit protected animals which had become destructive to public or private property to be taken and disposed of. Laws 1912, chap. 318.

By the Act of 1904, $500 was appropriated for the purchase of wild beaver to restock the Adirondacks, and in 1906 $1,000 more was appropriated for the same purpose. The Commission, after purchasing the animals, was authorized to liberate them. Under this authority twenty-one beaver have been purchased and freed by the Commission. Of these four were placed upon Eagle creek, an inlet of the Fourth lake of the Fulton chain. There they seem to have remained and increased.

Beaver are naturally destructive to certain kinds of forest trees. During the fall and winter they live upon the bark of the twigs and smaller branches of poplar, birch, and alder. To obtain a supply they fell even trees of large size, cut the smaller branches into suitable lengths, and pull or float them to their houses. All this, it must be assumed, was known by the legislature as early as 1900.

The claimants own a valuable tract of woodland upon Fourth lake bounded in the rear by Eagle creek. Their land was held by them for building sites and was suitable for that purpose. Much of its attractiveness depended upon the forest grown upon it. In this forest were a number of poplar trees. In 1912 and during two or three years prior thereto 198 of these poplars were felled by beaver. Others were girdled and destroyed. The Board of Claims has found, upon evidence that fairly justifies the inference, that this destruction was caused by the four beaver liberated on Eagle creek and their descendants, and that by reason thereof the claimants have been damaged in the sum of $1,900. An award was made to them for that sum, and this award has been affirmed by the appellate division. To sustain it the respondents rely upon three propositions. It is said: First, that the state may not protect such an animal as the beaver which is known to be destructive; second, that the provision of the Law of 1904 with regard to the molestation of beaver prohibits the claimants from protecting their property, and is therefore an unreasonable exercise of the police power; and, third, that the state was in actual physical possession of the beaver placed on Eagle creek, and that its act in freeing them, knowing their natural propensity to destroy trees, makes the state liable for the damage done by them.

We cannot agree with either of these propositions.

As to the first, the general right of the government to protect wild animals is too well established to be now called in question. Their ownership is in the state in its sovereign capacity, for the benefit of all the people. Their preservation is a matter of public interest. They are a species of natural wealth which without special protection would be destroyed. Everywhere and at all times governments have assumed the right to prescribe how and when they may be taken or killed. As early as 1705, New York passed such an act as to deer. Colonial R.A. 1918C.

al Laws, vol. 1, p. 585. A series of statutes has followed protecting more or less completely game, birds, and fish. "The protection and preservation of game has been secured by law in all civilized countries, and may be justified on many grounds. . . . The measures best adapted to this end are for the legislature to determine, and courts cannot review its discretion. If the regulations operate, in any respect, unjustly or oppressively, the proper remedy must be applied by that body." Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 14, 19 Am. Rep. 140.

Wherever protection is accorded, harm may be done to the individual. Deer or moose may browse on his crops; mink or skunks kill his chickens; robins eat his cherries. In certain cases the legislature may be mistaken in its belief that more good than harm is occasioned. But this is clearly a matter which is confided to its discretion. It exercises a governmental function for the benefit of the public at large, and no one can complain of the incidental injuries that may result.

It is sought to draw a distinction between such animals and birds as have ordinarily received protection and beaver, on the ground that the latter are unusually destructive and that to preserve them is an unreasonable exercise of the power of the state.

The state may exercise the police power "wherever the public interests demand it, and in this particular a large discretion is necessarily vested in the legislature to determine, not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests. . . . To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear, first, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 136, 38 L. ed. 385, 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, 501.

The police power is not to be limited to guarding merely the physical or material interests of the citizen. His moral, intellectual, and spiritual needs may also be considered. The eagle is preserved, not for its use, but for its beauty.

The same thing may be said of the beaver. They are one of the most valuable of the fur-bearing animals of the state. They may be used for food. But apart from these considerations, their habits and customs, their curious instincts and intelligence, place them in a class by themselves. Observation of the animals at work or play is a source of never-failing interest and instruction. If they are to be preserved experience has taught us that protection is required. If they cause more damage than deer or moose, the degree of the mischief done by them is not so much greater or so different as to require the application of a special rule. If the preservation of the former does not unduly oppress individuals, neither does the latter.

In the determination of what is a reasonable exercise of the powers of the government, the acts of other governments under similar circumstances have some bearing. In Wyoming, Utah, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Maine, Colorado, and Vermont, beaver are absolutely protected. In Michigan, they are protected except between November 1st and May 15th of each year. In South Dakota, except between November 15th and April 2d. In Quebec, for a number of years there was no open season. Lately there has been an open season for a short time in the autumn.

We therefore reach the conclusion that in protecting beaver the legislature did not exceed its powers. Nor did it so do in prohibiting their molestation. It is possible that were the interpretation given by the respondents to this section right a different result might follow. If the claimants, finding beaver destroying their property, might not drive them away, then possibly their rights would be infringed. In Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339, it was said in an elaborate opinion, although this question we do not decide, that a farmer might shoot mink, even in the closed season, should he find them threatening his geese.

But such an interpretation is too rigid and narrow. The claimants might have fenced their land without violation of the statute. They might have driven the beaver away, were they injuring their property. The prohibition against disturbing dams or houses built on or adjoining watercourses is no greater or different exercise of power from that assumed by the legislature when it prohibits the destruction of the nests and eggs of wild birds even when the latter are found upon private property.

The object is to protect the beaver. That object, as we decide, is within the power of the state. The destruction of dams and houses will result in driving away the beaver. The prohibition of such acts, being an apt means to the end desired, is not so unreasonable as to be beyond the legislative power.

We hold, therefore, that the acts referred to are constitutional. But had we reached a different conclusion the respondents would not be aided. We know of no principle of law under which the state becomes liable because of the adoption of an unconstitutional statute. Such a statute is no protection to officers assuming to proceed under its authority. The state itself, if it permits such a claim to be enforced against it, may become liable for what they do. But the statute itself is void. No one need obey it. If no affirmative act is done under its supposed authority, neither the state nor its officers are liable, because the citizen chooses to obey where he need not have done so.

Somewhat different considerations apply to the act of the state in purchasing and liberating beaver. The attempt to introduce life into a new environment does not always result happily. The rabbit in Australia, the mongoose in the West Indies, have become pests. The English sparrow is no longer welcome. Certain of our most troublesome weeds are foreign flowers.

Yet governments have made such experiments in the belief that the public good would be promoted. Sometimes they have been mistaken. Again, the attempt has succeeded. The English pheasant is a valuable addition to our stock of birds. But whether a success or failure, the attempt is well within governmental powers.

If this is so with regard to foreign life, still more is it true with regard to animals native to the state, still existing here, when the intent is to increase the stock upon what the Constitution declares shall remain forever wild forest lands. If the state may provide for the increase of beaver by prohibiting their destruction, it is difficult to see why it may not attain the same result by removing colonies to a more favorable locality or by replacing those destroyed by fresh importations.

Nor are the cases cited by the respondents controlling. It is true that one who keeps wild animals in captivity must see to it at his peril that they do no damage to others. But it is not true that whenever an individual is liable for a certain act the state is liable for the same act. In liberating these beaver the state was acting as a government. As a trustee for the people and as their representative, it was doing what it thought best for the interests of the public at large. Under such circumstances, we cannot hold that the rule of such cases as those cited is applicable.

We reach the conclusion that no recovery can be had under this claim. It is assumed, both by the respondents and by the appellant, that the Board of Claims had jurisdiction to determine the questions involved. That we do not discuss.

The judgment of the Appellate Division and the determination of the Board of Claims must be reversed, and the claim dismissed, with costs in Appellate Division and in this court.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Chase, Hogan, Pound, McLaughlin, and Crame, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Constitutionality of game laws as affected by the fact that game protected is destructive of private property.

While there are many cases on the question of the constitutionality of game laws, and the power generally of the state to restrict or prohibit the killing of game is well established, the cases have not ordinarily considered the question from the standpoint taken in BARRETT v. NEW YORK, ante, 400. And a search has disclosed little authority on the question indicated in the title to the note. The cases involving the question have discussed it from the point of view of the property owner's right, notwithstanding the statute, to kill game found injuring his property.

Thus, it was held in State v. Ward (1915) 170 Iowa, 185, 152 N. W. 501, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 978, that in a prosecution for the killing of a deer in violation of a statute making it unlawful for anyone other than the owner, or person authorized by him, to kill any deer, elk, or goat, the defendant should be permitted to show in justification of the killing that, at the time thereof, the deer was on his premises engaged in destroying his crops. It appeared that in the neighborhood of defendant's farm were a large number of deer, which for years had destroyed and greatly damaged his crops; that he had many times driven them away; and that no ordinary, lawful fence would serve as a protection. The court said: "It will be noted that the prohibition of this statute is absolute and unqualified in its terms. The one question in the case is whether a person who kills a deer, elk, or goat is necessarily guilty of violating the statute regardless of the reasons for such killing. To put it another way: Is it open to the defendant to justify an admitted killing by showing a reasonable necessity in defense of person or property? . . . It will be noted that the deer was killed not only while upon the defendant's premises, but while he was actually engaged in the destruction of the defendant's property. Giving the testimony the fullest credence, the deer was one of great voracity. He was capable of doing and was threatening to do great injury to defendant's property. By way of analogy, we may note that the plea of reasonable self-defense may always be interposed in justification of the killing of a human being. We see no fair reason for holding that the same plea may not be interposed in justification of the killing of a goat or a deer. The right of defense of person and property is a constitutional right . . . and is recognized in the construction of all statutes. If in this case it was reasonably necessary for the defendant to kill the deer in question in order to prevent substantial injury to this property, such fact, we have no doubt, would afford justification for the killing. . . . It will be noted that the act of killing, as contended by defendant, was wholly defensive and preventive. Whether a deer may be lawfully killed to-day by way of retaliation for the damage wrought by it yesterday, or whether it may be so killed by way of reprisal for damage wrought or threatened by other deer, are questions not involved herein, and we do not purport to pass on them."

And the above conclusion was held not affected by a statute declaring that the title of all wild game was in the state, and that the killing of wild game by any person should be deemed a consent of such person that the title should remain in the state, where the defendant did not attempt to appropriate the carcass of the deer which he had killed, but tendered it to the proper officer, as the purpose of the statute was merely to establish title in the state to all wild game, whether dead or alive.

In Aldrich v. Wright (1873) 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339, which is cited in BARRETT v. NEW YORK, a statute providing, under penalty, that between certain dates no person should destroy any mink, was construed as inapplicable to a case where one killed mink which were pursuing his geese. The court said: "The plaintiff's construction of this statute . . . admits the defendant's right of defending his geese, notwithstanding there is no clause in the statute expressly excepting and saving the right. As the legislature could not abolish the right, they are not presumed to have attempted an impossibility, or to have intended to pass a void act; and the statute is held valid by giving it a construction compatible with the Constitution, making it applicable only to those cases to which it can be constitutionally applied. . . . If they had consumed his entire stock of poultry he could not have justified his shot for obtaining their skins as the only available redress for their depredations; but while one of his birds remained he could lawfully defend it. He could have no indemnity for the past; but he was entitled to security for the future. Much as the statute had abridged his rights of hunting and reprisal, it had put him under no obligation to suffer the minks to eat, injure, or annoy his domestic fowls. His natural, common-law, and constitutional right of defense existed in full force and vigor, not repealed, nor in the slightest degree impaired or modified, by the statute." R. E. H.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

AARON FRETZ, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CITY OF EDMOND et al.

(— Okla. —, 168 Pac. 800.)

Pleading — construction.

1. In construing a pleading challenged by demurrer before trial the allegations thereon will ordinarily be construed against the pleader, and if material allegations are omitted, in the absence of an application to amend, it will be assumed that the facts to justify them do not exist.

For other cases, see Pleading, VII. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — operation of water plant.

2. Municipal corporations in operating a water plant exercise business and administrative functions rather than those strictly governmental in their nature, and in the exercise of such functions are governed largely by the same rules applicable to individuals or private corporations engaged in the same business.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — equality of rates.

3. Municipal corporations operating water plants are not required to give absolute equality of service or rates, but are only required not to act arbitrarily in exercising the discretion vested in them in such matters, and not to maintain a discrimination between patrons which is essentially unjust.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by BURFORD, C.

Note. — The power of a municipality operating a public utility to make a special rate to a particular person or institution is considered in the annotation following Eastern Illinois State Normal School v. Charleston, L.R.A.1916D, 996. It will be observed that the case referred to reaches a conclusion opposite to that in FRETZ v. EDMOND upon a very similar state of facts.

The general subject of the establishment and regulation of municipal water supply is treated in the note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33. Some phases of that note have been supplemented L.R.A.1918C.

Same — state institution — discrimination.

4. The law against unjust discriminations rests in public policy, and it is not in violation of the public policy of the state, in the absence of specific legislation on the subject, to permit discriminations by a municipality in favor of a state institution which redounds to the intellectual, moral, and commercial benefit of the general public resident in such municipality.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — donation of water.

5. Under the facts alleged in the instant case, held that the donation of water by the city of Edmond to the Central State Normal School does not constitute an unjust discrimination against a citizen, taxpayer, and water consumer of the city who is required to pay a fixed rate for water used by him.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 2, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition filed to enjoin defendants from furnishing to the State Normal School water free of charge. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Sam Hooker for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Wright & Blinn and John Roaten for defendants in error.

Burford, C., filed the following opinion:

The original petition in this cause contained three separate causes of action. In in notes in the present series, which may be found by consulting the L.R.A. Indexes under the title, "Waters," subtitle, "Public water supply."

The question whether a municipality in respect of its waterworks system acts in a private and corporate or in a public and governmental capacity is treated in its bearing on municipal liability for tort in connection therewith at page 58 of the note in 61 L.R.A. 33, and supplementary notes to Piper v. Madison, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 239, and Wigal v. Parkersburg, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465.

this court it is conceded that the matters contained in the second and third causes of action have become moot, and have been therefore abandoned by the plaintiff in error, leaving for our consideration only the ruling upon the first cause of action alleged. This part of the petition sets out that the plaintiff is and has been for a number of years last past a citizen, property owner, and resident taxpayer of the city of Edmond, Oklahoma; that the city of Edmond is a city of the first class; that the various defendants are its officers; that the city of Edmond owns and operates its own water plant or system in said city, and the revenue necessary for conducting said water plant is derived partially from payments by the various consumers of water and partially by general taxation; that at the time of the commencement of the action there were in force in said city ordinances fixing the water rates to consumers upon a sliding scale based upon the amount of water consumed, beginning at 25 cents per thousand gallons for the first 5,000 gallons used by the consumer in any month, and providing further that the minimum charge for water service to each consumer should be 50 cents per month. The petition further alleged that, by action of the council prior to the institution of the suit, it was proposed to donate to the Central State Normal School, an institution owned and maintained by the state in the city of Edmond, 2,400,000 gallons of water per annum free of charge, and that the resolution authorizing such action had been duly passed by the council. The petition then alleges that said action "is in violation of the law and contrary to the law of the state of Oklahoma, and contrary to the ordinances of the city of Edmond, and is an unjust discrimination against this plaintiff and the other taxpayers of the city of Edmond, and is a discrimination against this plaintiff and the other users of water of the city of Edmond, and does this plaintiff and the other taxpayers of the city of Edmond an irreparable injury, for which they have no adequate remedy at law."

The petition then prays for an order enjoining the defendants from making any physical connection between the said water plant and the Central State Normal School, and from furnishing said Central State Normal School any amount of water free of charge. To this petition a demurrer was interposed which was sustained by the trial court, and the plaintiff, electing to stand upon his petition, brings the cause here for review.

It will be noted, in the first instance, that the petition contains no allegation that either the water rate which the plaintiff is compelled to pay, or the taxes upon his property, will be increased by reason of the contemplated acts; nor is it alleged that if said acts be restrained either the water rents or his taxes will be reduced by reason thereof.

It is urged in the brief that the court must necessarily conclude from the allegations of the petition that in delivering free water to the Normal School there would be a cost to the city which the plaintiff, along with the other taxpayers and water consumers, would be compelled to pay; but this is not necessarily true, and if not necessarily true ought not to be presumed. Whatever may be the personal knowledge of either the trial or appellate tribunals in regard to the situation of the city of Edmond, so far as appears from this record there may be a surplus of water in the city which may be disposed of without involving any extra expenditure in the operation of the water plant. It may be true that the city of Edmond was and is supplied by gravity from the reservoir, such as a number of cities of this state, and that the capacity of the reservoir was such that the water donated to the Central State Normal School might be furnished without any cost whatever.

It is the settled rule of this court that "where a pleading is challenged before trial by demurrer, its language, where doubtful, will be construed against the pleader, upon the ground that, as he selects the language, he should make his meaning clear; and where in such a case a demurrer is sustained on account of the insufficiency of a pleading and no application for amendment is made, it will be presumed that the facts to justify it do not exist." Emmerson v. Botkin, 26 Okla. 218, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 786, 138 Am. St. Rep. 953, 109 Pac. 531; Atwood v. Rose, 32 Okla. 355, 122 Pac. 929; Schilling v. Moore, 34 Okla. 155, 125 Pac. 487.

And that "the rule of construction in such cases is that a material fact not alleged in a pleading is presumed not to exist." Lusk v. Porter, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 224.

The question raised by the petition and demurrer, therefore, must be determined, not upon the ground of any unlawful disposition of the public moneys or funds which the plaintiff, under proper circumstances and allegations, would be entitled to enjoin, but upon the averment of the plaintiff's petition that the donation of such water constitutes an unjust discrimination against him and his fellow citizens similarly situated. Section 472, Rev. Laws 1910, provides in part as follows: "All incorporated towns and cities in this state are hereby authorized and empowered to purchase, erect, lease, rent, manage, and maintain any system or part of system of waterworks, hydrants, and supply of water, telegraphing fire signals or fire apparatus that may be of use in the prevention and extinguishment of fires and for domestic purposes; and to pass all ordinances, penal or otherwise, that shall be necessary for the full protection, maintenance, management, and control of the property so leased, purchased, or erected."

Section 475 provides: "The city council of such city and the board of trustees of such town in connection with the mayor or president of said board shall have the power and authority, and it shall be their duty, to fix the rate of water rents or taxes to be paid by the consumer, and to ordain such rules and regulations, with appropriate penalties for the violation thereof, as such council or board of trustees may deem proper for the regulation and protection of said waterworks."

In exercising the authority conferred upon them by statute in relation to the conducting and maintenance of waterworks, it is clear that the officers of the city are not exercising, in any strict sense, the governmental or legislative powers by which the sovereignty of the city is maintained and its people governed, but that they are acting in a quasi public and quasi private capacity, exercising as the agent of the people mere business powers of the conduct of an enterprise for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality.

In Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 34 L.R.A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 271, the circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit, in defining the powers of a city in relation to the waterworks, said: "A city has two classes of powers: The one legislative, public, governmental, in the exercise of which it is a sovereignty and governs its people; the other, proprietary, quasi private, conferred upon it, not for the purpose of governing its people, but for the private advantage of the inhabitants of the city and of the city itself as a legal personality. In the exercise of the powers of the former class it is governed by the rule here invoked. In their exercise it is ruling its people, and is bound to transmit its powers of government to its successive sets of officers unimpaired. But in the exercise of the powers of the latter class it is controlled by no such rule, because it is acting and contracting for the private benefit of itself and its inhabitants; and it may exercise the business powers conferred upon it in the same way, and in their exercise it is to be governed by the same rules that govern L.R.A.1918C.

a private individual or corporation. Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 66, and cases cited in the note; Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 13 C. C. A. 375, 377, 378, 25 U. S. App. 166, 66 Fed. 143; San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453, 468, 469; Com. ex rel. Roman Catholic High School v. Philadelphia, 132 Pa. 288, 19 Atl. 136; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans, 42 La. Ann. 188, 192, 7 So. 560; Tacoma Hotel Co. v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 3 Wash. 316, 325, 14 L.R.A. 669, 28 Am. St. Rep. 35, 28 Pac. 519; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 154, 155, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 548; Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 126, 16 L.R.A. 485, 31 N. E. 577; Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & Coke Co. 66 Ind. 396, 403; State, Read, Prosecutor, v. Atlantic City, 49 N. J. L. 558, 562, 9 Atl. 759. In contracting for water works to supply itself and its inhabitants with water the city is not exercising its governmental or legislative powers, but its business or proprietary powers. The purpose of such a contract is not to govern its inhabitants, but to obtain a private benefit for the city itself and its citizens. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 27; Cincinnati v. Cameron, 83 Ohio St. 336, 367; Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Baltimore, supra, and cases cited under it."

The language of this opinion has been approved by the same court in Pike's Peak Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 44 C. C. A. 333, 106 Fed. 1; Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 736, 77 C. C. A. 267, 147 Fed. 1, 8 Ann. Cas. 614; and by the supreme court of Colorado in Colorado Springs v. Colorado City, 42 Colo. 75, 94 Pac. 316.

In Henderson v. Young, 119 Ky. 224, 88 S. W. 583, it is said:

"A statute conferring sovereign and governmental powers upon a city must be strictly construed, but powers given for the private advantage of it and its inhabitants are to be construed in accordance with the general rules that apply to private individuals or corporations.

"In the management and operation of an electric [light] plant a city is not exercising governmental or legislative powers, but mere business powers, and it may conduct such plant in the manner which in the judgment of the city council promises the greatest benefit to the city and its inhabitants, and courts will not interfere with the reasonable discretion of the council in such matters."

See, to the same effect, McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1801; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co. 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1203, and cases cited.

Acting, therefore, in such capacity, the rights of the city are to be determined largely upon the same principles which govern the acts of individuals or corporations in transacting the same quasi public services. McQuillin, Mun. Corp. §§ 3591, 3841, 3860; Feil v. Cœur D'Alene, 23 Idaho, 32, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1095, 129 Pac. 643, and cases cited; Henderson v. Young, supra. As to each the rule is not that there must not be any discrimination of any kind, but that there must be no unjust discrimination. McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 5389; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92, 45 L. ed. 765, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545.

In exercising the discretion vested in them to fix rates to the various consumers the city council are not bound, therefore, to give absolute equality of service and to fix an absolute equality of rate, but only to act so that there may be no arbitrary exercise of power, or substantial injustice done. Mr. Dillon, in his Work on Municipal Corporations (5th ed. p. 2212), says: "The rate is compensation for the service rendered, and an equitable determination of the price to be paid does not look alone to the quantity used by each consumer. The nature of the use and the benefit obtained from it, the number of persons who want it for such use, and, in the case of a city, the effect of a certain method of determining prices upon the revenues to be obtained by the city and upon the interests of property holders, are all to be considered."

It has often been held that a municipality may exact of a private corporation, as a condition of a franchise, free service to itself, or even to charitable or religious institutions within its borders. Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. 2237; Independent School Dist. v. Le Mars City Water & Light Co. 131 Iowa, 14, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 859, 107 N. W. 944; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Ashtabula Water Co. 20 Ohio C. C. 578, 10 Ohio C. D. 648; Superior v. Douglas County Teleph. Co. 141 Wis. 363, 122 N. W. 1023; New York Teleph. Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 202 N. Y. 502, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, 96 N. E. 109.

If a city, having the power to engage in the same business, may lawfully exact of a private corporation certain conditions in conducting that business, certainly it must be true that the city itself may perform the same condition.

In Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma R. Co. 20 Okla. 1, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 651, 93 Pac. 46, this court, in considering the provision of our Constitution forbidding free transportation by certain carriers, said: "It could not be successfully contended that, if the relator [the city] were directly engaged in the business of operating said street railway line, it could not carry said school children at the rates and under the terms designated in said franchise, or its policemen and firemen, the mail carriers, and children under five years of age when accompanied by a parent or guardian, without charge, on account of the provisions of § 13, art. 9, supra."

And this court further in that case distinctly held that the exaction by the city of free transportation for policemen, firemen, and carriers of the United States mail as a condition of the franchise granted the railway company was valid.

Upon these considerations, was the trial court justified in determining from the allegations of the petition that the discrimination between the State Normal School and the plaintiff was not unjust, or should he have held that, taking the allegations of the petition as true, the officers of the town abused the discretion vested in them by statute, and had acted otherwise than for the public in making this donation? It is not to be doubted that the presence of a great institution such as the Central State Normal School in the city of Edmond was of great public benefit both to the city of Edmond and its inhabitants. This court, in Sharp v. Guthrie, 49 Okla. 213, 152 Pac. 403-408, speaking through Mr. Justice Hardy on the location and maintenance of a university as the consideration for the transfer of lands owned by the city, said: "It will not be gainsaid that the maintenance of a high class institution of learning, such as is contemplated by the agreement, will be of much value and profit, both present and prospective, to the defendant city, and to the inhabitants thereof."

The contention that the city has the power in proper case to give from the resources of its public service plants to public institutions or public uses without unjustly discriminating against the rights of its inhabitants seems to be supported by reason, logic, and abstract justice. A fire originates within the borders of a city upon the property owned by some person who has never been a user of the city water. The fire is extinguished by water furnished by the city plant. Can it be said that the city is required to install a meter at some place upon the hose line in order to determine the number of thousand gallons for which the owner of the property must pay, or that, by failing so to do, and giving the water, not only for the benefit of the private individual, but for the benefit of the public, it unjustly discriminated against some person who has paid for all the water that he used? The statement of the proposition, of course, reveals its absurdity, and shows that the conduct of the city must be based, not upon absolute equality of service, but upon discrimination which is not essentially unjust. The public lavatories, rest rooms, public fountains, and public parks maintained by cities, are all places where water is donated for the public good. So it must seem that water might be given for use in the city hall, or the city's public buildings. Does the rule extend to those institutions which are owned and controlled, not by the city, but by the state? We can see no good reason for the distinction between them, where the state institution of learning is located within the city and redounds, as it must, both to the benefit of the business activities of the city and to the intellectual and moral life of its inhabitants. The support of the institution must be for the public good.

Speaking of the duties of private corporations engaged in public service duties, in Wyman on Public Service Corporations, § 1304, it is said: "It is generally said that special reductions or even free service may be given a government, of whatever grade it may be, without its being considered undue preference or illegal discrimination."

In McQuillin on Mun. Corp. p. 3594, it is said: "Discriminations in favor of the government or charitable institutions, however, are upheld. Discriminations in favor of the public at large are not opposed to public policy, inasmuch as they benefit the people generally by relieving them of part of their burdens, and such discrimination cannot be held illegal in the absence of legislation upon the subject."

And it might be said with equal force that discriminations to institutions which must vastly benefit not only the intellectual but the business life of the public must be upheld upon the same ground.

In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 699, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844, the Supreme Court of the United States held that under the common-law rule the property of the United States, state, county, or municipal corporations might be transported by the carrier on more favorable terms than for other parties without its being illegal discrimination.

Again, in Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034, the Supreme Court of the United States, passing upon an act of the state of New York which required the Consolidated Gas Company to furnish gas to the city of New York at a lower rate than it furnished to its general consumers, held that the act was not void by reason thereof, saying: L.R.A.1918C.

"We see no discrimination which is illegal, or for which good reasons could not be given."

In Twitchell v. Spokane, 55 Wash. 86, 24 L.R.A. 290, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1021, 104 Pac. 150, the supreme court of Washington, speaking of the control of the city over its waterworks, said: "A city owning its own waterworks may furnish water for city and charitable purposes free." And again: "The right of the city to furnish water for municipal and charitable purposes free can hardly be doubted."

In Preston v. Water Comrs. 117 Mich. 589, 76 N. W. 92, it was urged that the city "has no right to discriminate between consumers, or to exempt any user. It has no right to furnish water free to the public, to the board of education, or to charitable institutions." The trial court in its findings said: "The following use large quantities of water, and pay either no water rates, or nominal rates, entirely disproportioned to the amount of water used: Public institutions, or those in which the entire public is interested. Board of education pays $1,071, about one seventh of what it would have to pay if charged at the [same] rate as that charged consumers who have meters. Board of public works pays nothing for water used by it. Municipal buildings pay a nominal rate. Park boards pay no rates. All public fountains are furnished water free. Police department is charged nothing. Fire department pays no water rates. Markets pay nothing. All private charities . . . are furnished by the board on the city paying the nominal sum of $1,000. Cemeteries pay nothing. The question now presents itself whether the board of commissioners, under the power given them to assess water rates upon such basis as they shall deem equitable, have the right to give water away to a certain class of consumers, and make another class of consumers pay for it. This is not my idea of what is equitable."

But the supreme court of Michigan in passing upon the question took a directly contrary view, saying (117 Mich. 589): "The record also shows, as will appear more fully later, [that] the rates fixed are equitable and reasonable. It has already appeared that the free use of water given is only to institutions in which the city and all its citizens are interested, and where a partial rate is charged the recipient is a charitable institution or an educational institution in the maintenance of which the public is more or less interested. . . . The board is very properly given wide discretion in the management of the water plant. . . . There is nothing in the record to show it has abused this discretion in fixing rates."

It is urged that the authority of this case is weakened by the decision in Detroit v. Water Comrs. 108 Mich. 494, 31 L.R.A. 463, 66 N. W. 377, and Water Comrs. v. Board of Education, 137 Mich. 245, 100 N. W. 455; but an examination of these cases will reveal that the principle discussed in the case of Preston v. Water Comrs. was not there involved, inasmuch as the two cases last above referred to involved an effort to compel the delivery of free water to some institutions, instead of the right of the city to give such water if it chose, which was the question decided in the Preston Case, supra.

In New York Telephone Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 202 N. Y. 502, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 560, 96 N. E. 109, it is said:

"A telephone company with an exclusive right to use the streets of the city of New York in order to carry on its business may make a discount from its usual charges for telephone service in favor of the city itself, regularly incorporated charitable institutions, and regularly ordained clergymen, without entitling all its other patrons to a like discount for service of the same kind."

"The law against unreasonable discrimination rests on public policy. It is forbidden because it is opposed to the interest of the public, which requires that all shall be treated alike under like circumstances. Discriminations, however, in favor of the public are not opposed to public policy, because they benefit the people generally by relieving them of part of their burdens. In the absence of legislation upon the subject, such discriminations cannot be held illegal as matter of law."

Upon both reason and authority, therefore, we are of the opinion that the donation of this water to the Central State Normal School, under the facts as alleged, was not an unjust discrimination against the plaintiff, and that the trial court was justified in so determining.

It is finally urged that the action of the board is in contravention of § 15 of article 10 of the Constitution. That section, however, is an inhibition upon the state, and not upon a municipality, such as the defendant in the case at bar.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied November 20, 1917.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JAMES W. ROBISON et al., Mayor, etc., of Stillwater.

R. A. LOWRY et al., Interveners.

(— Okla. —, 168 Pac. 810.)

Mandamus — to compel delivery of bonds.

1. Where, pursuant to statute specifically authorizing the same, municipal officers have entered into a contract for street improvements to be paid for by delivery of improvement bonds at par value, to the amount due the contractor, and such improvements are completed according to contract and accepted, delivery of bonds regularly issued for such purpose may be compelled by mandamus.

For other cases, see Mandamus, I. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by BLEAKMORE, C.

Note. — As to mandamus to compel issuance of bonds of municipality or other public corporation, see annotation following this case, post, 414.
L.R.A.1918C.

Same — pleadings.

2. The only pleadings or written allegations permitted in a mandamus proceeding are the writ and answer.

For other cases, see Mandamus, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 6, 1917.)

ERROR to the District Court for Payne County to review a judgment denying a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to deliver certain improvement bonds to plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. T. H. Stanford and G. T. Stanford, for plaintiff in error:

Failure of the contractor to pay certain claims for labor and material does not deprive the plaintiff bank of its right to demand and receive the bonds from the defendants.

American Surety Co. v. Waseca County, 77 Minn. 92, 79 N. W. 649; Wilson v. Nelson, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1170.

The bond given by the Dudley Construction Company is one for the protection of laborers and materialmen.

Wilson v. Nelson, supra.

The plaintiff bank was a bona fide purchaser for value of the street improvement bonds.

El Reno v. Cleveland-Trinidad Paving Co. 25 Okla. 648, 107 Pac. 163; Hutchinson v. Krueger, 34 Okla. 23, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 124 Pac. 591, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 98; Griffith v. Stucker, 91 Kan. 47, 136 Pac. 937; C. T. Willard Co. v. New York, 81 Misc. 48, 142 N. Y. Supp. 11; Contractors' Supply Co. v. New York, 153 App. Div. 60, 138 N. Y. Supp. 242; 5 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 2313; Moran v. Miami County, 2 Black, 722, 17 L. ed. 342; Eminence v. Grasser, 81 Ky. 52; Smith v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 286; Grattan Twp. v. Chilton, 38 C. C. A. 84, 97 Fed. 145; Quinlan v. Green County, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 857, 84 C. C. A. 537, 157 Fed. 33.

Plaintiff was entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the delivery of the bonds.

State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar, 21 Okla. 448, 96 Pac. 747; Pawhuska v. Pawhuska Oil & Gas Co. 28 Okla. 563, 115 Pac. 353; El Reno v. Cleveland Trinidad-Paving Co. 25 Okla. 648, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 650, 107 Pac. 163.

Mr. Chester H. Lowry, for defendants in error:

The action of mandamus lies only to compel the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, and not to enforce a contractual obligation.

26 Cyc. 293, § 4 (b); Wilson v. Nelson, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1179; Knight & J. Co. v. Castle, 172 Ind. 97, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 573, 87 N. E. 976; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. 1266.

The plaintiff bank, under the law and the evidence, took no greater rights than the contractor, and, the contractor not being entitled to a delivery of the bonds until the full performance of his contract, the plaintiff bank as assignee is not entitled to their delivery.

28 Cyc. 1616.

Bleakmore, C., filed the following opinion:

This case presents error from the district court of Payne county, wherein the plaintiff in error, as assignee of the Dudley Construction Company, sought by mandamus to compel the mayor and commissioners of the city of Stillwater to deliver to it certain improvement bonds issued conformably to the provisions of article 12, chap. 10, Revised Laws 1910. In answer to the alternative writ, the city officials attempted to justify refusal to deliver the bonds solely on the ground that the contract or had failed to perform the contract by refusal to pay certain claims for labor and material. Numerous persons asserting demand against the Dudley Construction Company for labor and materials, and one who declared upon a subcontract for the paving of a street upon which his property abutted, were permitted to intervene. On trial the court below made the following, among other, findings of fact: "(1) That said Dudley Construction Company has failed to perform its contract in the matter of paying the claims of laborers and materialmen arising out of the prosecution of the work involving said contract, and would not be entitled to a delivery of the bonds by reason of such failure; (2) that the assignee of said Dudley Construction Company, the plaintiff herein, stands in the place of said Dudley Construction Company, and is therefore not entitled to a delivery of said bonds." The writ was denied.

The undisputed facts necessary to a determination of the case are that the mayor and commissioners of the city of Stillwater, having determined to improve certain streets by regular proceedings, issued improvement bonds, and entered into a contract with the Dudley Construction Company by the terms of which such bonds were to be delivered to the contractor at par value in payment of the amount due it on such contract; that the improvements were made according to contract and accepted by the city, and a portion of such bonds delivered; that the remainder of the bonds, of the par value of $15,000, was retained by the mayor and commissioners, who, after proper demand therefor, refused to turn the same over to the plaintiff.

We are of opinion that the judgment of the trial court, denying a peremptory writ of mandamus, constituted prejudicial error. It is contended by defendant in error that the writ should not go for the reason that the plaintiff in error had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Obviously, no action for debt or breach of contract would lie against the city or its mayor and commissioners, for the reason that the contract price of the improvements in question was payable alone in the specific bonds, delivery of which is sought to be compelled, and neither these bonds nor the obligation to pay for such improvements is or could become a charge against the city payable out of its general fund. The bonds were issued pursuant to § 636, Rev. Laws 1910, which provides: "Said bonds, or such portion thereof as may be necessary to provide for the payment of the assessments, interest, and costs remaining unpaid, shall be sold at not less than par, and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of the contract price of said improvement and the other expense incurred by the city in connection with such improvement or issuance of such bonds; or such bonds, in the amount that may be necessary for such purpose, may be turned over and delivered to the contractor at par value in payment of the amount due him on his contract. . . ."

By § 635 it is provided: ". . . Which bonds shall in no event become a liability of the city issuing the same."

Under the terms of the statute, the municipal officers were empowered either to sell the bonds and pay for the improvements out of the proceeds, or to deliver such bonds to the contractor at par in satisfaction of the amount due him on his contract. By entering into the contract in suit such officers chose the alternative of paying the contractor by delivery of the bonds. The specific bonds provided for by the contract to be delivered had been duly issued, and delivery thereof as provided by the statute was refused solely for the purpose of coercing payment by the contractor of certain claims of laborers and materialmen, for which the municipality was not bound and about which it was not legally concerned. Wilson v. Nelson, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1179. We recognize the rule that mandamus does not lie to enforce mere contractual duties; that its proper function is to compel the performance of duties incumbent by law upon the parties against whom the writ is sought, but, under the circumstances of this case, are of opinion that the municipal officers in declining to deliver the bonds in question not only defaulted as to the terms of the contract, but arbitrarily refused to perform a plain ministerial duty imposed upon them by law, and plaintiff rightfully invoked the coercive power of the court to compel the performance of such duty. A remedy at law which will operate as a bar to mandamus must ordinarily be such as will enforce the right or compel the performance of the duty; and the remedy is not plain and adequate unless it is commensurate with the necessities and rights of the complaining party under all the circumstances of the case. In the instant case we do not regard replevin as a plain and adequate remedy. Although it is an action designed for the recovery of specific personal property, yet in replevin the defendants might, if they saw fit, by execution of an undertaking, retain the bonds in question, and thus evade the performance of their official duty to deliver them under the terms of the statute.

"A ministerial act is one which a public officer or agent is required to perform upon a given state of facts in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, and without regard to his own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety or L.R.A.1918C.

impropriety of the act to be performed." Merrill on Mandamus, p. 30.

In El Reno v. Cleveland-Trinidad Paving Co. 25 Okla. 648, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 650, 107 Pac. 163, an action by the paving company seeking to enjoin the city authorities from publishing and putting into effect an ordinance repealing a certain assessing ordinance passed for the purpose of providing means to pay for paving a portion of the city streets, for the performance of which work the company and the city had entered into a contract, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Kane, said: "It being settled that all of the proceedings of the city authorities up to the time of letting said contract were regular, after the letting of the contract no discretion of any kind is vested in the city or its municipal council. Whether its action in declaring a necessity to pave, etc., or in ascertaining that no sufficient protests had been made and determining to proceed with the improvement, is legislative or administrative, does not concern us in this connection. After the contract has been let, the statute is mandatory in its terms that the council shall appoint appraisers, shall levy an assessment, shall provide for the issuance of bonds, that the mayor and clerk shall sign and attest the bonds, that the clerk shall publish notice of the time when the first assessment becomes due and payable, and shall certify to the county treasurer such assessments as are not paid within the time specified. All of these duties are ministerial, and the council, mayor, or clerk are left without any discretion as to whether they shall or shall not perform them."

"That mandamus will lie to compel a public officer to perform a ministerial duty, one that involves no exercise of judgment or discretion, is too well settled to require the citation of authorities." Smock v. Farmers' Union State Bank, 22 Okla. 825, 98 Pac. 945.

In Noble County v. Hunt, 33 Ohio St. 169, it is held: "The county commissioners having accepted, as completed according to contract, a road improvement ordered by them to be made in pursuance of statutes authorizing payment therefor to be made in bonds of the county to be issued to the contractor on completion of the improvement and the acceptance thereof, and the commissioners having refused to deliver to the contractor the bonds to which he is entitled, mandamus, and not appeal, is the proper remedy for redress."

And in the body of the opinion it is said: "Where, as in this case, the contract specifies that the improvement is to be paid for in bonds of the county, upon estimates rendered or the completion of the work, and it is accepted by the board of county commissioners, it is the duty of the commissioners to deliver them. This duty is ministerial, and in no way involves judicial discretion. Hence mandamus, upon refusal, is the appropriate means to enforce the performance of the duty."

In Smalley v. Yates, 36 Kan. 519, 13 Pac. 845, it is held:

"1. Mandamus lies in all cases where the plaintiff has a clear legal right to the performance of some official or corporate act by a public officer or corporation, and no other adequate specific remedy exists.

"2. When a person desires to be placed in the possession of a right illegally and unjustly withheld from him, the writ of mandamus is a proper remedy to give the thing itself, the withholding of which constitutes the injury complained of.

"3. Where a city of the second class, through its mayor and council, enters into an agreement to execute and deliver to a lawful purchaser thereof certain waterworks bonds of the city, . . . and the purchaser of such bonds fully complies with all of the terms of the agreement upon his part, and the mayor and council refuse to comply with their official duty in that respect, held, mandamus will lie to compel the mayor and council to execute and deliver the bonds to the purchaser of the same according to the terms of the agreement of the parties."

In Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Chase County, 49 Kan. 399, 30 Pac. 456, "a proceeding brought . . . to compel the defendants to issue and deliver to plaintiff the bonds of Chase county in accordance with the vote of the people and the contract of the parties," it was said: "It appears, therefore, that the plaintiff has earned the bonds of the county, and was entitled to the delivery of the same after June 1, 1887, upon demand,"—and, the writ issued.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County, 12 Kan. 127, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued, directed to the defendants, commanding them to receive from the railroad company its certificates of paid-up stock to its capital stock to the amount of $150,000, as had been tendered by the company, and that upon receipt thereof the defendants duly issued and deliver to the railroad company, in payment for said capital stock, the bonds of the county, in accordance with the terms and conditions of a subscription to such capital stock made pursuant to a vote of the people. In the opinion, Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, said: "But it is insisted that whatever rights the plaintiff may have must be enforced in a different action; that no mandamus will ever issue to command the doing of an act which is forbidden to be done by a valid injunction order of a competent court, L.R.A.1918C.

because thus the party would be placed between two fires, and liable to punishment for contempt in either event. It is said that the writ of mandamus lies within the discretion of the court, and that the mere fact that a party has rights will not necessarily entitle him to the writ; that no court will exercise this discretion in such manner as to place the defendant in jeopardy of punishment. That this writ, originally a prerogative writ, and solely a matter of discretion, still partakes of its original nature so far that it yet remains largely within the discretion of the court, cannot be doubted. State ex rel. Wells v. Marston, 6 Kan. 525. But in the exercise of that discretion regard must be had to the rights of the plaintiff as well as to the dangers of the defendant. If those rights can be secured only through this writ, it would be simply an abuse of discretion to refuse it. If the plaintiff has any rights, the law guarantees to it a time and place and tribunal to enforce them. Those rights cannot be destroyed by a decree to which it is neither party nor privy. It becomes necessary, therefore, to inquire into the matter of the plaintiff's claim, and how rights like those it asserts can be enforced. This is an extraordinary remedy it is pursuing. The statute declares that 'this writ may not be issued in any case where there is a plain and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law' (Code, § 689), and to the same effect are all the authorities. Equity will not interfere when the law is potent to give relief; and in an equally emphatic sense is it true that mandamus will not lie when relief can be obtained in the ordinary proceedings. The plaintiff asserts a subscription by the county of Jefferson to its capital stock, and a compliance by it with the terms of the subscription, and demands the bonds of the county as promised by its subscription. Now, the remedy usually pursued in such cases is the one pursued by plaintiff; that is, to apply for a mandamus. And the right to this remedy has been uniformly sustained. Moses, Mandamus, 102; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 77; People ex rel. Albany & S. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 35 N. Y. 551; Com. ex rel. Thomas v. Allegheny County, 32 Pa. 223. And as mandamus will not lie where there is a plain and adequate remedy in the ordinary proceeding of the law, it follows that in the judgment of these tribunals, at least, the ordinary remedies of law are insufficient for a proper enforcement of the rights claimed. And indeed it is difficult to see by what proceeding other than mandamus the bonds themselves could be obtained."

In High. Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 357, it is said: "So, too, when services are rendered to a county, to be paid for in bonds of the county, and the work is accepted by the proper county officers, whose duty it is to deliver the bonds in payment, such duty may be enforced by mandamus; it being of a ministerial nature and involving the exercise of no discretion."

And again it is said by the same author (§ 389): "The propriety of the writ of mandamus, as a means of compelling delinquent municipalities to discharge liabilities which they have incurred under stock subscriptions in aid of railways, is thus shown to be fully established. Nor is the interference of the courts for this purpose confined to cases where the bonds or obligations of the municipal corporation have already been issued, but the relief may also be granted to enforce the subscription and to compel the issuing of the municipal securities pledged in aid thereof. . . . In such case, a clear legal right is shown on the part of the railway company, involving a corresponding official duty on the part of the municipal authorities, for the performance of which mandamus affords the only adequate and specific remedy."

See also School Dist. v. School Dist. 3 Wis. 333; Baker v. Johnson, 41 Me. 15; People ex rel. Stuart v. Edmonds, 19 Barb. 468; Hall v. Somersworth, 39 N. H. 511.

The trial court erroneously permitted claim holders against the Dudley Construction Company to intervene in the cause.

The only pleadings or written allegations permitted in a mandamus proceeding are the writ and answer. Rev. Laws 1910, § 4915.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court should be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to issue the peremptory writ of mandamus requiring the delivery of the bonds to plaintiff in error.

Annotation—Mandamus to compel issuance of bonds of municipality or other public corporation.

Other notes discuss the questions of mandamus to compel the issuance of municipal warrants to pay indebtedness;<sup>1</sup> mandamus to compel public officer to execute a contract;<sup>2</sup> and mandamus to compel municipal or other public officer or board to perform duty resting in contract alone.<sup>3</sup>

The present note is concerned only with the question of mandamus as a remedy to compel the issuance of bonds of a public corporation. This is, in many of the cases, confused with the ultimate question whether the relator is entitled to the bonds or whether there is a clear legal duty on the part of the defendant to issue them. The cases cited in the note are for the most part those in which the point is made that mandamus is or is not a proper remedy. A few cases are, however, included in which the point was apparently assumed, or was not clearly distinguished from the ultimate question of the right to the issuance of the bonds. But it should be clearly understood that the note does not attempt to collect all the cases in which it was sought to compel the issuance of bonds by mandamus, but only, in general, those cases which discuss the question of remedy. And cases included herein in which a writ of mandamus was denied for the reason that a clear legal duty to issue the bonds was not shown should be regarded as illustrative only, there being possible many other cases of a similar nature decided on grounds beyond the scope of the note, viz., the ultimate right to the bonds and the duty to issue them.

The decision in COMMERCIAL NAT. BANK v. ROBISON, ante, 410, is in accord with many other authorities supporting the proposition that mandamus will lie to compel the issuance of bonds of a municipality or other public corporation, to which the relator shows himself entitled, where there is no other adequate remedy and a clear ministerial duty exists to issue the bonds.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See note to George S. Chatfield Co. v. Reeves, L.R.A.1916D, 324.

<sup>2</sup> See note to McClendon v. Hot Springs L.R.A.1917F, 538.

<sup>3</sup> See note to State ex rel. Fire & Rust Proof Constr. Co. v. Icke, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 800.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Bourbon County (1887) 127 U. S. 105, 32 L. ed. 73, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, (recognizing rule); Ex parte Selma & G. R. Co. (1871) 45 Ala. 696 (to compel county commissioners to issue bonds for railroad stock, authorized by election; in subsequent L.R.A.1918C.

proceedings, however, in (1871) 46 Ala. 230, a peremptory writ of mandamus was denied on the ground of illegality in the proposal submitted at the election); California Northern R. Co. v. Butte County (1861) 18 Cal. 671 (to compel county supervisors to issue railroad aid bonds, a statute making it their duty to issue the bonds when the company had performed certain conditions); People ex rel. Central P. R. Co. v. Coon (1864) 25 Cal. 635 (to compel municipal officers to execute and deliver bonds to railroad); People ex rel. Central P. R. Co.

These cases fall within well-recognized principles governing the question of the remedy of mandamus. Generally, it seems, the statute in question was construed as expressly imposing the duty sought to be enforced. And where the statutory duty exists, as was the case, for instance, in COMMERCIAL NAT. BANK v. ROBISON, ante, 410, it seems clear that the writ should not be denied on the ground that it will not generally be granted to enforce a mere contract right, v. San Francisco (1865) 27 Cal. 655 (to compel board of supervisors to execute and deliver railroad aid bonds); Napa Valley R. Co. v. Napa County (1866) 30 Cal. 435 (to compel county supervisors to subscribe to railway stock, under a statute which "authorized and empowered" them to make the subscription and issue bonds therefor, and provided that the subscription "shall" be made within a certain time); Santa Cruz R. Co. v. Santa Cruz County (1882) 62 Cal. 239 (to compel county supervisors to issue railroad aid bonds); Turlock Irrig. Dist. v. Williams (1888) 76 Cal. 360, 18 Pac. 379 (to compel the secretary of an irrigation district to sign bonds which the applicant, the district, proposed to issue under statute); Summit County v. People (1887) 10 Colo. 14, 14 Pac. 47 (holder of county warrants held entitled to mandamus to compel county commissioners to issue bonds pursuant to election in favor of funding the county indebtedness); People ex rel. Gilman, C. & S. R. Co. v. Harp (1873) 67 Ill. 62 (mandamus held to lie to compel town supervisor and clerk to issue bonds for railway stock, authorized by an election, where all the statutory requirements were fulfilled and the company had complied with the conditions imposed); Piatt v. People (1862) 29 Ill. 54 (duty of a township supervisor to issue railroad aid bonds duly authorized by an election held ministerial and enforceable by mandamus, where the statute provided that on a favorable vote "it shall be the duty of the supervisor" to make subscription to the stock of the railroad, and that he "shall" execute and deliver the bonds); People ex rel. American C. R. Co. v. Ohio Grove Twp. (1869) 51 Ill. 191 (to similar effect); People ex rel. Pekin, L. & D. R. Co. v. Logan County (1872) 63 Ill. 374 (same); Illinois Midland R. Co. v. Barnett (1877) 85 Ill. 318, subsequent proceedings in (1879) 91 Ill. 422 (for contempt for failure to obey writ); and People ex rel. Illinois M. R. Co. v. Barnett Twp. (1881) 100 Ill. 332 (an alias writ of mandamus was granted to compel successor in office of town supervisor to execute bonds to the railway company); Kokomo v. State (1877) 57 Ind. 152 (to compel municipal authorities to issue railroad aid bonds, a statute requiring the city council to issue the bonds on petition of a majority of the resident freeholders); Templeton v. Newton County (1909) 173 Ind. 226, 89 N. E. 880 (to compel the issuance of bonds by county commissioners to pay for the construction of a drainage ditch); Temple v. State (1916) — Ind. —, 113 N. E. 233 (holding that mandamus would lie by contractor of school building partly completed, to compel township authorities to sell bonds authorized for the purpose of procuring funds for its erection); Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County (1873) 12 Kan. 127 (holding that mandamus would lie to compel county officers to issue bonds in payment of a subscription made to a railway company, although a decree in the Federal court, to which the railway company was not a party, enjoined the issuance of the bonds); Smalley v. Yates (1887) 36 Kan. 519, 13 Pac. 845 (holding that, where a city, through its mayor and council, entered into an agreement to execute and deliver to a lawful purchaser thereof waterworks bonds of the city, which had been authorized by an election, and the purchaser fully complied with all the terms of the contract, but the city officers refused to perform their official duty in that respect, mandamus would lie to compel the mayor and council to execute and deliver the bonds to the purchaser); Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Chase County (1892) 49 Kan. 399, 30 Pac. 456 (to compel county officers to issue and deliver railroad aid bonds); State ex rel. Amick v. Francisco (1916) 98 Kan. 808, 160 Pac. 217 (holding that the state could compel by mandamus the issuance by municipal authorities of bonds which had been voted for the purchase of a waterworks plant); Shelby County Ct. v. Cumberland & O. R. Co. (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 209 (to compel the judge of the county court to issue and deliver bonds in payment of subscription made to the stock of a railway company); Houston v. Boltz (1916) 169 Ky. 640, 185 S. W. 76 (to compel a county fiscal court to issue bonds authorized by an election to pay for the construction of public roads); Pearsons v. Raulett (1872) 110 Mass. 118 (to compel the town treasurer to sign and deliver water bonds prepared by the board of water commissioners under statutory authority); Edward C. Jones Co. v. Guttenberg (1902) 66 N. J. L. 659, 51 Atl. 274 (to compel municipal authorities to issue bonds duly authorized, the petitioner being entitled thereto as purchaser by the city's accepting his bid); Halsey v. Nowrey (1904) 71 N. J. L. 481, 59 Atl. 449 (to compel the mayor to sign bonds duly authorized by the common council); Christie v. Bergen County (1907) 75 N. J. L. 49, 66 Atl. 1073, affirmed in (1909) 76 N. J. L. 818, 72 Atl. 45 (to compel a board of freeholders of a county to issue bonds to raise funds for obligations incurred by a county building committee appointed under statute); People ex rel. Albany & S. R. Co. v. Mitchell (1866) 35 N. Y. 551 (to compel town commissioners to make subscription to railroad stock and issue bonds therefor); People ex rel. Dady v. Gravesend (1897) 154 N. Y. 381, 48 N. E. 813 (to compel town super-even though the writ is sought by one in the relation of a contractor with the municipality or other public corporation. On this point the court in the ROBISON CASE well said: "We recognize the rule that mandamus does not lie to enforce mere contractual duties; that its proper function is to compel the performance of duties incumbent by law upon the parties against whom the writ is sought, but, under the circumstances of this case, are of opinion that the municipal officers in declining to deliver the bonds in question not only defaulted as to the terms of the contract, but arbitrarily refused to perform a plain ministerial duty imposed upon them by law, and plaintiff rightfully invoked the coercive power of the court to compel the performance of such duty."

The rule supported by many cases,<sup>5</sup> that mandamus will not lie to enforce a visors to issue bonds pursuant to statute, to pay for street improvements made by relator under contract with the town); People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse (1894) 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006, affirming (1892) 65 Hun, 321, 20 N. Y. Supp. 236 (to compel municipal authorities to collect the balance of the tax assessed, or to issue bonds in payment of a sewer constructed by the relator under contract with the city and accepted by it); Holroyd v. Indian Lake (1905) 180 N. Y. 318, 73 N. E. 36 (to compel a town board to issue bonds to a contractor to pay for waterworks, under a statute making it the duty of the board to raise the money therefor by the issuance and sale of bonds); Sheehan v. Long Island City (1895) 11 Misc. 487, 33 N. Y. Supp. 428 (holding that a contractor for public improvements who, as a creditor of a city, was entitled to bonds which the city treasurer refused to attest, could compel performance of this duty by mandamus); People ex rel. Sherrill v. Guggenheimer (1899) 28 Misc. 735, 59 N. Y. Supp. 913, affirmed in (1900) 47 App. Div. 9, 62 N. Y. Supp. 11 (to compel the city council to issue bonds to pay an award in condemnation proceedings for property of a water company which a statute authorized the city to acquire, the statute directing the issuance of bonds to pay therefor); People ex rel. Oneida County v. Oneida County (1901) 36 Misc. 597, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1098, affirmed without opinion in (1902) 68 App. Div. 650, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1142 (to compel county supervisors to issue bonds for a courthouse, under a statute making it their duty to do so); Re Atty. Gen. (1890) 58 Hun, 218, 12 N. Y. Supp. 754 (to compel comptroller of New York city to issue and negotiate revenue bonds); People ex rel. Keteltas v. Fitch (1894) 78 Hun, 321, 29 N. Y. Supp. 163 (to compel comptroller of New York city to issue bonds authorized by the board of estimate and apportionment, for payment of land taken for park purposes); People ex rel. Myer v. Board of Assessors (1875) 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 280, affirmed without opinion in (1876) 64 N. Y. 635 (to compel city comptroller to issue bonds, as directed by statute, to pay for damages due to change of street grade); People ex rel. Taylor v. Brennan (1863) 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 522 (to compel city comptroller to issue bonds directed to be issued by the city council for the purchase price of land); People ex rel. Hathorn v. White L.R.A.1918C.

(1869) 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 622 (to compel village president to sign bonds prepared by the village trustees under a statute authorizing and directing them to issue bonds of the village signed by the president for public water supply); see also People ex rel. Comrs. for Erection of Public Market v. New York (1866) 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 473, affirmed in (1866) 3 Abb. App. Dec. 502 (holding that mandamus would lie to compel the city council to create a public fund for the erection of a public market, under a statute by which they were "authorized and directed" to do so); Northwestern N. C. R. Co. v. Jenkins (1871) 65 N. C. 173 (to compel the state treasurer to issue bonds to a railroad as required by statute); Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County (1852) 1 Ohio St. 77 (to compel county commissioners to issue bonds in payment of subscription to railroad stock pursuant to an election under statute); Noble County v. Hunt (1877) 33 Ohio St. 169 (to compel county commissioners to issue bonds in compliance with a contract with relator for a road improvement to be paid for upon completion in bonds of the county, where the work was completed and accepted by the commissioners); State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar (1908) 21 Okla. 448, 96 Pac. 747 (to compel municipal officers to execute and deliver to the relator, as purchaser, waterworks and sewer bonds, pursuant to an election and ordinances enacted by the city council providing for such issuance); Portland v. Albee (1913) 67 Or. 227, 135 Pac. 516, 897 (to compel municipal authorities to execute dock bonds to purchaser); Robinson v. Rogers (1874) 24 Gratt. (Va.) 319 (to compel state auditor to transfer and fund under statute state bonds assigned to petitioner); State ex rel. Green Bay & M. R. Co. v. Jennings (1879) 48 Wis. 549, 4 N. W. 641 (to compel town officers to issue bonds for railway stock pursuant to an election in favor of the proposition, under a statute making it their duty, under such circumstances, on receiving the stock, to issue and deliver the bonds, although the statute gave them a discretion as to submitting the proposition).

<sup>5</sup> See note to State ex rel. Fire & Rust Proof Constr. Co. v. Icke, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 800, on mandamus to compel municipal or other public officer or board to perform duty resting in contract alone.

duty on the part of a municipal or other public officer or board which rests wholly in contract, has been applied so as to deny the writ of mandamus to compel county commissioners to perform a contract whereby they agreed to issue and deliver to a banking corporation county bonds to fund the existing warrant indebtedness of the county.<sup>6</sup> But in this case the relator did not claim any right to the bonds under statute, his claim being based merely on the contract.

No clear legal duty to issue bonds; illegality.

A writ of mandamus has been denied in many cases within well-recognized principles, on the ground that there was no clear legal duty shown to issue the bonds, or that their issuance would be illegal.<sup>7</sup> This is true in many cases, il-

<sup>6</sup> Morris & Whitehead v. Williams (1900) 23 Wash. 459, 63 Pac. 236. In this case mandamus was denied because the contract was executory, and also because the commissioners had a discretion as to issuing the bonds.

<sup>7</sup> It should be observed, as before stated, that in many other cases possibly, without discussion of the question of remedy, a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds has been denied on the ground that no clear legal duty to issue the bonds was shown, or that illegality affirmatively appeared; and that the cases cited at this point are only intended as illustrative of the principle involved, and not as a complete collection of the cases on the ultimate question whether the writ should issue.

Mandamus will not lie to compel officers to execute bonds not in accordance with law. State ex rel. Henderson Bkg. Co. v. McBride (1909) 31 Nev. 57, 99 Pac. 705.

In State ex rel. Henderson Bkg. Co. v. McBride (Nev.) supra, it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel the issuance of school bonds authorized by an election, but not redeemable according to law.

Mandamus to compel a board of liquidation of a municipal corporation to issue bonds to pay the relator's judgment against the board of school directors of the municipality was denied in United States ex rel. Fisher v. Board of Liquidation (1894) 9 C. C. A. 37, 23 U. S. App. 29, 60 Fed. 387, for the reason that the judgment was not one against the city for the payment of which the board was authorized to issue bonds.

And under a statute authorizing the issuance of bonds of a township to pay certain indebtedness, it was held, in State ex rel. Rader v. Union Twp. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 518, that mandamus would not lie to compel township officers to issue bonds to pay the relator's judgment, in the absence of allegations showing that the judgment was of a class for the payment of which the issuance of bonds was authorized.

And it was held in United States ex rel. Siegel v. Board of Liquidation (1896) 20 C. C. A. 662, 41 U. S. App. 414, 74 Fed. 489, that mandamus would not lie to compel a board of liquidation of a municipality to issue bonds to pay the relator's judgment against the city, where the judgment was of a class which the statute authorizing the board to issue bonds expressly excluded from its provisions, even if the exclusion was unconstitutional, since, even in that event, there was no statutory provision upon which to base the duty sought to be enforced.

So a writ of mandamus was refused in Re Guthrie (1913) 35 Okla. 494, 130 Pac. 265, to compel a bond commissioner to approve municipal bonds, where the proposed structure for which the money was to be raised was a street improvement, and not a public utility within the meaning of the constitutional provision authorizing the issuance of the bonds.

And where the statute gave the state debt board no power to issue new bonds in lieu of bonds wrongfully destroyed, but only to issue and exchange new bonds on presentation of outstanding valid bonds, it was held, in Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Jones (1900) 105 Fed. 459, that, even if the complainant's bonds had been wrongfully destroyed by the state burning board, a suit in equity to compel the issuance of new bonds therefor was in effect an application for a writ of mandamus, and the relief sought would not be granted.

So mandamus to compel a township supervisor to subscribe to the stock of a railway company, under a statute requiring such subscription and the issuance of bonds in case of the favorable result of an election on the proposition, was denied in People ex rel. Chicago & R. River R. Co. v. Dutcher (1870) 56 Ill. 144, because the proceeding was to compel an unconditional subscription, and the supervisor had power only to make a subscription on the condition on which it was voted; viz., that none of the bonds should be delivered until the road was completed into the township and cars running thereon.

The rule that, where substantial doubt exists as to the duty the performance of which it is sought to coerce, a writ of mandamus will not be issued, was applied in Ex parte Barnwell (1876) 8 S. C. 264, in denying the writ to compel a state treasurer to issue a bond for interest which it was alleged a petitioner's debt against the state bore after maturity.

In State ex rel. Doremus v. Passaic County (1914) 86 N. J. L. 108, 90 Atl. 1020, a writ of mandamus was denied to compel a board of freeholders to issue bonds for the purchase of an armory site, for the reason that a legal obligation to issue bonds for this purpose did not clearly appear from the statute. The judgment was affirmed in (1916) 89 N. J. L. 197, 98 Atl. 390, on illustrations of which will be found in the footnotes, where the debt represented by the bonds would be in excess of the legal debt limit;<sup>8</sup> where the question of incurring the indebtedness or issuing the bonds was not properly submitted to the electors or did not receive the required number of votes, or where irregularities the ground, however, that the petitioner did not have such interest as entitled him to maintain the proceeding, either as owner of the proposed site, or as one of a class of persons directly affected by the erection of the armory.

Where the Constitution directed the payment of public school certificates that might thereafter be issued by the city council, out of the proceeds of the sale of constitutional bonds of a certain issue, previously authorized for the liquidation of the city debt, and all the bonds thus authorized had been disposed of by the board of liquidation, it was held, in State ex rel. Wilder v. Board of Liquidation (1905) 115 La. 471, 39 So. 448, that mandamus would not lie to compel the issuing and sale of additional bonds to pay belated certificates issued by the city council after the exhausting of the bond issue.

And a writ of mandamus to compel a town supervisor to issue bonds under the Drainage Law authorizing commissioners to borrow money to pay for the construction of ditches and for damages to land, and requiring the supervisor to issue bonds for the amount so borrowed, was denied, in People ex rel. Dumphy v. Wiggins (1911) 143 App. Div. 760, 128 N. Y. Supp. 344, for the reason that items for compensation and personal expenses of the commissioners were improperly included in the amount for which issuance of the bonds was sought, and the discretionary power of mandamus should not be exercised to compel issuance of bonds except in payment of expenses legally audited as provided in the Drainage Law.

In Edward C. Jones Co. v. Guttenberg (1901) 66 N. J. L. 58, 48 Atl. 537, it was held that municipal officers would not be compelled by mandamus to issue bonds which had been authorized by a board of councilmen, but which the municipality was without power to issue under the statute because in excess of the amount of the municipal indebtedness, although a prior decision of the court had affirmed the validity of the action of the board. It was said: "The power of this court to issue its writ of mandamus is a discretionary one, and will never be exercised for the purpose of compelling the officers of a municipal corporation to perform an act which, on the hearing of the application for the writ, is conclusively shown to be illegal, notwithstanding the existence of a prior adjudication affirming the validity of such act." In subsequent proceedings in this case, in (1902) 66 N. J. L. 659, 51 Atl. 274, a writ of mandamus was granted to compel issuance of the bonds after trial of the issue of the amount of indebtedness and a finding that it exceeded the amount of the bonds.

L. J. A. 1918C.

In many other cases, without particular discussion of the question of remedy, mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds has been refused on the ground that there was no legal duty to issue them. See, for example, People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit (1874) 29 Mich. 343 (to compel mayor to sign park bonds); State ex rel. Minnesota M. R. Co. v. Highland (1879) 25 Minn. 355 (to compel town to issue railroad aid bonds); State ex rel. Minnesota Midland R. Co. v. Roscoe (1879) 25 Minn. 445 (same); People v. Parmerter (1899) 158 N. Y. 385, 53 N. E. 40 (to compel village clerk to attest and seal water bonds); Essex County R. Co. v. Lunenburgh (1876) 49 Vt. 143 (to compel town officers to issue bonds for subscription to railroad, the instrument of assent to the proposition by the majority of the taxpayers not having been recorded prior to the making of the subscription, as required by statute); Lamoille Valley R. Co. v. Fairfield (1878) 51 Vt. 257 (same).

And, although the question of remedy was not discussed, attention is called to the case of Brazoria County v. Youngstown Bridge Co. (1897) 25 C. C. A. 306, 52 U. S. App. 6, 80 Fed. 10, holding that a contract by a county to pay for the construction of bridges in bonds of the county was void, and therefore not enforceable by mandamus, although the bridges had been constructed and were in use by the county, for the reason that at the time of incurring the debt provision was not made by the county for levying and collecting a sufficient tax to pay it, as required by the Constitution.

<sup>8</sup> Illegality, of bonds authorized by an ordinance passed over the mayor's veto, on account of their being in excess of the debt limit, is a good defense to an application for mandamus to compel him to sign the bonds. Chalk v. White (1892) 4 Wash. 156, 29 Pac. 979.

In Portland v. Albee (1913) 67 Or. 221, 135 Pac. 516, the court sustained a demurrer to an alternative writ of mandamus to compel the issuance by a municipality of dock bonds, on the ground that the writ did not state that by executing the bonds in question the debt of the city would not be increased beyond the limit prescribed by the city charter. On subsequent proceedings, however, in (1913) 67 Or. 227, 135 Pac. 897, after amendment of the alternative writ so as to allege that the issuance of the bonds would not increase the city's indebtedness beyond the statutory limit, it was held that the obligation to execute the bond was ministerial and would be enforced by mandamus.

See also Edward C. Jones Co. v. Guttenberg, in note 7, supra.

or fraud occurred in the election;<sup>9</sup> or where the statute pursuant to which it was sought to compel the issuance of the bonds was unconstitutional.<sup>10</sup>

The contention has been expressly overruled that, in a mandamus proceeding to compel the issuance of municipal bonds, the defendant cannot try the question of the legality of the election and canvass at which the proposition to issue the bonds was submitted to popular vote.<sup>11</sup>

But while fraud and illegality in an election on the proposition whether a town should subscribe to the stock of a railway company and issue bonds therefor have been held a good defense to a proceeding by mandamus against the town supervisor to compel the issuance of the bonds,<sup>12</sup> yet it has been held in the same state that a town clerk cannot defend a mandamus proceeding to compel him to countersign township bonds executed by the town supervisor for subscription to railway stock, on the ground that proper steps have not been taken to authorize the issuance of the bonds.<sup>13</sup>

Discretion.

The well-recognized rule that mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of acts which are discretionary, or, in other words, to control the exercise of discretion, has been applied in a few cases so as to deny the writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds, or the performance of acts connected there-

<sup>9</sup> In Daniels v. Long (1897) 111 Mich. 562, 69 N. W. 1112, it was held that it was a good defense to an action for mandamus to compel a municipal officer to sign light and water bonds, that the proposition to issue the bonds had not received the required number of votes.

Mandamus to compel a city clerk to countersign bonds for public improvements was denied in Los Angeles v. Hance (1900) 130 Cal. 278, 62 Pac. 485, for the reason that the question of incurring the indebtedness was not properly submitted to the voters at the election called to determine the matter, and there was no authority for issuing the bonds.

And it was held in McMahon v. San Mateo County (1873) 46 Cal. 214, that mandamus would not lie to compel a board of supervisors to issue bonds for the improvement of highways, for the reason that the proclamation for the election at which the bonds were authorized did not comply with the statute, in that it failed to state the specific object for which the money was to be expended.

So illegality in the proposal of a railroad company made to a county under a statute authorizing counties to subscribe for stock of the company was held ground for the denial of a peremptory writ of mandamus, in Ex parte Selma & G. R. Co. (1871) 46 Ala. 230, to compel the county commissioners to issue bonds pursuant to the result of an election in favor of the proposition.

As illustrative of other cases not particularly discussing the question of remedy, but denying the writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of railroad aid bonds, because of fraud or illegality in the election, see People ex rel. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Jackson County (1879) 92 Ill. 441; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County (1876) 17 Kan. 29; People ex rel. Hetfield v. Ft. Edwards (1877) 70 N. Y. 28.

<sup>10</sup> Mandamus to compel municipal officers to issue bonds for park improvements was denied in People ex rel. McCagg v. Chicago L.R.A.1918C.

(1869) 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278, and People ex rel. South Park v. Chicago (1869) 51 Ill. 58, for the reason that a statute upon which the duty to issue the bonds was based constituted an unlawful attempt by the legislature to compel the city to incur a debt for park purposes against its will. In this connection, see notes in 47 L.R.A. 512; 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1260; and 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1060, on unconstitutionality of statute as a defense against mandamus to compel its enforcement.

<sup>11</sup> Daniels v. Long (1897) 111 Mich. 562, 69 N. W. 1112.

<sup>12</sup> People ex rel. Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Cline (1872) 63 Ill. 394.

<sup>13</sup> Houston v. People (1870) 55 Ill. 398.

Distinguishing between the last two cases, the court in People ex rel. Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Cline (Ill.) supra, said: "When the bonds are issued by the supervisor and delivered to the relator, the clerk is required to attest them and make a record of the issuing of the same. . . . This was a mere ministerial act, the only preliminary to the performance of which was that the supervisor had executed the bonds which the clerk was required to attest, and of which to make a record. The clerk is in no sense the chief representative of the town, nor were his functions prescribed as a check upon such chief officer. He had no more discretion to refuse to attest and make a record of the issuing of these bonds than he would have to refuse to administer the oath to a town officer on the ground that he was not eligible, or to record proceedings because, in his judgment, they were not regular. The supervisor occupies an entirely different position. It is that of a qualified chief executive officer of the town, but whose duties are prescribed by law. While he is clothed with no power to bind the town by the exercise of his discretion in respect to the issuing of bonds to railroad companies, yet it is not his duty to issue them if the statute authorizing their issuance has not been complied with."

with.<sup>14</sup> But the fact that the officers whose duty it is to issue bonds authorized by an election have a discretion as to certain details with respect to such is-

<sup>14</sup> A writ of mandamus to compel county commissioners to issue railroad aid bonds pursuant to an election in favor of the proposition was denied in Land Grant R. & Trust Co. v. Davis County (1870) 6 Kan. 256, on the ground that the commissioners were merely authorized by the election to subscribe for stock of the railway company and issue the bonds, and that no contract was made with the railway company. But the court did not discuss the question whether under such conditions the commissioners owed a statutory duty to issue the bonds.

It was held in Lanford v. Drummond (1908) 81 S. C. 174, 62 S. E. 10, that whether trustees of a school district which had voted bonds should lithograph the bonds, which the statute provided should be sold at par, before procuring a purchaser therefor, was a matter of detail upon which they might exercise discretion, and that mandamus would not lie to compel them to furnish their signatures for lithographing on the bonds where they had been unable to negotiate a sale of the bonds.

And it was held in Bledsoe v. International R. Co. (1874) 40 Tex. 537, that mandamus would not lie to compel the state comptroller to countersign and register state bonds which a statute provided should be issued and delivered to a railroad company on fulfilment of certain conditions as to the amount and character of construction of the road, because the comptroller was a high executive officer of the state whose official action should not be controlled by mandamus, and because he, as well as the governor and treasurer, who under the statute participated in the issuance and delivery of the bonds, was invested with the exercise of judgment and discretion in that regard.

Mandamus will not lie to compel township officers to issue bonds to pay a judgment, if they have an option to pay either by issuing the bonds or by levying an assessment. State ex rel. Rader v. Union Twp. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 518.

It was held in Robinson v. Itawamba County (1913) 105 Miss. 90, 62 So. 3, that county supervisors had a discretion as to the issuance of road bonds, which could not be controlled by mandamus sought by the road commissioners to compel the issuance of the bonds.

And it was held in Clarke v. San Jacinto County (1898) 18 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 45 S. W. 315, that mandamus would not lie on application by the holder of county warrants, to compel county commissioners to fund the indebtedness of the county, for the reason that this was an act the performance of which rested entirely in their discretion.

Also, in Morris & Whitehead v. Williams (1900) 23 Wash. 459, 63 Pac. 236, denial of a writ of mandamus to compel county commissioners to perform a contract with a banking corporation to issue bonds to fund the warrant indebtedness of the county was placed in part on the ground that the commissioners had a discretion as to the issuing of the bonds.

On the ground that they were given a discretion in the matter, which they exercised when they refused to issue the bonds, a writ of mandamus was denied in Boteourt County v. Cahoon (1917) — Va. —, 94 S. E. 340, to compel county supervisors to issue bonds under a statute which "authorized and empowered" them to borrow money for permanent improvement of certain highways, the board having refused to issue the bonds because it appeared to them that none of the roads could be improved in the manner provided in the statute for the sum allowed for that purpose.

Mandamus to compel a board of liquidation to exchange state bonds for warrants was denied in State ex rel. Burnett v. Warmoth (1871) 23 La. Ann. 76, under a statute providing that if, at the expiration of thirty days after the passage of the act, the board of liquidation had not sold the bonds, they were "authorized and empowered" to exchange the bonds at a certain rate for outstanding indebtedness against the state, since the statute gave the board a discretion as to the time for selling the bonds, and did not require them to make the exchange at the end of the thirty-day period.

It was held in Fisher v. Cherokee (1914) 166 N. C. 238, 81 S. E. 1061, that, in the absence of proof of an arbitrary or fraudulent refusal to exercise discretion, mandamus would not lie to compel the issuance of bonds in a township in a certain sum to pay for railroad stock subscription or like amount, where the statute under which the defendants were appointed township representatives to make the subscription and issue bonds provided for such issuance "as conditions may require and as they may determine."

But in California Northern R. Co. v. Butte County (1861) 18 Cal. 671, it was held that the board of supervisors acted ministerially in the issuance of the bonds, and that mandamus was a proper remedy to compel such issuance, where a statute made it their duty to issue bonds to a railroad whenever an estimate of expenditures was presented to the board and it should appear to their satisfaction that an amount not less than a stated sum had been paid for construction or materials.

And it was held in Christie v. Bergen County (1907) 75 N. J. L. 49, 66 Atl. 1073, affirmed in (1909) 76 N. J. L. 818, 72 Atl. 45, that, where a county building committee had been appointed as authorized by statute, and had incurred obligations for land or the construction of buildings, it was the duty of the board of freeholders to provide the necessary funds to cover such expenses by the issuance of bonds; that the stat-suance does not constitute an objection to starting performance of the duty itself by mandamus.<sup>15</sup>

Conditions precedent.

A writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds will not, of course, be granted if the relator has failed to utory provision that "it shall be lawful" for the freeholders to issue bonds did not make their action discretionary, so as to prevent the granting of mandamus to compel the issuance of the bonds.

<sup>15</sup> Houston v. Boltz (1916) 169 Ky. 640, 185 S. W. 76.

<sup>16</sup> For example, it was held in People ex rel. Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Glann (1873) 70 Ill. 232, that mandamus would not lie to compel town officers to execute and deliver bonds for subscription to a railway, for the reason that the petitioner did not allege and prove that it had complied with the condition on which the authorities were authorized to issue the bonds, as to the location of a depot in the town.

And a writ of mandamus sought by a railway company to compel town officers to issue and deliver bonds of the town to pay for a subscription voted to the company was denied in People ex rel. Illinois M. R. Co. v. Waynesville (1878) 88 Ill. 469, for the reason that the evidence failed to show compliance with the statutory condition on which the bonds were authorized; viz., that they should not be delivered until work of value equal to the amount of the bonds had been done on the road.

These cases are illustrative only, because there are doubtless many cases, such as People ex rel. Paris & D. R. Co. v. Holden (1879) 91 Ill. 446, in which, without discussing particularly the question of remedy, the court denied the writ of mandamus because of the failure of the railway company to comply with conditions precedent on performance of which issuance and delivery of the bonds were authorized.

<sup>17</sup> The question of demand and notice is not treated, because not peculiar to the subject-matter of the note. And other cases cited in this connection are of an illustrative nature, because for the most part they are not apparently distinctive to the class of cases under consideration.

It was held in Templeton v. Newton County (1909) 173 Ind. 226, 89 N. E. 880, that the remedy of a contractor to secure payment for constructing a public drain was by application to the engineer for a certificate showing completion of the work and the amount due, which, when presented to the county auditor, authorized the latter to draw a warrant for the payment thereof, and that, where it did not appear that the contractor had applied for and obtained such a certificate, mandamus would not lie to compel county commissioners to issue bonds to pay for the improvement.

It was held in Ackerman v. Buchman (1885) — Pa. —, 6 Atl. 218, that a writ of L.R.A.1918C.

comply substantially with the conditions on the performance of which only he is entitled to the bonds;<sup>16</sup> or if he has not taken the required preliminary steps, so as to entitle him to the bonds and place the defendant in default for failing to issue them;<sup>17</sup> or generally if he does mandamus would not be granted on the application of a board of water commissioners to compel a town council to issue bonds for the construction of waterworks, where the board had failed to request the council to provide any specific sum for such construction, or to furnish the council with an estimate of the amount required, so as to enable it to determine the necessity of a bond issue.

It was held in People ex rel. Tenth Nat. Bank v. New York (1874) 3 Hun (N. Y.) 11, 5 Thomp. & C. 382, that to entitle one to a writ of mandamus to compel a county board of apportionment to issue bonds to pay an alleged advancement to the county, under statute authorizing the issuance of bonds to pay such advances, the relator must first establish a debt owing to him which he could lawfully require paid out of the proceeds of the bonds, where the validity of his claim was denied; and that this issue could not be determined on the motion for the writ.

But that the amount due the relator under the contract had not been ascertained by an officer properly authorized was held, in Temple v. State (1916) — Ind. —, 113 N. E. 233, not a defense to an action for mandamus by a contractor for a school building partly completed, to compel the sale of bonds authorized to procure funds with which to erect the building, the contract providing for payment as the work progressed. The court said: "Counsel misconstrue the theory of the pleading. It does not seek an order against the trustee to pay a sum of money measured by the architect's estimates, or any other sum, but demands the performance of a ministerial duty in procuring funds through an authorized loan. The trustee, of course, would not be bound by the architect's estimates per se, but by facts showing performance of the contract, and the judgment appealed from in nowise prejudices the trustee in defending the school corporation against an improper claim."

An actual tender of certificates of stock of a railway company is not required in order to enable the company to maintain mandamus to compel town officers to issue bonds therefor pursuant to an election, where demand is made for the bonds and issue of them is refused, a readiness to deliver the certificates being sufficient. Illinois Midland R. Co. v. Barnett (1877) 85 Ill. 313.

And in State ex rel. Burlington & M. R. River Co. v. County Judge (1859) 9 Iowa, 288, it was held that, on an application for mandamus by a railway company not show that the conditions precedent have been fulfilled.<sup>18</sup>

Existence of other remedy.

It is, of course, a well-established doctrine that mandamus will lie only where there is no other clear, adequate efficient, and speedy remedy.<sup>19</sup> But generally in the cases in which a writ of mandamus has been sought to compel the issuance of bonds of a municipality or other public corporation, it has been held that there was no other adequate remedy which would prevent the issuance of the writ.<sup>20</sup>

The view has been taken that the existence of another adequate remedy would not prevent the granting of mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds of a municipal corporation.<sup>21</sup>

But in several cases mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds has been denied, because of the existence of a special statutory remedy, or because the relator should have pursued some other course to enforce his rights.<sup>22</sup>

to compel a county judge to issue bonds in payment of stock of the railway company pursuant to a vote on the proposition, it was not necessary for the company to allege an actual tender of the certificates of stock, but only a readiness or willingness to issue the certificates when the bonds were delivered.

<sup>18</sup> A petition for a writ of mandamus to compel a mayor to sign village bonds was held insufficient in State ex rel. Pleasant Ridge v. Staley (1899) 18 Ohio C. C. 406, for the reason that it did not allege compliance by the council with statutory requirements authorizing the council to issue bonds to extend the time of payment of municipal indebtedness, but providing that no indebtedness should be funded unless it was first determined to be an existing valid obligation of the municipality, by formal resolution of the council stating certain particulars.

<sup>19</sup> 26 Cyc. 168.

<sup>20</sup> Where a contract with a city for the construction of a sewer provided that no payment should be made to the contractor until the cost of the work had been ascertained and collected from the taxpayers, the proper remedy of the contractor to compel payment, after the construction and acceptance of the sewer by the city, was by mandamus for the assessment of the tax or the issuance of bonds, as he could not maintain an action at law against the city. People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse (1894) 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006.

And where a contract is made with municipal authorities for the purchase of bonds which they are authorized and required to issue, it is not a valid objection to the granting of a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of the bonds, that the purchaser has a remedy at law by an action for damages, or a proceeding in equity for specific performance. Smalley v. Yates (1887) 36 Kan. 519, 13 Pac. 845.

So, where a contract was made by a municipality for the purchase of land, payment to be made in bonds, it was held that an action by the vendor for mandamus to compel the issuance of bonds could not be defeated on the ground that he might have other remedies, as a suit for specific performance, or an action for the price or for damages. People ex rel. Taylor v. Brennan (1863) 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 522.

L.R.A. 1918C.

It was held in Temple v. State (1916) — Ind. —, 113 N. E. 233, that a complaint in an action on a building contract was not insufficient on the theory that the relator might secure adequate relief in an action on the contract, where it alleged that there were no funds with which to pay the claim and no way to procure them except by the sale of bonds.

It was held in Noble County v. Hunt (1877) 33 Ohio St. 169, that mandamus, and not appeal, was the proper remedy to compel county commissioners to issue bonds in compliance with a contract with the relators for road improvements to be paid for in bonds of the county, where the work had been completed and accepted by the commissioners, but the latter refused to issue the bonds.

It was held in People ex rel. Keteltas v. Fitch (1894) 78 Hun, 321, 29 N. Y. Supp. 163, that one to whom awards had been made for land taken for park purposes did not have a remedy at law against the city which would be a defense to an action for mandamus to compel the comptroller of New York city to issue bonds therefor, as authorized by the board of estimate and apportionment.

<sup>21</sup> In People ex rel. Sherrill v. Guggenheimer (1899) 28 Misc. 735, 59 N. Y. Supp. 913, which is affirmed in (1900) 47 App. Div. 9, 62 N. Y. Supp. 11, the court, in granting a writ of mandamus to compel a city council to issue bonds to pay an award in condemnation proceedings for property of a water company, which a statute authorized the city to acquire, dismissed the point as to the existence of a remedy at law with the statement that as to corporations the existence of another and adequate remedy was no objection to awarding the writ. This case seems to apply the rule which is stated in 26 Cyc. 172, that, in the case of corporations and ministerial officers, there is an exception to the general rule, and that they may be compelled to exercise their functions according to law by mandamus, even though the party has another remedy against them by action for neglect of duty.

<sup>22</sup> It was held in Robinson v. Itawamba County (1913) 105 Miss. 90, 62 So. 3, that mandamus would not lie on behalf of road commissioners to compel county supervisors to issue road bonds, for the reason that a

Miscellaneous.

An officer should not, of course, be ordered by mandamus to perform or secure performance of acts pertaining to the issuance of bonds which lie beyond his department, and can be performed only by other officers not under his control.<sup>23</sup> And mandamus by a contractor with a municipality, to compel the issuance of bonds, has been denied on the ground that he elected to reduce his claim to a money judgment, and whatever rights he may have had under the contract to the issuance of bonds became merged in the judgment.<sup>24</sup>

Mandamus to compel the governor to issue or deliver bonds has been denied in the cases cited in the footnote, among possibly others, not, however, on grounds distinctive to the issuance of bonds, but on general grounds that the court should not assume jurisdiction to control the executive department of the government.<sup>25</sup> plain and adequate remedy was provided by statute by appeal to the circuit court from the decision of the supervisors.

It was held also in State ex rel. Rader v. Union Twp. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 518, that a writ of mandamus would not be granted to compel the issuance of township bonds to pay a judgment obtained by the relators, pursuant to a statute authorizing the issuance of such bonds to pay indebtedness, were it was not alleged that the relators could not collect their debt by the ordinary process of law.

And a writ of mandamus sought by a holder of municipal warrants to compel the municipal authorities to report said indebtedness to the loan commissioners of the territory, and to demand the funding of the same by the latter, was denied in Bravin v. Tombstone (1899) 6 Ariz. 212, 56 Pac. 719, for the reason that the petitioner had mistaken his remedy, it being the duty of the commissioners under statute to fund the indebtedness on the application of holders of warrants.

One desiring to bid for public bonds offered for sale cannot compel their proper execution by mandamus, for the reason that he, or any other successful bidder at the sale, will be entitled to bonds properly executed, and if the bonds tendered are not so executed he may compel the issuance of proper bonds. Graham v. Gillett (1909) 156 Cal. 113, 103 Pac. 195.

<sup>23</sup> People ex rel. Taylor v. Brennan (1863) 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 522, holding that, while mandamus would lie to compel a city comptroller to comply with a resolution of the common council to issue bonds in payment of land purchased by the city, an order directing a peremptory mandamus to issue, commanding him to prepare and sign the bonds, was erroneous in so far as it also commanded him to procure the signature of the mayor and the affixing of the corporate seal.

<sup>24</sup> State ex rel. Eugster v. New Orleans (1884) 36 La. Ann. 726, holding that a contractor for street improvements who obtained a money judgment against a city for the work done, and registered the judgment, could not afterwards obtain a writ of mandamus to compel the city to issue improvement bonds for the debt, even if, at the time he instituted the suit, he was entitled to payment in the latter mode. L.R.A.1918C.

The court said: "Granting that the judgment creditor was entitled to demand, when he instituted his suit, payment of his debt in the mode stipulated, yet it appears he did not do so, but preferred seeking its liquidation or satisfaction in money. Whatever his rights may have been under his contract, they become merged in the judgment he sought and obtained. That judgment became the exponent of his rights and the measure of his debtor's liability. That right, as thus determined, was to enforce payment of his debt by money, and the liability of the debtor was to pay in money and nothing else. The creditor might have chosen otherwise, and the debtor might have insisted, in the progress of the suit, on satisfying the debt under the terms of the obligation, in bonds instead of money. But, however that may be, when the option of the creditor was declared and exercised, and the privilege of the debtor was waived, and the rights and obligations of the parties respectively were determined otherwise than might have been fixed upon a different presentation of their respective claims or rights, the determination became final and the mutual rights and obligations of the parties became a thing adjudged."

<sup>25</sup> People ex rel. Billings v. Bissell (1857) 19 Ill. 229, 68 Am. Dec. 591 (to compel the governor to issue new bonds for arrears of interest on other bonds, as it was contended he was required to do by statute); Chamberlain v. Sibley (1860) 4 Minn. 309, Gil. 228 (to compel the governor to deliver bonds to the assignee of a railroad company); State ex rel. Oliver v. Warmoth (1870) 22 La. Ann. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 712 (holding that mandamus would not lie to compel the governor to execute and deliver state bonds which the relator contended he was entitled to receive in payment of public works authorized by the legislature); Jonesboro, F. B. & B. Gap Turnp. Co. v. Brown (1875) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 490, 35 Am. Rep. 713. See also Bledsoe v. International R. Co. in note 14, supra.

And see State ex rel. Hope & Co. v. Board of Liquidation (1890) 42 La. Ann. 647, 7 So. 706, 8 So. 577, denying a writ of mandamus to compel the board of liquidation, composed of the governor and other executive officers of the state, to take action on the relators' bonds, and determine whether they were fundable under a statute enacted for the purpose of restricting and funding the state indebtedness.

Questions as to statutory construction;<sup>26</sup> as to the effect of a change in the membership of the board which authorizes the issuance of the bonds;<sup>27</sup> as to

Generally, as to mandamus to governor, see notes in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 750; 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 355; and L.R.A.1917F, 774.

<sup>26</sup> A provision in a drainage law that the court in which the proceeding is pending may by mandamus enforce compliance with any of the provisions of the section was held, in People ex rel. Dumphy v. Chaney (1916) 171 App. Div. 303, 156 N. Y. Supp. 1035, to refer only to the issuance of bonds provided for by that section, which constituted direct obligations of the town, and not to authorize the granting of a writ of mandamus by the county court to compel the issuance of bonds under other sections of the law, which constituted mere collateral obligations.

<sup>27</sup> Within the principle that a change in the membership of a municipal body which has determined to perform a ministerial duty will not relieve from the performance of the duty, when the rights of others have intervened, it has been held that a change of membership in a continuous body, as a board of councilmen of a town, will not prevent the granting of mandamus to compel the present holders of the office to issue bonds duly authorized by their predecessors in office, who accepted the relator's bid therefor. Edward C. Jones Co. v. Guttenberg (1902) 66 N. J. L. 659, 51 Atl. 274.

<sup>28</sup> Although the court has a discretion as to the granting of the writ, it has been held that mandamus on the application of a railway company, to compel a town to issue bonds in exchange for stock of the company, pursuant to a vote of the town, will not be denied because of a delay, not explained or excused, on the part of the company for nearly six years after the right to the bonds accrued, in bringing the action, where the town might, at any time during this period have compelled compliance with the contract,—especially where it does not appear that the town will be more seriously injured by being compelled to issue the bonds at the time the writ is granted than if it had been compelled to do so earlier. State ex rel. Green Bay & M. R. Co. v. Jennings (1880) 48 Wis. 549, 4 N. W. 641.

<sup>29</sup> The following cases are here included because the questions involved appear somewhat distinctive to, or at least likely to arise in, a proceeding to compel the issuance of bonds. It should be observed that there are possibly other cases of a more general nature dealing with the right to maintain a proceeding for mandamus which are not included herein, although the action was to compel the issuance of bonds:

It was held in People ex rel. Taylor v. L.R.A.1918C

the effect of delay in applying for the writ;<sup>28</sup> as to the standing of various parties to maintain the proceeding;<sup>29</sup> and other questions of a miscellaneous

Brennan (1863) 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 522, that an owner who contracted with a city for the sale of land to it, payment to be made in bonds which the common council directed the city comptroller to issue, could enforce the issuance of the bonds by mandamus, at least so long as the municipality assented to the proceeding.

And under a statute providing that the person entitled to the award might require the city officers to raise the money necessary to enable the comptroller to pay the same, it was held, in People ex rel. Keteltas v. Fitch (1894) 78 Hun, 321, 29 N. Y. Supp. 163, that one to whom awards had been made for land taken for park purposes was entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the comptroller of New York city to issue bonds, authorized by the board of estimate and apportionment, to pay therefor, and that it was not a good defense to the proceeding that the comptroller owed the duty to issue the bonds only to the mayor, etc., and not to the relator.

One who, as the highest bidder, is entitled to bonds duly authorized by the common council, has such interest as entitles him to mandamus to compel signature of the bonds by the mayor, even though he is a nonresident of the state. Halsey v. Nowrey (1904) 71 N. J. L. 481, 59 Atl. 449.

But a status to compel by mandamus the proper execution of bonds offered for sale does not arise merely from the fact that the petitioner is desirous of bidding for the bonds. Graham v. Gillett (1909) 156 Cal. 113, 103 Pac. 195.

It was held in State ex rel. Amick v. Francisco (1916) 98 Kan. 808, 160 Pac. 217, that, since the state had an interest in seeing that public duties were not disregarded by public officers, it could maintain a proceeding for mandamus to compel city officers to issue bonds which had been voted for the purchase of a water-works plant.

It was held in Pearsons v. Ranlett (1872) 110 Mass. 118, that a majority of the board of water commissioners, representing the board, might maintain mandamus to compel the town treasurer to sign and deliver water bonds which the town was authorized by statute to issue, and that the proceeding need not necessarily be brought by the town.

And where a statute authorized a municipality to acquire the property of a water company, and provided that the city officers were authorized and directed to issue bonds therefor, it was held that citizens and taxpayers of the city were entitled to mandamus to compel the issuance of the bonds. People ex rel. Sherrill v. Guggenheimer (1899) 28 Misc. 735, 59 N. Y. Supp. 913, affirmed in (1900) 47 App. Div. 9, 62 N. Y. Supp. 11.

nature, are considered in the cases cited in the accompanying footnote.<sup>80</sup>

See also State ex rel. Doremus v. Passaic County, in note 7, supra.

<sup>80</sup> A motion to quash an alternative writ of mandamus was sustained in State ex rel. Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee (1867) 22 Wis. 397, for the reason that it was defective under the rule that the writ must expressly state the duty required to be performed, in that it commanded the defendant to pay the judgment therein mentioned, or to issue bonds for its payment, or to levy a tax for that purpose.

In an action for mandamus to compel city officers to collect the balance of a tax assessed to pay for a sewer constructed by the relator, or to issue bonds for that purpose, it was held that it was not a good defense that the sewer was not constructed in accord with the terms of the contract, and that the engineer's return and certificate were incorrect and given under a mistaken idea of the facts, where the undisputed evidence showed that the work of constructing the sewer was prosecuted under the constant supervision and inspection of the representatives of the city as provided by the contract, that the sewer was accepted by the city engineer under the terms of the contract, that the common council ratified such acceptance and set in motion the machinery of taxation to raise the money due the relator, and that the city had for long time been using the sewer. People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse (1894) 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006, affirming (1892) 65 Hun, 321, 20 N. Y. Supp. 236.

R. E. H.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOE McELREATH et al.

(— Okla. —, 169 Pac. 628.)

Carriers— provision for notice of injury.

1. A provision in a contract with the carrier for an interstate shipment of live stock, "that, as a condition precedent to the bringing of any suit for damages for any loss or injuries to the person or persons or property covered by this contract, the claimant shall give notice in writing of the claim for such damages to some general officer, claim agent, or station agent of the said first party, not later than ninety days after the date of the loss or injury claimed, and a failure to strictly comply with this provision shall be a bar to a recovery to any and all damages occasioned to the person or persons or property embraced in this contract," is reasonable and valid, and no action can be maintained by the shipper for damages for loss or injuries occasioned by said shipment without showing a substantial compliance with the requirements of said provision as to notice.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. g, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency.

2. The evidence and all the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom held to be insufficient to justify the court in submitting this cause to the jury upon the issue of a substantial compliance with the provision of said contract.

Headnotes by HOOKER, C.

Note.— As to reasonableness of time fixed in a contract of shipment of live stock, for presentation of claim for damages, see notes to Wabash R. Co. v. Thomas, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1041, and Baldwin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. L.R.A.1916D, 341 L.R.A.1918C.

For other cases, see Trial, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 6, 1917.)

ERROR to the District Court for Pontotoc County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused to their cattle by defendant's negligent handling of them in shipment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. C. O. Blake, R. J. Roberts, W. H. Moore, and K. W. Shartel, for plaintiff in error:

The provision in the contract as to notice is valid and failure to comply therewith defeats plaintiffs' right to recover.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Phillips, 17 Okla. 264, 87 Pac. 470; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Copeland, 23 Okla. 837, 102 Pac. 104; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Davis, 24 Okla. 677, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 866, 104 Pac. 34; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cake, 25 Okla. 227, 105 Pac. 322; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hancock, 26 Okla. 254, 100 Pac. 220; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Spears, 31 Okla. 469, 122 Pac. 228; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ladd, 33 Okla. 160, 124 Pac. 461; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bilby, 35 Okla. 589, 130 Pac. 1089; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Rinkle, 37 Okla. 631, 133 Pac. 199; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Zickafoose, 39 Okla. 302, 135 Pac. 406, 6 N. C. C. A. 717; Clegg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 122 C. C. A. 273, 203 Fed. 971.

Messrs. Crawford & Bolen, Lester Maxey, and B. H. Epperson for defendants in error.

Hooker, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused to cattle of the defendants in error by the negligent handling of the plaintiff in error in the shipment thereof. The shipments involved were interstate, and the evidence and the pleadings show that the same were made under and by virtue of a contract which contained the two following provisions:

"Sixth. That, as a condition precedent to the bringing of any suit for damages for any loss or injuries to the person or persons or property covered by this contract, the claimant shall give notice in writing of the claim for such damages to some general officer, claim agent, or station agent of the said first party not later than ninety days after the date of the loss or injury claimed, and a failure to strictly comply with this provision shall be a bar to a recovery of any and all damages occasioned to the person or persons or property embraced in this contract.

"Seventh. That, as a condition precedent to claiming or recovering damages for any loss or injury to or detention of live stock, or delay in transportation thereof, covered by this contract, the second party, as soon as he discovers such loss or injury, shall promptly give notice thereof in writing to some general officer, claim agent, or station agent of the first party, or to the agent at destination, or to some general officer of the delivering line, before such stock is removed from the point of shipment or from the place of destination, as the case may be, and before such stock is mingled with other stock; and such written notice shall in any event be served within one day after delivery of the stock at its destination, in order that such claim may be fully and fairly investigated. It is agreed that a failure to strictly comply with all the foregoing provisions shall be a bar to the recovery of any and all such claims."

The plaintiff in error as to one of these shipments was the initial carrier, and as to the other the intermediate one.

It is admitted that defendants in error complied with provision 7 of this contract, but it is a disputed question as to whether any compliance was had with provision 6 thereof. The lower court submitted this question to the jury, which found that section 6 of this contract had been complied with; so the first question for us to determine is to ascertain whether this provision of the contract is a valid and an enforceable one, and if so, whether there was any evidence justifying the submission of this question to the jury. There are other questions raised, but under the view we have taken of this case it is unnecessary to consider them. These contracts were fairly entered into by the parties, and they constitute the agreements under which these shipments were made. If provision 6 of these contracts is valid and enforceable, then, before defendants in error are entitled to recover, they must show a substantial compliance therewith. In order to determine the reasonableness of this provision it is our duty to construe the contract as a whole, and consider the duty imposed by virtue of section 7 thereof in connection therewith. It is admitted that defendants in error gave the one day's notice provided by this contract. Now, having given to the delivering line this notice, is it unreasonable to require the defendants in error to give the notice of its claim as provided by section 6 before any liability can accrue by reason of any damage suffered to the shipment in question? In our opinion, the giving of the one-day notice at the point of destination to the delivering carrier did not obviate the necessity of complying with the other provision of the contract, which required the notice of the claim to be presented to the company against which damages are sought within the ninety days.

First. Is this provision of the contract reasonable? If so, it will be upheld.

In the case of Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"The court below held that the stipulation in the shipping contract that no suit shall be brought after the lapse of ninety days from the happening of any loss or damage, 'any statute or limitation to the contrary notwithstanding,' was void.

"It is conceded that there are statutes in Missouri, the state of the making of the contract, and the state in which the loss . . . occurred, and in Texas, the state of the forum, which declare contracts invalid which require the bringing of an action for a carrier's liability in less than the statutory period, and that this action, though started after the lapse of the time fixed by the contract, was brought within the statutory period of both states.

"The liability sought to be enforced is the 'liability' of an interstate carrier for loss or damage under an interstate contract of shipment declared by the Carmack Amendment of the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906. The validity of any stipulation in such a contract which involves the construction of the statute, and the validity of a limitation upon the liability thereby imposed, is a Federal question, to be determined under the general common law, and as such is withdrawn from the field of state law or legislation. . . . The liability imposed by the statute is the liability imposed by the common law upon a common carrier, and may be limited or qualified by special contract with the shipper, provided the limitation or qualification be just and reasonable, and does not exempt from loss or responsibility due to negligence. . . .

"The policy of Statutes of Limitation is to encourage promptness in the bringing of actions, that the parties shall not suffer by loss of evidence from death or disappearance of witnesses, destruction of documents, or failure of memory. But there is nothing in the policy or object of such statutes which forbids the parties to an agreement to provide a shorter period, provided the time is not unreasonably short. That is a question of law for the determination of the court. Such stipulations have been sustained in insurance policies. . . . A stipulation that an express company should not be held liable unless claim was made within ninety days after a loss was held good in Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. ed. 556. Such limitations in bills of lading are very customary, and have been upheld in a multitude of cases. . . . The provision requiring suit to be brought within ninety days is not unreasonable."

In Ray v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 244, 133 Pac. 847, the supreme court of Kansas said that the Carmack Amendment does not prevent the carrier and shipper from stipulating for a reasonable limitation as to the time for bringing an action in case of loss of or damage to an interstate shipment.

And in Hafer v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 101 Ark. 310, 142 S. W. 176, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 866, it was held that a stipulation in a contract of shipment that actions for the recovery of any claim arising thereunder must be commenced within six months after the cause of action accrues does not violate Acts 1907, p. 557, forbidding common carriers to abridge, modify, limit, or abrogate their common-law liability, and that a contract, however, which does not in any way abridge or defeat the complete vestiture of a right to recover from the carrier for any breach of duty imposed upon it by the common law, or growing out of any liability created against it by the common law, does not operate as a limitation, modification, or abridgment of any duty or liability imposed by the common law upon the carrier. The limitation of the time within which suit shall be brought for any cause of action is but a period fixed in which the right itself must be asserted. It does not in any way abridge or impair such right itself, nor limit in any way any liability incurred by the carrier which creates such right. It simply effects the remedy for the enforcement of such right. The general period of limitation fixed by statute names a time within which an action must be brought against a carrier; and yet such Statute of Limitation cannot be said to abridge or limit any liability of a common carrier as fixed by the common law. For the same reason a contract limiting the time within which the right of action shall be asserted does not abridge or limit such liability.

And in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trawick, 68 Tex. 314, 2 Am. St. Rep. 494, 4 S. W. 567, it was held that a contract between a shipper of live stock and a railway company which limited the time within which suit might be brought by the shipper for any claim for damages arising under the contract to forty days from the time the damage occurs was held to be reasonable and valid, notwithstanding a statutory provision that common carriers cannot limit or restrict their common-law liability. Such a contract did not in any way defeat the complete vestiture of the right to recover from a common carrier for a breach of duty that the common law would give, and hence did not operate as a restriction on the common-law liability of the carrier, but merely required the assertion of that right by action at an earlier period than would be necessary to defeat it through the operation of the ordinary Statutes of Limitation.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Blish Mill. Co. 241 U. S. 190, 60 L. ed. 948, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541, said: "The effect of a stipulation in a bill of lading for an interstate shipment requiring claims for damages or misdelivery to be presented within four months after a reasonable time for delivery has elapsed cannot be avoided by suing the carrier in trover on the theory that in making the misdelivery it converted the shipment and thus abandoned the contract. since the parties could not waive the terms of the contract under which the shipment was made, pursuant to the Act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104), as amended by the Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 593, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8592), nor could the carrier by its conduct give the shipper the right to ignore the terms and hold the carrier to a different responsibility from that fixed by the agreement made under the published tariffs and regulations."

And in the body of the opinion it is said:

"With other defenses, the railway company pleaded that the shipper had failed to comply with the following provision of the bill of lading issued by the initial carrier: 'Claims for loss, damage, or delay must be made in writing to the carrier at the point of delivery or at the point of origin within four months after the delivery of the property, or, in case of failure to make delivery, then within four months after a reasonable time for delivery has elapsed. Unless claims are so made the carrier shall not be liable.' . . .

"These decisions also established that the question as to the proper construction of the bill of lading is a Federal question. The clause with respect to the notice of claims—upon which the plaintiff in error relies in its second contention—specifically covers 'failure to make delivery.' . . . When the goods have been misdelivered there is as clearly a 'failure to make delivery' as when the goods have been lost or destroyed; and it is quite as competent in the one case as in the other for the parties to agree upon reasonable notice of the claim as a condition of liability. It may be urged that the carrier is bound to know whether it has delivered to the right person, or according to instructions. This argument, however, even with respect to the particular carrier which makes a misdelivery, loses sight of the practical object in view. In fact, the transactions of a railroad company are multitudinous, and are carried on through numerous employees of various grades. Ordinarily the managing officers, and those responsible for the settlement and contest of claims, would be without actual knowledge of the facts of a particular transaction. The purpose of the stipulation is not to escape liability, but to facilitate prompt investigation. And to this end it is a precaution of obvious wisdom, and in no respect repugnant to public policy, that the carrier by its contracts should require reasonable notice of all claims against it even with respect to its own operation.

"There is, however, a further and controlling consideration. We are dealing with a clause in a bill of lading issued by the initial carrier. The statute casts upon the initial carrier responsibility with respect to the entire transportation. The aim was to establish unity of responsibility. . . . It is not to be doubted that if, in the case of an interstate shipment under a through bill of lading, the terminal carrier makes a misdelivery, the initial carrier is liable; and when it inserts in its bill of lading a provision requiring reasonable notice of claims 'in case of failure to make delivery,' the fair meaning of the stipulation is that it includes all cases of such failure, as well those due to misdelivery as those due to the loss of the goods. But the provision in question is not to be construed in one way with respect to the initial carrier, and in another with respect to the connecting or terminal carrier. As we have said, the latter takes the goods under the bill of lading issued by the initial carrier, and its obligations are measured by its terms. . . . The clause gave abundant opportunity for presenting claims, and we regard it as both applicable and valid. . . .

L.R.A.1918C.

"It is urged however, that the carrier, in making the misdelivery, converted the flour, and thus abandoned the contract. But the parties could not waive the terms of the contract under which the shipment was made pursuant to the Federal act; nor could the carrier by its conduct give the shipper the right to ignore these terms which were applicable to that conduct, and hold the carrier to a different responsibility from that fixed by the agreement made under the published tariffs and regulations. A different view would antagonize the plain policy of the act and open the door to the very abuses at which the act was aimed. . . . We are not concerned in the present case with any question save as to the applicability of the provision and its validity, and as we find it to be both applicable and valid, effect must be given to it."

The Supreme Court of the United States in Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. ed. 556, in construing a contract executed by the company which contained a provision as follows: "It was agreed between them and the plaintiff, and made one of the express conditions upon which the package was received, that they should not be held liable for any loss of, or damage to, the package whatever, unless claim should be made therefor within ninety days from its delivery to them,"—said:

"Notwithstanding the great rigor with which courts of law have always enforced the obligations assumed by common carriers, and notwithstanding the reluctance with which modifications of that responsibility, imposed upon them by public policy, have been allowed, it is undoubtedly true that special contracts with their employers limiting their liability are recognized as valid, if in the judgment of the courts they are just and reasonable,—if they are not in conflict with sound legal policy. The contract of a common carrier ordinarily is an assumption by him of the exact duty which the law affixes to the relation into which he enters when he undertakes to carry. That relation the law regards as substantially one of insurance against all loss or damage except such as results from what is denominated the act of God or of the public enemy. But the severe operation of such a rule in some cases has led to a relaxation of its stringency, when the consignor and the carrier agree to such a relaxation. All the modern authorities concur in holding that to a certain extent the extreme liability exacted by the common law originally may be limited by express contract. The difficulty is in determining to what extent, and here the authorities differ. Certainly it ought not to be admitted that a common carrier can be relieved from the full measure of that responsibility which ordinarily attends his occupation, without a clear and express stipulation to that effect obtained by him from his employer. And even when such a stipulation has been obtained the court must be able to see that it is not unreasonable. . . .

"Hence, as we have said, it is now the settled law that the responsibility of a common carrier may be limited by an express agreement made with his employer at the time of his accepting goods for transportation, provided the limitation be such as the law can recognize as reasonable, and not inconsistent with sound public policy. . . . In York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 170, it is ruled that the common-law liability of a common carrier may be limited and qualified by special contract with the owner, provided such special contract does not attempt to cover losses by negligence or misconduct. And in a still later case, New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 624, where the decisions are extensively reviewed, the same doctrine is asserted. . . . The question, then, which is presented to us by this record is whether the stipulation asserted in the defendant's plea is a reasonable one, not inconsistent with sound public policy.

"It may be remarked, in the first place, that the stipulation is not a conventional limitation of the right of the carrier's employer to sue. He is left at liberty to sue at any time within the period fixed by the Statute of Limitations. He is only required to make his claim within ninety days, in season to enable the carrier to ascertain what the facts are, and having made his claim, he may delay his suit.

"It may also be remarked that the contract is not a stipulation for exemption from responsibility for the defendants' negligence, or for that of their servants. . . . But an agreement that in case of failure by the carrier to deliver the goods a claim shall be made by the bailor, or by the consignee, within a specified period, if that period be a reasonable one, is altogether of a different character. It contravenes no public policy. It excuses no negligence. It is perfectly consistent with holding the carrier to the fullest measure of good faith, of diligence, and of capacity which the strictest rules of the common law ever required. . . . The defendants are an express company. We cannot close our eyes to the nature of their business. They carry small parcels, easily lost or mislaid, and not easily traced. They carry them in great numbers. Express companies are modern conveniences, and notoriously they are very largely employed. They may carry—they often do carry—hundreds, even thousands, of packages daily. . . . If a bailor may delay giving notice to them of a loss, or making a claim indefinitely, they may not be able to trace the parcels bailed, and to recover them, if accidentally mislent, or if they have in fact been properly delivered. With the bailor the bailment is a single transaction, of which he has full knowledge; with the bailee it is one of a multitude. There is no hardship in requiring the bailor to give notice of the loss, if any, or make a claim for compensation within a reasonable time after he has delivered the parcel to the carrier. There is great hardship in requiring the carrier to account for the parcel long after that time, when he has had no notice of any failure of duty on his part, and when the lapse of time has made it difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the actual facts. For these reasons such limitations have been held valid in similar contracts, even when they seem to be less reasonable than in the contracts of common carriers.

"Policies of fire insurance, it is well known, usually contain stipulations that the insured shall give notice of a loss and furnish proofs thereof within a brief period after the fire; and it is undoubted that if such notice and proofs have not been given in the time designated, or have not been waived, the insurers are not liable. Such conditions have always been considered reasonable, because they give the insurers an opportunity of inquiring into the circumstances and amount of the loss at a time when inquiry may be of service. And, still more, conditions in policies of fire insurance that no action shall be brought for the recovery of a loss unless it shall be commenced within a specified time, less than the statutory period of limitations, are enforced, as not against any legal policy. . . .

"Our conclusion, then, founded upon the analogous decision of the courts, as well as upon sound reason, is that the express agreement between the parties averred in the plea was a reasonable one, and hence that it was not against the policy of the law. It purported to relieve the defendants from no part of the obligations of a common carrier. They were bound to the same diligence, fidelity, and care as they would have been required to exercise if no such agreement had been made. All that the stipulation required was that the shipper, in case the package was lost or damaged, should assert.

his claim in season to enable the defendants to ascertain the facts; in other words, that he should assert it within ninety days."

See also Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Gray, — Okla. —, 165 Pac. 157; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Wynn, — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1156; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Craig, — Okla. —, 157 Pac. 87; A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 236 U. S. 662. 59 L. ed. 774, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444. Numerous other authorities might be cited as to the validity and reasonableness of the provisions of the contract. We do not think it is necessary to present them here. To our minds this provision of the contract is reasonable, just, and valid; it did not relieve the carrier from responsibility for any act of negligence, but merely imposed upon the shipper or consignee the duty of presenting a claim for damages within the period of time stated, and unless this provision of the contract has been complied with, recovery cannot be had.

Second. If this provision of the contract was valid, and if it is just and reasonable, and it was so regarded by the parties and the trial court, is there any evidence in this record that justified the trial court in submitting this case to the jury? We think not. All the evidence bearing upon this question may be found at pages 145, 146, and 147 of the case made, which is presented here verbatim:

Joe McElreath, recalled. Direct examination by Mr. Bolen:

Q. You stated you got to Ada with these cattle on the 10th of June, 1912?

A. Yes.

Q. And the record shows you filed suit on the 18th day of October, ninety-eight days after that. Now, please state to the jury whether or not you notified the Rock Island Railway Company by letter through your attorney of your claim for damages within ninety days from the time you arrived at Ada?

By Mr. Moore: Defendant objects to the question as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; goes to a very material part of the case. That raises—

By the Court: Objection overruled.

By Mr. Moore: Defendant excepts.

A. I did some thirty or forty days before this suit was filed. Mr. Bolen, my attorney, got the address from I. McNair, Frisco agent.

Q. You present when I phoned Mr. McElreath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Live stock claim agent for the Rock Island?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You present when I wrote the letter?

A. Yes, sir. We got the address from Mr. McNair. Mr. Bolen telephoned Mr. McNair for the address of the Rock Island live stock agent.

Q. Who mailed the letter?

A. I mailed the letter. You gave it to me, and I brought it down and mailed it.

Cross-examination by Mr. Moore:

Q. Who is Mr. McNair?

A. Frisco agent.

Q. He gave you the name?

A. Gave it to Mr. Bolen.

Q. Don't know what name he gave you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Don't know what the address was?

A. Someone in Chicago, Illinois.

Q. Live stock agent?

A. I think that is what he asked for: live stock agent's address.

Q. Mr. McElreath, do you not know there is no such officer of the Rock Island Company called live stock agent?

A. I don't know.

Q. All you know you wrote to someone whose address you got from Mr. McNair?

A. Mr. Bolen asked Mr. McNair for the proper address of someone to notify of this claim.

Q. You wrote it on the typewriter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got a carbon?

A. I don't know.

Q. You know whether it is the custom of Mr. Bolen to preserve copies of his letters?

A. I don't know.

Redirect examination by Mr. Bolen:

Q. It was claim agent been calling live stock agent?

A. Yes, sir.

Re-cross-examination by Mr. Bolen:

By Mr. Moore: Objected to; it is in evidence that Mr. Bolen telephoned to Mr. McNair; and ask it all be stricken.

By the Court: I will strike out the testimony of what Mr. McNair said to Mr. Bolen; I will leave the testimony as to writing the letter and mailing the letter.

(Witness excused.)

In our judgment, this does not substantially comply with this provision of the contract. While it is true that the question as to whether or not the notice was given in time was submitted to the jury, and the jury found that the notice was given in time, yet before a jury can decide any question of fact, some competent evidence sufficient to justify a decision should be presented to them. This record fails to show that any notice was given to the company within the time fixed by the contract, as the only evidence upon that issue is that within thirty or forty days before suit was filed the notice was given in manner and form stated; yet it was not within the time named in the contract.

Entertaining the view that the provision of the contract is valid and binding, and that before recovery can be had it must be shown that substantial compliance therewith was had, and that the evidence here is insufficient for that purpose, the judgment of the lower court is therefore reversed, and this cause remanded for a new trial.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied January 8, 1918.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH ZEHR and Wife, Plffs. in Err.,
v.
GEORGE W. MAY.

(— Okla. —, 169 Pac. 1077.)

Homestead — purchase-money lien.

1. No homestead right can be acquired or asserted in land upon which the purchase money is unpaid, either in whole or in part, as against the party to whom such purchase money is due.

For other cases, see Homestead, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — money lent.

2. Money paid for land by a third person directly to the grantor for the grantee, at the grantee's request, is generally considered purchase money as against the homestead right of the grantee, and entitles the person so advancing the purchase money to be subrogated to all the rights of the grantor as regards the vendor's lien.

For other cases, see Homestead, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — constitutional provision.

3. Under § 2, art. 12, of the Constitution, the homestead of the family is not exempt from forced sale for the payment of the purchase money, or a part of the purchase money, for such homestead.

For other cases, see Homestead, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 4, 1917.)

ERROR to the District Court of Alfalfa County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to compel specific performance of a contract for the purchase of defendants' interest in certain real property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. R. Carpenter, for plaintiffs in error:

There is nothing in the contract between

Headnotes by RAINEY, J.

Note. — For homestead exemption as against claim for money loaned by third person to pay off existing purchase-money obligation, see note to Phillips v. Colvin, L.R.A.1915E, 875, and other notes of collateral interest therein referred to. L.R.A.1918C.

plaintiff and defendant Joseph Zehr that would entitle plaintiff to the relief of subrogation.

37 Cyc. 375, 376, 390; Traders Bank v. Myers, 3 Kan. App. 636, 44 Pac. 292; Gadsden v. Brown, Speers, Eq. 37; Suppiger v. Garrels, 20 Ill. App. 625; Brown v. Rouse, 125 Cal. 645, 58 Pac. 267; Guy v. DuUprey, 16 Cal. 196, 76 Am. Dec. 518; Myers v. Sierra Valley Stock & Agri. Asso. 122 Cal. 669, 55 Pac. 689; Packard v. Dunfee, 119 App. Div. 599, 104 N. Y. Supp. 141; Dreese v. Myers, 52 Kan. 126, 39 Am. St. Rep. 336, 34 Pac. 349; Kahn v. McConnell, 37 Okla. 219, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1189, 131 Pac. 682; Hyde v. Ishmael, 42 Okla. 279, 143 Pac. 1044.

Messrs. Titus & Talbot for defendant in error.

Rainey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts necessary to a determination of this case are substantially as follows: In September, 1915, the plaintiffs in error, Joseph Zehr and Anna Zehr, husband and wife, were occupying a quarter section of school land as their homestead. Joseph Zehr was the lessee of said tract of land, and as such owned the improvements thereon, and had the preference right to purchase the same, but had no other title to it. This land was ordered sold as provided by law, on September 10, 1915, at which time Joseph Zehr was indebted to the state of Oklahoma in the sum of $679.90, for rent of the land, and for the payment of which the state had a lien against the land and the improvements placed thereon by Zehr. Zehr did not have the money to pay the rent, nor to make the initial payment of 5 per cent. on the purchase price in the event he purchased the land, and, on the day of the sale, approached defendant in error, George W. May, plaintiff below, and asked May if he intended to bid on the land. It was not clear, and in fact there is a conflict in the evidence, as to whether or not May informed Zehr he intended bidding on the land. May testified that he informed Zehr that he did not intend to bid on the land, if Zehr did. Zehr testified that he went to May, and asked him if he were going to bid on the land, and that May replied he (May) did not know. During this conversation, which was just a short time before the sale, Zehr informed May that if he (Zehr) bought the land he would convey it and his improvements to him (May), provided they could agree upon the price. After some negotiations May agreed to purchase the land from Zehr for $500 above the appraised value of the land and the improvements. It does not appear from the evidence that any effort was made to keep others from bidding on the land, except that Zehr went to a Mr. Hinkle and asked him if he were going to bid on the land, and that Hinkle replied that he was not, if Zehr wanted it himself. After the land was bid in by Zehr, May paid the state of Oklahoma the initial payment of $270 and the $679.90 delinquent rent due the state by Zehr. A written contract was then entered into between Zehr and May. Zehr agreed to have his wife sign this contract, but this she refused to do. The contract is as follows:

Cherokee, Oklahoma, September 10, 1915.

This agreement, made and entered into this 10th day of September, 1915, by and between Joseph Zehr and Anna Zehr, parties of the first part, and George W. May, party of the second part, witnesseth: That in consideration of the payment of the sum of six hundred seventy nine and  $\frac{90}{100}$  (679.90) dollars, in cash this day paid by said second party to said first parties, and the further sum of nineteen hundred twenty and  $\frac{10}{100}$  (\$1,920.10) dollars, to be paid as hereinafter specified, said parties of the first part bargain and sell to said party of the second part all their right, title, and interest in and to the southwest quarter of section thirty-six (36), township twenty-eight (28) north, of range twelve (12) W. I. M., Alfalfa county, state of Oklahoma. That said transfer to said second party is to be made by said first parties as soon as can be, and under the methods and plans as provided by the commissioners of the land office of the state of Oklahoma. It is understood by said parties that said land was purchased by said first parties this day at public sale of school lands by the state of Oklahoma, at the sum of \$5,400, which said sum is to be evidenced by a cash payment this day made in the sum of \$270. and the balance by the plan as provided by said commissioners aforesaid; that said second party assumes and agrees to pay said sum of \$5,400, and has this day advanced and paid said sum of \$270, the said advance payment, to said commissioners aforesaid. It is further understood that the appraised value of the improvements on said land, and which were the property of said first parties, is the sum of \$2,100; that said second party agrees to pay said sum to said first parties, and an additional sum of \$500, making a total payment to said first parties by said second party of the sum of \$2,600. That there is due as rent on said land to said commissioners aforesaid the sum of \$679.90, and which sum is required to be paid in order to effect the sale from the commissioners aforesaid to said first parties, and which sum said second party has this day advanced as aforesaid. It is further understood and agreed, and said second party hereby promises and agrees, to pay to said parties of the first part said sum of \$1,920.10, the balance due them as aforesaid at the time that they complete the transfer of such title to said land as is provided by the rules and regulations of the commissioners aforesaid, governing such lands. Possession of said land and property to be given by said first parties to said second party within 60 days from date hereof. Said second party to have immediate possession for the purpose of putting in wheat. This contract is binding upon the heirs, administrators, executors and assigns of the parties hereto.

In witness whereof said parties have hereunto set their hands this 10th day of September, 1915. Joseph Zehr, Parties of the First Part.

George W. May,
Party of the Second Part.

Zehr agreed to have his wife Anna Zehr sign the above contract, but this she refused to do. Upon her failure to sign the contract, and when they both refused to comply with the terms thereof, or to return the money advanced, May instituted the present action alleging the above facts, and asked for a specific performance of the contract, or, in the alternative, that he be decreed to have a lien on the land for the purchase price so paid by him. The defendants filed a denial, and the defendant Anna Zehr filed an additional answer, in which she asserted a homestead interest in the property and the invalidity of the contract, for the reason that the same was not signed by her. The case was tried to the court, without a jury, and on the issues presented the court made the following findings of fact: "And the court finds that the land involved in this action, to wit, the southwest quarter of section thirty-six (36), township twenty-eight (28) north, of range twelve (12) W. I. M., Alfalfa county, Oklahoma, was the homestead of the defendants, and that by reason thereof the contract set out in plaintiff's petition was and is void as not signed by the wife of Joseph Zehr. And the court further finds that the money so advanced by plaintiff on the 10th day of September, 1915, being the amount sued for in this action, was used by defendant Joseph Zehr in payment of the amount due the state of Oklahoma, as alleged and set out in plaintiff's petition, and that by reason thereof plaintiff is entitled to be subrogated to the lien held by the state for the sums so paid."

Judgment was then rendered for the plaintiff for the sum of $999.73, and said sum was adjudged to be a lien against the land, subject to the lien of the state for the unpaid purchase price. And it was further ordered that, in event the defendants did not pay the judgment within eight months, an execution issue against said land, and that the same be sold, subject to the lien of the state, as upon execution, and that the proceeds be applied in the payment of the costs of suit and sale, and to the payment of the judgment of the plaintiff, with interest, and that the residue be brought into court to be disposed of as the court should order. From this judgment Joseph Zehr and his wife appealed to this court.

While the question has been raised in some cases as to whether or not mere possession without title is sufficient to support the homestead right, the courts generally adhere to the view that such possession is sufficient to give the party in possession the homestead right against all the world but the true owner, and the Zehrs would therefore have a homestead right in the land, which they were holding and occupying as lessees, but, under the terms of the act providing for the leasing of the public lands, this right expired at the expiration of the lease, or when the land was sold by the state. Okla. Rev. Laws 1910, § 7171. Therefore when this land was sold by the state, on September 10th 1915, all the homestead rights of the lessees, Joseph Zehr and Anna Zehr, his wife, expired: but, since he was the purchaser at said sale, he became the equitable owner of the land, and a new homestead right in favor of him and his wife immediately attached thereto, subject to the lien of the state, given by § 7152, Rev. Laws of Oklahoma, 1910, which reads as follows: "The state shall have first lien upon all lands sold under this article together with all improvements and appurtenances thereunto belonging, until all payments, both principal and interest, are made thereon."

The question then arises: Was May L.R.A.1918C.

entitled to a lien for the money advanced by him and used by Zehr in the purchase of the land from the state? It is well settled that no homestead right can be acquired or asserted in land upon which the purchase money is unpaid, either in whole or in part, as against the party to whom such purchase money is due. Brown v. Ennis, 69 Ark. 123, 86 Am. St. Rep. 171, 61 S. W. 379; Wilhelm v. Locklar, 46 Fla. 375, 110 Am. St. Rep. 111, 35 So. 6; Strohecker v. Irvine, 76 Ga. 639, 2 Am. St. Rep. 62. In such cases, although the land may be impressed with the homestead character, it remains subordinate to the lien for the unpaid purchase price, and in the event of a default in the payment of the said purchase price, the same may be sold and the proceeds thereof applied in satisfaction of the judgment for the purchase money. Austin v. Underwood, 37 Ill. 438, 87 Am. Dec. 254; Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500, 99 Am. Dec. 571; Steger v. Traveling Men's Bldg. & L. Asso. 208 Ill. 236, 100 Am. St. Rep. 225, 70 N. E. 236.

Does this rule apply where the money is advanced or loaned by a third person? The general rule is stated in 13 R. C. L. § 67, p. 604, as follows: "Money paid for land by a third person directly to the grantor for the grantee is generally considered purchase money as against the homestead right of the grantee and entitles the person so advancing the purchase money to be subrogated to all the rights of the grantor as regards the vendor's lien."

While there are a few decisions to the effect that the person who furnishes the money to the purchaser to enable him to pay the seller for the homestead is not entitled to a lien for the money advanced, the rule is inequitable, and is, in our opinion, clearly against the weight of authority. In 86 Am. St. Rep., page 180, in the notes to the case of Brown v. Ennis, 69 Ark. 123, 61 S. W. 379, there is a collection of numerous authorities on the question under consideration, from which the general rule is deduced as above stated. See also Austin v. Underwood, supra; Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500, 99 Am. Dec. 571. But even where the general rule obtains, the mere fact that money was borrowed and used to satisfy an indebtedness secured by the homestead does not entitle the party furnishing the money to be subrogated to such claim, and where one loans money to a purchaser of land without any distinct understanding or agreement that the money is to be used in the purchase of the homestead or the erection of improvements thereon, the transaction does not create a lien against such homestead. The distinction recognized by most of the courts is stated in the case of Carey v. Boyle, 53 Wis. 574, 11 N. W. 47 wherein the court said: "It must be understood that the extension of this equity to a third person is strictly confined to those who furnish or advance the purchase money to the purchaser in such manner that they can be said either to have paid it to the vendor personally, or caused it to be paid on behalf or for the benefit of the purchaser, and to this extent they become parties to the transaction. It must not be a general loan, to be used by the purchaser to pay the consideration of the purchase, or to be used for any other purpose at his pleasure. In such case, the simple fact that the money can be traced into the land as having been paid by the purchaser to the vendor, as the whole or part of the purchase money, gives the person who loaned it no such right."

Neither will the mere fact that borrowed money is subsequently invested in the homestead give the lender any lien on the premises. The case of Magee v. Magee, supra, is similar to the case at bar, in that, at the time the money was advanced by the third person to the vendee, the vendee had not secured a deed from the vendor, and the money was borrowed for the purpose of taking up the payments due the vendor by the vendee. The vendee promised to execute a mortgage, which he never did, and the court held that the money advanced by the third party was purchase money, and that no homestead right could be asserted to prevent the sale of the property in payment of the debt.

Section 2, art. 12, of our Constitution, provides that "the homestead of the family shall be, and is hereby protected from forced sale for the payment of debts, except for the purchase money therefor, or a part of such purchase money, the taxes due thereon, or for work and material used in constructing improvements thereon."

The case of Nichols v. Overaker, 16 Kan. 54, is similar in principal to the instant case. It was there held: "Where a husband and wife occupying a certain piece of land as their homestead, but without having any title thereto, and N. loans to the husband a certain sum of money with the understanding and agreement that said money should be used in purchasing said land, and that the husband shall then give his note and mortgage on the land to N. for such money, and such money is so used, and the land is purchased therewith, and then the husband executes the note and mortgage as agreed, but the wife does not join in the execution of either, nor does she give her consent thereto, and she has no interest in the land except as the wife of her husband and as an occupant with him of the land, held, that the loaning of the money, the purchasing of the land, and giving of the note and mortgage, are not separate and independent transactions, but are parts and portions of one single and entire transaction; that they were all done in and about the purchase of said land, and to accomplish that purpose; that the obligation to repay the money is an 'obligation contracted for the purchase of said premises,' within the meaning of § 9 of article 15 of the Constitution, and therefore that there is no homestead exemption law as against the enforcement of such obligation."

L.R.A.1918C.

The court further observed that the rule is just the same as if no exemption law had ever been adopted.

Unquestionably the $270, being 5 per cent of the appraised value of the land, exclusive of the improvements, was a part of the purchase price of the land, and we also think that the delinquent rent in the sum of $679.90 was purchase money within the spirit, if not within the strict meaning, of the term. The law requires the payment of this delinquent rent before Zehr was permitted to buy the land, and it was absolutely necessary for this money to be paid before he and his wife could acquire any homestead right whatever in the land when the same was sold by the state. If the land had been purchased by some other person, the amount of the delinquent rent, under the law, would have been deducted by the state from the appraised value of the improvements in making settlement with Zehr. It seems to us that the money required under the law to be paid in order to consummate the purchase of the land, under the circumstances of this case, falls clearly within the spirit of the law. It would be highly inequitable to permit Zehr and his wife to enjoy the land in controversy as a homestead as against the just claim of May, whose money procured the land for them. The money was furnished by May with the distinct understanding that the same was to be used in part payment of the purchase price, and the money was so used, and the homestead right in the premises so purchased is subordinate to the lien for the purchase money, and the trial court did not err in impressing a lien thereon, and ordering the land sold in satisfaction thereof.

The judge of the trial court is affirmed:

All the justices concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK R. NOE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

T. H. SMITH et al.

(— Okla. —, 169 Pac. 1108.)

Estoppel — clothing stranger with title.

1. When an instrument which clothes another with the indicia of title to property is used by him, the equities of innocent purchasers are protected. For where the true owner holds out another or allows him to appear as the owner of, or as having full power of disposition over, the property, and thus leads a third person to do what he would not otherwise have done, the owner will not then be allowed to subject such third person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Deed — consideration — cancelation of debt.

2. (a) The complete satisfaction and discharge of an antecedent debt is a valuable consideration for the conveyance of real estate.

(b) A complete satisfaction and discharge of a pre-existing debt to a partnership is a valuable consideration for the conveyance of real estate to a member of the firm, since the proportion of the sum credited upon the account owned by the other members of the firm is cast upon that member to whom the real estate is conveyed.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Vendor and purchaser — value — change of position.

3. Where a purchaser in good faith and without notice has changed his position for the worse, and is placed in a worse condition than he was before, he is a purchaser for value, and is entitled to the protection of the Recording Acts.

For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 27, 1917.)

ERROR to the District Court for Seminole County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Willmott, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff in error being a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of any Headnotes by BRETT, J.

Note. — For discharge of antecedent debt as a consideration sustaining one's character as a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value, entitled to protection of Recording Acts, see annotation following this case, post, 438.

L.R.A.1918C.

equities in T. H. Smith (plaintiff below), the trial court erred in holding that, because the former paid $295.85 of the $1,000 consideration by paying and satisfying the account of D. A. Marlow upon the books of the Noe Brothers in that amount, he should be deprived of the land, and be entitled only to reimbursement to the extent of the actual cash money paid out by him.

39 Cyc. 1699; Saffold v. Wade, 51 Ala. 214; Gassen v. Hendrick, 74 Cal. 444, 16 Pac. 242; Jerome v. Carbonate Nat. Bank, 22 Colo. 37, 43 Pac. 215; Harris v. Evans, 134 Ga. 161, 67 S. E. 880; Pugh v. Highley, 152 Ind. 252, 44 L.R.A. 392, 71 Am. St. Rep. 327, 53 N. E. 171; Busey v. Reese, 38 Md. 264; Hanold v. Kays, 64 Mich. 439, 8 Am. St. Rep. 835, 31 N. W. 420; O'Hara v. Alexander, 56 Miss. 316; State Bank v. Frame, 112 Mo. 502, 20 S. W. 620; Clements v. Doerner, 40 Ohio St. 632; Cammack v. Soran, 30 Gratt. 292; Nugent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463, 26 Eng. Reprint, 294; Tobin v. Benson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 642; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. p. 1335; Alder-Goldman Commission Co. v. Clemons, 64 Ark. 197, 41 S. W. 417; 2 Warvelle, Vend. & P. 2d ed. § 606; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 210, 9 L. ed. 400.

Messrs. Crump, Fowler, & Skinner, S. S. Orwig, and T. S. Cobb for defendant in error Smith.

Brett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced in the district court of Seminole county by T. H. Smith, one of the defendants in error, as plaintiff, against Frank R. Noe and D. A. Marlow, as defendants, to quiet title in a 120-acre tract of land described in the petition. The material facts are:

That the land was originally owned by a Seminole freedman, who in 1911 deeded the land to D. A. Marlow by general warranty deed for a consideration of $800. Smith, however, furnished the purchase price of the land. Marlow later filed suit, in his own name, to cancel an outstanding spurious deed and quiet title to the land in himself. In the summer of 1912, Smith requested Marlow to execute a quitclaim deed to him, which Marlow refused to do. In March, 1913, Marlow conveyed the land by warranty deed to the defendant Noe for a consideration of $1,000. Marlow owed Noe Brothers, of which firm defendant Frank R. Noe was a member, $295.85, and the defendant Noe credited this account in full, and paid Marlow the difference of $704.15 in cash. When Noe's deed was placed of record, Smith immediately notified him that Marlow did not own the land, but only held it in trust for him. Also told Noe that he had better take steps to protect himself against Marlow's fraud, since he intended to file suit at once to cancel the deed.

The suit was filed, and Smith's petition alleges in substance that he furnished the full consideration for the purchase of said land, and that title was taken in the name of the defendant Marlow, the defendant Marlow holding the legal title in said land for the use and benefit of Smith, the equitable owner, and that thereafter said land was conveyed by said Marlow to Noe, at which time the said Noe well knew that said Smith was the owner of said land, and that said Noe was therefore not an innocent purchaser of same for value, and prays that the court decree him the owner of said land, and quiet the title thereto in him. Noe answered by general denial, and also that he was an innocent purchaser for value.

The only issue raised by the pleadings upon which there was any controversy is whether or not Noe was an innocent purchaser for value. The case was tried to the court and upon this controverted question the court, in his finding of facts, says: "While there are a number of circumstances in this case that would justify the court in finding that the defendant was not an innocent purchaser, yet the said circumstances are susceptible of explanation, and, being so explained, the court concludes that the defendant Frank Noe was an innocent purchaser, to the extent of the amount of the money actually paid, to wit, $704."

The court then proceeded to cancel the deed from Marlow to Noe, and quiet title in Smith, and gave Noe judgment against both Smith and Marlow for $704.15, which was the amount of the purchase price that Noe paid in cash. The case is brought here by Noe by petition in error and case made, asking for a reversal, and that he be adjudged owner of the land in controversy. And Smith files his cross petition, and asks that he be relieved of that part of the judgment requiring him to reimburse Noe for the cash Noe paid Marlow in the deal.

The one question in this case which must determine the rights of the parties is whether or not, under the law and facts, Noe was an innocent purchaser for value. There are a number of assignments of error in both the petition and cross petition to error, but they all converge to the one question as to whether or not Noe was an innocent purchaser for value, and we will consider this question, bearing in mind the different angles from which this question is presented by the assignments and arguments of counsel.

Smith, the plaintiff below, insists that Noe was not and could not, under the law, have been an innocent purchaser for value; L.R.A.1918C.

that there were facts known to Noe that, under the law, put him on inquiry. And if he had prosecuted this inquiry with ordinary diligence it would have led to actual knowledge of the fact that Marlow was only holding the legal title to said land for the use and benefit of Smith, who was the equitable owner. And one fact that he says should have put Noe on inquiry, and which is argued most strenuously, is that Marlow sold Noe the land for $1,000, when the evidence showed it was worth from $2,000 to $3,000, and that this gross inadequacy of consideration was a circumstance that should have aroused suspicion and suggested inquiry.

But under the facts in this case we fail to see the force of the argument. For, only about two years before Noe bought the land of Marlow, Marlow had purchased it for only $800, and in his deal with Noe was making a profit of $200 on an $800 investment. And there was certainly nothing in that transaction to arouse suspicion. Besides, the records showed the title to be in Marlow, and the district court, in a suit instituted by Marlow for that very purpose, had decreed Marlow to be the owner in fee of this land.

Smith sat by and permitted all this to be done without asserting any interest in the land, as he says, "because he entertained such confidence and trust in Marlow." And yet he insists that Noe, and all the rest of the world, should have looked with suspicion upon every action of this very man in whom he had such great confidence, and should have even questioned his title to and his right to convey a tract of land, which the records and a solemn decree of the district court showed him to own in fee.

But it seems to us that even if Smith had "entertained such great confidence and trust in Marlow," that, as he says, "he had permitted him to carry his check book, and check upon his account, to deal in cattle and hogs for him, and to go to Texas and buy several carloads of cattle for him on his own judgment, and to hold this land in trust for him," yet when Marlow, in the summer of 1912, refused to give him a quitclaim deed to this land, which he was only holding in trust for him, that should have aroused Smith's suspicion and led him to take steps to protect himself and the world against the possibility of the very thing that did occur, and of which he is complaining in this suit.

It was his negligence that made this fraud possible. He had clothed Marlow with the indicia of title, and neglected to take steps to protect himself, when he had reason to believe that Marlow intended to use that indicia of title to defraud him. And in such cases, when an instrument which clothes another with the indicia of title to property is used by him, the equities of innocent parties must and will be considered. And there is nothing in this record which, when viewed in the light of our common everyday experiences, would charge Noe with knowing that Smith had any interest in this land, or put him upon inquiry as to the right of Marlow to convey it. And under such circumstances the rule established by the overwhelming weight of authority is that the equities of innocent purchasers are protected, even though the party who has been imposed upon or defrauded by his agent or trustee must suffer. As is forcefully said in McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341: "Where the true owner holds out another, or allows him to appear, as the owner of, or as having full power of disposition over, the property, and innocent third parties are thus led into dealing with such apparent owner, they will be protected. Their rights in such cases do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom they deal directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing as against them, the existence of the title or power, which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he caused or allowed to appear to be vested in the party making the conveyance."

And in Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. ed. 619, it is said: "The vital principle," upon which this doctrine is based, "is that he who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden. It involves fraud and falsehood, and the law abhors both." Dover v. Pittsburg Oil Co. 143 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 405; Woodsum v. Cole, 69 Cal. 142, 10 Pac. 331.

2. (a) But though we have found Noe to be an innocent purchaser, that is, without notice of the equities of Smith, yet the further question is involved in this case, Was he an innocent purchaser for value? Two hundred and ninety-five dollars of the consideration was an antecedent debt,—a debt that Marlow owed Noe Brothers at the time the deed was made. And counsel for Smith insist that "no one can be an innocent purchaser for value, so far as an antecedent debt may enter into the consideration."

But this is a question upon which the courts are divided, and Mr. Pomeroy says that the numerical weight of authority is to the effect that the complete satisfaction and discharge of an antecedent debt is a valuable consideration for the conveyance of real property. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. p. 1328 (citing cases). And to our mind the weight of reason is also with that holding. For the one reason that courts give for holding that an antecedent debt is not a valuable consideration is that the purchaser is placed in no worse position than he was before; that he has parted with nothing of value. But where there is a complete satisfaction and discharge of the debt, that is not true. For there is a marked distinction between taking property in complete satisfaction and discharge of an antecedent debt, and simply taking a mortgage on it to secure an antecedent debt. And a failure of some courts to bear in mind this distinction is responsible for much of the confusion on this question. In the case at bar, had Noe simply taken a mortgage on the property to secure the antecedent debt of Marlow, that would have placed Noe in no worse condition than he was before: he would, in that event, have parted with nothing of value, but would still have had his debt just as it existed before the taking of the mortgage, his right of an action, and his right to demand security upon the original obligation. But as is said in State Bank v. Frame, 112 Mo. 502, 20 S. W. 620: "By the satisfaction [and discharge] of the debt the creditor divests himself of the right of an action, or of securing the original liability, and places himself in a worse condition than he would have done by a definite forbearance of the debt."

(b) Besides, in the case at bar, the debt which was canceled in part consideration of the deed from Marlow to Frank R. Noe was an antecedent debt due a partnership, and the cancelation of the deed as between the grantor and the grantee would not release the grantee (partner) from his liability to the partnership. Rice v. Soders, 1 Posey, Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 615, is a case in which, upon this point, the facts are almost identical with the facts in the case at bar, and in the syllabus it is said: "Crediting on a pre-existing debt due the firm by his vendor the price of land conveyed by the debtor to one of the members is, as against prior equities of third parties therein, a sufficiently valuable consideration to support a conveyance of land to the vendee, where he has no notice of such equities. Greeneaux v. Wheeler, 6 Tex. 528; Blum v. Loggins, 53 Tex. 121; Planters' Bank v. Evans, 36 Tex. 595; Alstin v. Cundiff, 52 Tex. 464; Johnson v. Newman, 43 Tex. 642."

And in the body of the opinion the court said: "In this case, Rice, the purchaser, did more than credit the amount of the purchase money upon an antecedent indebted-edness due to himself. His purchase was made and the land paid for by crediting: that is, satisfying pro tanto the account of Wm. M. Rice & Co. against Ward. On taking the land, Rice became chargeable [it seems the land was bought by Rice and not by the firm] to Wm. M. Rice & Co. with the amount of the purchase. A cancelation of the trade between Rice and Ward would not restore Rice's account with the firm of Wm. M. Rice & Co. to its condition before the purchase. It might cast upon him that part of the account. The proportion of the sum credited upon the account owned by the others of the firm would be a consideration satisfied by the trade. This would be valuable—something paid out or lost in the trade not restored on its rescission. Johnson v. Newman, supra."

And we know of no court that does not hold that, if for any reason the purchaser is placed in a worse condition than he was before, he is entitled to the protection of the Recording Acts. For he has been led to change his condition because the true owner or the holder of a secret equity, through negligence or mistaken confidence, has allowed another to appear as the owner with full power of disposition, and "he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted." But, if either must suffer, it must be he who permitted or made possible the deception.

3. Besides, Noe paid $700 in cash, in addition to the cancelation of this debt, and that was within itself a valuable consideration.

In the few cases that we have found in which this identical condition exists, even courts that hold that a pre-existing debt is not a valuable consideration hold that "the fact that a part of the consideration paid for the purchase of land was a pre-existing debt will not prevent the purchaser from being entitled to protection as an innocent purchaser, where the rest of the consideration was new." Adler-Goldman Commission v. Clemons, 64 Ark. 197, 41 S. W. 417.

And this must be true, for the courts universally hold that if the purchaser has changed his position for the worse, that is, if he is placed in a position that he would suffer injury if the deed should be canceled, he is a purchaser for value, and is entitled to the protection of the Recording Acts. And certainly, when Frank R. Noe parted with $700 in cash on the strength of the apparent title of Marlow, he changed his position for the worse, and was placed in a position where he would suffer injury if the deed should be canceled. And that is the true test as to whether or not one is a purchaser for value. And on this additional ground Noe must be deemed a purchaser for value, and entitled to the benefit of the Recording Acts.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment and decree in favor of Frank R. Noe, in accordance with the views herein expressed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied January 22, 1918.

Annotation—Discharge of antecedent debt as a consideration sustaining one's character as a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value, entitled to protection of Recording Acts.

This note supplements a note on the same subject appended to Western Grocer Co. v. Alleman, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 620.

The few cases considering the question subsequently to the above note are in harmony with the majority rule stated in the earlier note, that a discharge of existing indebtedness is not such a consideration as will constitute a grantee of land a bona fide purchaser for value, under the Recording Acts, as to an outstanding title under an unrecorded conveyance by his grantor. Hubert v. Merchants' Bank (1911) 137 Ga. 70, 72 S. E. 505; NOE v. SMITH, ante, 435; Buckley v. Runge (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 136 S. W. 533.

But this general rule does not apply to L.R.A.1918C.

the grantee in a deed, the consideration for which was the surrender and cancelation of a pre-existing indebtedness, where he did not obtain knowledge of the outstanding title under an unrecorded conveyance until after all action upon the notes he had surrendered was barred by the Statute of Limitations. In such case the grantor will be held to have parted with something of value, and hence to be a bona fide purchaser for value within the Recording Act. Tobin v. Benson (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 642, citing note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 620.

An attorney accepting a deed to a portion of land involved in litigation, in payment of his fee therein, is a bona fide purchaser for value. Masterson v. Cros- by (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 173.

It has been held that in a proceeding in which the grantee undertakes to show that he is a bona fide purchaser for value within the Recording Acts, evidence is inadmissible that the consideration for the deed to him was certain indebtedness then owing to him by the grantor; for this evidence is immaterial, since it does not tend to show that the grantee was an innocent purchaser for value. Buckley v. Runge (Tex.) supra. A. G. S.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JAMES WINFIELD.

(244 U. S. 147, 61 L. ed. 1045, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 546.)

Commerce — Federal Employers' Liability Act — state Workmen's Compensation Act.

The entire subject of the liability of interstate railway carriers for the death or injury of their employees while employed by them in interstate commerce is so completely covered by the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908, as to prevent any award under a state Compensation Act, where an employee was injured or killed without fault on the railway company's part while he was engaged in interstate commerce, although the Federal act gives the right of recovery only when the injury results in whole or in part from negligence attributable to the carrier. For other cases, see Commerce, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Clarke dissent.)

(May 21, 1917.)

ERROR to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, of the State of New York, to review a judgment affirmed by the Court of Appeals, approving an award of the state Workmen's Compensation Commission to an employee of the defendant railroad, injured without its fault while engaged in interstate commerce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert E. Whalen, William L. Vlisscher, Frank V. Whiting, and H. Leroy Austin, for plaintiff in error:

Claimant, when injured, was employed in interstate commerce by the railroad, which also was then engaging in intrastate commerce.

Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co.

Note. — The applicability of State Compensation Statutes to non-negligent injuries of railroad employees while engaged in interstate commerce is discussed in the annotation following this case, post, 450. L.R.A.1918C.

229 U. S. 146, 151, 152, 57 L. ed. 1125, 1127, 1128, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648. Ann. Cas. 1914C, 153, 3 N. C. C. A. 779; Shanks v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 239 U. S. 556, 60 L. ed. 436, L.R.A.1916C, 797, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Zikos v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 179 Fed. 897; Colasurdo v. Central R. Co. 180 Fed. 832, affirmed in 113 C. C. A. 379, 192 Fed. 903; San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Davide, 127 C. C. A. 454, 210 Fed. 872; Tralich v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 217 Fed. 677; Lombardo v. Boston & M. R. Co. 223 Fed. 427.

Hence, the Federal Employers' Liability Act alone governs Winfield's claim to recover.

Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mon-dou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 55, 56 L. ed. 327, 348, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 66, 67, 57 L. ed. 417, 419, 420, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 704, 57 L. ed. 1031, 1033, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 157, 158, 57 L. ed. 1129, 1133, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 256, 58 L. ed. 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 368, 58 L. ed. 638, 640, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 89, 58 L. ed. 1226, 1230, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 201, 60 L. ed. 226, 227, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75; Central Vermont R. Co. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 511, 512, 59 L. ed. 1433, 1436, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252, 9 N. C. C. A. 265; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Devine, 239 U. S. 52, 54, 60 L. ed. 140, 142, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

In the absence of negligence, the interstate carrier by railroad can be held to no liability whatever.

Southern R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 439, 446, 447, 59 L. ed. 661, 665, 666, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Hudson County, 227 U. S. 248, 264, 57 L. ed. 499, 505, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 501, 58 L. ed. 1062, 1068, L.R.A.1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 457, 59 L. ed. 671, 672, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Smith v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 26 Cal. App. 560, 147 Pac. 600; Staley v. Illinois C. R. Co. 186 Ill. App. 593, 268 Ill. 356, L.R.A.1916A, 450, 109 N. E. 342; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858.

The Workmen's Compensation Act itself precludes an award in this case.

Jensen v. Southern P. Co. 215 N. Y. 521, L.R.A.1916A, 403, 109 N. E. 600, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 276, 9 N. C. C. A. 286; Connole v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 216 Fed. 823.

Messrs. Harold J. Hinman, Egburt E. Woodbury, Attorney General of New York, and E. Clarence Aiken, for defendant in error:

The Federal Employers' Liability Law is not ejusdem generis as the Workmen's Compensation Law, and so does not apply to oust the Workmen's Compensation Commission of jurisdiction.

Harper, Workmen's Compensation, p. 125; Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 87 N. J. L. 388, 94 Atl. 313; Winfield v. Erie R. Co. 88 N. J. L. 619, 96 Atl. 394.

The state law will be upheld unless the repugnance or conflict between the state and national acts is direct and positive, so that the two acts cannot be reconciled or consistently stand together.

Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 58 L. ed. 1062, L.R.A.1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506; Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 52 L. ed. 778, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485, 14 Ann. Cas. 1101; Chiles v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 218 U. S. 71, 54 L. ed. 936, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 667, 20 Ann. Cas. 980; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 402, 410, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1542, 1546, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819.

So far as the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law have been construed by the highest court of the state, the United States Supreme Court will follow such construction and interpretation.

Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. ed. 544; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Omaha, 230 U. S. 100, 57 L. ed. 1410, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967.
L.R.A.1918C.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

While in the service of a railroad company in the state of New York, James Winfield sustained a personal injury whereby he lost the use of an eye. At that time the railroad company was engaging in interstate commerce as a common carrier and Winfield was employed by it in such commerce. The injury was not due to any fault or negligence of the carrier, or of any of its officers, agents, or employees, but arose out of one of the ordinary risks of the work in which Winfield was engaged. He was a section laborer assisting in the repair of the carrier's main track, and while tamping across ties struck a pebble which chanced to rebound and hit his eye. Following the injury he sought compensation therefor from the carrier under the Workmen's Compensation Law of the state<sup>1</sup> and an award was made to him by the state Commission, one member dissenting. The carrier appealed and the award was affirmed by the appellate division of the supreme court, two judges dissenting (168 App. Div. 351, 153 N. Y. Supp. 499), and also by the court of appeals (216 N. Y. 284, 110 N. E. 614, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 817, 10 N. C. C. A. 916). Before the Commission and in the state courts the carrier insisted that its liability or obligation and the employee's right were governed exclusively by the Employers' Liability Act of Congress (chap. 149, 35 Stat. at L. 65, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657; chap. 143, 36 Stat. at L. 291), and therefore that no award could be made under the law of the state. That insistence is renewed here.

It is settled that under the commerce clause of the Constitution Congress may regulate the obligation of common carriers and the rights of their employees arising out of injuries sustained by the latter where both are engaged in interstate commerce; and it also is settled that when Congress acts upon the subject all state laws covering the same field are necessarily superseded by reason of the supremacy of the national authority.<sup>2</sup> Congress acted upon the subject in passing the Employers' Liability Act, and the extent to which that act covers the field is the point in controversy. By one side it is said that the act, although regulating the liability or obligation of the carrier and the right of the employee where the injury results in whole or in part from negligence attributable to the carrier, does not cover injuries occurring without such negligence, and therefore leaves that class of injuries to be dealt with by state laws; and by the other side it is said that the act covers both classes of injuries and is exclusive as to both. The state decisions upon the point are conflicting. The New York court in the present case and the New Jersey court in Winfield v. Erie R. Co. 88 N. J. L. 619, 96 Atl. 394, hold that the act relates only to injuries resulting from negligence, while the California court in Smith v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 26 Cal. App. 560, 147 Pac. 600, and the Illinois court in Staley v. Illinois C. R. Co. 268 Ill. 356, L.R.A.1916A. 450, 109 N. E. 342, hold that it has a broader scope and makes negligence a test,—not of the applicability of the act, but of the carrier's duty or obligation to respond pecuniarily for the injury.

<sup>1</sup> See New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 61 L. ed. 667, L.R.A.1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629.

<sup>2</sup> Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 53-55, 56 L. ed. 327, 347, 348, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169,

In our opinion the latter view is right and the other wrong. Whether and in what circumstances railroad companies engaging in interstate commerce shall be required to compensate their employees in such commerce for injuries sustained therein are matters in which the nation as a whole is interested, and there are weighty considerations why the controlling law should be uniform and not change at every state line. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 378, 379, 37 L. ed. 772, 777, 778, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914. It was largely in recognition of this that the Employers' Liability Act was enacted by Congress. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 51, 56 L. ed. 327, 346, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875. It was drafted and passed shortly following a message from the President advocating an adequate national law covering all such injuries, and leaving to the action of the several states only the injuries occurring in intrastate employment. Cong. Rec., 60th Cong., 1st Sess., 1347. And the reports of the congressional committees having the bill in charge disclose, without any uncertainty, that it was intended to be very comprehensive, to withdraw all injuries to railroad employees in interstate commerce from the operation of varying state laws, and to apply to them a national law having a uniform operation throughout all the states. House Report No. 1386 and Senate Report No. 460, 60th Cong. 1st Sess. Thus, in the House Report it is said: "It [the bill] is intended in its scope to cover all commerce to which the regulative power of Congress extends. . . . by this bill it is hoped to fix a uniform rule of liability throughout the Union with reference to the liability of common carriers to their employees. . . . A Federal statute of this character will supplant the numerous state statutes on the subject so far as they relate to interstate commerce. It will create uniformity throughout the Union, and the legal status of such employer's liability for personal injuries, instead of being subject to numerous rules, will be fixed by one rule in all the states."

True, the act does not require the carrier to respond for injuries occurring where it is not chargeable with negligence, but this is because Congress, in its discretion, acted upon the principle that compensation should be exacted from the carrier where, and only where, the injury results from negligence imputable to it. Every part of the act conforms to this principle, and no part points to any purpose to leave the states free to require compensation where the act withholds it. By declaring in § 1 that the carrier shall be liable in damages for any injury to the employee "resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track" [35 Stat. at L. 65 chap. 149, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657], etc.,<sup>3</sup> the act plainly shows, as was expressly held in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 501, 58 L. ed. 1062, 1068, L.R.A.1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834, that it was the intention of Congress to make negligence the basis of the employee's right to damages, and to exclude responsibility of the carrier to the employee for an injury not resulting from its negligence or that of its officers, agents, or other employees. The same principle is seen also in § 3, which requires that where the carrier and the employee are both negligent, the recovery shall be diminished in proportion to the employee's contribution to the total negligence; and in § 4, which regards injuries arising from risks assumed by the employee as among those for which the carrier should not be made to respond. The committee reports upon the bill show that this principle was adopted deliberately, notwithstanding there were those within and without the committees who looked with greater favor upon a different principle which puts negligence out of view and regards the employee as entitled to compensation wherever the injury is an incident of the service in which he is employed. A few years after the passage of the act a legislative commission drafted and the Committees on the Judiciary in the two Houses of Congress favorably reported a bill substituting the latter principle for the other (Senate Report No. 553, 62d Cong., 2d Sess., House Report No. 1441, 62d Cong., 3d Sess.), but that bill did not become a law.

<sup>1</sup> N. C. C. A. 875; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 57 L. ed. 1031, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 58 L. ed. 638, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Devine, 239 U. S. 52, 60 L. ed. 140, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Rigsby, 241 U. S. 33, 41, 60 L. ed. 874, 878, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 L.R.A.1918C.

U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Erie R. Co. v. New York, 233 U. S. 671, 58 L. ed. 1149, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 266, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 138; Southern R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 439, 59 L. ed. 661, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304.

<sup>3</sup> The act is printed in full in Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 6-10, 56 L. ed. 327, 329-331, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875.

That the act is comprehensive and also exclusive is distinctly recognized in repeated decisions of this court. Thus, in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, and other cases, it is pointed out that the subject which the act covers is "the responsibility of interstate carriers by railroad to their employees injured in such commerce;" in Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 66, 67, 57 L. ed. 417, 419, 420, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176, it is said that "we may not piece out this act of Congress by resorting to the local statutes of the state of procedure or that of the injury;" that by it "Congress has undertaken to cover the subject of the liability of railroad companies to their employees injured while engaged in interstate commerce," and that it is "paramount and exclusive;" in North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 256, 58 L. ed. 591, 594, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109, it is held that where it appears that the injury occurred while the carrier was engaged and the employee employed in interstate commerce, the Federal act governs to the exclusion of the state law; in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, supra, pp. 501, 503, it is said not only that Congress intended "to exclude responsibility of the carrier to its employees" in the absence of negligence, but that it is not conceivable that Congress "intended to permit the legislatures of the several states to determine the effect of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, by enacting statutes for the safety of L.R.A.1918C.

employees, since this would in effect relegate to state control two of the essential factors that determine the responsibility of the employer;" and in Wabash R. Co. v. Haynes, 234 U. S. 86, 89, 58 L. ed. 1226, 1230, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224, it is said: "Had the injury occurred in interstate commerce, as was alleged, the Federal act undoubtedly would have been controlling, and a recovery could not have been had under the common or statute law of the state; in other words, the Federal act would have been exclusive in its operation, not merely cumulative [citing cases]. On the other hand, if the injury occurred outside of interstate commerce, the Federal act was without application and the law of the state was controlling."

The act is entitled, "An Act Relating to the Liability of Common Carriers by Railroad to Their Employees in Certain Cases," and the suggestion is made that the words "in certain cases" require that the act be restrictively construed. But we think these words are intended to do no more than to bring the title into reasonable accord with the body of the act, which discloses in exact terms that it is not to embrace all cases of injury to the employees of such carriers, but only such as occur while the carrier is engaging and the employee is employed in "commerce between any of the several states," etc. See Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

Only by disturbing the uniformity which the act is designed to secure and by departing from the principle which it is intended to enforce can the several states require such carriers to compensate their employees for injuries in interstate commerce occurring without negligence. But no state is at liberty thus to interfere with the operation of a law of Congress. As before indicated, it is a mistake to suppose that injuries occurring without negligence are not reached or affected by the act, for, as is said in Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 617, 10 L. ed. 1060, 1089, "if Congress have a constitutional power to regulate a particular subject, and they do actually regulate it in a given manner, and in a certain form, it cannot be that the state legislatures have a right to interfere; and, as it were, by way of complement to the legislation of Congress, to prescribe additional regulations, and what they may deem auxiliary provisions for the same purpose. In such a case, the legislation of Congress, in what it does prescribe, manifestly indicates that it does not intend that there shall be any farther legislation to act upon the subject-matter. Its silence as to what it does not do is as expressive of what its intention is as the direct provisions made by it." Thus the act is as comprehensive of injuries occurring without negligence, as to which class it impliedly excludes liability, as it is of those as to which it imposes liability. In other words, it is a regulation of the carriers' duty or obligation as to both. And the reasons which operate to prevent the states from dispensing with compensation where the act requires it equally prevent them from requiring compensation where the act withholds or excludes it.

It follows that, in the present case, the award under the state law cannot be sustained.

Judgment reversed.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion of the court; and the importance of the question involved induces me to state the reasons.

By the Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908 [35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657], Congress provided, in substance, that railroads engaged in interstate commerce shall be liable in damages for their negligence resulting in injury or death of employees while so engaged. The majority of the court now holds that by so doing Congress manifested its will to cover the whole field of compensation or relief for injuries suffered by railroad employees engaged in interstate commerce; or, at least, the whole field of obligation of carriers relating thereto; and that it thereby withdrew the subject wholly from the domain of state action. In other words, the majority of the court declares that Congress, by passing the Employers' Liability Act, prohibited states from including within the protection of their general Workmen's Compensation Laws employees who, without fault on the railroad's part, are injured or killed while engaged in interstate commerce; although Congress itself offered them no protection. That Congress could have done this is clear. The question presented is: Has Congress done so? Has Congress so willed?

The Workmen's Compensation Law of New York here in question has been declared by this court to be among those which "bear so close a relation to the protection of the lives and safety of those concerned that they properly may be regarded as coming within the category of police regulations." New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 207, 61 L. ed. 667, 676, L.R.A. 1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629. And this court has definitely formulated the rules which should govern in determining when a Federal statute regulating commerce will be held to supersede state legislation in the exercise of the police power. These rules are:

1. "In conferring upon Congress the regulation of commerce, it was never intended to cut the states off from legislating on all subjects relating to the health, life, and safety of their citizens, though the legislation might indirectly affect the commerce of the country." Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 103, 23 L. ed. 819, 820.

2. "If the purpose of the act cannot otherwise be accomplished,—if its operation within its chosen field else must be frustrated and its provisions be refused their natural effect,—the state law must yield to regulation of Congress within the sphere of its delegated power. . . .

"But the intent to supersede the exercise by the state of its police power as to matters not covered by the Federal legislation is not to be inferred from the mere fact that Congress has seen fit to circumscribe its regulation and to occupy a limited field. In other words, such intent is not to be implied unless the act of Congress, fairly interpreted, is in actual conflict with the law of the state." Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 533, 56 L. ed. 1182, 1194, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

3. "The question must, of course, be determined with reference to the settled rule that a statute enacted in execution of a reserved power of the state is not to be regarded as inconsistent with an act of Congress passed in the execution of a clear power under the Constitution, unless the repugnance or conflict is so direct and positive that the two acts cannot be reconciled or stand together." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 623, 42 L. ed. 878, 881, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488.

Guided by these rules and the cases in which they have been applied<sup>4</sup> we en-

<sup>4</sup> The following cases show that Congress, in legislating upon a particular subject of interstate commerce, will not be held to have inhibited by implication the exercise by the states of their reserved police power, unless such state action would actually frustrate or impair the intended operation of the Federal legislation.

1. In Sligh v. Kirkwood, 237 U. S. 52, 62, 59 L. ed. 835, 839, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501, it was held that the Federal Food and Drugs Act dealing, among other things, with shipment in interstate commerce of fruit in filthy, decomposed, or putrid condition, did not prevent a state from penalizing the shipment of citrus fruits "which are immature or otherwise unfit for consumption."

2. In Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Georgia, 234 U. S. 280, 293, 58 L. ed. 1312, 1318, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, it was held that Congress did not, by the passage of the Federal Safety Appliance Acts, dealing with the equipment of locomotives, as well

deavor to determine whether Congress, in enacting the Employers' Liability Act, intended to prevent states from entering the specific field of compensation for injuries to employees arising without fault on the railroad's part, for which Congress made no provision.

To ascertain the intent we must look, of course, first at what Congress has said: then at the action it has taken, or omitted to take. We look at the words of the statute to see whether Congress has used any which in terms express that will. We inquire whether, without the use of explicit words, that will is expressed in specific action taken. For Congress must be presumed to have intended the necessary consequences of its action. And if we find that its will is not expressed, or is not clearly expressed, either in words or by specific action, we should look at the circumstances under which the Employers' Liability Act was passed; look, on the one hand, at its origin, scope, and purpose; and, on the other, at the nature, methods, and means of state Workmen's Compensation Laws. If the will is not clearly expressed in words, we must consider all these in order to determine what Congress intended.

First: As to words used: The act contains no words expressing a will by Congress to cover the whole field of compensation or relief for injuries received by or for death of such employees while engaged in interstate commerce; or the whole field as of cars, and the Act to Regulate Commerce, preclude the states from legislating concerning locomotive headlights, as to which Congress had not specifically acted.

3. In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris, 234 U. S. 412, 420, 58 L. ed. 1377, 1382, L.R.A.1915E, 942, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790, it was held that the Carmack Amendment (34 Stat. at L. 584, 595, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 8563, 8604a, 8604aa), regulating the carrier's liability for loss of interstate shipments, did not prevent a state from providing for the allowance of a moderate attorney's fee in a statute applicable both in the case of interstate and intrastate shipments.

4. In Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 529, 56 L. ed. 1182, 1193, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715, it was held that the passage by Congress of the Food and Drugs Act of 1906, which, among other things, prohibited misbranding, did not prevent the states from regulating the sale and requiring to be affixed a statement of ingredients and minimum percentage of fat and proteins.

5. In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee Flour Mills Co. 211 U. S. 612, 623, 53 L. ed. 352, 361, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214, it was held that Congress, by granting, in the Act to Regulate Commerce, power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel equal switching service on cars destined to interstate commerce, did not, in the absence of the exercise by the Commission of its power, prohibit states from legislating on the subject.

6. In Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 257, 52 L. ed. 778, 781, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485, 14 Ann. Cas. 1101, it was held that Congress, in providing that a certificate of inspection issued by the National Bureau of Animal Industry should entitle cattle to be shipped into any state without further inspection, did not prevent a state from penalizing the importation of cattle which had not been inspected either by the Federal Bureau or by designated state officials.

7. In Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 189, 199, 48 L. ed. 401, 405, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234, it was held that the Act of Congress of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 414, L.R.A.1918C

chap. 839, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8683), prohibiting importation into the United States of adulterated and unwholesome food, did not prevent the states from legislating for the prevention of the sale of articles of food so adulterated, as come within valid prohibitions of their statutes.

8. In Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 149, 47 L. ed. 108, 114, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506, it was held that Congress, by making it an offense under the Animal Industry Act for anyone to send from state to state cattle known to be affected with communicable disease, did not prevent the states from penalizing the importation of cattle without inspection by designated state officials.

9. In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 623, 42 L. ed. 878, 881, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488, it was held that the Federal Animal Industry Act, making it a misdemeanor for any person or corporation to transport cattle known to be affected with contagious disease, did not prevent a state from imposing a civil liability for damages sustained by owners of domestic cattle by reason of the importation of such diseased cattle.

10. In Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 482, 31 L. ed. 508, 513, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 904, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564, it was held that Congress did not, by the passage of the Act to Regulate Commerce, prohibit the states from enacting laws requiring persons to undergo examination before being permitted to act as locomotive engineers.

11. In Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819, it was held that Congress did not, by the passage of many laws regulating navigation, with a view to safety, and providing for liability in certain cases prohibit the application to an accident in navigable waters of a state of a statute providing for liability for wrongful death.

The following cases, holding that the Federal Employers' Liability Act supersedes the common or statutory laws of the states relating to the liability of railroads for negligent injuries to their employees while engaged in interstate commerce, are, of course, wholly consistent with the cases of carriers' obligations in relation thereto. The language of that act, so far as it indicates anything in this respect, points to just the contrary. For its title is: "An Act Relative to the Liability of Common Carriers by Railroad in Certain Cases."<sup>5</sup>

Second: As to specific action taken: The power exercised by Congress is not such that, when exercised, it necessarily excludes the state action here under consideration. It would obviously have been possible for Congress to provide in terms, that wherever such injuries or death result from the railroad's negligence, the remedy should be sought by action for damages; and wherever injury or death results from causes other than the railroad's negligence, compensation may be sought under the Workmen's Compensation Laws of the states. Between the Federal and the state law there would be no conflict whatsoever. They would, on the contrary, be complementary.

Third: As to origin, purpose, and scope of the Employers' Liability Act and the nature, methods, and means of state Workmen's Compensation Laws: The facts are of common knowledge. Do they manifest that, by entering upon one section of the field of indemnity or relief for injuries or death suffered by employees engaged in interstate commerce, Congress purposed to occupy the whole field?

(A) The origin of the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

By the common law as administered in the several states, the employee, like every other member of the community, was expected to bear the risks necessarily attendant upon life and work, subject only to the right to be indemnified for any loss inflicted by wrongdoers. The employer, like every other member of the community, was in theory liable to all others for loss resulting from his wrongs; the scope of his liability for wrongs being amplified by the doctrine of respondeat superior. This legal liability, which, in theory, applied between employer and employee as well as between others, came, in course of time, to be seriously impaired in practice. The protection it provided employees seemed to wane as the need for it grew. Three defenses—the doctrines of fellow servant's negligence, of assumption of risk, and of contributory negligence, rose and flourished. When applied to huge organizations and hazardous occupations, as in railroading, they practically abolished the liability of employers to employees; and in so doing they worked great hardship and apparent injustice. The wrongs suffered were flagrant; the demand for redress insistent; and the efforts to secure remedial legislation widespread. But the opponents were alert, potent, and securely entrenched. The evils of the fellow-servant rule as applied to railroads were recognized as early as 1856, when Georgia passed the first law abolishing the defense. Between the passage of that act and the passage of the first Federal Employers' Liability Act (Act of June 11, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 232, chap. 3073), fifty years elapsed. In those fifty years only four more states had wholly abolished the defense of fellow servant's negligence. Furthermore, in only above referred to, the "field" of both Federal and state laws there under consideration being identical: Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 55, 56 L. ed. 327, 348, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 66, 57 L. ed. 417, 419, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 704, 57 L. ed. 1031, 1033, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 368, 58 L. ed. 638, 640, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 501, 58 L. ed. 1062, 1068, L.R.A.1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834; Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 89, 58 L. ed. 1226, 1230, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 458, 59 L. ed. 671, 673, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Craft, 237 U. S. 648, 59 L. ed. 1160, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 704, 9 N. C. C. A. 754; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Devine, 239 U. S. 52, 54, 60 L. ed. 140, 142, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wright, 239 U. S. 548, 551, 60 L. ed. 431, 434, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Kenney, 240 U. S. 489, 493, 60 L. ed. 762, 765, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 458; Osborne v. Gray, 241 U. S. 16, 19, 60 L. ed. 865, 867, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486.

<sup>5</sup> The title of this act may be profitably compared with that of the bill (not enacted) prepared by the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission pursuant to Joint Resolution No. 41, approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 884), proposing a Federal Workmen's Compensation Law, which reads: "A Bill to Provide an Exclusive Remedy and Compensation for Accidental Injuries Resulting in Disability or Death to Employees of Common Carriers by Railroad Engaged in Interstate or Foreign Commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for Other Purposes." (Sen. Doc. 338, p. 107, 62d Cong. 2d Sess.)

one state had a statute been passed making recovery possible where the employee had been guilty of contributory negligence.<sup>6</sup> Meanwhile, the number of accidents to railroad employees had become appalling. In the year 1905-06 the number killed while on duty was 3,807, and the number injured 55,524.<sup>7</sup> The promoters of remedial action, unable to overcome the efficient opposition presented in the legislatures of the several states, sought and secured the powerful support of the President.<sup>8</sup> Congress was appealed to and used its power over interstate commerce to afford relief. The promotion of safety was, of course, referred to in the committee's report as justifying congressional action; but the moving cause for the Federal Employers' Liability Act was not the desire to promote safety or to secure uniformity, as in standardizing equipment by the Safety Appliance Acts.<sup>9</sup> There was, in the nature of things, no more

<sup>6</sup> At the time the first Federal Employers' Liability Act was passed the so-called common-law defenses remained in force, in large part, in most of the states, as to railroad employees.

A. The fellow-servant rule.—(See compilation of statutes in "Liability of Employers." Senate Hearing 1906, pp. 183-288; and in Senate Document No. 207, 60th Congress, 1st Session.)

(1) It had been completely abolished as to railroad employees in only five states: Georgia (1856), Kansas (1874), North Carolina (1897), Colorado (1901), North Dakota (1903).

(2) It remained in full force, or substantially so, in twenty-five states or territories: Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Maine, Maryland, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wyoming.

(3) In sixteen other states it had been modified; abolished either as to certain more dangerous kinds of work, or as to certain classes of employees: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New York, Oregon, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Wisconsin.

(4) The passage of the first Federal act immediately stimulated further state legislation. In 1907 the fellow-servant rule was abolished as to railroads in Arkansas, Nevada, Oklahoma, South Dakota; and largely in California, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

B. Contributory negligence.—(See compilations cited supra.)

(1) In all but one state there had been no statutory change of the rule that contributory negligence constituted a complete defense. Georgia (1895) had substituted the comparative-negligence doctrine. In Kansas and Illinois early cases at common law seeming to apply this doctrine had been repudiated. The common law of Tennessee also contained some traces of the doctrine.

(2) During the year following the passage of the first Federal act, which adopted the rule of comparative negligence, with mitigation of damages proportionate to the degree of plaintiff's negligence, several states introduced this modification: Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin.

L.R.A.1918C.

C. Assumption of risk.—(See the compilation cited supra.)

The harshness of this rule had been mitigated by statute or other statutory action taken in only fourteen states: Alabama, California, Colorado, Georgia, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia. In 1907 Iowa abolished the rule as to employees giving notice of a known defect.

<sup>7</sup> See Report of Interstate Commerce Commission for the year 1906. Summary of Casualties, Table A, p. 161.

<sup>8</sup> President's Messages December 2, 1902; December 6, 1904; December 5, 1905; January 31, 1908.

<sup>9</sup> The following facts are significant as showing that employers' liability was not deemed a factor in safety to employees or the public, or a matter in which uniformity was desirable, or as otherwise presenting a railroad problem:

(1) The Annual Reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission to Congress for the eleven years ending December, 1908, deal each year at large with accidents, casualties to employees, and the promotion of safety. These reports contain numerous recommendations for legislation concerning safety appliances, hours of labor, block signals, train control, inspection; and accident reporting; but no recommendation or even mention of employers' liability.

(2) The National Convention of Railroad Commissioners, an association comprising the commissioners of the several states, is formed for the purpose of discussing and aiding in the solution of American railroad problems. Likewise, in its reports for eleven years ending October, 1908, no reference has been found, either in the annual president's address, or in the report of the committee on legislation, or in the discussions, to the subject of employers' liability; or any mention of the passage by Congress of the two Employers' Liability Acts, or of the decision of this court on the first act.

The absence of such reference is particularly noteworthy in the legislative report for the year 1908, pp. 218-233, which is devoted to a consideration of harmonious or uniform legislation. It contains a résumé of the legislation in Congress recommended and supported by the National Convention of Railroad Commissioners during a period of nineteen years and attendances at congressional hearings on safety appliances, block signal, and hours of labor legislation.

reason for providing a Federal remedy for negligent injury to employees, than there would have been for providing such a remedy for negligent injury to passengers or to other members of the public. The Federal Employers' Liability Act was, in a sense, emergency legislation. The circumstances attending its passage were such as to preclude the belief that thereby Congress intended to deny to the states the power to provide for compensation or relief for injuries not covered by it.

(B) The scope of the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

(1) The act leaves uncovered a large part of the injuries which result from the railroads' negligence. The decision of this court in the first Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141, had declared that Congress lacked power to legislate in respect to any injuries occurring otherwise than to employees engaged in interstate commerce. Later decisions disclose how large a part of the injuries resulting from the railroads' negligence are thus excluded from the operation of the Federal law. For the act was held to apply only to those directly engaged in interstate commerce. This excludes not only those engaged in intrastate commerce, but also the many who—while engaged on work for interstate commerce, as in repairing engines or cars—are not directly engaged in it. Likewise it excludes employees who, though habitually engaged directly in interstate commerce, happen to be injured or killed through the railroads' negligence, while performing some work in intrastate commerce.<sup>10</sup>

(2) The act leaves uncovered all of the injuries which result otherwise than from the railroads' negligence, though occurring when the employee is engaged directly in interstate commerce.

The scope of the act is so narrow as to preclude the belief that thereby Congress intended to deny to the states the power to provide compensation or relief for injuries not covered by it.

<sup>10</sup> Compare Illinois C. R. Co. v. Behrens, 233 U. S. 473, 58 L. ed. 1051, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646, Ann. Cas. 1914C. 163, 10 N. C. C. A. 153; New York C. R. Co. v. Carr, 238 U. S. 260, 59 L. ed. 1298, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780, 7 N. C. C. A. 1; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Yurkonis, 238 U. S. 439, 59 L. ed. 1397, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 902; Shanks v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 239 U. S. 556, 60 L. ed. 436, L.R.A.1916C, 797, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Harrington, 241 U. S. 177, 60 L. ed. 941, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517, 11 N. C. C. A. 992; Erie R. Co. v. Welsh, 242 U. S. 303, 61 L. ed. 319, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; Raymond v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 243 U. S. 43, 61 L. ed. 583, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268. L.R.A.1918C.

(C) The purpose of the Employers' Liability Act.

The facts showing the origin and scope of the act discussed above indicate also its purpose. It was to end the denial of the right to damages for injuries due to the railroads' negligence,—a right denied under judicial decisions through the interposition of the defenses of fellow servant, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence. It was not the purpose of the act to deny to the state the power to grant the wholly new right to protection or relief in the case of injuries suffered otherwise than through fault of the railroads.

The Federal Employers' Liability Act was, in no respect, a departure from the individualistic basis of right and of liability. It was, on the contrary, an attempt to enforce truly and impartially the old conception of justice as between individuals. The common-law liability for fault was to be restored by removing the abuses which prevented its full and just operation. The liability of the employer under the Federal act, as at common law, is merely a penalty for wrongdoing. The remedy assured to the employee is merely a more efficient means of making the wrongdoer indemnify him whom he has wronged. This limited purpose of the Employers' Liability Act precludes the belief that Congress intended thereby to deny to the states the power to provide compensation or relief for injuries not covered by the act.

(D) The nature of Workmen's Compensation Acts.

In the effort to remove abuses, a study had been made of facts, and of the world's experience in dealing with industrial accidents. That study uncovered as fiction many an assumption upon which American judges and lawyers had rested comfortably. The conviction became widespread that our individualistic conception of rights and liability no longer furnished an adequate basis for dealing with accidents in industry. It was seen that no system of indemnity dependent upon fault on the employers' part could meet the situation, even if the law were perfected and its administration made exemplary. For, in probably a majority of cases of injury, there was no assignable fault; and in many more it must be impossible of proof. It was urged: Attention should be directed, not to the employer's fault, but to the employee's misfortune.

Compensation should be general, not sporadic; certain, not conjectural: speedy, not delayed; definite as to amount and time of payment; and so distributed over long periods as to insure actual protection against lost or lessened earning capacity. To a system making such provision, and not to wasteful litigation, dependent for success upon the coincidence of fault and the ability to prove it, society, as well as the individual employee and his dependents, must look for adequate protection. Society needs such a protection as much as the individual; because ultimately society must bear the burden, financial and otherwise, of the heavy losses which accidents entail. And since accidents are a natural, and in part an inevitable, concomitant of industry as now practised, society, which is served thereby, should in some way provide the protection. To attain this end, co-operative methods must be pursued; some form of insurance,—that is, some form of taxation. Such was the contention which has generally prevailed. Thus, out of the attempt to enforce individual justice grew the attempt to do social justice. But when Congress passed the Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908 [35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657], these truths had gained little recognition in the United States. Not one of the thirty-seven states or territories which now have Workmen's Compensation Laws had introduced the system. Yet the conception and value of compensation laws was not unknown to Congress. It then had under consideration the first Compensation Law for Federal Employees which was enacted in the following month (Act of May 30, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 556, chap. 236). The need of its speedy passage had been called to the attention of Congress by the President in the same special message which urged the passage of this Employers' Liability Act.

Can it be contended that Congress, by simply passing the Employers' Liability Act, prohibited the states from providing in any way for the maintenance of such employees (and their dependents) for whose injuries a railroad, innocent of all fault, could not be called upon to make indemnity under that act? It is the state which is both primarily and ultimately concerned with the care of the injured and of those dependent upon him, even though the accident may occur while the employee is engaged directly in interstate commerce. Upon the state falls the financial burden of dependency, if provision be not otherwise made. Upon the state falls directly the far heavier burden of the demoralization of its citizenry and of the social unrest which attend destitution and the denial of opportunity. Upon the state also rests, under our dual system of government, the duty owed to the individual, to avert misery and promote happiness so far as possible. Surely we may not impute to Congress the will to deny to the states the power to perform either this duty to humanity or their fundamental duty of self-preservation. And if the states are left free to provide compensation, what is there in the Employers' Liability Act to show an intent on the part of Congress to deny to them the power to make the provision by raising the necessary contributions, in the first instance, through employers?

(E) Methods and means of Workmen's Compensation Laws.

The principle underlying Workmen's Compensation Laws is the same in all the states. The methods and means by which that principle is carried out vary materially. The principle is that of insurance, the premiums to which are contributed by employers generally. How the insurance fund shall be raised and administered; what the scale of compensation or relief shall be; how the contributing groups of employers shall be formed; whether or not a state fund shall be created; whether the individual employer shall be permitted to become a self-insurer; whether he shall be permitted to deal directly with the employee in making settlement of the compensation to be awarded; on all these questions the laws of the several states do and properly may differ radically.

What methods and means the state shall adopt in order to provide compensation for injuries to citizens or residents where Congress has left it free to legislate rests (subject to constitutional limitations) wholly within the judgment of the state. It might conclude, in view of the hazard involved, that no one should engage in the occupation of railroading without providing against the financial consequences of accidents through contributing an adequate amount to an accident insurance fund. It might conclude that it was wise to make itself the necessary contributions to such a fund, out of moneys raised from general taxation. Or it might conclude, as the state of Washington did, that the fairest and wisest form of taxation for the purpose was to impose upon the employer directly the duty of making the required contributions,—relying upon the laws of trade to effect, through the medium of transportation charges, an equitable distribution of the burden. The method last suggested is pursued in substance also by the state of New York. In its essence the laws of the states are the same in this respect, as is shown in Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 242 U. S. 219, ante, 260, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260. It is misleading to speak of the new obligation of the employer to contribute to compensation for injuries to workmen as an increase of the "employer's liability." It is not a liability for a violation of a duty. It is a direct—a primary—obligation in the nature of a tax. And the right of the employee is as free from any suggestion of wrong done to him as the new right granted by Mothers' Pension Laws.

(F) Federal and state legislation are not in conflict.

The practical difficulty of determining in a particular case, according to presence or absence of railroad fault, whether indemnity is to be sought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act or under a state compensation law, affords, of course, no reason for imputing to Congress the will to deny to the states power to afford relief through such a system. The difficulty and uncertainty is, at worst, no greater than that which now exists in so many cases where it is necessary to determine whether the employee was, at the time of the accident, engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce.<sup>11</sup> Expedients for minimizing inherent difficulties will doubtless be found by experience. All the difficulties may conceivably be overcome in practice. Or they may prove so great as to lead Congress to repeal the Federal Employers' Liability Act and leave to the states (which alone can deal comprehensively with it), the whole subject of indemnity and compensation for injuries to employees, whether engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce, and whether such injuries arise from negligence or without fault of the employer.

We are admonished also by another weighty consideration not to impute to Congress the will to deny to the states this power. The subject of compensation for accidents in industry is one peculiarly appropriate for state legislation. There must, necessarily, be great diversity in the conditions of living and in the needs of the injured and of his dependents, according to whether they reside in one or the other of our states and territories, so widely extended. In a large majority of instances they reside in the state in which the accident occurs. Though the principle that compensation should be made, or relief given, is of universal application, the great diversity of conditions in the different sections of the United States may, in a wise application of the principle, call for differences between states in the amount and method of compensation, the periods in which payment shall be made, and the methods and means by which the funds shall be raised and distributed. The field of compensation for injuries appears to be one in which uniformity is not desirable, or at least not essential to the public welfare.

The contention that Congress has, by legislating on one branch of a subject relative to interstate commerce, pre-empted the whole field, has been made often in this court; and, as the cases above cited show, has been repeatedly rejected in cases where the will of Congress to leave the balance of the field open to state action was far less clear than under the circumstances here considered. Tested by those decisions and by the rules which this court has framed for its guidance, I am of opinion, as was said in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Georgia, 234 U. S. 280, 294, 58 L. ed. 1312, 1319, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, that "the intent to supersede the exercise of the state police power with respect to this subject cannot be inferred from the restricted action which thus far has been taken." The field covered by Congress was a limited field of the carrier's liability for negligence, not the whole field of the carrier's obligation arising from accidents. I find no justification for imputing to Congress the will to deny to a large class of persons engaged in a necessarily hazardous occupation<sup>12</sup> and otherwise unprovided for, the protection afforded by beneficent statutes enacted in the long-deferred performance of an insistent duty and in a field peculiarly appropriate for state action.

Mr. Justice Clarke concurs in this dissent.

<sup>11</sup> The number of cases on the October, 1915, term of this court, was 1,069. Of these 93 involved one or more questions arising under the Federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908. Of these 93 cases, 37 presented the question whether or not the employee was engaged in interstate commerce or intrastate commerce. In 52 of the cases the question was presented whether there was evidence of negligence on L.R.A.1918C.

the part of defendant. In 24 of the cases the question was also presented whether or not the employee had assumed the risk.

<sup>12</sup> The experience of the organization [Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen] shows that more than 60 per cent of all deaths and disabilities are caused by railroad accidents. W. S. Carter, Sen. Doc. 549, p. 137, 64th Cong. 1st Sess.

Annotation—Applicability of state compensation statutes to non-negligent injuries of railroad employees while engaged in interstate commerce.

Exhaustive annotation on the Workmen's Compensation Acts will be found in L.R.A.1916A, 23, and L.R.A.1917D, 80; and on the Federal Employers' Liability Acts in 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38, and L.R.A.1915C, 48.

As to the applicability of the Federal Employers' Liability Act or state Compensation Acts to injuries within admiralty jurisdiction, see note to Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, post, 439.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in NEW YORK C. R. Co. v. WINFIELD, ante, 439, disposes adversely of the contention that the Federal Employers' Liability Act does not prevent the application of state statutes to injuries received by employees of interstate railroads while they themselves are engaged in the work of furthering interstate commerce, if such injuries occur without negligence on the part of the railroad company or its agents or employees. The court of last resort has determined that, Congress having entered the field, the states have no longer any right to legislate with respect to employees of interstate railways while they themselves are engaged in furthering interstate commerce, although the injured employee may have no remedy under the Federal act.

The opinion of the Federal Supreme Court was reiterated in Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (1917) 244 U. S. 170, 61 L. ed. 1057, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, wherein it was stated that Congress intended that the Federal act should be as comprehensive of those instances in which it excluded liability, i. e., where there is no causal negligence for which the carrier is responsible, as of those in which liability is imposed; and in both classes such act is paramount to, and exclusive of, state regulation.

As is stated in the foregoing opinion, and also as is shown in the annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 461, and L.R.A.1917D, 85, the state courts had been in conflict upon this question. In New York and New Jersey the view was taken that the Federal act applied only to injuries caused by the negligence of the railroad company or its agents or employees, while the contrary view has been taken by courts in Illinois, California, and Massachusetts. Since the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the WINFIELD CASE, the question has been passed upon in the following cases, the L.R.A.1918C.

state courts, of course, following the decision of the United States Supreme Court: Walker v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. (1917) — Ind. App. —, 117 N. E. 969; Matney v. Bush (1918) 102 Kan. 293, 169 Pac. 1150; Carey v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1918) — Mich. —, 169 N. W. 492; Rounsaville v. Central R. Co. (1917) — N. J. —, 101 Atl. 182; Panhandle & S. F. R. Co. v. Brooks (1917) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 199 S. W. 665.

While it is finally determined that the states have no power to pass a statute which will render the railroad company liable for any injury to an employee while engaged in interstate commerce, the contention has been made in some cases that a state Compensation Act which is elective in character may be adopted by the railroads, so that they will come within the state act by virtue of their own election. This view, however, has been repudiated.

The Federal Supreme Court has held that the state has no right to put an interstate carrier and their interstate employees to an election between the provisions of the Federal act and the state Compensation Act, or to impute an election to them by a statutory presumption. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (1917) 244 U. S. 170, 61 L. ed. 1057, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, reversing the New Jersey court of errors and appeals (1916) 88 N. J. L. 619, 96 Atl. 394.

In the Michigan case of Carey v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1918) — Mich. —, 166 N. W. 492, in which case it was contended that as the railroad company had formally elected to accept the provisions of the Michigan Compensation Act, which expressly provided that any interstate carrier and its interstate employees might, so far as not forbidden by any act of Congress, voluntarily accept and be bound by the provisions of the state act, the railroad company had by its election become bound by the Compensation Act as to non-negligent injuries. The court held, however, that the decision of the Federal Supreme Court in the WINFIELD CASE, determined conclusively for all American jurisdictions that employees of an interstate carrier, engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury, are not within the application of state Compensation Acts.

The Michigan court suggests that the phrase used in the state act, "so far as not forbidden by any act of Congress," might include the passage of the Federal act; that is, the passage of the act itself might be considered as forbidding the state to legislate upon the subject. It would seem, however, that the phrase in question has reference to the provision in the Federal act which forbids any limitation of its liability by any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act.

The contention that by accepting the state Compensation Act, the railroad becomes bound by its election even as to non-negligent injuries of interstate employees, seems very plausible, and it certainly seems as though that question had not been determined by either of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. The decision under the New York act would apparently not be conclusive in the case of a non-negligent injury where the railroad company had voluntarily elected to come in under the state act so far as it could; and the case under the New Jersey law simply decides that the state cannot compel a railroad to elect as between the Federal act and a state Compensation Act.

Entirely aside from the question of interstate commerce, it is submitted that the state Compensation Acts, if construed to cover non-negligent injuries of employees who, as to their negligent injuries, are within the protection of the Federal act, would be unconstitutional.

It is very difficult to defend the Compensation Acts against the contention that they take property without due process of law. There is indeed a taking, but this is justified only in view of the fact that the employers have compensation therefor. While these statutes impose an additional burden on employers as to injuries not caused by their negligence, they relieve these employers from all danger of a suit for damages in which the cost to the employer might be many times the amount which he has to pay under the Compensation Act. This makes the statutes, in a sense, a matter of give and take; but if the state Compensation Acts are construed to apply to non-negligent injuries, while the employer is still liable under the Federal act for not only his own negligence, but that of his agents and employees, he will in nowise be compensated for the burden placed upon him in rendering him liable for non-negligent injuries.

W. M. G.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MARIE JENSEN.

(244 U. S. 205, 61 L. ed. 1086, 37 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 524.)

Master and servant — employers' liability — applicability of statute to ocean-going ships.

1. Congress did not establish a rule of liability with respect to injuries received by an employee on an ocean-going ship plying between ports of different states, owned and operated by a corporation which is also an interstate railway carrier, by enacting the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908, giving a right of recovery against interstate carriers by railroad for the death or injury of employees while engaged in interstate commerce, caused by the negligence of the carriers' officers, agents, or employees, or by any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its "cars, engines, appliances, machinery.

Note — The applicability of the Federal Employers' Liability Act or State Compensation Acts to injuries within admiralty jurisdiction is discussed in the annotation following this case, post, 474.
L.R.A.1918C.

track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment." The word "boats" in the statute refers to vessels which may be properly regarded as in substance part of a railroad's extension or equipment, as understood and applied in common practice.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, 11. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Admiralty — jurisdiction — state legislation affecting maritime law.

2. State legislation changing, modifying, or affecting the general maritime law which contravenes the essential purpose expressed by an act of Congress, or works material prejudice to the characteristic features of such general maritime law, or interferes with the proper harmony or uniformity of that law in its international and interstate relations, is invalid as being repugnant to U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, extending the judicial power of the United States to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, giving Congress power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers vested in the Federal government; and U. S. Judicial Code, §§ 24, 256, giving the Federal district courts exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it.

For other cases, see Admiralty, 1. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — state Workmen's Compensation Laws.

3. The application to an injury sustained by a longshoreman while he was unloading in a New York port an ocean-going steamship owned by a nonresident corporation, and plying between ports of different states, of the provisions of the New York Workmen's Compensation Act, which, in lieu of the common-law liability enforceable by suit in cases of negligence, imposes a liability upon employers, enforceable without judicial action, to make compensation for disabling or fatal accidental injuries to employees, without regard to fault as a cause, graduating compensation for disabilities according to a prescribed scale based upon loss of earning power, and measuring death benefits according to the dependency of the surviving wife, husband, or infant children, renders the statute, to that extent, invalid as conflicting with U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, extending the judicial power of the United States to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, giving Congress power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers vested in the Federal government; and U. S. Judicial Code, §§ 24, 256, giving Federal district courts exclusive judicial cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right to a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it; being also inconsistent with the policy of Congress to encourage investments in ships, manifested by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4283-4285, Act of June 26, 1884, § 18, which declare a limitation upon the liability of their owners.

For other cases, see Admiralty, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice Holmes, Mr. Justice Pitney, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and Mr. Justice Clarke dissent.)

(May 21, 1917.)

ERROR to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, of the state of New York, to review a judgment affirmed by the Court of Appeals, approving an award of the State Workmen's Commission to claimant for the death of her husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Norman B. Beecher and Ray Rood Allen, for plaintiff in error:

The New York Workmen's Compensation Law imposes a direct and unconstitutional burden upon the interstate commerce transacted by the plaintiff in error.

Barrett v. New York, 232 U. S. 14, 33, 58 L. ed. 483, 491, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203; People v. Brooks, 4 Denio, 469; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Philadelphia & S. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 336, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1201, 1 L.R.A.1918C.

Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 23; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Taylor, 192 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 342, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; D. E. Foote & Co. v. Stanley, 232 U. S. 494, 58 L. ed. 698, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 47 L. ed. 336, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Rearick v. Pennsylvania, 203 U. S. 507, 51 L. ed. 295, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159; Dozier v. Alabama, 218 U. S. 124, 54 L. ed. 965, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 264, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 649; Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 227 U. S. 389, 57 L. ed. 565, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 396, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1540, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18; Heyman v. Hays, 236 U. S. 178, 186, 59 L. ed. 527, 530, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mazursky, 216 U. S. 122, 54 L. ed. 411, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 378; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 406, 416, 54 L. ed. 1088, 1091, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Murphy, 196 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 444, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, 2 Ann. Cas. 514; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 237 U. S. 220, 59 L. ed. 926, P.U.R.1915C, 309, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; McNeill v. Southern R. Co. 202 U. S. 543, 561, 50 L. ed. 1142, 1148, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Greenwood Grocery Co. 227 U. S. 1, 57 L. ed. 389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Mayes, 201 U. S. 321, 50 L. ed. 772, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 22 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. ed. 678, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547.

It denies this plaintiff in error the equal protection of the laws because, although it complies with the Compensation Act, it is not freed from further liability to workmen injured on shipboard, but remains liable to suits in admiralty.

Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 58 L. ed. 1208, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. ed. 654; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; The Thode Fagelund, 211 Fed. 685; The Thietbek, 218 Fed. 251; The Fred E. Sander, 208 Fed. 724, 4 N. C. C. A. 891; The Rosalie Mahony, 218 Fed. 698; Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720.

It infringes upon the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the United States.

Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, supra.

Congress, by the Federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908, has dealt with and assumed exclusive jurisdiction over the field of compensation payable for injuries received by the employee of a common carrier by railroad while both employer and employee are engaged in interstate commerce.

The Passaic, 190 Fed. 644; Erie R. Co. v. Jacobus, 137 C. C. A. 151, 221 Fed. 335; The Pawnee, 205 Fed. 333; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 57 L. ed. 1125, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 153, 3 N. C. C. A. 779; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 571, 576, 57 L. ed. 361, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 275, 57 L. ed. 1179, 1185, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 457, 59 L. ed. 671, 672, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 58 L. ed. 1062, L.R.A.1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834; Smith v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 26 Cal. App. 560, 147 Pac. 600; Staley v. Illinois C. R. Co. 268 Ill. 356, L.R.A.1916A, 450, 109 N. E. 342.

No action for death to an employee engaged in interstate commerce can be brought against the railroad company except within the time provided by Congress.

Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 57 L. ed. 417, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 228 U. S. 173, 57 L. ed. 785, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426, 3 N. C. C. A. 806; St. Louis, S. E. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 58 L. ed. 638, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75.

The fact that there is no liability imposed by Congress in favor of certain relatives of a deceased workman, or that Congress has made no provision for the recovery of other than pecuniary damage in death cases, does not leave the field of legislation in these respects open to the states, for the act of Congress creates the only obligation that has existed since its enactment.

Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 201, 60 L. ed. 226, 227, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75.

Congress by refraining from acting may as effectually withdraw a field from state legislation as though it had enacted affirmative measures.

The Hours of Service Act Cases, Erie R. Co. v. New York, 233 U. S. 671, 58 L. ed. 1149, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 266, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 138; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160.

The test is not whether the state legislation is in conflict with the details of the Federal law or supplements it, but whether the state had any jurisdiction of a subject over which Congress had exerted its exclusive control.

Southern R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 439, 448, 59 L. ed. 661, 666, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304.

Messrs. E. Clarence Aiken, Egbert E. Woodbury, Attorney General of New York, and Harold J. Hinman, for the New York State Industrial Commission:

It may be a doubtful question as to whether the case would come under admiralty at all, as the claimant's intestate was on the gang plank which connected the land with the ship, and it might be contended that the gang plank was an extension of the shore, and not a part of the ship.

Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 58 L. ed. 1208, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733; The Plymouth (Hough v. Western Transp. Co.) 3 Wall. 20, 8 L. ed. 125; The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239; Swayne & Hoyt v. Barsch, 141 C. C. A. 337, 226 Fed. 581; Martin v. West, 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42; Cleveland Terminal & Valley R. Co. v. Cleveland S. S. Co. 208 U. S. 316, 52 L. ed. 508, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414, 13 Ann. Cas. 1215.

No action in rem is given by the statute of the state or by Congress for the death of a person caused by negligence, and therefore there is no cause of action in rem in admiralty.

The Corsair (Barton v. Brown) 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949.

There being no law, either state or national, giving a right of action in rem for death, there is only one remedy in this case; viz., a right of action in personam for the death of Jensen, enforceable either in the state courts or the United States courts. The Workmen's Compensation Law would therefore be a defense to an action brought in admiralty in personam.

Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 205 Fed. 169; The Fred E. Sander, 212 Fed. 545, 5 N. C. C. A. 97; Schweitzer v. Hamburg-American Line, 149 App. Div. 900, 134 N. Y. Supp. 812, 78 Misc. 448, 138 N. Y. Supp. 944.

All that the Workmen's Compensation Law does is to substitute a remedy for the common-law remedy, making two remedies as before.

The requirement for insurance against injury provided in this statute is not obnoxious to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 205 Fed. 169; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819.

While Congress has legislated upon this subject of limitation of liability, it is not legislation that excludes action in the state courts.

The City of Boston, 182 Fed. 174.

A proceeding limiting liability of ship-owners is not an action in rem, but is sui generis, which takes rather the character of an action in personam (Re Morrison, 147 U. S. 14, 37 L. ed. 60, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246), and it applies to nonmaritime torts (Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. ed. 110, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27), and it also applies to cases of personal injuries as well as to cases of loss or injury to property (Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Craig v. Continental Ins. Co. 141 U. S. 638, 35 L. ed. 886, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97).

Mr. Christopher M. Bradley, amicus curiæ:

The police power belongs to the states, has not been surrendered by them to the general government nor restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and is essentially exclusive.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 41 L. ed. 677, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 36 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

The police power has heretofore been invoked and established to support compulsory Workmen's Compensation Laws.

State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 177, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1106, 2 N. C. C. A. 828, 3 N. C. C. A. 599; Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 688, 151 Pac. 398, 10 N. C. C. A. 1.

In cases under the maritime law, where the facts give the seamen a lien because of L.R.A.1918C.

his injuries, the vessel herself is the offending thing or the wrongdoer, although, of course, ultimately it is her owner who pays for the tort. The personal liability or obligation of the owner, for which he can be sued in personam, is a thing apart from the maritime lien of the seamen in the thing; and this personal obligation is no more maritime than nonmaritime.

Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 107, 23 L. ed. 822; The Fullerton, 92 C. C. A. 463, 167 Fed. 11; Stewart v. Potomac Ferry Co. 12 Fed. 300; Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 648, 44 L. ed. 926, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 15 L. ed. 1028.

In the absence of congressional legislation the state law can create and enforce the personal obligation.

Lindstrom v. International Nav. Co. 60 C. C. A. 649, 123 Fed. 475; Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421, 37 N. E. 450, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 672; Stern v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 110 Fed. 998; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 405, 406, 52 L. ed. 264, 270, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

There is no question of interference with the general maritime law.

The Strabo, 90 Fed. 113; Quinn v. New Jersey Lighterage Co. 23 Fed. 363; Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 23 L. ed. 656, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421, 37 N. E. 450, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 672; Gabrielson v. Waydell, 135 N. Y. 13, 17 L.R.A. 228, 31 Am. St. Rep. 793, 31 N. E. 969; Silveira v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 Pac. 996, 128 Cal. 187, 60 Pac. 687; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 755.

As to all cases not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty, the suitor may pursue his common-law remedy in the state tribunal; and where the matter is not within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, the state court may even provide a statutory remedy purely in rem, after the manner of the civil law.

The Glide, 167 U. S. 620, 42 L. ed. 301, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930.

The remedy provided by the act is a common-law remedy.

Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry & Mach. Co. 237 U. S. 303, 59 L. ed. 966, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 596; Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 644, 44 L. ed. 925, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824; Benedict, Admiralty, 4th ed. §§ 128, 129; Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Jones, 29 Fed. 193; Searl v. School Dist. 124 U. S. 197, 31 L. ed. 415, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460.

The obligation here sought to be enforced is not in its essence maritime; and in the absence of congressional legislation providing different or maritime relief for seamen in cases covered by the act, the relief thereby provided can be enforced by the state.

Pacific Surety Co. v. Leatham & S. Towing & Wrecking Co. 80 C. C. A. 670, 151 Fed. 443; The Pennsylvania, 83 C. C. A. 139, 154 Fed. 9; Lindstrom v. Mutual S. S. Co. 132 Minn. 328, L.R.A. 1916D, 935, 156 N. W. 663; Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co. 89 Conn. 367, L.R.A. 1916A, 436, 94 Atl. 372; Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 205 Fed. 169; Walker v. Clyde S. S. Co. 215 N. Y. 529, 109 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 87.

Mr. Justice McReynolds delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon a claim regularly presented, the Workmen's Compensation Commission of New York made the following findings of fact, rulings, and award, October 9, 1914:

1. "Christen Jensen, the deceased workman, was, on August 15, 1914, an employee of the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation of the state of Kentucky, where it has its principal office. It also has an office at Pier 49, North river, New York city. The Southern Pacific Company at said time was, and still is, a common carrier by railroad. It also owned and operated a steamship, El Oriente, plying between the ports of New York and Galveston, Texas.

2. "On August 15, 1914, said steamship was berthed for discharging and loading at Pier 49, North river, lying in navigable waters of the United States.

3. "On said date Christen Jensen was operating a small electric freight truck. His work consisted in driving the truck into the steamship El Oriente, where it was loaded with cargo, then driving the truck out of the vessel upon a gangway connecting the vessel with Pier 49, North river, and thence upon the pier, where the lumber was unloaded from the truck. The ship was about 10 feet distant from the pier. At about 10:15 A. M., after Jensen had been doing such work for about three hours that morning, he started out of the ship with his truck loaded with lumber, a part of the cargo of the steamship El Oriente, which was being transported from Galveston, Texas, to New York city. Jensen stood on the rear of the truck, the lumber coming about to his shoulder. In driving out of the port in the side of the vessel and upon the gangway, the truck became jammed against the guide pieces on the gangway. Jensen then reversed the direction of the truck and proceeded at third or full speed backward into the hatchway. He failed to lower his head and his head struck the ship at the top line, throwing his head forward and causing his chin to hit the lumber L.R.A. 1918C.

in front of him. His neck was broken and in this manner he met his death.

4. "The business of the Southern Pacific Company in this state consisted at the time of the accident and now consists solely in carrying passengers and merchandise between New York and other states. Jensen's work consisted solely in moving cargo destined to and from other states.

5. "Jensen left surviving him Marie Jensen, his widow, twenty-nine years of age, and Howard Jensen, his son, seven years of age, and Evelyn Jensen, his daughter, three years of age.

6. "Jensen's average weekly wage was $19.60 per week.

7. "The injury was an accidental injury and arose out of and in the course of Jensen's employment by the Southern Pacific Company, and his death was due to such injury. The injury did not result solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty, and was not occasioned by the wilful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or another.

"This claim comes within the meaning of chapter 67 of the Consolidated Laws as re-enacted and amended by chapter 41 of the Laws of 1914, and as amended by chapter 316 of the Laws of 1914.

"Award of compensation is hereby made to Marie Jensen, widow of the deceased, at the rate of $5.87 weekly during her widowhood, with two years' compensation in one sum in case of her marriage; to Harold Jensen, son of the deceased, at the rate of $1.96 per week, and to Evelyn Jensen, daughter of the deceased, at the rate of $1.96 per week until the said Harold Jensen and Evelyn Jensen respectively shall arrive at the age of eighteen years, and there is further allowed the sum of one hundred ($100) dollars for funeral expenses."

In due time the Southern Pacific Company objected to the award "upon the grounds that the act does not apply, because the workman was engaged in interstate commerce on board a vessel of a foreign corporation of the state of Kentucky, which was engaged solely in interstate commerce; that the injury was one with respect to which Congress may establish, and has established, a rule of liability, and under the language of § 114<sup>1</sup> [copied in the margin], the act has no application; on the ground that the act includes only those engaged in the operation of vessels other than those of other states and countries in foreign and interstate commerce, while the work upon which the deceased workman was engaged at the time of his death was part of the operation of a vessel of another state, engaged in interstate commerce, and hence does not come within the provisions of the act; further, that the act is unconstitutional, as it constitutes a regulation of and burden upon commerce among the several states, in violation of article 1, § 8, of the Constitution of the United States; in that it takes property without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution; in that it denies the Southern Pacific Company the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution, because the act does not afford an exclusive remedy, but leaves the employer and its vessels subject to suit in admiralty; also that the act is unconstitutional in that it violates article 3, § 2, of the Constitution, conferring admiralty jurisdiction upon the courts of the United States."

<sup>1</sup> Section 114. "The provisions of this chapter shall apply to employers and employees engaged in intrastate, and also in interstate or foreign commerce, for whom

Without opinion, the appellate division approved the award and the court of appeals affirmed this action (215 N. Y. 514, L.R.A.1916A, 403, 109 N. E. 600, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 276), holding that the Workmen's Compensation Act applied to the employment in question and was not obnoxious to the Federal Constitution. It said: "The scheme of the statute is essentially and fundamentally one by the creation of a state fund to insure the payment of a prescribed compensation based on earnings for disability or death from accidental injuries sustained by employees engaged in certain enumerated hazardous employments. The state fund is created from premiums paid by employers based on the pay roll, the number of employees, and the hazards of the employment. The employer has the option of insuring with any stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact such business, or of furnishing satisfactory proof to the Commission of his own financial ability to pay. If he does neither, he is liable to a penalty equal to the pro rata premium payable to the state fund during the period of his noncompliance, and is subject to a suit for damages by the injured employee, or his legal representative in case of death, in which he is deprived of the defenses of contributory negligence, assumed risk, and negligence of a fellow servant. By insuring in the state fund, or by himself or his insurance carrier paying the prescribed compensation, the employer is relieved from further liability for personal injuries or death sustained by employees. Compensation is to be made without regard to fault as a cause of the injury, except where it is occasioned by the wilful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or another, or results solely from his intoxication while on duty. Compensation is not based on the rule of damages applied in negligence suits, but, in addition to providing for medical, surgical, or other attendance or treatment and funeral expenses, it is based solely on loss of earning power. Thus, the risk of accidental injuries occurring with or without fault on the part either of employee or employer is shared by both, and the burden of making compensation is distributed over all the enumerated hazardous employments in proportion to the risks involved." See also Walker v. Clyde S. S. Co. 215 N. Y. 529, 109 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 87.

In New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 61 L. ed. 667, L.R.A.1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629, we held the statute valid in certain respects; and, considering what was there said, only two of the grounds relied on for reversal now demand special consideration. First. Plaintiff in error, being an interstate common carrier by railroad, is responsible for injuries received by employees while engaged therein under the Federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. chap. 149, p. 65, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657), and no state statute can impose any other or different liability. Second. As here applied, the Workmen's Compensation Act conflicts with the general maritime law, which constitutes an integral part of the Federal law under art. 3, § 2, of the Constitution, and to that extent is invalid.

The Southern Pacific Company, a Kentucky corporation, owns and operates a railroad as a common carrier; also the steamship El Oriente, plying between New York and Galveston, Texas. The claim is that therefore rights and liabilities of the parties here must be determined in accordance with the Federal Employers' Liability Act. But we think that act is not applicable in the circumstances.

a rule of liability or method of compensation has been or may be established by the Congress of the United States, only to the extent that their mutual connection with intrastate work may and shall be clearly separable and distinguishable from interstate or foreign commerce, except that such employer and his employees working only in L.R.A.1918C.

this state may, subject to the approval and in the manner provided by the Commission and so far as not forbidden by any act of Congress, accept and become bound by the provisions of this chapter in like manner and with the same effect in all respects as provided herein for other employers and their employees."

The First Federal Employers' Liability Act (June 11, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 232, chap. 3073) extended in terms to all common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and, because it embraced subjects not within the constitutional authority of Congress, was declared invalid. Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141, Jan. 6, 1908. The later act is carefully limited and provides that "every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several states or territories, or between any of the states and territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the states or territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the states or territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representatives, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, road-bed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment."

Evidently the purpose was to prescribe a rule applicable where the parties are engaging in something having direct and substantial connection with railroad operations, and not with another kind of carriage recognized as separate and distinct from transportation on land and no mere adjunct thereto. It is unreasonable to suppose that Congress intended to change long-established rules applicable to maritime matters merely because the ocean-going ship concerned happened to be owned and operated by a company also a common carrier by railroad. The word "boats" in the statute refers to vessels which may be properly regarded as in substance but part of a railroad's extension or equipment as understood and applied in common practice.

The fundamental purpose of the Compensation Law, as declared by the court of appeals, is "the creation of a state fund to insure the payment of a prescribed compensation based on earnings for disability or death from accidental injuries sustained by employees engaged in certain enumerated hazardous employments," among them being "longshore work, including the loading or unloading of cargoes or parts of cargoes of grain, coal, ore, freight, general merchandise, lumber or other products or materials, or moving or handling the same, on any dock, platform or place, or in any warehouse or other place of storage." Its general provisions are specified in our opinion in New York C. R. Co. v. White, supra, and need not be repeated. Under the construction adopted by the state courts no ship may load or discharge her cargo at a dock therein without incurring a penalty, unless her owners comply with the act, which, in order to secure payment of compensation for accidents, generally without regard to fault, and based upon annual wages, provides (§ 50) that—"an employer shall secure compensation to his employees in one of the following ways:

"1. By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation in the state fund, or 2. By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this state. If insurance be so effected in such a corporation of mutual association the employer shall forthwith file with the Commission, in form prescribed by it, a notice specifying the name of such insurance corporation or mutual association together with a copy of the contract or policy of insurance. 3. By furnishing satisfactory proof to the Commission of his financial ability to pay such compensation for himself, in which case the Commission may, in its discretion, require the deposit with the Commission of securities of the kind prescribed in section thirteen of the Insurance Law, in an amount to be determined by the Commission, to secure his liability to pay the compensation provided in this chapter."

"If an employer fail to comply with this section, he shall be liable to a penalty during which such failure continues of an amount equal to the pro rata premium which would have been payable for insurance in the state fund for such period of noncompliance to be recovered in an action brought by the Commission."

Article 3, § 2, of the Constitution, extends the judicial power of the United States "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction;" and article 1, § 8, confers upon the Congress power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." Considering our former opinions, it must now be accepted as settled doctrine that, in consequence of these provisions, Congress has paramount power to fix and determine the maritime law which shall prevail throughout the country. Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Re Garnett, 141 U. S. 1, 14, 35 L. ed. 631, 634, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840. And further, that, in the absence of some controlling statute, the general maritime law, as accepted by the Federal courts, constitutes part of our national law, applicable to matters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. ed. 654; Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 557, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1024, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212.

In The Lottawanna, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, said: "That we have a maritime law of our own, operative throughout the United States, cannot be doubted. The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of the country when the Constitution was adopted was most certainly intended and referred to when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend 'to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.' . . . One thing, however, is unquestionable; the Constitution must have referred to a system of law coextensive with, and operating uniformly in, the whole country. It certainly could not have been the intention to place the rules and limits of maritime law under the disposal and regulation of the several states, as that would have defeated the uniformity and consistency at which the Constitution aimed on all subjects of a commercial character affecting the intercourse of the states with each other or with foreign states."

By § 9, Judiciary Act of 1789 (1 Stat. at L. 76, 77, chap. 20), the district courts of the United States were given "exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, . . . saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." And this grant has been continued. Judicial Code, §§ 24 and 256 [36 Stat. at L. 1091, 1160, chap. 231, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 991 (1), 1233].

In view of these constitutional provisions and the Federal act it would be difficult, if not impossible, to define with exactness just how far the general maritime law may be changed, modified, or affected by state legislation. That this may be done to some extent cannot be denied. A lien upon a vessel for repairs in her own port may be given by state statute (The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 579, 580, 22 L. ed. 654, 663, 664; The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 345, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498); pilotage fees fixed (Cooley v. Port Wardens, 12 How. 299, 13 L. ed. 996; Ex parte McNiel, 13 Wall. 236, 242, 20 L. ed. 624, 626); and the right given to recover in death cases (The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 138, 52 L. ed. 973, 993, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664). See The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. 98, 106. Equally well established is the rule that state statutes may not contravene an applicable act of Congress or affect the general maritime law beyond certain limits. They cannot authorize proceedings in rem according to the course in admiralty (The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 534, 21 L. ed. 369, 372; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 296, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930); nor create liens for materials used in repairing a foreign ship (The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 185, 47 L. ed. 770, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491). See Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212. And plainly, we think, no such legislation is valid if it contravenes the essential purpose expressed by an act of Congress, or works material prejudice to the characteristic features of the general maritime law, or interferes with the proper harmony and uniformity of that law in its international and interstate relations. This limitation, at the least, is essential to the effective operation of the fundamental purposes for which such law was incorporated into our national laws by the Constitution itself. These purposes are forcefully indicated in the foregoing quotations from The Lottawanna.

A similar rule in respect to interstate commerce, deduced from the grant to Congress of power to regulate it, is now firmly established. "Where the subject is national in its character, and admits and requires uniformity of regulation, affecting alike all the states, such as transportation between the states, including the importation of goods from one state to another, Congress can alone act upon it and provide the needed regulations. The absence of any law of Congress on the subject is equivalent to its declaration that commerce in that matter shall be free." Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 507, 508, 31 L. ed. 700, 714, 715, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 438, 444, 42 L. ed. 1100, 1103, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674; Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co. 242 U. S. 311, 61 L. ed. 326, L.R.A.1917B, 1218, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 180, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 845, decided January 8, 1917. And the same character of reasoning which supports this rule, we think, makes imperative the stated limitation upon the power of the states to interpose where maritime matters are involved.

The work of a stevedore, in which the deceased was engaging, is maritime in its nature; his employment was a maritime contract; the injuries which he received were likewise maritime; and the rights and liabilities of the parties in connection therewith were matters clearly within the admiralty jurisdiction. Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 59, 60, 58 L. ed. 1208, 1211, 1212, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733.

If New York can subject foreign ships coming into her ports to such obligations as those imposed by her Compensation Statute, other states may do likewise. The necessary consequence would be destruction of the very uniformity in respect to maritime matters which the Constitution was designed to establish; and freedom of navigation between the states and with foreign countries would be seriously hampered and impeded. A far more serious injury would result to commerce than could have been inflicted by the Washington statute authorizing a materialman's lien, condemned in The Roanoke. The legislature exceeded its authority in attempting to extend the statute under consideration to conditions like those here disclosed. So applied, it conflicts with the Constitution and to that extent is invalid.

Exclusive jurisdiction of all civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is vested in the Federal district courts, "saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it." The remedy which the Compensation Statute attempts to give is of a character wholly unknown to the common law, incapable of enforcement by the ordinary processes of any court, and is not saved to suitors from the grant of exclusive jurisdiction. The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 571, 572, 18 L. ed. 456; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 644, 19 L. ed. 266, 272; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 531, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 371, 372; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 623, 42 L. ed. 296, 302, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930. And finally, this remedy is not consistent with the policy of Congress to encourage investments in ships, manifested in the Acts of 1851 [9 Stat. at L. 635, chap. 43] and 1884 (Rev. Stat. 4283-4285, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 8021-8023; L.R.A.1918C.

§ 18, Act of June 26, 1884, 23 Stat. at L. 57, chap. 121, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8028), which declare a limitation upon the liability of their owners. Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 104, 56 L. ed. 110, 113, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Holmes, dissenting:

The Southern Pacific Company has been held liable under the statutes of New York for an accidental injury happening upon a gangplank between a pier and the company's vessel, and causing the death of one of its employees. The company not having insured as permitted, the statute may be taken as if it simply imposed a limited but absolute liability in such a case. The short question is whether the power of the state to regulate the liability in that place and to enforce it in the state's own courts is taken away by the conferring of exclusive jurisdiction of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction upon the courts of the United States.

There is no doubt that the saving to suitors of the right of a common-law remedy leaves open the common-law jurisdiction of the state courts, and leaves some power of legislation, at least, to the states. For the latter I need do no more than refer to state pilotage statutes, and to liens created by state laws in aid of maritime contracts. Nearer to the point, it is decided that a statutory remedy for causing death may be enforced by the state courts, although the death was due to a collision upon the high seas. American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 104, 23 L. ed. 819, 820; Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 646, 44 L. ed. 921, 925, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 409, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1545, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18. The misgivings of Mr. Justice Bradley were adverted to in The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, and held at least insufficient to prevent the admiralty from recognizing such a state-created right in a proper case, if indeed they went to any such extent. La Bourgonne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 138, 52 L. ed. 973, 993, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

The statute having been upheld in other respects (New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 61 L. ed. 667, L.R.A.1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629), I should have thought these authorities conclusive. The liability created by the New York act ends in a money judgment, and the mode in which the amount is ascertained, or is to be paid, being one that the state constitutionally might adopt, cannot matter to the question before us if any liability can be imposed that was not known to the maritime law. And as such a liability can be imposed where it was unknown not only to the maritime but to the common law, I can see no difference between one otherwise constitutionally created for death caused by accident and one for death due to fault. Neither can the statutes limiting the liability of owners affect the case. Those statutes extend to nonmaritime torts, which, of course, are the creation of state law. Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 104, 58 L. ed. 110, 113, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27. They are paramount to but not inconsistent with the new cause of action. However, as my opinion stands on grounds that equally would support a judgment for a maritime tort not ending in death, with which admiralty courts have begun to deal, I will state the reasons that satisfy my mind.

No doubt there sometimes has been an air of benevolent gratuity in the admiralty's attitude about enforcing state laws. But of course there is no gratuity about it. Courts cannot give or withhold at pleasure. If the claim is enforced or recognized it is because the claim is a right, and if a claim depending upon a state statute is enforced, it is because the state had constitutional power to pass the law. Taking it as established that a state has constitutional power to pass laws giving rights and imposing liabilities for acts done upon the high seas when there were no such rights or liabilities before, what is there to hinder its doing so in the case of a maritime tort? Not the existence of an inconsistent law emanating from a superior source, that is, from the United States. There is no such law. The maritime law is not a corpus juris—it is a very limited body of customs and ordinances of the sea. The nearest to anything of the sort in question was the rule that a seaman was entitled to recover the expenses necessary for his cure when the master's negligence caused his hurt. The maritime law gave him no more. The Osceola, 189 U. S. 158, 175, 47 L. ed. 760, 764, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483. One may affirm with the sanction of that case that it is an innovation to allow suits in the admiralty by seamen to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the master, and to apply the common-law principles of tort.

L.R.A.1918C.

Now, however, common-law principles have been applied to sustain a libel by a stevedore in personam against the master for personal injuries suffered while loading a ship. Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 58 L. ed. 1208, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733, and The Osceola recognizes that in some cases, at least, seamen may have similar relief. From what source do these new rights come? The earliest case relies upon "the analogies of the municipal law" (The Edith Godden, 23 Fed. 43, 46),—sufficient evidence of the obvious pattern, but inadequate for the specific origin. I recognize without hesitation that judges do and must legislate, but they can do so only interstitially; they are confined from molar to molecular motions. A common-law judge could not say, "I think the doctrine of consideration a bit of historical nonsense and shall not enforce it in my court." No more could a judge, exercising the limited jurisdiction of admiralty, say, "I think well of the common-law rules of master and servant, and propose to introduce them here en bloc." Certainly he could not in that way enlarge the exclusive jurisdiction of the district courts and cut down the power of the states. If admiralty adopts common-law rules without an act of Congress, it cannot extend the maritime law as understood by the Constitution. It must take the rights of the parties from a different authority, just as it does when it enforces a lien created by a state. The only authority available is the common law or statutes of a state. For from the often-repeated statement that there is no common law of the United States (Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. 591, 658, 8 L. ed. 1055, 1079; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92, 101, 45 L. ed. 765, 770, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561), and from the principles recognized in Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek having been unknown to the maritime law, the natural inference is that, in the silence of Congress, this court has believed the very limited law of the sea to be supplemented here as in England by the common law, and that here that means, by the common law of the state. Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 104, 23 L. ed. 819, 820. Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 598, 15 L. ed. 1028, 1033. So far as I know, the state courts have made this assumption without criticism or attempt at revision from the beginning to this day; e. g., Wilson v. MacKenzie, 7 Hill, 95, 42 Am. Dec. 51; Gabrielson v. Waydell, 135 N. Y. 1, 11, 17 L.R.A. 228, 31 Am. St. Rep. 793, 31 N. E. 969; Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 37 N. E. 450, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 672. See Ogle v. Barnes, 8

T. R. 188, 101 Eng. Reprint, 1338; Nicholson v. Mounsey, 15 East, 384, 104 Eng. Reprint, 890, 13 Revised Rep. 501. Even where the admiralty has unquestioned jurisdiction the common law may have concurrent authority and the state courts concurrent power. Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L. ed. 95. The invalidity of state attempts to create a remedy for maritime contracts or torts, parallel to that in the admiralty, that was established in such cases as The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397, and The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451, is immaterial to the present point.

The common law is not a brooding omnipresence in the sky, but the articulate voice of some sovereign or quasi sovereign that can be identified; although some decisions with which I have disagreed seem to me to have forgotten the fact. It always is the law of some state, and if the district courts adopt the common law of torts, as they have shown a tendency to do, they thereby assume that a law not of maritime origin, and deriving its authority in that territory only from some particular state of this Union, also governs maritime torts in that territory,—and if the common law, the statute law has at least equal force, as the discussion in The Osceola assumes. On the other hand, the refusal of the district courts to give remedies coextensive with the common law would prove no more than that they regarded their jurisdiction as limited by the ancient lines,—not that they doubted that the common law might and would be enforced in the courts of the states as it always has been. This court has recognized that in some cases different principles of liability would be applied as the suit should happen to be brought in a common law or admiralty court. Compare The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29, with Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 691, 37 L. ed. 1218, 1224, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269. But hitherto it has not been doubted authoritatively, so far as I know, that even when the admiralty had a rule of its own to which it adhered, as in Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212, the state law, common or statute, would prevail in the courts of the state. Happily such conflicts are few.

It might be asked why, if the grant of jurisdiction to the courts of the United States imports a power in Congress to legislate, the saving of a common-law remedy, i. e., in the state courts, did not import a like if subordinate power in the states. But leaving that question on one side, such cases as American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, and Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, supra, show that it is too late to say that the mere silence of Congress excludes the statute or common law of a state from supplementing the whole inadequate maritime law of the time of the Constitution, in the regulation of personal rights, and I venture to say that it never has been supposed to do so, or had any such effect.

As to the specter of a lack of uniformity, I content myself with referring to The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 406, 52 L. ed. 264, 270, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133. The difficulty really is not so great as in the case of interstate carriers by land, which, "in the absence of Federal statute providing a different rule, are answerable according to the law of the state for nonfeasance or misfeasance within its limits." Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 408, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1545, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18, and cases cited. The conclusion that I reach accords with the considered cases of Lindstrom v. Mutual S. S. Co. 132 Minn. 328, L.R.A.1916D, 935, 156 N. W. 660; Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co. 89 Conn. 367, L.R.A.1916A, 436, 94 Atl. 372; and North Pacific S. S. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission, — Cal. —, 163 Pac. 199, as well as with the New York decision in this case. 215 N. Y. 514, L.R.A.1916A, 403, 109 N. E. 600, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 276, 9 N. C. C. A. 286.

Mr. Justice Pitney, dissenting:

While concurring substantially in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes, I deem it proper, in view of the momentous consequences of the decision, to present some additional considerations.

This dissent is confined to that part of the prevailing opinion which holds that the Workmen's Compensation Act of New York, as applied by the state court to a fatal injury sustained by a stevedore while engaged in work of a maritime nature upon navigable water within that state, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress conferring admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in civil cases upon the district courts of the United States, and is to that extent invalid. Except for the statute, an action might have been brought in a court of admiralty. Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 62, 58 L. ed. 1208, 1212, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733. No question is raised respecting the jurisdiction of the state court over the subject-matter. But plaintiff in error contends, and the prevailing opinion holds, that it was a violation of a Federal right for the state court to apply the provisions of the local statute to a cause of action of maritime origin, because, by the Constitution of the United States, admiralty jurisdiction was conferred upon the Federal courts.

It should be stated, at the outset, that the case involves no question of penalties imposed by the New York act, but affects solely the responsibility of the employer to make compensation to the widow, in accordance with its provisions, which are outlined in New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 192-195, 61 L. ed. 667, 671, 672, L.R.A. 1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629.

The argument is that, even in the absence of any act of Congress prescribing the responsibility of a shipowner to his stevedore, the general maritime law, as accepted by the Federal courts when acting in the exercise of their admiralty jurisdiction, must be adopted as the rule of decision by state courts of common law when passing upon any case that might have been brought in the admiralty; and that, just as the absence of an act of Congress regulating interstate commerce in some cases is equivalent to a declaration by Congress that commerce in that respect shall be free, so nonaction by Congress amounts to an imperative limitation upon the power of the states to interpose where maritime matters are involved. This view is so entirely unsupported by precedent, and will have such novel and far-reaching consequences, that it ought not to be accepted without the most thorough consideration.

Section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution reads as follows: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more states; between a state and citizens of another state; between citizens of different states; between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, and between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." Acting under the authority of article 1, § 8, which empowers Congress to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested in the government or in any department or officer thereof, the first Congress, in the original Judiciary Act (Act of September 24, 1789, chap. 20, § 9, 1 Stat. at L. 73, 77), conferred upon the Federal district courts "exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, . . . saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." The saving clause has been preserved in all subsequent revisions. Rev. Stat. § 563 (8), Judicial Code, § 24 (3), 36 Stat. at L. 1087, 1091, chap. 231, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 968, 991 (3).

From the language quoted from the Constitution, read in the light of the general purpose of that instrument and the contemporaneous construction found in the Judiciary Act, with regard also to the mischiefs that called for the establishment of a national judiciary, and from what I believe to be the unbroken current of decisions in this court from that day until the present, I draw the following conclusions: (1) That the framers of the Constitution intended to establish jurisdiction,—the power to hear and determine controversies of the various classes specified,—and not to prescribe particular codes or systems of law for the decision of those controversies; (2) that the civil jurisdiction in admiralty was not intended to be exclusive of the courts of common law, at least not until Congress should deem it proper so to enact; (3) that by the law of England, and by the practice of the colonial governments, the courts of common law, of equity, and of admiralty, were controlled in their decisions by separate, and, in a sense, independent systems of substantive law, and the constitutional grant of judicial power in "all cases in law and equity," and in "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," was no more intended (in the absence of legislation by Congress) to make the rules of maritime law binding upon the Federal courts of common law when exercising their concurrent jurisdiction, than to make the rules of the common law binding upon the courts of admiralty; (4) that, if not binding upon the Federal courts, it results, a fortiori, that the rules of maritime law were not intended to be made binding upon the courts of the states; (5) that it is not necessary, in order to give full effect to the grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, to imply that the rules of decision prevailing in admiralty must be binding upon common-law courts exercising concurrent jurisdiction in civil causes of maritime origin, and to give such a construction to the Constitution is to render unconstitutional the saving clause in § 9 of the Judiciary Act, and also to trench upon the proper powers of the states by interfering with their control over their water-borne internal commerce; and (6) that, in the absence of legislation by Congress abrogating the saving clause, the states are at liberty to administer their own laws in their own courts when exercising a jurisdiction concurrent with that of admiralty, and at liberty to change those laws by statute.

That the language of § 2 of art. 3 of the Constitution speaks only of establishing jurisdiction, and does not prescribe the mode in which or the substantive law by which the exercise of that jurisdiction is to be governed, seems to me entirely plain; and upon this point I need only refer to the language itself, which I have quoted.

That this view is in harmony with the general purpose of the Constitution seems to me equally plain. At this late date it ought not to be necessary to repeat that the object of the framers of that instrument was to lay the foundations of a government, to set up its framework, and to establish merely the general principles by which it was to be animated; avoiding, as far as possible, any but the most fundamental regulations for controlling its operations, and these usually in the form of restrictions. Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 304, 308, 1 L. ed. 391, 393, Fed. Cas. No. 16,857; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 304, 326, 4 L. ed. 97, 102.

The object was to enumerate, rather than to define, the powers granted. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 194, 6 L. ed. 23, 68, 69; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 549, 12 L. ed. 702, 813; Lottery Case (Champion v. Ames) 188 U. S. 321, 346, 47 L. ed. 492, 497, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 561. To delineate only the great outlines of the judicial power, leaving the details to Congress, while providing for the organization of the legislative department and the mode in which and the restrictions under which its authority should be exercised. Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 721, 9 L. ed. 1233, 1259. The reason for adopting general outlines only was well expressed by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 407, 4 L. ed. 579, 601: "A constitution, to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit, and of all the means by which they may be carried into execution, would partake of the prolixity of a legal code, and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of the objects themselves. That this idea was entertained by the framers of the L.R.A.1918C.

American Constitution is not only to be inferred from the nature of the instrument, but from the language."

The adoption of any particular system of substantive law was not within the purpose of the Constitutional Convention; and the clause establishing the judicial power was ill adapted to the purpose, had it existed. So far as they intended to prescribe permanent rules of substantive or even procedural law in connection with the establishment of the judicial system, the framers employed express terms for the purpose, as appears from other provisions of article 3, including the definition of treason, the character of proof required, the limitation of the punishment, and the requirement of a jury trial for this and other crimes.

In a somewhat exhaustive examination of various sources of information, including Elliot's Debates, Farrand's Records of the Federal Convention, and The Federalist, Nos. 80-83, I have been unable to find anything even remotely suggesting that the judicial clause was designated to establish the maritime code or any other system of laws for the determination of controversies in the courts by it established, much less any suggestion that the maritime code was to constitute the rule of decision in common-law courts, either Federal or state.

Certainly, there is nothing in the mere provision establishing jurisdiction in admiralty and maritime causes to have that effect, unless the jurisdiction so established was in its nature exclusive. But, in civil causes, the jurisdiction was not exclusive by the law of England and of the colonies, and it was not made an exclusive jurisdiction by the Constitution.

In discussing this point, the distinction between the instance court and the prize court of admiralty must be observed. It was held in England that the question of prize or no prize, and other questions arising out of it, were exclusively cognizable in the admiralty, because that court took jurisdiction, owing to the fact of possession of a prize of war, and the controversy turned upon belligerent rights and was determinable by the law of nations, and not the particular municipal law of any country. Le Caux v. Eden (1781) 2 Dougl. K. B. 594, 602-613, 99 Eng. Reprint, 375, 379-385; Lindo v. Rodney, reported in a note to Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. K. B. 613, 99 Eng. Reprint, 385; Smart v. Wolff (1789) 3 T. R. 323, 340, et seq., 100 Eng. Reprint, 600; Camden v. Home (1791) 4 T. R. 382, 393, et seq., 100 Eng. Reprint, 1076, 6 Bro. P. C. 203, 2 Eng. Reprint, 1028, 2 H. Bl. 533, 126 Eng. Reprint, 687. But of civil actions in personam the instance court exercised a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the courts of common law. As Ld. Mansfield said in Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. K. B. 614: "A thing being done upon the high sea don't exclude the jurisdiction of the court of common law. For seizing, stopping, or taking a ship, upon the high sea, not as prize, an action will lie; but for taking as prize, no action will lie. The nature of the question excludes; not the locality." And again, referring to the effect of certain statutes (p. 615): "The taking a ship upon the high sea is triable at law to repair the plaintiff in damages; but a taking on the high sea as prize is not triable at law to repair the plaintiff in damages. The nature of the ground of the action—prize or no prize—not only authorizes the prize court, but excludes the common law. These statutes don't exclude the common law in any case, and they confine the admiralty by the locality of the thing done, which is the cause of action. It must be done upon the high sea."

So, with respect to actions ex contractu, Mr. Justice Blackstone says, 3 Bl. Com. 107: "It is no uncommon thing for a plaintiff to feign that a contract, really made at sea, was made at the royal exchange, or other inland place, in order to draw the cognizance of the suit from the courts of admiralty to those of Westminster Hall." The concurrent jurisdiction of the courts of common law was affirmed by Dr. Browne, the first edition of whose work was published in 1797-1799. 2 Browne, Civil & Admiralty Law, 1st Am. ed. 112, 115.

The declaration of Mr. Justice Nelson, speaking for this court in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 390, 12 L. ed. 465, 485, that the lodging by the Constitution of the entire admiralty power in the Federal judiciary, and the 9th section of the Judiciary Act, with its saving of common-law remedies, left the concurrent power of the courts of common law and of admiralty where it stood at common law, was not a chance remark. It has been so ruled in many other cases, to which I shall refer hereafter. The principles and history of the common law were well known to the framers of the Constitution and the members of the first Congress; it was from that system that their terminology was derived; and the provisions of the Constitution and contemporaneous legislation must be interpreted accordingly.

The statement that there is no common law of the United States (Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. 591, 658, 8 L. ed. 1055, 1079; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 478, 31 L. ed. 508, 512, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564) is true only in the sense that the Constitution neither of its own force imposed, nor authorized Congress to impose, the common law or any other general body of laws upon the several states for the regulation of their internal affairs. As was pointed out in Smith v. Alabama (p. 478): "There is, however, one clear exception to the statement that there is no national common law. The interpretation of the Constitution of the United States is necessarily influenced by the fact that its provisions are framed in the language of the English common law, and are to be read in the light of its history."

As was well expressed by Shiras, District Judge, in Murray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 62 Fed. 24, 31: "From them [citations of the decisions of this court] it appears beyond question, that the Constitution, the Judiciary Act of 1789, and all subsequent statutes upon the same subject, are based upon the general principles of the common law, and that, to a large extent, the legislative and judicial action of the government would be without support and without meaning if they cannot be interpreted in the light of the common law. When the Constitution was adopted, it was not the design of the framers thereof to create any new systems of general law, nor to supplant those already in existence. At that time there were in existence and in force in the colonies or states, and among the people thereof, the law of nations, the law admiralty and maritime, the common law, including commercial law, and the system of equity. Upon these foundations the Constitution was erected. The problem sought to be solved was not whether the Constitution should create or enact a law of nations, of admiralty, of equity, or the like, but rather how should the executive, legislative, and judicial powers and duties based upon these systems, and necessary for the proper development and enforcement thereof, be apportioned between the national and state governments."

And it is not to be supposed that the framers of the Constitution, familiar with the institutions and the principles of the common law, by which the admiralty jurisdiction was allowed on sufferance, and with a degree of jealousy born of the fact that the courts of admiralty were not courts of record, that they followed the practice of the civil law, allowed no trial by jury, and administered an exotic system of laws (3 Bl. Com. 69, 86, 87, 106-108),—it is not to be supposed, I say, that the framers of the Constitution, in granting judicial power over cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, along with like power over all cases in law and equity arising under the laws of the United States, intended to exclude common-law courts, state or national, from any part of their concurrent jurisdiction in cases of maritime origin, or to deprive them of the judicial power, theretofore existing, to decide such cases according to the rules of the common law.

It is matter of familiar history that one of the chief weaknesses of the Confederation was in the absence of a judicial establishment possessed of general authority. Except that the Continental Congress, as an incident of the war power, was authorized to establish rules respecting captures and the disposition of prizes of war, and to appoint courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high sea, and for determining appeals in cases of capture, and except that the Congress itself, through commissioners, was to exercise jurisdiction in disputes between the states and in controversies respecting conflicting land grants of different states, there was no provision in the Articles of Confederation for establishing a judicial system under the authority of the general government.

The result was that not only private parties, in cases arising out of the laws of the Congress, but the United States themselves, were obliged to resort to the courts of the states for the enforcement of their rights. Many cases of this character are reported, some even antedating the Confederation. Respublica v. Sweers (1779) 1 Dall. 41, 1 L. ed. 29; Respublica v. Powell (1780) 1 Dall. 47, 1 L. ed. 31; Respublica v. De Longchamps (1784) 1 Dall. 111, 1 L. ed. 59. Even treason was punished in state courts and under state laws. See cases of Molder, Malin, Carlisle, and Roberts (1778) 1 Dall. 33-39, 1 L. ed. 25-27.

Before the Revolution, courts of admiralty jurisdiction were a part of the judicial systems of the several colonies. Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 441, 454-456, 12 L. ed. 226, 232-234; Benedict, Admiralty, §§ 118-165. Upon the outbreak of the war questions of prize law became acute, and the colonial Congress, by resolutions of November 25, 1775, passed in the exercise of the war power (Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 80, 1 L. ed. 507, 518), made appropriate recommendations for the treatment of prizes of war, but remitted the jurisdiction over such questions to the courts of the several colonies, reserving to itself only appellate authority. This system continued until the year 1780 (after the submission of the Articles of Confederation, but before their final ratification), when the Congress established a court for the hearing of appeals from the state courts of admiralty in cases of capture. The opinions of this court are reported in 2 Dall. 1-42, 1 L. ed. 263-281, and numerous cases decided without opinion, as well as some of those decided by committees of the Congress prior to the establishment of the court, are referred to in the late Bancroft Davis's "Federal Courts Before the Constitution," 131 U. S. xix.-xlix., Appx. The weak point of this system was the want of power in the central government to enforce the judgment of the appellate tribunal when it chanced to reverse the decree of a state court. There were some curious cases of conflicting jurisdiction, illustrated by Doane v. Penhallow (1787) 1 Dall. 218, 221, 1 L. ed. 108, 109; Penhallow v. Doane (1795) 3 Dall. 54, 79, 86, 1 L. ed. 507, 517, 520; and United States v. Peters (1809) 5 Cranch, 115, 135, 137, 3 L. ed. 53, 59, 60.

It was under the influence of numerous experiences of the inefficiency of a general government unendowed with judicial authority that the Constitutional Convention assembled in the year 1787. The fundamental need, to which the Convention addressed itself in framing the judiciary article, was to set up a judicial power covering all subjects of national concern. There was no greater need to establish jurisdiction over admiralty and maritime causes than over controversies arising under the Constitution and laws of the Union. There was no purpose to establish a system of substantive law in any of the several classes of cases included within the grant of judicial power. The language employed makes it plain that, with the few express exceptions already noted (treason, etc.), the rules of decision were to be sought elsewhere. The entire absence of a purpose to establish a maritime code is manifest not only from the omission of any reference to the laws of Oleron, the laws of Wisbuy, or any other of the maritime codes recognized by the nations of Europe, but further from the fact that the colonies differed among themselves as to maritime law and admiralty practice, and that their system in general differed from that which was administered in England. The evident purpose, in this as in the other classes of controversy, was that the courts of admiralty should administer justice according to the previous course and practice of such courts in the colonies, just as the courts of common law and equity jurisdiction were to proceed according to the several systems of substantive law appropriate to courts of their respective kinds; subject, of course, to the power of Congress to change the rules of law respecting matters lying within its appropriate sphere of action.

Undoubtedly the framers of the Constitution were advised of the ancient controversy in England between the common-law courts and the courts of admiralty respecting the extent of the jurisdiction of the latter.

They were aware of the dual function of the admiralty courts as courts of instance and as prize courts, and of the established rule that in civil causes the jurisdiction of the instance court was concurrent with that of the courts of common law. They must have known that, whatever question had existed as to the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the admiralty, it never had been questioned that in suits for mariners' wages and suits upon policies of marine insurance, and in other actions ex contractu having a maritime character, and also in actions of tort arising upon the sea, the courts of common law exercised, and long had exercised, concurrent jurisdiction. Whatever early doubts may have existed had been based not upon any inherent incapacity of the common-law courts to deal with the subject-matters, but upon the ancient theory of the venue, and disappeared with the recognition of the fictitious venue.

The grant of judicial power in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction never has been construed as excluding the jurisdiction of the courts of common law over civil causes that, before the Constitution, were subject to the concurrent jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty and the common-law courts. The first Congress did not so construe it, as the saving clause in the Judiciary Act conclusively shows. And, assuming that the states, in the absence of legislation by Congress, would be without power over the subject-matter, this saving clause, still maintained upon the statute book, is a sufficient grant of power. Jurisdiction in prize cases, as has been shown, springs out of the possession of a prize of war. Civil proceedings in rem, to be mentioned hereafter, are based upon the maritime lien, where possession in the claimant is neither necessary nor usual as is the case with common-law liens. With these exceptions, both resting upon grounds peculiar to the forum of the admiralty, concurrent jurisdiction of the courts of common law in civil cases of maritime origin always has been recognized by this court. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 390, 12 L. ed. 465, 485; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 458, 13 L. ed. 1058, 1065; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 644, 645, 19 L. ed. 266, 272; New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1, 32, 20 L. ed. 90, 99; Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall. 185, 187, 188, 20 L. ed. 74, 75; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 372; Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L. ed. 95; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 262, 35 L. ed. 159, 166, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559.

Nor is the reservation of a common-law remedy limited to such causes of action as were known to the common law at the time of the passage of the Judiciary Act. It includes statutory changes. American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 534, 21 L. ed. 369, 372, 373; Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 644, 44 L. ed. 921, 924, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824. Those remedies which were held not to be common-law remedies, within the saving clause, in The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 427, 431, 18 L. ed. 397, 400, 402; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 571, 572, 18 L. ed. 451, 456; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 644, 19 L. ed. 266, 272; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 372, and The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 623, 42 L. ed. 296, 302, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930, provided for imposing a lien on the ship by proceedings in the nature of admiralty process in rem, and it was for this reason only that they were held to trench upon the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. The distinction was noticed in Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall. 185, 189, 20 L. ed. 74, 75, and again in Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 642, 44 L. ed. 921, 923, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824. In the latter case it was pointed out (p. 644) that the reservation of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it was not confined to common-law actions, but included remedies without action, such as a distress for rent or for the trespass of cattle; a bailee's remedy by detaining personal property until paid for work done upon it or for expenses incurred in keeping it; the lien of an innkeeper upon the goods of his guests, and that of a carrier upon things carried; the remedy of a nuisance by abatement, and others. The most recent definition of the rule laid down in The Hine v. Trevor and other cases of that class is in Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry & Mach. Co. 237 U. S. 303, 59 L. ed. 966, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 596.

I have endeavored to show, from a consideration of the phraseology of the constitutional grant of jurisdiction and the act of the first Congress, passed to give effect to it, from the history in the light of which the language of those instruments is to be interpreted, and from the uniform course of decision in this court, from the earliest time until the present, these propositions: First, that the grant of jurisdiction to the admiralty was not intended to be exclusive of the concurrent jurisdiction of the common-law courts theretofore recognized; and, secondly, that neither the Constitution nor the Judiciary Act was intended to prescribe a system of substantive law to govern the several courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction, much less to make the rules of decision, prevalent in any one court, obligatory upon others, exercising a distinct jurisdiction, or binding upon the courts of the states when acting within the bounds of their respective jurisdictions. In fact, while courts of admiralty undoubtedly were expected to administer justice according to the law of nations and the customs of the sea, they were left at liberty to lay hold of common-law principles where these were suitable to their purpose, and even of applicable state statutes, just as courts of common law were at liberty to adopt the rules of maritime law as guides in the proper performance of their duties. This eclectic method had been practised by the courts of each jurisdiction prior to the Constitution, and there is nothing in that instrument to constrain them to abandon it.

The decisions of this court show that the courts of admiralty in many matters are bound by local law. The doubt expressed by Mr. Justice Bradley in Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 558, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1024, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, as to whether a state law could have force to create a liability in a maritime case at all, was laid aside in The Corsair (Barton v. Brown) 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949, and definitely set at rest in The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 404, 52 L. ed. 264, 269, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133. The fact is that, long before Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. it had been recognized that state laws might not merely create a liability in a maritime case, but impose a duty upon the admiralty courts of the United States to enforce such liability. Thus, while it was recognized that by the general maritime law a foreign ship, or a ship in a port of a state to which she did not belong, was subject to a suit in rem in the admiralty for repairs or necessities, the case of a ship in a port of her home state was governed by the municipal law of the state, and no lien for repairs or necessities would be implied unless recognized by that law. The General Smith (1819) 4 Wheat. 438, 443, 609, 611; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 571, 578, 22 L. ed. 654, 660, 663. Conversely, it was held in the case of Peyroux v. Howard (1833) 7 Pet. 324, 341, 8 L. ed. 700, 706, that a libel in rem in the admiralty might be maintained against a vessel for repairs done in her home port where a local statute gave a lien in such a case. To the same effect, The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 12, 37 L. ed. 345, 347, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498. As elsewhere pointed out herein, where a state statute conferred a lien operative strictly in rem, it was uniformly held not enforceable in the state courts, but only because it intrenched upon the peculiar jurisdiction of the admiralty, and therefore was not a "common-law remedy" within the saving clause of the Judiciary Act of 1789. The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 427, 431, 18 L. ed. 397, 400, 402; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 571, 572, 18 L. ed. 451, 456; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 644, 19 L. ed. 266, 272; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 372; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 623, 42 L. ed. 296, 302, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930.

Under these decisions, and others to the same effect, the substance of the matter is that a state may, by statute, create a right to a lien upon a domestic vessel, in the nature of a maritime lien, which may be enforced in admiralty in the courts of the United States; but a state may not confer upon its own courts jurisdiction to enforce such a lien, because the Federal jurisdiction in admiralty is exclusive. The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 12, 37 L. ed. 345, 347, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498, and cases cited. But a lien imposed not upon the rem, but upon defendant's interests in the res, may be made enforceable in the state courts. Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry & Mach. Co. 237 U. S. 303, 307, 59 L. ed. 966, 968, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 596, and cases cited.

The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 185, 194, 198, 47 L. ed. 770, 772, 774, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491, while approving The General Smith, Peyroux v. Howard, The Lottawanna, and The J. E. Rumbell, supra, gave a negative answer to the very different question whether a state could, without encroaching upon the Federal jurisdiction, create a lien against foreign vessels to be enforced in the courts of the United States.

In the present case there is no question of lien, and, I repeat, no question concerning the jurisdiction of the state court; the crucial inquiry is, To what law was it bound to conform in rendering its decision? Or, rather, the question is the narrower one: Do the Constitution and laws of the United States prevent a state court of common law from applying the state statutes in an action in personam arising upon navigable water within the state, there being no act of Congress applicable to the controversy? I confess that until this case and kindred cases submitted at the same time were brought here, I never had supposed that it was open to the least doubt that the reservation to suitors of the right of a common-law remedy had the effect of reserving at the same time the right to have their common-law actions determined according to the rules of the common law, or state statutes modifying those rules. This court repeatedly has so declared, at the same time recognizing fully that the point involves the question of state power. In United States v.

Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 388, 4 L. ed. 404, 416, the court, by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, said: "Can the cession of all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction be construed into a cession of the waters on which those cases may arise? This is a question on which the court is incapable of feeling a doubt. The article which describes the judicial power of the United States is not intended for the cession of territory or of general jurisdiction. It is obviously designed for other purposes. . . . In describing the judicial power, the framers of our Constitution had not in view any cession of territory, or, which is essentially the same, of general jurisdiction. It is not questioned that whatever may be necessary to the full and unlimited exercise of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is in the government of the Union. Congress may pass all laws which are necessary and proper for giving the most complete effect to this power. Still, the general jurisdiction over the place, subject to this grant of power, adheres to the territory, as a portion of the sovereignty not yet given away." In American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 372, the court, by Mr. Justice Clifford, said (p. 534): "State statutes, if applicable to the case, constitute the rules of decision in common-law actions, in the circuit courts as well as in the state courts."

In Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 395, 396, 22 L. ed. 619, 621, the court, by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "The plaintiff has elected to bring his suit in an admiralty court, which has jurisdiction of the case, notwithstanding the concurrent right to sue at law. In this court the course of proceeding is in many respects different and the rules of decision are different. . . . An important difference as regards this case is the rule for estimating the damages. In the common-law court the defendant must pay all the damages or none. If there has been on the part of plaintiffs such carelessness or want of skill as the common law would esteem to be contributory negligence, they can recover nothing. By the rule of the admiralty court, where there has been such contributory negligence, or, in other words, when both have been in fault, the entire damages resulting from the collision must be equally divided between the parties. . . . Each court has its own set of rules for determining these questions, which may be in some respects the same, but in others vary materially." And see The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 10, 34 L. ed. 586, 588; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 691, 37 L. ed. 1218, 1224, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Benedict, Admiralty, § 201.

In the prevailing opinion, great stress is laid upon certain expressions quoted from

The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 574, 22 L. ed. 654, 661; but it seems to me they have been misunderstood, because read without regard to context and subject-matter. That was an admiralty appeal, and involved the question whether, by the general maritime law, as accepted in the United States, there was an implied lien for necessities furnished to a vessel in her home port, where no such lien was recognized by the municipal law of the state. In the course of the discussion, the court, by Mr. Justice Bradley, said: "That we have a maritime law of our own, operative throughout the United States, cannot be doubted. The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of the country when the Constitution was adopted was most certainly intended and referred to when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend 'to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.' But by what criterion are we to ascertain the precise limits of the law thus adopted? The Constitution does not define it. It does not declare whether it was intended to embrace the entire maritime law as expounded in the treatises, or only the limited and restricted system which was received in England, or lastly, such modification of both of these as was accepted and recognized as law in this country. Nor does the Constitution attempt to draw the boundary line between maritime law and local law; nor does it lay down any criterion for ascertaining that boundary. It assumes that the meaning of the phrase 'admiralty and maritime jurisdiction' is well understood. It treats this matter as it does the cognate ones of common law and equity, when it speaks of 'cases in law and equity,' or of 'suits at common law,' without defining those terms, assuming them to be known and understood."

In this language there is the clearest recognition that the Constitution, in establishing and distributing the judicial power, did not intend to define substantive law, or to make the rules of decision in one jurisdiction binding proprio vigore in tribunals exercising another jurisdiction. The courts of common law were to administer justice according to the common law, the courts of equity according to the principles of equity, and the courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction according to the maritime law. The expression on page 375 respecting the uniform operation of the maritime law was predicated only of the operation of that law as administered in the courts of admiralty, for it is not to be believed that there was any purpose to overrule Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 395,

22 L. ed. 619, 621, decided at the same term and only about two months before. The Lottawanna by a unanimous court, including Mr. Justice Bradley himself, in which it was held that where there was concurrent jurisdiction in the courts of common law and the courts of admiralty, each court was at liberty to adopt its own rules of decision. Moreover, the principal question at issue in The Lottawanna was whether the case of The General Smith, 4 Wheat, 438, 4 L. ed. 609, should be overruled, in which it had been held that, in the absence of state legislation imposing the lien, a ship was not subject to a libel in rem in the admiralty for repairs furnished in her home port. The general expressions referred to relate to that state of the law,—the absence of state legislation, as well as of legislation by Congress,—and upon this the decision in The General Smith was upheld (p. 578). But in proceeding to discuss the subordinate question whether there was a lien under the state statute, it was held (p. 580): "It seems to be settled in our jurisprudence that so long as Congress does not interpose to regulate the subject, the rights of materialmen furnishing necessities to a vessel in her home port may be regulated in each state by state legislation." And again (p. 581): "Whatever may have been the origin of the practice, and whether or not it was based on the soundest principles, it became firmly settled, and it is now too late to question its validity. . . . It would undoubtedly be far more satisfactory to have a uniform law regulating such liens, but until such a law be adopted (supposing Congress to have the power) the authority of the states to legislate on the subject seems to be conceded by the uniform course of decisions."

Again, in Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212, which, like The Lottawanna, was a proceeding in admiralty, the court, in quoting the declarations contained in that case respecting the general operation of the maritime law throughout the navigable waters of the United States, was dealing only with its application in the courts of admiralty. This is plain from what was said as a preface to the discussion (p. 557): "In examining the first question, that is, whether the local law of New York must prevail, though in conflict with the maritime law, it must be borne in mind that the issue is not,—as was the case in Detroit v. Osborne (1890) 135 U. S. 492, 34 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012,—whether the local law governs as to a controversy arising in the courts of common law or of equity of the United States, but does the local law, if in conflict with the maritime law, control a court of admiralty L.R.A.1918C.

of the United States in the administration of maritime rights and duties, although judicial power with respect to such subjects has been expressly conferred by the Constitution (art. 3, § 2) upon the courts of the United States."

In the argument of the present case and companion cases, emphasis was laid upon the importance of uniformity in applying and enforcing the rules of admiralty and maritime law, because of their effect upon interstate and foreign commerce. This, in my judgment, is a matter to be determined by Congress. Concurrent jurisdiction and optional remedies in courts governed by different systems of law were familiar to the framers of the Constitution, as they were to English-speaking peoples generally. The judicial clause itself plainly contemplated a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the state courts in other controversies. In such a case, the option of choosing the jurisdiction is given primarily for the benefit of suitors, not of defendants. For extending it to defendants, removal proceedings are the appropriate means.

Certainly there is no greater need for uniformity of adjudication in cases such as the present than in cases arising on land and affecting the liability of interstate carriers to their employees. And, although the Constitution contains an express grant to Congress of the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, nevertheless, until Congress had acted, the responsibility of interstate carriers to their employees for injuries arising in interstate commerce was controlled by the laws of the states. This was because the subject was within the police power, and the divergent exercise of that power by the states did not regulate, but only incidentally affected, commerce among the states. Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 103, 23 L. ed. 819, 820; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 54, 56 L. ed. 327, 347, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875. It required an act of Congress (Act of April 22, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657) to impose a uniform measure of responsibility upon the carriers in such cases. So, it required an act of Congress (the so-called Carmack Amendment to the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 584, 595, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. §§ 8563, 8604a, 8604aa) to impose a uniform rule of liability upon rail carriers for losses of merchandise carried in interstate commerce. Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 504, 57 L. ed. 314, 319, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148. In a great number and variety of cases state laws and policies incidentally affecting interstate carriers in their commercial operations have been sustained by this court, in the absence of conflicting legislation by Congress. Among them are: Laws requiring locomotive engineers to be examined and licensed by the state authorities (Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 482, 31 L. ed. 508, 513, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564); requiring such engineers to be examined for defective eyesight (Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 100, 32 L. ed. 352, 354, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28); requiring telegraph companies to receive despatches and transmit and deliver them diligently (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934); forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday (Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 304, 308, etc., 41 L. ed. 166, 169, 170, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086); regulating the heating of passenger cars (New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418); prohibiting a railroad company from obtaining by contract an exemption from the liability which would have existed had no contract been made (Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 136, 137, 42 L. ed. 688, 691, 692, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289); a like result arising from rules of law enforced in the state courts in the absence of statute (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 488, 491, 48 L. ed. 268, 272, 273, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132); statutes prohibiting the transportation of diseased cattle in interstate commerce (Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 630, 635, 42 L. ed. 878, 884, 885, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 147, 151, 47 L. ed. 108, 114, 115, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506); statutes requiring the prompt settlement of claims for loss or damage to freight, applied incidentally to interstate commerce (Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mazursky, 216 U. S. 122, 54 L. ed. 411, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 378); even since the passage of the Carmack Amendment (Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris, 234 U. S. 412, 417, 420, 58 L. ed. 1377, 1381, 1382, L.R.A.1915E, 942, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790); statutes regulating the character of headlights used on locomotives employed in interstate commerce (Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Georgia, 234 U. S. 280, 58 L. ed. 1312, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Vandalia R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 242 U. S. 255, 61 L. ed. 276, P.U.R.1917B, 1004, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93). All these cases affected the responsibility of interstate carriers. Until now, Congress has passed no act concerning their responsibility for personal injuries sustained by passengers or strangers, or for deaths resulting from such injuries, L.R.A.1918C.

so that these matters still remain subject to the regulation of the several states. We have held recently that even the anti-pass provision of the Hepburn Act (34 Stat. at L. 584, 585, chap. 3591, § 1, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8563) does not deprive a party who accepts gratuitous carriage in interstate commerce with the consent of the carrier, in actual but unintentional violation of the prohibition of the act, of the benefit and protection of the law of the state imposing upon the carrier a duty to care for his safety (Southern P. Co. v. Schuyler, 227 U. S. 601, 612, 57 L. ed. 662, 669, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 901, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277).

In the very realm of navigation, the authority of the states to establish regulations effective within their own borders, in the absence of exclusive legislation by Congress, has been recognized from the beginning of our government under the Constitution. As to pilotage regulations, it was recognized by the first Congress (Act of August 7, 1789, chap. 9, § 4, 1 Stat. at L. 53, 54, Rev. Stat. § 4235, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 7981), and this court, in many decisions, has sustained local regulations of that character (Cooley v. Port Wardens, 12 How. 299, 320, 13 L. ed. 996, 1005; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450, 459, 17 L. ed. 805, 807; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 241, 20 L. ed. 624, 626; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234; Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332, 341, 49 L. ed. 224, 229, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Anderson v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 225 U. S. 187, 195, 56 L. ed. 1047, 1051, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625).

It is settled that a state, in the absence of conflicting legislation by Congress, may construct dams and bridges across navigable streams within its limits, notwithstanding an interference with accustomed navigation may result. Wilson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 252, 7 L. ed. 412, 414; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 96; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 683, 27 L. ed. 442, 445, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Cardwell v. American River Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205, 208, 28 L. ed. 959, 960, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Hamilton v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 280, 30 L. ed. 393, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 8, 31 L. ed. 629, 631, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 41 L. ed. 747, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 478, 50 L. ed. 274, 277, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

So, as to harbor improvements (Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 697, 26 L. ed. 238, 239); improvements and obstructions to navigation (Huse v. Glover, 119 U.

S. 543, 548, 30 L. ed. 487, 490, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 313; Leovy v. United States, 177 U. S. 621, 625, 44 L. ed. 914, 916, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797; Cummings v. Chicago, 188 U. S. 410, 427, 47 L. ed. 525, 530, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472); inspection and quarantine laws (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 203, 6 L. ed. 23, 71); wharfage charges (Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. ed. 377; Cincinnati, P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. Catlettsburg, 105 U. S. 559, 563, 26 L. ed. 1169, 1171; Parkersburg & O. River Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, 702, 27 L. ed. 584, 588, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732; Ouachita & M. River Packet Co. v. Aiken, 121 U. S. 444, 447, 30 L. ed. 976, 977, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 379, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 907); tolls for the use of an improved waterway (Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 295, 31 L. ed. 149, 151; 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113).

So, of provisions fixing the tolls for transportation upon an interstate ferry (Port Richmond & B. P. Ferry Co. v. Hudson County, 234 U. S. 317, 331, 58 L. ed. 1380, 1336, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821), or upon vessels plying between two ports located within the same state (Wilmington Transp. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 151, 156, 59 L. ed. 508, 517, P.U.R.1915A, 845, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276).

In each of these cases, except the last, which related to intrastate transport, the state regulation had an incidental effect upon the very conduct of navigation in interstate or foreign commerce. If in such cases the states possess the power of regulation in the absence of inconsistent action by Congress, much more clearly do they possess that power where Congress is silent, with respect to a liability which arises but casually, through the accidental injury or death of an employee engaged in a maritime occupation.

Indeed, with respect to injuries that result in death, it already is settled that although the general maritime law, like the common law, affords no civil remedy for death by wrongful act (The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, 209, 32 L. ed. 923, 925, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461), yet a right of action created by statute is enforceable in a state court although the tort was committed upon navigable water (American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 533, 21 L. ed. 369, 372; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 104, 23 L. ed. 819, 820), and the liability arising out of a state statute in such a case will be recognized and enforced in the admiralty (The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133), although not by proceeding in rem unless the statute L.R.A.1918C.

expressly creates a lien (The Corsair (Barton v. Brown) 145 U. S. 335, 347, 36 L. ed. 727, 731, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949).

In Sherlock v. Alling, supra, which was an action in a state court, and based upon a state statute, to recover damages for a death by wrongful act, occurring in interstate navigation, it was contended that the statute could not be applied to cases where the injury was caused by a marine tort, without interfering with the exclusive regulation of commerce vested in Congress. The court, after declaring that any regulation by Congress, or the liability for its infringement, would be exclusive of state authority, proceeded to say, by Mr. Justice Field (93 U. S. 104): "But with reference to a great variety of matters touching the rights and liabilities of persons engaged in commerce, either as owners or navigators of vessels, the laws of Congress are silent, and the laws of the state govern. The rules for the acquisition of property by persons engaged in navigation, and for its transfer and descent, are, with some exceptions, those prescribed by the state to which the vessels belong; and it may be said, generally, that the legislation of a state, not directed against commerce or any of its regulations, but relating to the rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens, and only indirectly and remotely affecting the operations of commerce, is of obligatory force upon citizens within its territorial jurisdiction, whether on land or water, or engaged in commerce, foreign or interstate, or in any other pursuit. In our judgment, the statute of Indiana falls under this class. Until Congress, therefore, makes some regulation touching the liability of parties for marine torts resulting in the death of the persons injured, we are of opinion that the statute of Indiana applies," etc.

I deem The Hamilton, supra, to be a controlling authority upon the question now presented. It was there held, not only that the constitutional grant of admiralty jurisdiction, followed and construed by the Judiciary Act of 1789, leaves open the common-law jurisdiction of the state courts over torts committed at sea, but also that it leaves the states at liberty to change the law respecting such torts by legislation, as by a statute creating a liability for death by wrongful act, which was the particular legislation there in question.

To what extent uniformity of decision should result from the grant of jurisdiction to the courts of the United States concurrent with that of the state courts is a subject that repeatedly has been under consideration in this court, but it never has been held that the jurisdictional grant required state courts to conform their decisions to those of the United States courts. The doctrine clearly deducible from the cases is that, in matters of commercial law and general jurisprudence, not subject to the authority of Congress, or where Congress has not exercised its authority, and in the absence of state legislation, the Federal courts will exercise an independent judgment and reach a conclusion upon considerations of right and justice generally applicable, the Federal jurisdiction having been established for the very purpose of avoiding the influence of local opinion; but that where the state has legislated, its will, thus declared, is binding, even upon the Federal courts, if it be not inconsistent with the expressed will of Congress respecting a matter that is within its constitutional power. The doctrine concedes as much independence to the courts of the states as it reserves for the courts of the Union Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 33, 34, 27 L. ed. 359, 365, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; East Alabama R. Co. v. Doe, 114 U. S. 340, 353, 29 L. ed. 136, 140, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; Gibson v. Lyon, 115 U. S. 439, 446, 29 L. ed. 440, 442, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 356, 362, 29 L. ed. 633, 635, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 372, 37 L. ed. 772, 775, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Folsom v. Township 96, 159 U. S. 611, 625, 40 L. ed. 278, 283, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; Stanly County v. Coler, 190 U. S. 437, 444, 47 L. ed. 1126, 1131, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Kuhn v. Fairmount Coal Co. 215 U. S. 349, 357, 360, 54 L. ed. 228, 233, 234, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 372, 37 L. ed. 772, 775, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, the court had under review the judgment of a circuit court of the United States in an action by a locomotive fireman injured through negligence of the engineer. The cause of action arose in the state of Ohio, and the question presented was whether the engineer and the fireman were fellow servants. Under the decisions of the Ohio courts they were, but this court held that, as there was no state statute, the question should not be treated as a question of local law, to be settled by an examination merely of the decisions of the state court of last resort, but should be determined upon general principles; the courts of the United States being under an obligation to exercise an independent judgment. The court, by Mr. Justice Brewer, said (149 U. S. 378): "There is no question as to the power of the states to legislate and change the rules of the common law in this respect, as in others; but, in the absence of such legislation, the question is one determinable only by the general principles of that law. L.R.A.1918C.

Further than that, it is a question in which the nation as a whole is interested. It enters into the commerce of the country. Commerce between the states is a matter of national regulation, and to establish it as such was one of the principal causes which led to the adoption of our Constitution."

In other words, the general effect of the question upon interstate commerce rendered it one of the class that called for the application of general principles; nevertheless, state legislation would be controlling—in the absence of valid legislation by Congress, of course.

In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 136, 137, 42 L. ed. 688, 691, 692, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289, the doctrine was concisely stated by Mr. Justice Gray, speaking for the court, as follows (169 U. S. 136): "The question of the right of a railroad corporation to contract for exemption from liability for its own negligence is, indeed, like other questions affecting its liability as a common carrier of goods or passengers, one of those questions not of merely local law, but of commercial law or general jurisprudence, upon which this court, in the absence of express statute regulating the subject, will exercise its own judgment, uncontrolled by the decisions of the courts of the state in which the cause of action arises. But the law to be applied is none the less the law of the state, and may be changed by its legislature, except so far as restrained by the Constitution of the state or by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

I freely concede the authority of Congress to modify the rules of maritime law so far as they are administered in the Federal courts, and to make them binding upon the courts of the states so far as they affect interstate or international relations, or regulate "commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." What I contend is that the Constitution does not, proprio vigore, impose the maritime law upon the states except to the extent that the admiralty jurisdiction was exclusive of the courts of common law before the Constitution; that is to say, in the prize jurisdiction, and the peculiar maritime process in rem; and that as to civil actions in personam having a maritime origin, the courts of the states are left free, except as Congress, by legislation passed within its legitimate sphere of action, may control them; and that Congress, so far from enacting legislation of this character, has from the beginning left the state courts at liberty to apply their own systems of law in those cases where, prior to the Constitution, they had concurrent jurisdiction with the admiralty, for the saving clause in the Judiciary Act necessarily has this effect.

Surely it cannot be that the mere grant of judicial power in admiralty cases, with whatever general authority over the subject-matter can be raised by implication, can, in the absence of legislation, have a greater effect in limiting the legislative powers of the states than that which resulted from the express grant to Congress of an authority to regulate interstate commerce,—the limited effect of which, in the absence of legislation by Congress, we already have seen. The prevailing opinion properly holds that, under the circumstances of the case at bar, although plaintiff in error was engaged in interstate commerce, and the deceased met his death while employed in such commerce, the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act (April 22, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 8657) do not apply, because they cover only railroad operations and work connected therewith, whereas the deceased was employed upon an ocean-going ship. In effect it holds also that, in the absence of applicable legislation by Congress, the express grant of authority to regulate such commerce, as contained in the Constitution, does not exclude the operation of the state law. It seems to me a curious inconsistency to hold, at the same time, that the rules of the maritime law exclude the operation of a state statute without action by Congress, although the Constitution contains no express grant of authority to establish rules of maritime law, and the authority must be implied from the mere constitutional grant of judicial power over the subject-matter; and, most remarkable, that this result is reached in the face of the fact that the judicial power in cases of admiralty jurisdiction has been put into effect by Congress subject to an express reservation of the previous concurrent jurisdiction of the courts of law over actions of this character. This, besides ignoring the reservation, gives a greater potency to an implied power than to a power expressly conferred.

The effect of the present decision cannot logically be confined to cases that arise in interstate or foreign commerce. It seems to be thought that the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States has limits co-extensive with the authority of Congress to regulate commerce. But this is not true. The civil jurisdiction in admiralty in cases ex contractu is dependent upon the subject-matter; in cases ex delicto it is dependent upon locality. In cases of the latter class, if the cause of action arise upon navigable waters of the United States, even though it be upon a vessel engaged in commerce wholly intrastate, or upon one not engaged in commerce at all, or (probably) not upon any vessel, the maritime courts have jurisdiction. The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 452, 13 L. ed. 1058, 1062; The Commerce (Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh) 1 Black, 574, 578, 579, 17 L. ed. 107, 109; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 636, 638, 640, 19 L. ed. 266, 269-271; Ex parte Boyer, 109 U. S. 629, 632, 27 L. ed. 1056, 1057, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Re Garnett, 141 U. S. 1, 15, 17, 35 L. ed. 631, 634, 635, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840. It results that if the constitutional grant of judicial power to the United States in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is held by inference to make the rules of decision that prevail in the courts of admiralty binding proprio vigore upon state courts exercising a concurrent jurisdiction in cases of maritime origin, the effect will be to deprive the several states of their police power over navigable waters lying wholly within their respective limits, and of their authority to regulate their intrastate commerce so far as it is carried upon navigable waters.

The following additional consideration is entitled to great weight: The same Judiciary Act which, in its 9th section, conferred upon the district courts of the United States original cognizance of civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, in its 25th section allowed a writ of error from this court to review the final judgment or decree of a state court of last resort resulting from a decision overruling any special claim of right, privilege, or exemption based upon the construction of any clause of the Constitution or statutes of the United States. By later legislation the review was broadened (Act of February 5, 1867, chap. 28, § 2, 14 Stat. at L. 385, 386, § 709, Rev. Stat. § 237, Judicial Code, 36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 1214), and by recent legislation the writ of certiorari has been substituted for the writ of error in many cases (Act of September 6, 1916, chap. 448, 39 Stat. at L. 726, Comp. Stat. 1916, § 1207). But, at all times, the right to review in this court the decisions of the state courts upon questions of Federal law has existed, so that if, by the true construction of art. 3, § 2, of the Constitution, or of § 9 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, it had been the right of parties suing or sued in state courts upon causes of action of a maritime nature to insist that their cases should be determined according to the rules of decision found in the law maritime, this right or immunity might have been asserted as a Federal right, and its denial made the ground of a review of the resulting judgment, under a writ of error (or, now, a writ of certiorari) from this court to the state court of last resort. Yet, until the present case, and others submitted at the same time, the reported decisions of this court show not a trace of any such question raised. I can conceive of no stronger evidence to prove that from the foundation of the government until the present time it has been the opinion of the bar and of the judiciary, in the state courts as well as in the courts of the United States, that it was not the right of parties suing or sued in state courts of law or equity upon causes of action arising out of maritime affairs, to have them decided according to the principles that would have controlled the decision had the suits been brought in the admiralty courts.

There is no doubt that, throughout the entire life of the nation under the Constitution, state courts not only have exercised concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of admiralty in actions ex contractu arising out of maritime transactions, and in actions ex delicto arising upon the navigable waters, but that, in exercising such jurisdiction, they have, without challenge until now, adopted as rules of decision their local laws and statutes, recognizing no obligation of a Federal nature to apply the law maritime. State courts of last resort, in several recent cases, have had occasion to consider the precise contention now made by plaintiff in error, and upon full consideration have rejected it. Lindstrom v. Mutual S. S. Co. 132 Minn. 328, L.R.A.1916D, 935, 156 N. W. 669; North Pacific S. S. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission, — Cal. —, 163 Pac. 199; Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co. 89 Conn. 367, 373, L.R.A.1916A, 436, 94 Atl. 372. See also Walker v. Clyde S. S.

Co. 215 N. Y. 529, 531, 109 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 87; Jensen v. Southern P. Co. 215 N. Y. 514, L.R.A.1916A, 403, 109 N. E. 600, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 276, 9 N. C. C. A. 288 (this case). I have found no case to the contrary except a decision by the United States district court for the northern district of Ohio in Schuede v. Zenith S. S. Co. 216 Fed. 566, now under consideration by this court. The reasoning is unsatisfactory, and it was repudiated in Keithley v. North Pacific S. S. Co. 232 Fed. 255, 259.

I may remark in closing that there is no conflict between the New York Workmen's Compensation Act and the acts of Congress for limiting the liability of shipowners (Rev. Stat. §§ 4283-4285, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 8021-8023; Act of June 26, 1884, chap. 121, § 18, 23 Stat. at L. 53, 57, Comp. Stat. 1916, §§ 7707, 8028). So long as the aggregate liabilities of the owner, including that under the New York law, do not amount to as much as the interest of the owner in the vessel and freight pending, the act of Congress does not come into play. Where it does apply, it reduces all liabilities proportionately, under whatever law arising,—the liability under the New York law along with the others. Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 552, 558, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1022, 1024, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 406, 52 L. ed. 264, 270, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 104, 105, 56 L. ed. 110, 113, 114, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Clarke concur in the dissent, both upon the grounds stated by Mr. Justice Holmes and upon those stated by Mr. Justice Pitney.

Annotation—Applicability of the Federal Employers' Liability Act or state Compensation Acts to injuries within admiralty jurisdiction.

Exhaustive annotations on the Workmen's Compensation Acts will be found in L.R.A.1916A, 23, and L.R.A.1917D, 80; and on the Federal Employers' Liability Acts in 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38, and L.R.A.1915C, 48.

As to the applicability of state Compensation Acts to non-negligent injuries of railroad employee while engaged in interstate commerce, see note to New York C. R. Co. v. Winfield, ante, 450.

The decision of the Federal Supreme Court in SOUTHERN P. CO. v. JENSEN, ante, 451, that neither the Federal Employers' Liability Act nor a state Compensation Act applies to injuries coming within admiralty jurisdiction, is conclusive, since this is a Federal question, as to which the United States Supreme Court is the ultimate authority.

That there had been some conflict in the state courts prior to the decision of the Federal Supreme Court is shown in the annotations in L.R.A.1916A, 461, and L.R.A.1917D, 85. As the question is settled by the foregoing decision, and as the prevailing and dissenting opinions review the whole matter so exhaustively, it is deemed unnecessary to set out at length, or even cite, the state decisions passing upon this question.

In the note to Southern P. Co. v. Win- field, ante, 450, upon the application of state Compensation Acts to non-negligent injuries of railroad employees while engaged in interstate commerce; attention is called to the possibility that the state acts, if applicable to such non-negligent injuries, would be unconstitutional. The same argument would apply in the case of injuries coming within admiralty jurisdiction; that is, a statute imposing liability upon an employer in cases in which he had in nowise been negligent would seem to be in violation of the constitutional provision against taking of property without due compensation, unless all other liability were taken away, and of course a state has no power to remove any liability imposed by the maritime law. In this connection attention is called to the very interesting statement made in the prevailing opinion, that the remedy which the Compensation Statute gives is of a character wholly unknown to the common law and incapable of enforcement by the ordinary processes of any courts, and consequently that remedy is not saved to suitors from the grant of exclusive jurisdiction conferred upon the Federal court by the Judiciary Acts. W. M. G.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,

v.

ALBERT G. TOWERS et al., Constituting the Public Service Commission of Maryland.

(245 U. S. 6, 62 L. ed. —, 38 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 2.)

Appeal — scope of review — statutory construction.

1. The Federal Supreme Court must accept as conclusive, on writ of error to a state court, the decision of the latter court that the state Public Service Commission had authority, under the state law, to revise downward a new system of commutation railway rates voluntarily established by the carrier.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, II. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — regulation of railway rates — commutation tickets.

2. Intrastate rates for commutation tickets may be fixed by a state through a duly authorized Public Service Commission at less than the legally established, normal, one-way single passenger fare without taking the carrier's property without due process of law, or denying to it the equal protection of the laws, where a system of commutation rates has already voluntarily been established by the carrier.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 3, b; II. b, 4, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Chief Justice White, Mr. Justice McKenna, and Mr. Justice McReynolds dissent.)

(October 15, 1917.)

Note.—As to power of Public Service Commission to regulate commutation rates, see annotation following this case, post, 480.

The subject of what questions the Federal Supreme Court will consider in reviewing the judgments of state courts is considered in the note to Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 63 L.R.A. 571.

L.R.A. 1918C.

ERROR to the court of Appeals of the State of Maryland to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City, refusing to enjoin the enforcement of an order of the State Public Service Commission requiring the sale of commutation railway tickets at certain specified rates. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederic D. McKenney, Henry Wolf Bickl , Shirley Carter, and John Spalding Flannery, for plaintiff in error:

A state legislature may not, either directly or through the medium of a public service commission, under the guise of regulating commerce, compel carriers engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce commingled, to establish and maintain intrastate rates for the benefit of a comparative few, at less than both the interstate and intrastate standard and legally establish maxima.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Northern P. R. Co. v. North Dakota, 236 U. S. 585, 586, 59 L. ed. 735, 739, L.R.A. 1917F, 1148, P. U. R. 1915C, 277, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1; Wisconsin M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 297, 45 L. ed. 194, 199, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Erie R. Co. v. Williams, 233 U. S. 685, 701, 58 L. ed. 1155, 1161, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1097, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wisconsin, 238 U. S. 491, 499, 59 L. ed. 1423, 1430, L.R.A. 1916A, 1113, P.U.R. 1915D, 706, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; Beardsley v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488; Com. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1086, and note, 106 Va. 61, 117 Am. St. Rep. 983, 55 S. E. 572, 9 Ann. Cas. 1124; State v. Bonneval, 128 La. 902, 55 So. 569, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 837; State ex rel. McCue v. Great Northern R. Co. 17 N. D. 370, 116 N. W. 89; Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L.R.A. 112, 35 N. E. 252.

Mr. W. Cabell Bruce, for defendants in error:

There is no objection to classification when it is not arbitrary and unreasonable, and rests upon essential differences, which really separate the situation of one class from that of another.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 32, 28 L. ed. 923, 925, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 708, 28 L. ed. 1145, 1146, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 687, 32 L. ed. 253, 257, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 124, 32 L. ed. 623, 626, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; State v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 565, 45 L.R.A. 433, 73 Am. St. Rep. 201, 43 Atl. 771; Scholle v. State, 90 Md. 729, 50 L.R.A. 411, 46 Atl. 326; Watson v. State, 105 Md. 650, 66 Atl. 635; State v. Potomac Valley Coal Co. 116 Md. 380, 81 Atl. 686; State v. Loden, 117 Md. 373, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 83 Atl. 564, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1300.

A party rate ticket does not operate an undue or unreasonable preference and advantage to a particular description of traffic or an unjust discrimination against other people.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 699, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844.

The mere details of what appears to be a reasonable scheme of rates, or a tariff or schedule affording substantial compensation, are not subject to judicial review.

Northern P. R. Co. v. North Dakota, 236 U. S. 585, 604, 59 L. ed. 735, 745, L.R.A. 1917F, 1148, P.U.R. 1915C, 227, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Conley, 236 U. S. 605, 59 L. ed. 745, P.U.R. 1915C, 293, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437.

An interstate rate, unless an adjudicated rate, is powerless to override or supplant an intrastate rate.

Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18; Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. United States, 234 U. S. 342, 351, 58 L. ed. 1341, 1348, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action in the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city, Maryland, to enjoin the Public Service Commission of Maryland from enforcing an order to sell commutation tickets at certain rates specified. The injunction was refused, and, on appeal, the court of appeals of Maryland L.R.A.1918C.

affirmed the decree and held that, although the order fixing the rates declared the same to be in force for ten years, there should be reserved to the railroad company the right to apply to the Commission after the lapse of a reasonable time for a rescission or modification of its order, if experience demonstrated that the revenue derived under the tariff as established by the Commission was not properly compensatory for the services performed. 126 Md. 59, P.U.R. 1915D, 398, 94 Atl. 330, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1144.

The order of the Commission required the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, lessee of the Northern Central Railway, to sell tickets for the transportation of passengers between Baltimore and Parkton, within the state of Maryland, on the line of the Northern Central Railway.

A table appearing in the opinion of the court of appeals shows the relative rates under the former schedules and the new order of the Public Service Commission to be as follows:

Rates Prior to Nov. 25, 1914.	Rates as Per Schedule Filed Nov. 25, 1914.	Rates Under Order P. S. Commission, Dec. 23, 1914.
1. Round trip, 10 day, 24¢ per M.	Round trip, no limit, 24¢ per M.	Round trip, 24¢ per M.
2. Exc. 2-10 days, 24¢ per M.	Discontinued.	No ruling made.
3. 10-strip ticket, 1 yr., 1 8/10¢ per M.	10-strip, 3 mos., 2 1/2¢ per M.	10-strip, 3 mos. 2¢ per M.
4. 60-strip 1 mo., 2¢ for first 3 M., 1¢ for each addl. 1 M.	60-strip, 1 mo. former rate plus 25¢ flat.	60-strip, 1 mo. former rate plus 25¢.
5. 100-strip 1 yr. at double 60-strip.	Discontinued.	100 - trip, 4 mos., former rate, plus $1.
6. 180-strip 3 mos. same as 4, less 10%.	180-strip, 3 mos. at 3 times 60-strip.	180 - trip, 3 mos., former rate plus 75¢.
7. 46 - trip School, 1 mo., 46/60 of 60-strip.	46-strip School, 1 mo., 46/60 of 60-strip.	46-strip School, 1 mo., 46/60 of 60-strip.

The attack upon the order of the Commission in this court is based upon the contention that its effect is to take the property of the railroad company without due process of law, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is also averred in the bill that the order, if enforced, will work a discrimination against interstate travel in favor of travel within the state, and is otherwise unreasonable and void.

The court of appeals of Maryland stated the question to be whether it is within the power of the Public Service Commission to require the establishment of a schedule of commutation rates by the railroad company; not where no such rates had there-tofore been established, but where a new system of commutation rates had been proposed by the railroad company and submitted to the Commission. Whether commutation rates should be established was declared to be a question of policy to be decided by the company. The court found authority in the Commission, under the statutes of Maryland, to revise commutation rates where such rates had already been established by the action of the company. We must accept this definition of authority in the Commission, so far as the state law is concerned, and direct our inquiry to the Federal question presented.

The question, as counsel for plaintiff in error states it, is whether a state legislature, either directly or through the medium of a public service commission, under the guise of regulating commerce, may compel carriers engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce to establish and maintain intrastate rates at less than both the interstate and intrastate standard and legally established maxima. It is asserted that there is no constitutional authority to compel railroad companies to continue the sale of commutation or special class tickets at rates less than the legally established standard or normal one-way single passenger fare upon terms more favorable than those extended to the single one-way traveler.

To maintain this proposition plaintiff in error relies upon and quotes largely from the opinion of this court in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565. In that case a majority of this court held a statute of the state of Michigan to be invalid. A previous statute of the state had fixed a maximum passenger rate of 3 cents per mile. The statute in controversy required the issuing of mileage books for 1,000 miles, good for two years, at a less rate. This court held that a maximum rate for passengers having been established, that rate was to be regarded as the reasonable compensation for the service, and that the fixing of the less rate to particular individuals was an arbitrary exercise of legislative power and an unconstitutional interference with the business of the carrier, the effect of which was to violate the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution by depriving the railroad company of its property without due process of law and denying to it the equal protection of the law.

The Lake Shore Case did not involve, as does the present one, the power of a state commission to fix intrastate rates for commutation tickets where such rates had already been put in force by the railroad company of its own volition, and we confine ourselves to the precise question presented in this case, which involves the supervision of commutation rates when rates of that character have been voluntarily established by the carrier. The rates here involved are wholly intrastate. The power of the states to fix reasonable intrastate rates is too well settled at this time to need further discussion or a citation of authority to support it.

In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 699, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844, this court held that a "party rate ticket" for the transportation of ten or more persons at a less rate than that charged a single individual did not make a discrimination against an individual charged more for the same service, or amount to an unjust or unreasonable discrimination within the meaning of the Act to Regulate Commerce. In the course of the opinion the right to issue tickets at reduced rates, good for limited periods, upon the principle of commutation, was fully recognized. See pp. 277-280.

Having the conceded authority to regulate intrastate rates, we perceive no reason why such power may not be exercised through duly authorized commissions, and rates fixed with reference to the particular character of the service to be rendered.

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Conley, 236 U. S. 605, 608, 59 L. ed. 745, 747, P.U.R. 1915C, 293, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437, after making reference to Northern P. R. Co. v. North Dakota, 236 U. S. 585, 59 L. ed. 735, L.R.A. 1917F, 1148, P.U.R. 1915C, 277, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1, this court said:

"It was recognized [in the North Dakota Case] that the state has a broad field for the exercise of its discretion in prescribing reasonable rates for common carriers within its jurisdiction; that it is not necessary that there should be uniform rates or the same percentage of profit on every sort of business; and that there is abundant room for reasonable classification and the adaptation of rates to various groups of services."

That the state may fix maximum rates governing one-way passenger travel is conceded. Having the general authority to fix rates of a reasonable nature, we can see no good reason for denying to the state the power to exercise this authority in such manner as to fix rates for special services different from those charged for the general service. In our opinion the rate for a single fare for passengers generally may be varied so as to fit the particular and different service which involves, as do commutation rates, the disposition of tickets to passengers who have a peculiar relation to the service. The service rendered in selling a ticket for one continuous trip is quite different from that involved in disposing of commutation tickets where a single ticket may cover 100 rides or more within a limited period. The labor and cost of making such tickets, as well as the cost of selling them, is less than is involved in making and selling single tickets for single journeys to one-way passengers.

The service rendered the commuter, carrying little baggage and riding many times on a single ticket for short distances, is of a special character and differs from that given the single-way passenger.

It is well known that there have grown up near to all the large cities of this country suburban communities which require this peculiar service, and as to which the railroads have themselves, as in this instance, established commutation rates. After such recognition of the propriety and necessity of such service, we see no reason why a state may not regulate the matter, keeping within the limitation of reasonableness.

On the strength of these commutation tariffs, it is a fact of public history that thousands of persons have acquired homes in city suburbs and near-by towns in reliance upon this action of the carriers in fixing special rates and furnishing particular accommodations suitable to the traffic. This fact has been recognized by the courts of the country, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and quite generally by the railroad commissions of the states.<sup>1</sup>

The question of the power of the Public Service Commission of the state of New York in this respect was before the appellate division of the supreme court of that state in People ex rel. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 159 App. Div. 531, 145 N. Y. Supp. 503. In that case it was said:

"Subdivision 4 of § 33 of the Public Service Commissions Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 48 [Laws 1910, chap. 480], as amended by Laws 1911, chap. 546) empowers the Commission to fix reasonable and just rates for such service. It is urged, however, that the statute is invalid under the rule of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565. In that case the statute of Michigan had fixed a maximum passenger rate at 3 cents per mile. A subsequent enactment required the issuing of mileage books for 1,000 miles.

good for two years, at a less rate. The court held that, having fixed a uniform maximum rate as to all passengers, such rate was the reasonable compensation for the service, and that the fixing of a less rate to particular individuals was an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of legislative power; that it was not for the convenience of the public, and thus within the police power, but was for the convenience of certain individuals, who were permitted to travel upon the railroads for less than the reasonable rate prescribed by law; that the law was, therefore, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution in depriving the company of its property without due process of law and by depriving it of the equal protection of the laws.

"In Beardsley v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488, the court of appeals felt constrained by the Smith Case to declare the Mileage Book Law of this state invalid as to companies in existence at the time of its passage, but in Purdy v. Erie R. Co. 162 N. Y. 43, 48 L.R.A. 669, 56 N. E. 508, that law was held valid as to companies organized after the statute was passed.

"In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 46 L. ed. 298, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95, after citing the Smith Case and like cases, the court says (at p. 511): 'Nor, yet, are we ready to carry the doctrine of the cited cases beyond the limits therein established.'

"In the Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18, the legality of an order of the Commission of that state was recognized which fixed a maximum freight rate and passenger rate, the latter at 2 cents a mile as the maximum fare for passengers twelve years of age or over, and 1 cent a mile for those under twelve years of age.

"In Interstate Consol. Street R. Co. v. Massachusetts, 207 U. S. 79, 52 L. ed. 111, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26, 12 Ann. Cas. 555, the Massachusetts law prescribing special rates less than the maximum for school children was held valid. These cases indicate that the Smith Case is not to be extended beyond the facts upon which it rests.

"The Smith Case distinguishes itself from this case, where the court (at p. 693) says: 'This act is not like one establishing certain hours in the day during which trains shall be run for a less charge than during the other hours. In such cases, it is the establishing of maximum rates of fare for the whole public during those hours, and it is not a discrimination in favor of certain persons by which they can obtain lower rates by purchasing a certain number of tickets by reason of which the company is compelled to carry them at the reduced rate, and thus, in substance, to part with its property at a less sum than it would be otherwise entitled to charge. The power to compel the company to carry persons under the circumstances as provided for in this act, for less than the usual rates, does not seem to be based upon any reason which has hitherto been regarded as sufficient to authorize an interference with the corporation, although a common carrier and a railroad.'

<sup>1</sup> (1912) 44 Ann. Rep. Mass. R. C. 67, 107, 113; (Mass.) P.U.R.1915B, 362; (R. I.) P.U.R.1915E, 269; 3 P. S. C. (2d Dist. N. Y.) 212, 461; 4 P. S. C. (2d Dist. N. Y.) 11; (N. J.) P.U.R.1915B, 161; (1914) 1 Ill. P. U. C. 553, 590; (1913-1914) Colo. P. U. L.R.A.1918C.

C. 131; (Idaho) P.U.R.1915D, 742; 1 Cal. R. C. 451, 855; 2 Cal. R. C. 910; 3 Cal. R. C. 5, 30, 32, 749, 800, 807, 973; 5 Cal. R. C. 555; 6 Cal. R. C. 853, 1008; 7 Cal. R. C. 179, 894; Commutation Rate Case, 21 Inters. Com. Rep. 428.

"Our flourishing cities owe their position and prosperity, in part, to the commutation rates for suburban service; the health and welfare of the public are concerned that people doing business in the large cities may live in the country where the surroundings are pleasanter, more healthy, and to the advantage of themselves and their families. It is a known fact that such rates exist upon all railways entering large cities, and have usually been established by the companies voluntarily in the interest of themselves and the public. The service is different in its nature from the other passenger service. It is so universal, of such large proportion, has become so necessary to the public, that it cannot be said that the fixing of reasonable and just rates for it is unusual or unreasonable, or the granting of a benefit to individuals, and not for convenience to the public.

"Nearly one half of the passengers handled by the relator at the Grand Central Terminal were of this class. Perhaps the same ratio would exist upon the other railroads serving the city. We conclude that the statute in question is valid as conferring a power on the Commission to regulate rates for the public convenience and welfare."

That decision was affirmed by the court of appeals of New York on the opinion of the appellate division (215 N. Y. 689, 109 N. E. 1089).

The subject was elaborately considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Commutation Rate Case, 21 Inters. Com. Rep. 428, in which the authority of the Commission to fix reasonable rates was sustained. In the course of the opinion, Commissioner Harlan, speaking for a unanimous Commission, said:

"Another case strongly relied upon by the defendants is Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1918C.

v. Smith, 173 U. S. 699, 43 L. ed. 864, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565. It there appeared that the legislature of the state of Michigan had fixed the maximum passenger fare to be charged by railroad companies for local journeys within the state. By a subsequent enactment it required the carriers to sell 1,000-mile tickets for use within the lower peninsula at a price not exceeding $20 and in the upper peninsula at a price not exceeding $25. Various conditions affecting the use of the tickets were also fixed by the act, and, among others, that they should be valid for two years after the date of purchase. It was held that, in the exercise of its general police power, a state may fix maximum fares, but that it may not fix a rate for 1,000-mile tickets that involves a discrimination in favor of those who buy them. The statute was held to be invalid. The case, however, involved mileage tickets, which, we must repeat, differ very essentially in character from commutation tickets.

"We have been referred to no other adjudication by the courts and are left to conclude that the precise point now before us has not been passed upon by the courts.

"It will not be necessary to dwell here upon the importance of the question not only to the particular suburban communities involved on the record before us, but to many other such communities throughout the country, the prosperity and growth of which largely depend upon an efficient and reasonable commutation service. Many such communities have not only been encouraged by the carriers, but were, in fact, originally established largely on their initiative. Suburban property has been bought, homes have been established, business relations made, and the entire course of life of many families adjusted to the conditions created by a commutation service. This may not have been done on the theory that the fares in effect at any particular time would always be maintained as maximum fares, but countless homes have been established in suburban communities in the belief that there would be a reasonable continuity in the fares and that the carriers, in any event, would perform the service at all times for a reasonable compensation.

"Nor need we stop to point out the distinction between commutation tickets on the one hand and excursion and mileage tickets on the other. Compared with the normal one-way fare all such tickets may be said to be abnormal. But the resemblance stops at that point. Although they are mentioned together in § 22, the force and effect of that provision must necessarily differ with the differing character of the several kinds of tickets. It seems to be settled under that section that a carrier may enter upon the policy and practice of issuing mileage books and excursion tickets at less than its regular normal fare for the one-way journey, and, having adopted such a policy, may subsequently withdraw from it and refuse longer to issue such tickets. That has been the view of this Commission, and is the view generally entertained, although there may be exceptional circumstances where a different conclusion would be required. It by no means follows, however, that a carrier, under § 22, may exercise the same scope and freedom of action with respect to commutation tickets."

The reasoning of these decisions is sound and involves no violation of the Federal Constitution. True it is that it may not be possible to reconcile these views with all that is said in the opinion delivered for the majority of the court in the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, supra. The views therein expressed which are inconsistent with the right of the states to fix reasonable commutation fares when the carrier has itself established fares for such service must be regarded as overruled by the decision in this case.

We find no error in the decree of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the same is affirmed.

Dissenting: Mr. Chief Justice White, Mr. Justice McKenna, and Mr. Justice McReynolds.

Annotation—Power of Public Service Commission to regulate commutation rates.

As applied to passenger traffic, commutation seems to signify the payment, in a single sum, of the cost to the traveler for transportation, limited in point of time and in the number of trips, between two designated points; apparently it implies also a fare per trip that is less than the normal fare for a one-way journey. Commutation Rate Case (1911) 21 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 438. Commutation tickets differ from excursion tickets, mileage books, and street car ticket books.

Rates similar to what are now known as commutation rates had their origin when traveling was by stage coaches. Commutation traffic, we are told, grew very rapidly on the rail lines out of the conditions that existed on the stage and coach lines before the rail line commenced to operate. This additional daily traffic, picked up as an incident to through traffic, could be carried without adding proportionately to the cost, and was transported for that reason at a charge less than the normal cost for the one-way journey. Besides adding volume to the regular passenger traffic and thus tending materially to reduce the operating cost per passenger, it had the effect of substantially increasing the freight traffic moving between suburban communities and adjacent large centers. From these considerations the Interstate Commerce Commission has concluded that commutation service stands by itself as a special and distinct kind of service. Commutation Rate Case (Fed.) supra.

The decisions of the courts and the commissions are in harmony with the holding of the United States Supreme Court in PENNSYLVANIA R. Co. v. TOWERS, ante, 475, which affirmed (1917) 126 L.R.A.1918C.

Md. 59, P.U.R.1915D, 398, 94 Atl. 330, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1144, to the effect that commutation rates voluntarily established by carriers are subject to regulation by the commission. As pointed out by the court, such rates have been the subject of regulation in a number of cases in which it was assumed the commission had the power to do so.

The Commutation Rate Case (1911) 21 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 428, involved the power of the Commission to pass upon the reasonableness of commutation fares when they were less than the normal fares between the same points, it being contended on the part of the carriers that, under the language of § 22 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, "nothing in this act shall prevent . . . the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets," that the issuance of such tickets at a lower price than the normal fare was a right that might be exercised by the carrier in its sole discretion without hindrance or control by the Commission, so long as the normal fare between the same points is itself reasonable and so long as the rules and regulations governing the use of such tickets do not offend the provisions of §§ 2-4 of the act relative to discrimination. After considering the origin and history of commutation rates, the Commission pointed out that commutation service was a distinct kind of service for which the carrier could demand no more than a reasonable compensation, and concluded that commutation rates were subject to regulation by the Commission. Commissioner Harlan said: "Suburban communities have grown into existence on the theory, voluntarily accepted by the carriers as well as by the public, that one who makes daily use of an agency of transportation between his place of business and his home must necessarily be accorded a special and a low rate. This theory is firmly fixed in the history and traditions of transportation by rail and must therefore be regarded as embraced in the law under which such transportation is regulated." In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1892) 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 599, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844, it is intimated that in framing the Act to Regulate Commerce Congress did not intend to ignore the principle that one can sell at wholesale cheaper than at retail. Applying the thought to the thousands of commuters directly affected by this proceeding it must not be forgotten that by separating their homes from their places of business they have committed themselves to the several defendants that respectively serve them, as daily travelers back and forth over their lines,—as wholesale purchasers of their transportation. Out of this relation grow a number of economies to the carrier which we need not stop now to point out. It suffices to say that in our judgment the carriage of a commuter differs in many respects from other passenger traffic, and is an independent and a special service and a special kind of traffic. This being so, we see no reason why the reasonableness of the fares demanded for the service may not be looked into by the Commission under § 1. It is conceded on behalf of the principal complainant that a carrier may not be compelled, under the present law, to undertake a commutation service and to establish commutation rates. That is probably true. But having undertaken a definite and regular commutation service, such as is shown of record on the part of each of the defendants in this proceeding, the power as well as the duty of the Commission under § 1 to examine into the reasonableness of the charges exacted, when complaint has been made, seems to be beyond question."

In People ex rel. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission (1914) 159 App. Div. 531, 145 N. Y. Supp. 503, affirmed without opinion in (1915) 215 N. Y. 689, 109 N. E. 1089, it was held that a statute authorizing the Public Service Commission to regulate commutation rates was not invalid under the rule of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith (1899) 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, which held that a statute requiring the sale of mileage books at a less rate than the statutory maximum passenger rate was an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of the legislative power. The court said: "It is a known fact that such rates [commutation] exist upon all railways entering large cities, and have usually been established by the companies voluntarily, in the interest of themselves and the public. The service is different in its nature from the other passenger service. It is so universal, of such large proportion, has become so necessary to the public, that it cannot be said that the fixing of reasonable and just rates for it is unusual or unreasonable, or the granting of a benefit to individuals and not for convenience to the public."

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Public Utility Comrs. (1912) 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945, affirmed without opinion in (1913) 84 N. J. L. 759, 88 Atl. 1103, it was held that the Board of Public Utility Commissioners had power to require railroads affording commutation service to sell tickets for such commutation service, specifically designating both termini of the journey, and to publish rates for such service for the purpose of eliminating discrimination between persons and localities. To the same effect is Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Public Utility Comrs. (1913) 84 N. J. L. 619, 87 Atl. 801.

In Sprigg v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1900) 8 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 443, it was held that the Commission had no power to prevent a carrier from discontinuing the sale of a 180-trip quarterly ticket which for several years had been available over its lines between Washington and Baltimore although its 60-trip monthly individual ticket, as well as other forms of commutation tickets between those points, were still offered to the public, upon the ground that the Commission had no power to prescribe rates for the future. This case, it will be observed, was decided before the passage of the statute conferring full rate-making power upon the Commission.

In referring to the Sprigg Case in the Commutation Rate Case (1911) 21 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 436, it was said that so far as it conflicts with the conclusions there reached it must be understood as now being overruled.

No case has been found passing upon the power of a commission to require a carrier to issue commutation tickets where it has not voluntarily furnished such service. In a few cases carriers furnishing such service on some of their lines only have been required to furnish such service on other lines to eliminate discrimination between localities, in which the power of the Commission was not questioned, e. g., Bitzer v. Washington-Virginia R. Co. (1912) 24 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 255; McKenna v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1915, R. I.) P.U.R.1915E, 269).

In Weber Club & Intermountain Fair Asso. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1909) 17 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 212, it was said, in referring to the Sprigg Case (Fed.) supra, that the Commission must not be understood to hold that the granting and refusing of commutation tickets might not work a discrimination which the Commission would have power to correct.

And in Re Mileage Excursion & Commutation Tickets (1912) 23 Inters. Com. Rep. (Fed.) 96, Commissioner Clements said: "It is true that the carriers, individually and jointly, may afford many facilities, accommodations, and conveniences to shippers and passengers which they may not be compelled to afford, but they are no more at liberty to unjustly discriminate with respect to such services than with respect to those things which, under the law, they may be compelled to do. Among the things which they are permitted but not compelled by the act to do is to establish excursion, commutation, and mileage tickets."

A. L. R.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

ERNEST AMOS, Comptroller of the State of Florida, et al., Appts.,

v.

W. H. MOSELEY.

(— Fla. —, 77 So. 619.)

Statute — journal evidence.

1. Where the Constitution provides that each house of the legislature shall "keep a journal of its own proceedings which shall be published," and expressly requires that "the vote on the final passage of every bill or joint resolution shall be taken by yeas and nays, to be entered on the journal of each house," the journals are conclusive on the point whether the yea and nay vote was so taken and entered.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — failure to pass.

2. In testing the question whether an act of the legislature was passed in conformity with the requirements of the Constitution, the journals of the houses of the legislature will be examined; and if they furnish conclusive evidence that any bill was not passed in a constitutional manner, it cannot be recognized as a law.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by BROWNE, Ch. J.

Note. — The subject of the conclusiveness of an enrolled bill, including impeachment by legislative journals and other evidence, is treated in the note to Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1; and see later cases, Allen v. State, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 468; Re Drainage Dist. L.R.A. 1915A, 1210; State ex rel. Hammond v. Lynch, L.R.A.1915D, 119; and Ritzmann v. Campbell, L.R.A.1916E, 1251. L.R.A.1918C.

Evidence — legislative journals — weight.

3. Under constitutional requirements that journals of the proceedings of the legislative bodies shall be kept and published, where the journal entries as to the legislative proceedings are explicit, and conflict even with legislative acts regularly authenticated, the journals are superior, and the courts will be governed by them as to matters clearly, explicitly, and affirmatively stated therein. For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — judicial notice — printed journals.

4. It is common knowledge which this court can take cognizance of that the proceedings of each house of the legislature are printed daily in pamphlet form, and published and distributed.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Legislature — journals — what constitutes.

5. The daily printed pamphlets which contain the record of the proceedings of each house of the legislature are the "journals" of the respective houses.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — judicial notice — effect.

6. Those things of which the court may take judicial notice require no proof.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

As to requisites of appropriation for official salary or expenses, see notes to State ex rel. Davis v. Eggers, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 631; Menefee v. Askew, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 537, and State ex rel. Birdzell v. Jorgenson, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 67; and later case, State ex rel. Turner v. Henderson, L.R.A.1917F, 770.

Same — weight.

7. Judicial notice is superior to evidence, as it stands for proof and fulfils the object which evidence is designed to fulfil, and makes evidence on the point established by judicial notice unnecessary.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — scope.

8. Judicial notice is taken only of those matters which are commonly known.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — individual knowledge.

9. Individual and extrajudicial knowledge on the part of a judge will not dispense with proof of facts not judicially cognizable, and cannot be resorted to for the purpose of supplementing the record.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — source of information.

10. It is not essential that matters of judicial cognizance be actually known to the judge; if they are proper subjects of judicial knowledge, the judge may inform himself in any way which may seem best in his discretion, and act accordingly.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — proof of journals.

11. Journals of a branch of the legislature are "public records." "They prove their own authenticity." Being kept in virtue of a provision of law, judicially known to the judge, their existence and function in legislation are also judicially known.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — proof — judicial notice.

12. In determining the validity of a law found upon the statute books, where it is attacked upon the ground that the constitutional requirements were not observed in its passage through the legislature, the courts should not exclude from their knowledge matters of general and common knowledge which they are presumed to share with the public generally.

For other cases, see Evidence, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — scope — title.

13. A specific provision for the payment of salaries and expenses, necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of a law itself, or which may be deemed needful in carrying it or its subject into execution, being matter properly connected with the subject of the law as expressed in the title, is not prohibited by the Constitution.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. e, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — appropriation.

14. An act, the general purpose of which is not to make appropriations for salaries of public officers and for other current expenses of the state, may make provision for the payment of expenses necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of the law itself.

L.R.A.1918C.

including the salaries of persons whose services and duties are provided for in the act. For other cases, see Appropriations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — constitutional provisions.

15. The purpose of the constitutional provision that "laws making appropriations for the salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state shall contain provisions upon no other subject" is to prevent including in bills appropriating money to carry on the government of the state measures foreign to that purpose, and, by taking advantage of the necessities of the state, force the legislature to adopt them, or stop the entire machinery of the government for want of funds to carry it on.

For other cases, see Appropriations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — provision for salaries.

16. Where a law is not primarily one to appropriate money to pay "salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state," it is not obnoxious to the Constitution because, as an incident to its main purpose, it provides for salaries and expenses necessary to carry into effect the purpose of the law.

For other cases, see Appropriations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — practical construction.

17. A practical construction of a statute by a governmental department, while not of such high authority as a judicial interpretation of the act, when not in conflict with the Constitution or the plain intent of the act, is of great persuasive force and efficacy.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — legislative construction — effect.

18. The construction placed upon a provision of the Constitution by the legislative and executive branches of the government will not be permitted to overturn and render nugatory a clear provision of the Constitution, in cases where the meaning of a clause in the instrument is capable of two interpretations.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I. a, 3, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appropriations — continuing — power.

19. The provision of the Constitution which requires, "The legislature shall provide for raising revenues sufficient to defray the expenses of the state for each fiscal year," is not an inhibition on the power of the legislature to make continuing appropriations.

For other cases, see Appropriations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proof — validity of statute.

20. The burden of showing that an act of the legislature which has been duly signed by the presiding officer of each house and by the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives and has become a law with or without the approval of the governor, as shown by the records of official acts of the legislative department, as the same are kept by the secretary of state as required by section 21 of article 4 of the Constitution, is upon the person who asserts that the act did not pass in the manner prescribed by the Constitution.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 20, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Leon County granting a temporary injunction restraining the defendant comptroller from issuing warrants to the members of the Tax Commission in payment of their salaries. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Van C. Swearingen, Attorney General, C. O. Andrews, Assistant Attorney General, H. Stafford Caldwell, and Glenn Terrell, for appellants:

The page (2318) of the bound journal of the senate is sufficient to show that the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill were taken and recorded, but, through oversight, misplaced in the final make-up in the office of the state printer.

Goff v. Rickerson, 61 Fla. 29, 54 So. 264; West v. State, 50 Fla. 154, 39 So. 412; Lincoln v. Haugan, 45 Minn. 451, 58 N. W. 196; State v. Bethea, 61 Fla. 60, 55 So. 550; Montgomery Beer Bottling Works v. Gaston, 126 Ala. 425, 51 L.R.A. 396, 85 Am. St. Rep. 42, 28 So. 497; State ex rel. Brickman v. Wilson, 123 Ala. 259, 45 L.R.A. 772, 26 So. 485; State ex rel. Douglas County v. Frank, 60 Neb. 327, 83 N. W. 74; State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776; Homrighausen v. Knoche, 58 Kan. 646, 50 Pac. 879; People ex rel. Manville v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 Pac. 824; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1, note; Woolfolk v. Albrecht, 22 N. D. 36, 133 N. W. 310.

No particular language is required in any law to constitute a valid appropriation.

People ex rel. Hegwer v. Goodykoontz, 22 Colo. 507, 45 Pac. 414; Carr v. State, 127 Ind. 205, 11 L.R.A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 628, 26 N. E. 780; State ex rel. Henderson v. Burdick, 4 Wyo. 272, 24 L.R.A. 266, 33 Pac. 126; Menefee v. Askew, 25 Okla. 623, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 537, 107 Pac. 159; Falk v. Huston, 25 Idaho, 26, 135 Pac. 745; Reynolds v. Taylor, 43 Ala. 420; Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189; Green v. Purnell, 12 Md. 329; State ex rel. Roberts v. Weston, 4 Neb. 216; State ex rel. Buck v. Hickman, 10 Mont. 497, 26 Pac. 386; State ex rel. Davis v. Eggers, 29 Nev. 469, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 630, 91 Pac. 819; Conley v. Daugh- ters of the Republic, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 877.

Chapter 8500 is not an "appropriation of a general character," nor is it primarily an appropriation bill within the purview of § 30 of article 3.

Evanhoff v. State Industrial Acci. Commission, 78 Or. 503, 154 Pac. 106; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 102.

The act must stand as being valid.

Jordan v. Duval County, 68 Fla. 48, 66 So. 298; Jacksonville v. Bowden, 67 Fla. 181, L.R.A. 1916D, 913, 64 So. 769; Dutton Phosphate Co. v. Priest, 67 Fla. 370, 65 So. 282; Hill v. Rae, 52 Mont. 378, L.R.A. 1917A. 495, 158 Pac. 826, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 210.

Messrs. Y. S. Watson and William J. Oven, for appellee:

The act is not valid because the journal affirmatively shows no record of the "aye" and "nay" vote taken in the senate on the final passage of the bill.

Wade v. Atlantic Lumber Co. 51 Fla. 633, 41 So. 72; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Green, 36 Fla. 172, 18 So. 334; State ex rel. Markens v. Brown, 20 Fla. 421; Auditor General v. Menominee County, 89 Mich. 552, 51 N. W. 483; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408, 47 N. W. 765; Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203; Detroit v. Board of Assessors (Detroit v. Rentz) 91 Mich. 78, 16 L.R.A. 59, 51 N. W. 787; People ex rel. Wies v. Bowman, 247 Ill. 276, 93 N. E. 244; State ex rel. McKinley v. Martin, 160 Ala. 181, 48 So. 846; McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424; Wilson v. Markley, 13 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269; Heiskell v. Knox County, 132 Tenn. 180, 177 S. W. 485, Ann. Cas. 1916E. 1281; Richmond County v. Farmers Bank, 152 N. C. 387, 67 S. E. 969, 21 Ann. Cas. 812; New Hanover County v. Armour Packing Co. 135 N. C. 62, 47 S. E. 411; Montgomery Beer Bottling Works v. Gaston, 126 Ala. 425, 51 L.R.A. 396, 85 Am. St. Rep. 42, 28 So. 497; Ex parte Howard-Harrison Iron Co. 119 Ala. 484, 72 Am. St. Rep. 928, 24 So. 517; People ex rel. Manville v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 Pac. 824.

The sections of the act which seek to make or create an annual or continuing appropriation for the Commission are invalid.

Re Revenue Law, 14 Fla. 286; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Fergus v. Russell, 270 Ill. 304, 110 N. E. 130, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 1102; State ex rel. Hilliard v. Cornell, 60 Neb. 276, 83 N. W. 72; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 389, 63 L.R.A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241, 67 N. E. 28; Lund v. Dickinson, 126 Ark. 243, 190 S. W. 428; Dickinson v. Clibourn, 125 Ark. 101, 187 S. W. 909; State ex rel. Lyon v. State Warehouse Commission, 92 S. C. 81, 75 S. E. 392; Hill v.

Rae, 52 Mont. 378, L.R.A.1917A, 405, 158 Pac. 826, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 210; People v. Joyce, 246 Ill. 124, 92 N. E. 607, 20 Ann. Cas. 472.

Browne, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity brought by W. H. Moseley in the circuit court for Leon county to enjoin the comptroller from issuing warrants to the members of the Tax Commission in payment of their salaries.

A temporary restraining order was made by the chancellor, and an appeal is taken therefrom to this court which raises the question of the validity of chapter 6500, Laws of Florida, Acts of 1913.

This attack is predicated upon the grounds that the journals of the proceedings of the senate for the session of 1913 do not show that on the final passage of the bill the vote was taken by yeas and nays, and entered on the journals of that body, as required by § 17 of article 3 of the Constitution, and, because the bill contained a section making appropriations for expenses, it was in violation of § 30, art. 3, of the Constitution of the state of Florida, which provides that "laws making appropriations for salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state shall contain provisions on no other subject."

At the hearing of the application for a temporary injunction the complainant offered in evidence, which was admitted without objection on the part of the respondent, a bound volume of what purported to be the journals of the senate of Florida for the session of 1913, to which was attached the following certificate from the secretary of state: "I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the state of Florida, do hereby certify that the attached volume is a true and correct copy of the journal of the senate of the state of Florida, showing the proceedings of the senate during the session of the legislature held in 1913, as filed in this office."

The defendants offered in evidence what purported to be a certified copy of page 132 of the daily printed journal of the senate for June 4, 1913, which was admitted over the objection of the complainant.

It is a well-settled rule in this state that, where the Constitution says that each house of the legislature shall "keep a journal of its proceedings which shall be published," and expressly requires that "the vote on the final passage of every bill or joint resolution shall be taken by yeas and nays, to be entered on the journal of each house," the journals are conclusive on the point whether the yea and nay vote was so taken and entered. Thus in State ex rel. Atty. L.R.A.1918C

Gen. v. Green, 36 Fla. 154, 18 So. 334, this court said: "It is generally held that the plain constitutional injunctions as to the mode and manner of enacting laws are mandatory, and the equally high authority that journals of the proceedings shall be kept strengthens the view that the evidence of a compliance with such injunctions should be found in the journals."

See also Wade v. Atlantic Lumber Co. 51 Fla. 628, 41 So. 72; Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 12 So. 681; State ex rel. Markens v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407.

In the latter case this court held: "In testing the question whether an act of the legislature was passed in conformity to the requirements of the Constitution, the journals of the houses of the legislature will be examined; and, if the journals furnish conclusive evidence that any bill was not passed in a constitutional manner, it cannot be recognized as a law."

The rule in this state is thus stated by Chief Justice Mabry in the case of State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Green, supra: "There are two conflicting views held by the decisions on this subject. Under constitutional requirements that journals of the proceedings of the legislative bodies shall be kept and published, it has been held in many decisions that, where the journal entries as to the legislative proceedings are explicit and conflict even with legislative acts regularly authenticated, the journals are superior, and the courts will be governed by them as to matters clearly, explicitly, and affirmatively stated therein. The other view, maintained by high authority, is that the legislative act itself, embodied in a bill engrossed and enrolled, and bearing the proper official signatures, is of higher dignity than the journals, and will override them. This court has placed itself on the side of those maintaining the view first stated (State ex rel. Markens v. Brown, supra; State ex rel. Boyd v. Deal, 24 Fla. 293, 12 Am. St. Rep. 204, 4 So. 899; Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 12 So. 681); and, as there is ample authority to sustain this view, we will not now make any departure."

The question, however, which we must first determine is, What is the journal? Is it the bound volume which purports to be a copy of all the journals of the entire session, or is it the printed and published pamphlet which contains the record of each day's proceedings? The word "journal" is derived from the French word "jour," which means "day." The Century Dictionary defines a "journal" to be "a diary or daily record; an account of daily transactions or events," and says that "journal" is a doublet of "diurnal," from the Latin diurnalis. The journal which the Constitution requires each house of the legislature to keep is, therefore, a daily record. It is common knowledge which this court can take cognizance of that the proceedings of each house of the legislature are printed daily in pamphlet form, and published and distributed. In the record of the proceedings of the second day of the session of 1913 we find a resolution, unanimously adopted, providing "that the state printer be directed to furnish for the use of the senate two thousand (2,000) copies of each day's journal; that each senator shall be entitled to have mailed out, as he may direct, fifty (50) copies of each day's journal; and that the sergeant at arms shall see that said journals are mailed in accordance with lists to be furnished by the several senators."

These are corrected daily under the orders of business "Reading the Journal" and "Correcting and Approving the Journal," and are published and distributed to the people of the state in conformity with the purpose of the constitutional provision requiring them to be published.

The law with regard to binding the journals in one volume is found in section 657, General Statutes of Florida, and further provides for them to be indexed by the attorney general, and that the indexes, with the journals, shall be delivered to the contractor who shall print and bind the same without delay. Here is a statutory recognition of the daily printed pamphlets as "the journals," and a provision for a reprint of them by a contractor. There is no provision for any official to examine and certify to the correctness of the work of the contractor, but, when he completes the work of printing and binding the copies made by him of the original journals, he is to deliver 250 of them to the secretary of state, who is to furnish certain officials with a copy, "and retain in his office the remaining copies for gratuitous distribution to anyone who may desire a copy and will deposit or forward a sufficient amount to prepay postage thereon." These bound volumes, which purport to be a reprint of the original journals of each day, are not examined or corrected by the members of the respective houses, and errors could readily be made in the printing and compilation which they would have no opportunity to detect, or correct if detected. It would be dangerous, indeed, to give absolute verity to the product of the work of a contractor who was not an officer of the state, and whose mistakes could destroy the work of the legislature constitutionally performed. This does not apply to the daily pamphlets, which are placed on the desk of every member of the legislature, and ample opportunity afforded to correct all errors, typographical or otherwise; the corrections appearing in the journal of the succeeding legislative day.

In the case of State ex rel. Turner v. Hocker, 36 Fla. 358, 18 So. 767, Mr. Justice Taylor who delivered the opinion of the court said: "It is well settled that the journals kept by the two houses of the legislature of their proceedings are public records of which the courts will take judicial notice."

In the case of Bloxham v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 35 Fla. 625, 17 So. 902, the court, in order to satisfy itself about a matter not in the record, examined the articles of incorporation of the Florida Central & Northern Railroad Company which were on file in the office of the secretary of state, and used the information thus derived in reaching a conclusion on certain aspects of the case.

In the case of Wade v. Atlantic Lumber Co. supra, this court took judicial notice of the journals of the two houses of the legislature. In that case an act granting lands to the Atlantic, Suwannee River, & Gulf Railroad Company was attacked on demurrer to a bill, one of the grounds being that the title of the act was insufficient to embrace the land grant. This court resorted to the journals of the senate and house, and followed the bill in its course through those bodies and in the joint committee on enrolled bills, and found that the title of the bill as introduced and voted on was different from and more restricted than the title as published in the printed acts as chapter 4267, Laws of Florida. Acts of 1893, and treated the act as having the more restrictive title which the court took judicial notice of from its examination of the journals.

In these cases the court acted in accordance with a well-established rule that those things of which a court may take judicial notice require no proof. Thus, in State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 36 L.R.A. 623, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30, 37 Atl. 80, the court said: "Judicial notice takes the place of proof, and is of equal force. As a means of establishing facts it is, therefore, superior to evidence. In its appropriate field it displaces evidence, since, as it stands for proof, it fulfils the object which evidence is designed to fulfil, and makes evidence unnecessary. . . . If, in regard to any subject of judicial notice, the court should permit documents to be referred to or testimony introduced, it would not be in any proper sense the admission of evidence, but simply a resort to a convenient means of refreshing the memory, or making the trier aware of that of which everybody ought to be aware. State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 179, 180."

We take the following from volume 15, R. C. L. pp. 1060, 1061: "Judicial knowledge in any case is by no means determined or limited by the knowledge of the particular judge or court. Where a judge is personally conversant with a fact which is judicially cognizable, proof thereof is, of course, not required. But judicial notice is taken only of those matters which are 'commonly' known. And therefore individual and extrajudicial knowledge on the part of a judge will not dispense with proof of facts not judicially cognizable, and cannot be resorted to for the purpose of supplementing the record. On the other hand, it is not essential that matters of judicial cognizance be actually known to the judge. If they are proper subjects of judicial knowledge the judge may inform himself in any way which may seem best to his discretion, and act accordingly."

On the question now under consideration,—the right of this court to take judicial notice of the legislative journals,—Chamberlayne in his work on the Modern Law of Evidence, vol. 1, § 661, says: "Journals of a branch of the legislature are public records. 'They prove their own authenticity.' Being kept in virtue of a provision of law judicially known to the judge, their existence and function in legislation are also judicially known. Judges of a majority of American states hold that they may resort to these journals for the purpose of ascertaining what is the law which they are charged with the responsibility of knowing at their peril, when a statute went into effect whether it was properly enacted, and facts of similar nature. In so doing they judicially notice facts brought to their attention on such inspection, and give effect to them, even to the extent of controlling the official certificate of enactment."

Judge Cooley announces the same doctrine in his work on Constitutional Limitations and as a justice of the supreme court of Michigan. In the seventh edition, p. 193, of the former he says: "Each house keeps a journal of its proceedings, which is a public record, and of which the courts are at liberty to take judicial notice."

In the case of People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481, he says: "As the courts are bound judicially to take notice of what the law is, we have no doubt it is our right, as well as our duty, to take notice not only of the printed statute books, but also of the journals of the two houses, to enable us to determine whether all the constitutional requisites to the validity of a statute have been complied with."

The supreme court of Wisconsin says: "The courts will take judicial notice of the statute laws of the state, and to this end they will take like notice of the contents of the journals of the two houses of the legislature far enough to determine whether an act published as a law was actually passed by the respective houses in accordance with constitutional requirements." McDonald v. State, 80 Wis. 407, 50 N. W. 185.

The case of Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496, was submitted on demurrer to a bill to which was attached as an exhibit a transcript from a house journal which failed to show that the bill passed, but the court went beyond the proof thus submitted, and made "a personal examination of the house journal," which had not been offered in evidence, and decided the case upon what it found from its personal inspection. In all the states where the rule exists that the validity of a law may be impeached by the journals, and some which hold the contrary rule, the courts take judicial notice of the journals. See Stein v. Leeper, 78 Atl. 517; Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496; Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L.R.A. 93, 21 N. E. 267; Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 571; Barnard v. Gall, 43 La. Ann. 959, 10 So. 5; Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203; People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; State ex rel. Douglas County v. Frank, 61 Neb. 679, 85 N. W. 956; Re Opinion of Justices, 52 N. H. 622; People ex rel. Scott v. Chenango, 8 N. Y. 317; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; Portland v. Yick, 44 Or. 439, 102 Am. St. Rep. 633, 75 Pac. 706; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Platt, 2 S. C. 150, 16 Am. Rep. 647; Williams v. State, 6 Lea, 549; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670; Re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640; McDonald v. State, 80 Wis. 407, 50 N. W. 185; State ex rel. Sullivan v. Schnitger, 16 Wyo. 479, 95 Pac. 698; Blake v. National Banks, 23 Wall. 307, 23 L. ed. 119; Gardner v. Collector (Gardner v. Barney) 6 Wall. 499, 18 L. ed. 890. This rule, which is in accord with sound reason, is supported by the great weight of the authorities.

In determining the validity of a law found upon the statute books, where it is attacked upon the ground that the constitutional requirements were not observed in its passage through the legislature, the courts should not exclude from their knowledge matters of general and common knowledge which they are presumed to share with the public generally. This does not mean knowledge which they individually possess by reason of personal investigation and research, but matters of common notoriety which, because of such notoriety, they share or should share in common with the public. It has been well said, however, that "This power is to be exercised by courts with caution. Care must be taken that the requisite notoriety exists." Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. ed. 200

The courts of the land, which are charged with the great responsibility of determining matters upon which the life and death of a human being may depend, can well be trusted to exercise the proper caution in determining what matters they will take judicial notice of. It is upon the wisdom and discretion of the judges of our courts that the doctrine of judicial notice must rest.

In this state the Constitution requires each house of the legislature to "keep a journal of its proceedings which shall be published," and it is a matter of common and general knowledge that the senate and house of representatives cause the record of their proceedings to be published daily in pamphlet form and distributed generally throughout the state, and, where the validity of a statute is attacked on the ground that the constitutional requirements in its passage by the legislature were not obeyed, it is our duty to take judicial notice of these journals, to satisfy ourselves about what actually transpired in the passage of the act. This we have done, and as the daily printed journal of June 4, 1913, kept by the senate, which we have before us, and of which the court takes judicial notice, shows that the yeas and nays vote on the final passage by the senate of chapter 6500 was entered on the senate journal immediately before an entry stating that the bill passed the senate, such vote being 20 to 8 for the passage of the bill, the mere fact that the bound copies of the journals, printed and bound by a contractor under the statute and filed with the secretary of state, do not show such yeas and nays vote in immediate connection with the entry that the bill here considered passed the senate, but such vote does, by mistake or otherwise, appear on the same page in connection with the final passage by the senate of another bill, does not overcome the probative force of the daily journal kept by the senate under the Constitution, of which daily printed journal the court takes judicial notice without proof.

It appearing from the daily journal of the senate of June 4, 1913, that the vote on the final passage of the bill was taken by yeas and nays, was entered on the journal of the senate, and passed by a vote of 20 yeas to 8 nays, the objection to the law on this ground is not sustained.

Before leaving this branch of the case we call the attention of the legislature to the fact that there is no provision in our laws for filing the daily printed journals of the respective branches of the legislature in the office of the secretary of state or elsewhere, where they may be at all times available to the courts.

The next ground of attack on the bill is L.R.A.1918C.

that it is in violation of § 30, art. 3, of the Constitution, which provides that "laws making appropriations for salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state shall contain provisions on no other subject."

It is contended by the appellee that because the bill creating the State Tax Commission contained a section making an appropriation for the payment of the salaries of the Commissioners, it is in contravention of the Constitution. Such a construction eliminates the second clause of the paragraph, "and other current expenses of the state," and extends the restriction to any law containing an appropriation for the salary of an official. This provision of the Constitution must be considered in its entirety, and when so construed it becomes apparent that it refers to what is known as the General Appropriation Bill. No more apt words than "salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state" could be used to describe the law in which such appropriations are made at each legislative session. This, however, will not prevent a law, other than the General Appropriation Bill, the purpose of which is to provide for salaries and other current expenses of the state, from being obnoxious to the provision of the Constitution under consideration. In the advisory opinion of Mr. Justice Westcott in 14 Fla. 283, the governor asked the opinion of the judges of the supreme court "upon the proper construction to be put upon the aforesaid § 3 of the General Appropriation Bill," and in answering the inquiry Mr. Justice Westcott says: "The third section of the 'General Appropriation Bill which you call our attention to,' etc. Thus both the executive and judicial departments of the government stand sponsors for calling laws described in § 30, art. 3, 'General Appropriation Bills.' As the law under consideration in the first advisory opinion was one 'providing for salaries of public officers and other current expense of the state government,' called by the governor and the supreme court the 'General Appropriation Bill,' the decision applies exclusively to such laws.

In the second Advisory Opinion of the Justices, 14 Fla. 285, § 2, art. 11, of the Constitution, which provides for raising revenues for the government, and § 30, art. 5, in relation to "laws making appropriations for salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state," were under consideration, and Mr. Justice Westcott said: "It would seem to follow from this that the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution, renders the junction of a law making appropriations for salaries and other current expenses with any other subject obnoxious to the charge of a violation of its provisions."

Construing these opinions together, it is apparent that it was the General Appropriation Bill that he referred to when he said there must not be a junction therein with any other subject and was but a reiteration of the law announced in the first advisory opinion as to what should not be contained in the General Appropriation Bill. Wherever in this advisory opinion the words, "law making appropriations for salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state," are used, they must be taken to mean the General Appropriation Bill, because, in the first advisory opinion, he used that term to describe such a law as referred to in § 30, art. 3, of the Constitution. As if apprehensive lest, in a case such as that now under consideration, isolated sentences from their opinion might be cited for a purpose other than the court intended, it added with prophetic vision this clarifying paragraph: "It would not, however, result from this that a specific provision for the payment of expenses, necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of a law itself, or which may be deemed needful in carrying it or its subject into execution, would not be valid, because such a provision, being matter properly connected with the subject of the law as expressed in the title, would not be prohibited by the Constitution. For instance, the provisions for the payment of the persons employed, and the expenses of all kinds incurred in the assessment and collection of the revenue, are matters properly connected with such assessment and collection, and cannot be disconnected therefrom."

In the case of State v. Southern Land & Timber Co. 45 Fla. 374, 33 So. 999, a distinction is drawn between general appropriation laws, and a law making an appropriation. In that case an attack was made on the tax levy for state board of health purposes, and this court said: "It is contended that, inasmuch as there is no appropriation for board of health purposes in the General Appropriation Law of 1897, there could be no levy for that purpose, as such a levy would violate §§ 3 and 4, art. 9, of the Constitution. The legislature seems to have regarded § 784, Revised Statutes, as being, ex proprio vigore, equivalent to an appropriation law, as we can discover no appropriation in the General Appropriation Laws for the board of health purposes. This is the practical construction placed upon the section by the administrative officers of the state, and we think the language of the section warrents this construction, especially so taken in connection with § 1, art. 15, of the Constitution. No error of law appears in the rate of state taxation for 1897."

L.R.A.1918C.

Section 784, Revised Statutes, which Mr. Justice Hocker, who delivered the opinion of the court, said was equivalent to an appropriation law, is § 20 of the State Board of Health Act, passed at the extra session of the legislature, 1889 (Laws 1889, Ex. Sess. chap. 3839), which provides: There shall be levied and collected annually upon the assessable property of the state a tax of one half mill to create a special fund for the maintenance and support of the state board of health other than for maintenance, quarantine or maritime sanitation."

There seems to be no reason why an act, the general purpose of which is not to make appropriations for salaries of public officials and for current expenses of the state, may not, as was said by Judge Westcott, make provision for the payment of expenses necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of the law itself, including payment of the persons employed; while experience teaches the wisdom of the constitutional inhibition against including in a general appropriation bill provisions on any other subject. The purpose of such a provision is generally conceded to be to prevent including in bills appropriating money to carry on the government of the state measures foreign to that purpose, and, by taking advantage of the necessities of the state, force the legislature to adopt them, or stop the entire machinery of the government for want of funds to carry it on.

The constitutions of most, if not all, the states have provisions similar to § 30, art. 3, of our Constitution, but we have been able to find a decision from only one state, Oregon, whose constitutional provision is identical with ours. Other decisions relating to constitutional provisions differing somewhat from ours have been cited which, though interesting, are not sufficiently in point to be guiding.

Section 7, art. 9, of the Oregon Constitution provides: "Laws making appropriations for the salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state, shall contain provisions upon no other subject."

That is the exact language of the provision of our Constitution, and an attack was made on the Workmen's Compensation Act (Or. Laws 1913, p. 188) on the ground that it was in contravention of this provision of the Oregon Constitution. So much was said by the court that is applicable to the instant case, both as to the law and legislative practice, that we quote at length from the opinion: "The evident purpose of this provision was to prevent matters foreign to the general purpose of appropriation bills being attached to them as riders, thereby taking advantage of the necessity of the state for money to defray its current expenses and to pay its officers, to pass measures that perhaps would otherwise have been defeated. The instant act is not primarily an act to appropriate money to pay salaries or other current expenses. It is not an appropriation bill in the sense that bills providing for general current expenses or salaries of the constitutional offices of the state are such. We have been cited to no case, in this state or elsewhere, where a provision similar to the one at bar has been construed in accordance with counsel's contention, and in this state contemporary legislative construction has been the other way. Thus, at the first regular session of the legislature held after the adoption of the Constitution we find an act, entitled 'An Act for the Appointment of a Librarian and Defining His Duties' (Laws 1860, p. 64), was passed, creating the office of the state librarian, defining his duties, prescribing the hours during which he should keep the library open, and appropriating $400 annually for the purchase of books and $150 annually for his salary. The president of the senate, the speaker of the house, and many members of both houses had been members of the constitutional convention. From that time to the present it is safe to say that there has not been a session of the legislature where similar acts have not been passed. Some of them are: The Food and Dairy Commission Act; the Immigration Commission Act, passed in 1885; the Fish Commission Act, in 1887; the State Board of Horticulture Act, in 1895; the Bureau of Labor Statistics Act, in 1903; the act creating the office of state engineer, and providing a water code, in 1905; the Bank Examiner Act, the Railroad Commission Act, and the Sheep Inspector Act, in 1907; the act creating the office of insurance commissioner and a fund known as the 'insurance fund,' and the act creating our present water board, in 1909; the act creating the state forestry board, and the act providing for the construction of a branch insane asylum in Eastern Oregon, in 1911; the act providing for a state industrial school for girls; an act creating an Industrial Welfare Commission; an act creating the State Highway Commission; and an act creating the State Live Stock Sanitary Board, in 1913. Most of these acts fixed the salary or compensation of the officers designated to carry out their purposes, and appropriated the money necessary to pay such salaries and to accomplish the general objects for which the law was enacted. An examination of the late session laws of other states having identical or similar provisions in their constitutions shows that the same legislative practice has been pursued in these jurisdictions, so that it may be said practically the uniform contemporaneous construction of this section L.R.A.1918C.

of the Constitution is that it does not prohibit the legislature from passing an act designed to effect a particular purpose, and in the same act to provide the funds necessary to accomplish that purpose." Evanhoff v. State Industrial Acci. Commission, 78 Or. 503, 154 Pac. 106.

Judged by a long line of enactments by the legislature, that co-ordinate branch of the government has placed on § 30, art. 3, of our Constitution a construction in accord with Mr. Justice Westcott's opinion, that a specific provision for the payment of expenses necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of a law itself, including provisions for the payment of persons employed, is not prohibited by the Constitution; for ever since it went into effect in 1887 laws have been passed creating offices, prescribing the powers and duties of the incumbents, and making appropriations for their salaries. In both the special and the regular sessions of the legislature of 1889 there were several members who were delegates to the constitutional convention that ordained § 30, art. 3. At the former the state board of health was created by an act which enumerated its provisions, defined its duties, and provided for a state health officer who should receive a salary of $3,000 "out of funds hereinafter provided, together with his actual traveling expenses." The regular session of 1889 created the office of state chemist and inspector of fertilizers, and provided for their salaries. Since then the legislature has, from time to time, given its sanction to such acts, among which are the following: Providing for the office of inspector of feeding stuffs and fertilizers; for bank examiners; state geologist; inspectors for chemical division of the agricultural department; inspector of nursery stock; rural school inspectors; state labor inspector; hotel commission; shellfish commission; state highway commission; state board of examiners of teachers; live stock sanitary board; and state marketing commissioners. The last three were enacted in 1917. All of these laws make appropriations for salaries and expenses, and some have never been provided for in the general appropriation bill, or other special law. None, however, include "other current expenses of the state."

The construction placed by the legislature on this provision of the Constitution is entitled to weight with the courts, when there is doubt as to the constitutionality of a law. This does not mean, however, that if the legislature clearly violates a constitutional provision, the frequent repetition of the wrong will create a right; but, as was said by Mr. Justice Johnson in Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, text 290, 6 L.

ed. 606, 632: "It proceeds upon the presumption that the contemporaries of the Constitution have claims to our deference, on the question of right, because they had the best opportunities of informing themselves of the understanding of the framers of the Constitution, and of the sense put upon it by the people, when it was adopted by them."

Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, 7th ed. p. 102. says: "But where there has been a practical construction, which has been acquiesced in for a considerable period, considerations in favor of adhering to this construction sometimes present themselves to the courts with a plausibility and force which it is not easy to resist. Indeed, where a particular construction has been generally accepted as correct, and especially when this has occurred contemporaneously with the adoption of the Constitution, and by those who had opportunity to understand the intention of the instrument, it is not to be denied that a strong presumption exists that the construction rightly interprets the intention. And where this has been given by officers in the discharge of their official duty, and rights have accrued in reliance upon it, which would be devastated by a decision that the construction was erroneous, the argument ab inconvenienti is sometimes allowed to have very great weight."

In Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light & Street R. Co. 36 Fla. 519, 29 L.R.A. 507, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44, 18 So. 444, it was held that "a practical construction of a statute by a governmental department, while not of such high authority as a judicial interpretation of the act, is, when not in conflict with the Constitution or the plain intent of the act, of great persuasive force and efficacy."

All the acts of the legislature which we have mentioned herein are of the same general character as that under consideration. They provide for the performance of certain duties by officers or other persons, and make appropriations for their salaries and expenses, and they have been recognized by the executive branch, by making appointments thereunder, and paying the salaries and expenses provided for, in most instances without any provision being made therefor in the general appropriation bill. Thus, to guide us to some extent, we have the interpretation put upon such laws by the legislative and executive branches of the government. As was said, however, in the case of Evanhoff v. State Industrial Acci. Commission, supra: "While such a construction will not be permitted to overturn and render nugatory a clear provision of the Constitution, in cases where the meaning of a clause in the instrument is capable of two interpretations, it is entitled to great weight."

In the case under consideration we have no doubt about the validity of this act, and the construction placed on it by the legislative and executive departments of the government confirms rather than influences our conclusion.

We are strongly of the opinion that this act is not in contravention of § 30, art. 3, of the Constitution, because it is not a law "making appropriations for the salaries of public officers and other current expenses of the state," but is one inaugurating a new governmental policy in the assessment of property for taxes, and is a comprehensive scheme embracing the entire state and affecting the taxation of all property in the state. The matter of appropriations for carrying the law into effect is but a small part of the great purpose of the act.

The appellee next contends that because the act makes a continuing appropriation it is in contravention of § 2, art. 9, of the Constitution which says that "the legislature shall provide for raising revenue sufficient to defray the expenses of the state for each fiscal year."

We fail to find in this provision of the Constitution any inhibition on the power of the legislature to make continuing appropriations. Most, if not all, the laws heretofore mentioned contained continuing appropriations, and the power of the legislature to do this having been sustained in the case of State v. Southern Land & Timber Co. 45 Fla. 374, 33 So. 999, it disposes of this contention.

The judgment is reversed.

Taylor, Whitfield, and Ellis, JJ., and Wills, Circuit Judge, concur. West, J., disqualified.

Ellis, J., concurring:

I think that the word "journal," as used in § 12 of article 3 of the Constitution, which requires each house of the legislature to keep a journal of its own proceedings and to publish the same, and as used in § 17 of the same article, which requires the vote on the final passage of every bill or joint resolution to be taken by yeas and nays and entered on the journal of each house, means the record of the proceedings of each house as it is daily made and published in pamphlet form and placed each morning upon the desks of the members for correction and approval.

The bound copies of the journals which the contractor for the public printing is required, under §§ 657 and 660 of the General Statutes, to print and bind and deliver to the secretary of state for distribution to the officials named therein, are not verified copies, nor can they be said to be reprints in the sense that they are new impressions from the same molds or forms upon which the journals or daily pamphlets were printed.

The burden of showing that an act of the legislature which has been duly signed by the presiding officer of each house and by the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives and become a law with or without the approval of the governor, as shown by the record of official acts of the legislative department, as the same are kept by the secretary of state as required by § 21 of article 4 of the Constitution, is upon the person who asserts that the act did not pass in the manner prescribed by the Constitution.

Such has been the holding of this court since the case of State ex rel. Markens v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407, was decided, in which Chief Justice Randall said: "If the journals show conclusively that any material portion of a bill as passed was omitted in the enrolling, so that it may be considered that the act as approved was not passed by the legislature, and does not express the legislative will, the act as approved, at least to the extent that it is affected by the omission, must be held invalid. This is a rule now well settled by the American courts. The Constitution [1868] requires the keeping of journals of their proceedings by the respective houses of the legislature; and these journals are received as evidence of such proceedings. [Italics mine.] When an act is duly approved and published, it is prima facie a law; but if the legislative journals show that instead of being passed it was defeated, or that it is not the same that was passed, it is not a law."

This having been the law of the state for more than thirty years, and having decided that the daily printed pamphlets showing the legislative proceedings of each house constitute the journals of that house, the burden was upon the appellee to show by the journal of one of the houses that the act (Laws 1913, chap. 6500) did not pass in the manner and according to the requirements prescribed by the Constitution, in order to sustain the first point made by him in his attack upon the validity of the act.

This burden was not carried by the appellee. He sought by the introduction of the bound copies of the journal of the senate of the session of 1913 to throw the burden upon appellants of showing by the journal of the senate that the bill in question did pass. Even if the bound journals may be considered as secondary evidence of the daily proceedings of each house, a proposition which I am not prepared to accept as law, there was no effort to show that the "senate journal" could not be produced, and therefore no ground for the introduction of secondary evidence was laid.

The appellee having therefore failed to show by the "journal" of either house of the legislature of the session of 1913 that the act did not pass, the prima facie validity of the act was not overcome.

I also concur in the conclusion reached as to the second point.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA et al.

(— Okla. —, P.U.R.1918A, 587, 168 Pac.
239.)

Carriers — depots.

1. By § 26, art. 9, Constitution of this state, the duty is expressly imposed upon every railroad company to provide and maintain adequate, comfortable, and clean depot buildings at its several stations for the accommodation of passengers; said depot buildings to be kept well lighted and Headnotes by HARDY, J.

Note. — As to power of Public Service Commission to prescribe the character of materials for depots, see annotation following this case, post, 495.
L.R.A.1918C.

warmed for the comfort and accommodation of the traveling public.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. 1, in Dig.
1-52 N. S.

Same — power of Corporation Commission.

2. By § 18, art. 9, Constitution, the Corporation Commission is empowered and it is made its duty to require every railroad company to perform the duty imposed upon it by § 26 of said article; the only limitation upon the action of the Commission in this respect being that it shall be reasonable and just.

For other cases, see Carriers, IV. d, in Dig.
1-52 N. S.

Public Service Commission — power to prescribe material for depot.

3. The Corporation Commission may, where such order would be reasonable and just, prescribe the kind of material to be used in the construction of a depot to be erected by a railway company.

For other cases, see Carriers, IV. d, in Dig.
1-52 N. S.

Same — reasonableness of order.

4. The order in this case required the railway company to erect a depot at Walters to be constructed of brick. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the order was reasonable and just, and that said order did not deprive the railway company of its property without due process of law.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 4, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 9, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Corporation Commission prescribing the kind of material to be used in the construction of a depot by the defendant railway. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John E. DuMars, C. O. Blake, R. J. Roberts, and W. H. Moore, for appellants:

The order of the Corporation Commission is not supported by sufficient evidence, is contrary to law, and is unreasonable, burdensome, and unjust.

Great Northern R. Co. v. Minnesota, 238 U. S. 340, 59 L. ed. 1337, P.U.R.1915D, 701, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 753; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, 29 Okla. 553, 119 Pac. 423; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 91, 57 L. ed. 431, 433, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Florida East Coast R. Co. v. United States, 234 U. S. 167, 58 L. ed. 1267, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867.

The order of the Commission is in violation of the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and § 7 of article 2, Constitution of Oklahoma.

Great Northern R. Co. v. Minnesota, 238 U. S. 340, 346, 59 L. ed. 1337, 1339, P.U.R. 1915D, 701, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 753; Washington ex rel. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 56 L. ed. 863, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. ed. 596, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. State, 24 Okla. 370, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 393, 103 Pac. 617; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, 28 Okla. 372, 111 Pac. 396, 114 Pac. 1096; Mississippi R. Commission v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 244 U. S. 388, 61 L. ed. 1216, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 602; Cooper v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 31 Okla. 282, 121 Pac. 654.

Messrs. S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, John B. Harrison, Assistant Attorney General, Paul A. Walker, and Amil H. Japp, for appellees:

The Corporation Commission has jurisdiction. L.R.A.1918C.

tion to prescribe the character of material for depot buildings.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, 29 Okla. 553, 119 Pac. 423; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. State, 38 Okla. 401, 133 Pac. 35.

The Commission's order is presumed to be prima facie just, reasonable, and correct.

Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. State, 25 Okla. 715, 107 Pac. 912; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Travelers Corp. 47 Okla. 374, 148 Pac. 166.

The order does not deprive the railway company of its property without due process of law or without just compensation, and is not in violation of any provisions of the Constitution of the United States or of the state of Oklahoma.

8 Cyc. 1116; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 275, 54 L. ed. 472, 478, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 567, 38 L. ed. 273, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; State ex rel. Nebraska State R. Commission v. Missouri P. R. Co. 100 Neb. 700, P.U.R.1917C, 597, 161 N. W. 270.

Hardy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from order No. 1171 of the Corporation Commission prescribing the kind of material to be used in the construction of the depot at Walters, by the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company. The depot at that place was destroyed by fire on or about April 9, 1916, since which time a box car has been used as a substitute for a depot or station building. After the fire, plans and specifications were drawn by the railway company for the construction of a depot building, which plans were satisfactory to all parties concerned except for the fact that the material prescribed was wood, whereas the citizens of Walters and the Corporation Commission were of the opinion that brick should be used in lieu of wood. Upon the failure of the railway company to proceed with the construction of the depot, complaint was filed before the Corporation Commission, and order No. 1171 was issued, from which the railway company prosecutes this appeal.

It is first urged that the order is not supported by sufficient evidence, is contrary to law, and is unreasonable, burdensome, and unjust. Under this proposition, it is argued that the Commission was without power to prescribe the material of which said depot building should be constructed; that the order is not supported by the evidence, and that the property and moneys of the railway company are its private property; and that the company was better qualified than any other person to judge of its immediate demands and necessities, and that the order appealed from was an invasion of this right. The private right of ownership of railway property exists in connection with the right of the public to regulate the use thereof, provided such regulation is not exercised in an arbitrary and unreasonable way so as to cause it to be an infringement on the right of ownership under the guise of regulation. New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 54 L. ed. 472, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; State ex rel. Nebraska State R. Commission v. Missouri P. R. Co. 100 Neb. 700, P.U.R.1917C, 597, 161 N. W. 270.

By § 26 of article 9 of the Constitution of this state, the duty is expressly enjoined upon every railway company to provide and maintain adequate, comfortable, and clean depots and depot buildings at its several stations for the accommodation of passengers, and by § 18, art. 9, the Corporation Commission is empowered and it is made the duty of the Commission to require every railroad company to perform such duty, and it has been held that this delegation of power is sufficiently broad to confer upon the Corporation Commission authority to prescribe the materials to be used in a depot building ordered constructed on the line of any railroad pursuant to said section of the Constitution. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, 29 Okla. 553, 119 Pac. 423. On rehearing this question was re-examined and the doctrine reaffirmed, and we are still convinced that the holding in that case upon this proposition is correct. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. State, 38 Okla. 401, 133 Pac. 35.

As to whether it is reasonably necessary to construct a building of brick or other material in order for it to be adequate and meet the needs of the public, as required by said § 26, art. 9, is a question of fact to be determined, in the first instance, by the Corporation Commission. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, supra. And, upon appeal from an order of this character, the Constitution declares that such orders shall be prima facie just, reasonable, and correct, and the supreme court in reviewing such an order will ascribe to the findings of the Commission the strength due to the judgment of a tribunal appointed by law and informed by experience. Kansas City, M. & O. R. L.R.A.1918C.

Co. v. State, 25 Okla. 715, 107 Pac. 912; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Travelers' Corp. 47 Okla. 374, 148 Pac. 166; United States Exp. Co. v. State, 47 Okla. 656, 150 Pac. 178; Guthrie Gas, Light, Fuel & Improv. Co. v. Board of Education, — Okla. —, L.R.A.—, —, P.U.R.1917E, 200, 166 Pac. 128. In determining whether a depot building required to be erected by an order of the Commission is adequate or reasonable, such fact must be determined from a consideration of the size of the place where said building is to be erected, the cost thereof, the extent of the demand for transportation, and all the other facts which would have a bearing upon the question of convenience and cost. The question as to what may be deemed adequate in any given case is not capable of exact definition. It is a relative expression and must be considered as calling for such facilities as might be fairly demanded from a consideration of the things enumerated. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, 28 Okla. 372, 111 Pac. 396, 114 Pac. 1096; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. ed. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121.

The evidence shows that Walters is the county seat and largest town in Cotton county; that the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company has the only line of railroad running through this city or this section of the country; that the territory served by and tributary to Walters, and the line of railroad passing through said town is extensive; that the town is growing, prosperous, and has indications of being much larger as the country continues to develop; that business at the time of the hearing before the Commission was largely augmented due to prospecting for oil, and that development of oil and gas fields was likely to bring increased business to the railway company; that the receipts for passenger business averaged more than $1,000 per month, and freight revenue ran from $5,600 to $16,000 per month; that, exclusive of express business, the average revenues from freight and passenger business at this station are probably around $12,000 per month; that the depot site is situated within a short distance of the fire limits; that all buildings now being constructed for business and school purposes are brick or other noncombustible material, and that 90 per cent of the business houses already constructed are of such material; that there are oil tanks owned by lessees of the railway company's right of way in close proximity to the station site from which there is danger of fire. The cost of the building as proposed by the railway company would be about $5,000, while to construct it of brick as required by the order would be about $10,000. The question of removing or destroying a building already erected that could, by additional expense, be made adequate, and replacing it with one of different material at an additional expenditure, is not involved in this case. Considering the income from the combined passenger and freight business derived from the station, together with its present needs and prospective growth, we cannot say that the order of the Commission is unreasonable, and that the presumption pertaining thereto by reason of the Constitution has been overthrown. The appellant has not the arbitrary right to name the material of which it will build its station, when it appears that it would be of more benefit to the public to construct it of other material, and that at the same time the appellant's interests would be conserved by a station building erected of fireproof material, which would insure a more permanent improvement maintained at less expense. The authority of the Commission to make the order is no longer an open question, and the only question which is open for our consideration is whether under the record the order appealed from was unreasonable. The burden to show this was upon the appellant, and it has not made it to so appear. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, supra.

Neither does said order deprive appellant of its property without due process of law. The rule repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court of the United States is that though railway corporations are private corporations, as distinguished from those for municipal and governmental purposes, their uses are public, and they are therefore subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against danger, injustice, and oppression, and that the inhibitions of the Constitution of the United States upon the impairment of the obligation of contracts or the deprivation of property without due process or of the equal protection of the laws, by the state, are not violated by the legitimate exercise of legislative power in securing the public safety, health, and morals, and that such corporations are not deprived of property without due process of law by reasonable regulations of their business and the requirement of facilities to be furnished to the public when such regulation or requirement is ascertained in a mode suited to the case, and is not merely arbitrary and capricious, and that this regulation by the state as to their state business may be exerted either directly by the legislative authority or by administrative bodies endowed with power to that end, and that there is no incompatibility between the private ownership of such property and the right of regulation. New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 54 L. ed. 472, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330.

The order and judgment of the Commission is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Power of Public Service Commission to prescribe the character of materials for depots.

Generally, as to power to compel establishment of stations or the stopping of trains at stations, see note to Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821. That note, so far as concerns the stopping of trains, is supplemented by the note to St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Langer, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478.

As to whether railroad companies may be required to establish or maintain a station that will not pay expenses, see note to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Nebraska State R. Commission, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 444.

As to delegation by legislature of power to regulate carriers, including the establishment of stations and stopping trains at stations, see note to State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) at page 650.

For authorities passing upon power to compel railroads to change the location of stations, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bellamy, L.R.A.1915D, 91.

As to railroad's right to change location of station, see note to Louisville & Interurban R. Co. v. Callahan, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 412.

As to power to require establishment of union station, see note to Railroad Commission v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 98.

The few cases passing upon the subject of the present note are in accord with the holding in CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. STATE, ante, 492, to the effect that a Public Service Commission has power to prescribe the kind of materials to be used in the construction of depots, subject to the limitation that the order is reasonable under the circumstances, and the further limitation, as held in one case, that such order shall not conflict with the local building regulations.

In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton (1911) 29 Okla. 553, 119 Pac. 423, it was held that it is within the sound discretion of the Corporation Commission to prescribe in advance of the undertaking the material to be used in a depot building. In this case the plans and specifications and the size of the depot were agreed upon both by the Commission and the railroad company, the only controverted point being as to whether it should be built of wood as proposed by the railroad company, or by cement or brick as directed by the Commission. The order of the Commission was sustained.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 192, it was held that the Railroad Commission, upon ordering the erection of a union depot, had power to require the railroad companies to report to it the kind and character of building they expected to erect, together with plans and specifications thereof, subject to the Commissions' approval, and that the court had power to issue a writ of mandamus to compel the railroad companies to file such plans and specifications with the Commission before undertaking to erect a depot.

In State v. Great Northern R. Co. (1916) 135 Minn. 19, P.U.R.1917B, 413, 159 N. W. 1089, it was held that the Commission, upon ordering a new depot, might require that it be constructed of fireproof materials to comply with the fire ordinances of the municipality. The court said that it was within the power of the Commission "to determine whether the depots provided by the railroad company are suitable, and, if not, to require the construction and maintenance of depots which are suitable for their purposes. . . . We see nothing unreasonable in the requirement that the depot constructed shall be of some material that will comply with the fire ordinance of the village. The depot is quite in the center of the village. The council of the village has established fire limits, and has made the maintenance of frame buildings within such limits unlawful. This building is within the fire limits. Whether these facts alone would warrant an order for the construction of a new depot if the existing depot were otherwise adequate, we do not decide. They are sufficient to warrant an order that a depot to be constructed shall conform to the ordinances of the village."

In State ex rel. Burr v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1916) 71 Fla. 102, P.U.R. 1916C, 519, 70 So. 941, it was held that the Railroad Commission was not entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel a railroad company to comply with an order for the construction of a wooden building of designated dimensions, where the municipal ordinances required that buildings in the area of the proposed depot should be of fireproof materials. The court said: "It appears that, if the order as made be complied with, it will violate a municipal ordinance of St. Cloud forbidding the erection of a wooden building within an area including the point where the depot is required to be erected. The validity of the municipal ordinance cannot be determined in this proceeding to which the municipality is not a party; but, as it is apparent that the reasonableness of the order of the Railroad Commissioners here sought to be enforced is directly affected by the municipal ordinance, a governmental regulation, requiring buildings in the area including the depot site to be 'made of brick, stone, or other fireproof material,' such ordinance should have been considered by the Commissioners when the existence of the ordinance was called to their attention as alleged in the answer; for, if by virtue of the ordinance the order is unreasonable either because it requires the violation of a municipal ordinance, or because under the ordinance a much more expensive depot than that contemplated by the order is required to be built, the order should not be enforced by mandamus."

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State (Tex.) supra, an order of the Railroad Commission directing the erection of a union depot was upheld over the objection, among others, that it was too vague and indefinite to be complied with in that it failed to state the character of building required, the court remarking that the Commission had a right to determine for itself the character and kind of depot, but that it was permissible for it to leave that matter of detail to the railroads.

A. L. R.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY
v.

JOHN MITCHELL et al.

(245 U. S. 229, 62 L. ed. —, 38 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 65.)Appearance — special — effect to give jurisdiction.

1. Under the Federal practice, appearance to object to the jurisdiction of the court does not bind the defendant to submit to the jurisdiction on the overruling of the objection.

For other cases, see Appearance, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — effect — want of service.

2. An injunction is not binding upon parties who were not served with process, and who appeared only to object to the jurisdiction of the court.

For other cases, see Appearance, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — binding successors in office of original defendants.

3. An injunction is improperly issued in a suit commenced and carried to final decree in the trial court before the taking effect of the present equity rules, against persons who, pending suit, have been chosen to succeed some of the original defendants as officers of a labor organization, but who were not served with process and did not appear.

For other cases, see Injunction, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — declarations of associates in common enterprise.

4. When any number of persons associate themselves together in the prosecution of a common plan or enterprise, lawful or unlawful, from the very act of association there arises a kind of partnership, each member being constituted the agent of all, so that the act or declaration of one in furtherance of the common object is the act of all, and is admissible as primary and original evidence against them.

For other cases, see Evidence, X. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — declarations of co-conspirators.

5. While, in order to render the declaration and conduct of third parties admissible as against a defendant, it is necessary to show by independent evidence that there was a combination between them, it is not necessary to show by independent evidence that the combination was criminal or otherwise

Note. — As to lawfulness of a strike or of threat to so act as to induce a strike when there is no dispute between the strikers and their own employers, see notes in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, and L.R.A.1916C, 989.

As to controversy over open or closed shop as justification for means employed to aid a strike, see notes in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162; 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 787, and L.R.A.1917F, 760. L.R.A.1918C.

unlawful, but the element of illegality may be shown by the declarations themselves.

For other cases, see Evidence, X. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — acts and declarations of agent.

6. The declarations and conduct of an agent, within the scope and course of his agency, are admissible as original evidence against the principal.

For other cases, see Evidence, X. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — organizer of labor union.

7. The declarations and conduct of one employed by a labor union as an organizer, in the execution of a purpose to which its members have given consent, and in which some of them are actively co-operating, are admissible in evidence against them.

For other cases, see Evidence, X. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — interference with employees dischargeable at will — right of action.

8. An employer who has made nonmembership in a labor union a condition of obtaining or continuing in employment is entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of the resulting status, although the employment is terminable by either party at any time.

For other cases, see Case, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Labor union — interference with relation between master and servant — justification.

9. Any grievance which employees may have against their employer will not justify or excuse the conduct of officers and agents of a labor union, of which such employees are not members, in instigating a strike.

For other cases, see Case, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — right to organize — limitation.

10. The right of workingmen to organize for legitimate objects and to enlarge their organization by inviting other workingmen to join is not so absolute that it may be exercised under any circumstances and without any qualification, but it must always be exercised with reasonable regard for the conflicting rights of others.

For other cases, see Labor Organizations, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — unlawful interference with relation of master and servant — right to protection.

11. The conduct of officers and members of a labor union in seeking by persuasion, accompanied with intimations of a possible reduction of wages and deceptive statements as to the attitude of the employer, to induce employees whose employment is conditioned on their nonmembership in any labor organization to agree to join the union and at the same time to continue in their employer's service, for the purpose, when the support of a sufficient number of employees should be obtained, of coercing the employer, through a strike, or the threat of one, to enter into a closed-shop agreement,—is unlawful, and acts done in pursuance of such purpose may be enjoined.

For other cases, see Injunction, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — absence of evidence to support order granted.

12. An injunction against picketing and acts of physical violence is improperly granted where there is no evidence to show that such conduct is threatened.

For other cases, see Injunction, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Holmes, and Mr. Justice Clarke dissent.)

(December 10, 1917.)

PETITION for a writ of certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, to review a decree which reversed a decree of the District Court for the Northern District of West Virginia, granting an injunction against interference by defendants with the relations existing between plaintiff and its employees. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hannis Taylor and George R. E. Gilchrist, for petitioner:

Labor unions may be unlawful.

Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 37 L.R.A. 802, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496, 46 N. E. 297; Jacobs v. Cohen, 183 N. Y. 207, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292, 111 Am. St. Rep. 730, 76 N. E. 5, 5 Ann. Cas. 280; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698.

The plaintiff has a right to protect itself against the United Mine Workers by refusing to employ or to keep in its employ any member of that union.

Howard v. Danner, 17 Times L. R. 548.

The attempt to force all laborers to combine in unions is against the policy of the law, because aiming at monopoly.

Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738.

The dispute, forged as a weapon to strike in illegitimate attack, cannot be turned into a screen to conceal the nature and object of the combination.

Long v. Larkin [1914] 2 Ir. R. 302; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161-173, 52 L. ed. 436-442, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, supra.

Employment at the will of the parties L.R.A.1918C.

does not make it employment at the will of others.

Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L.R.A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125; Berry v. Donovan, supra; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252, 38 Atl. 96; Lucke v. Clothing Cutters' & T. Assembly, 77 Md. 396, 19 L.R.A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, 26 Atl. 505; London Guarantee & Acci. Co. v. Horn, 101 Ill. App. 355, 206 Ill. 493, 99 Am. St. Rep. 185, 69 N. E. 526; Chipley v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934; Blumenthal v. Shaw, 23 C. C. A. 590, 39 U. S. App. 490, 77 Fed. 954; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 60 L. ed. 131, L.R.A.1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283; Larkin v. Long, [1915] A. C. 829, W. N. 191, 84 L. J. P. C. N. S. 201, 113 L. T. N. S. 337, 31 Times L. R. 405, 59 Sol. Jo. 455, 49 Ir. L. T. 121.

Where there is a contract between two persons for exclusive personal service to be rendered by the one to the other, an action lies against a third person (not a party to the contract) who intentionally induces the former party to break his contract so as to cause, as the natural consequences of the breach, loss to the other.

Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, 118 Eng. Reprint, 749, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 463, 17 Jur. 827, 1 Week. Rep. 432, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 706; Simpson, Torts, 1908, p. 329; Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333, 50 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 305, 44 L. T. N. S. 75, 29 Week. Rep. 367, 45 J. P. 373, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 717; Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. 715, 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 412, 4 Reports, 376, 69 L. T. N. S. 78, 41 Week. Rep. 565, 57 J. P. 676; Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. 495, 1 B. R. C. 197, 70 L. J. P. C. N. S. 76, 65 J. P. 708, 50 Week. Rep. 139, 85 L. T. N. S. 289, 17 Times L. R. 749; South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. [1905] A. C. 239, 1 B. R. C. 1, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 525, 53 Week. Rep. 593, 92 L. T. N. S. 710, 21 Times L. R. 44, 2 Ann. Cas. 436; Larkin v. Long, supra; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bitterman, 75 C. C. A. 203, 144 Fed. 34; Bitterman v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 207 U. S. 205, 52 L. ed. 171, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 693.

Freedom of contract is guaranteed by the West Virginia law against interference from labor unions.

State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L.R.A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke, 59 W.

Va. 253, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 885.

Also by the Constitution of the United States.

North Carolina v. Vanderford, 35 Fed. 282; Railroad Tax Cases, 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. 746; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 9 Sawy. 165, 18 Fed. 389, affirmed in 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L.R.A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; People ex rel. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48; State v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710, 9 Atl. 559; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L.R.A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 85 N. E. 62; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; Butchers' Union S. L. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Bitterman v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 207 U. S. 205, 52 L. ed. 171, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 693; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 50 W. Va. 611, 56 L.R.A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895, 40 S. E. 591; Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 885; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Larkin v. Long [1915] A. C. 814, W. N. 191, 84 L. J. P. C. N. S. 201, 113 L. T. N. S. 337, 31 Times L. R. 405, 69 Sol. Jo. 455, 49 Ir. L. T. 121.

Petitioner has a right to injunctive relief.

Bitterman v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 207 U. S. 205, 52 L. ed. 171, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 693; Slater v. Gunn, 170 Mass. 509, 41 L.R.A. 268, 40 N. E. 1017; American Law Book Co. v. Edward Thompson Co. 41 Misc. 396, 84 N. Y. Supp. 225; W. P. Davis Mach. Co. v. Robinson, 41 Misc. 329, 84 N. Y. Supp. 837; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.

The judgment deprives petitioner of the freedom of contract guaranteed to it by the 5th Amendment.

Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 885; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 195 U. S. 280, 49 L. ed. 194, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Farrell v. O'Brien (O'Callagan v. O'Brien) 199 U. S. 89, 50 L. ed. 101, 25 L.R.A.1918C.

Sup. Ct. Rep. 727; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 417, 42 L. ed. 215, 221, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841.

Mr. Charles E. Hogg, for respondents: Petitioner's contract with its employees is against public policy.

Curran v. Galen, 152 N. Y. 33, 37 L.R.A. 802, 57 Am. St. Rep. 496, 46 N. E. 297; Jacobs v. Cohen, 183 N. Y. 207, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292, 111 Am. St. Rep. 730, 76 N. E. 5, 5 Ann. Cas. 280; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Connors v. Connolly, 86 Conn. 641, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 564, 86 Atl. 600; A. R. Barnes & Co. v. Berry, 156 Fed. 72.

Labor unions at common law were not unlawful, and were only made so in England by virtue of acts of Parliament.

1 Eddy, Combinations, §§ 404, 405; Wright, Crim. Conspiracies, p. 43, § 404; 3 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, p. 209; National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 58 L.R.A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369; Martin, Labor Unions, § 3; Coleman v. Moody, 4 Hen. & M. 21; Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 148, 8 Am. Dec. 73, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 182; Stout v. Jackson, 2 Rand. (Va.) 147; Stokes v. Upper Appomattox Co. 3 Leigh, 337; Foster v. Com. 96 Va. 309, 42 L.R.A. 589, 70 Am. St. Rep. 846, 31 S. E. 503; Lightfoot v. Colgin, 5 Munf. 42; Thornton v. Smith, 1 Wash. (Va) 83; McDodrill v. Pardee & C. Lumber Co. 40 W. Va. 579, 21 S. E. 878; Cunningham v. Dorsey, 3 W. Va. 293; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 4, 56 Am. Rep. 58; Simpson v. State, 59 Ala. 1, 31 Am. Rep. 1; Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. 144, 7 L. ed. 377; Reno Smelting Mill. & Reduction Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 269, 4 L.R.A. 60, 19 Am. St. Rep. 364, 21 Pac. 317; Vicksburg & J. R. Co. v. Patton, 31 Miss. 166, 66 Am. Dec. 552; Martin v. Bigelow, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 184, 16 Am. Dec. 606; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 52, 38 L. ed. 350, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548.

Labor unions formed for the purposes for which this union was organized are lawful.

Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, [1892] A. C. 25, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295, 66 L. T. N. S. 1, 40 Week. Rep. 337, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 120, 56 J. P. 101; Continental Ins. Co. v. Fire Underwriters, 67 Fed. 310; Meier v. Speer, 96 Ark. 618, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 792, 132 S. W. 988, 24 Cyc. 819, 820; Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 62 Fed. 803; Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union, 150 Fed 155; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121

Fed. 563; Everett Waddey Co. v. Richmond Typographical Union, 105 Va. 188, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 792, 53 S. E. 278, 8 Ann. Cas. 798; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 295; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L.R.A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, 77 N. W. 13; Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 28 L.R.A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547; Macauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L.R.A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1; Wilson v. Hey, 232 Ill. 389, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 85, 122 Am. St. Rep. 119, 85 N. E. 928, 13 Ann. Cas. 82; Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 Ann. Cas. 638; Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492, 114 S. W. 997; Post v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 119 C. C. A. 214, 200 Fed. 918; Kemp v. Division No. 241, 255 Ill. 213, 99 N. E. 389, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 347; J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 550, 98 Pac. 1027, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165.

A combination of workmen formed for the purpose of maintaining or advancing the rate of wages is a perfectly legitimate one.

Martin, Labor Unions, §§ 10-13; Ames v. Union P. R. Co. 62 Fed. 14.

To determine whether an association or combination constitutes a conspiracy it is necessary to ascertain its purposes, and, if these are lawful, the association itself cannot be treated as illegal if its powers are abused by those who have the management of it.

Com. v. Hunt, 4 Met. 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346.

Labor organizations may even use persuasion to have others join their organization. If ruin to the employer results from their peaceable assertion of these rights, it is a damage without remedy.

My Maryland Lodge v. Adt, 100 Md. 238, 68 L.R.A. 757, 59 Atl. 721; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L.R.A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, 77 N. W. 13; Everett Waddey Co. v. Richmond Typographical Union, 105 Va. 188, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 792, 53 S. E. 273, 8 Ann. Cas. 798; United States v. Weber, 114 Fed. 950; Longshore Printing & Pub. Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 28 L.R.A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547; Kolley v. Robinson, 109 C. C. A. 247, 187 Fed. 415.

Petitioner cannot maintain this suit in order to declare the organization to which the respondents belong unlawful under the Sherman Act.

National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason L.R.A.1918C.

Builders' Asso. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, 94 C. C. A. 535, 169 Fed. 259; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Bigelow v. Calumet & H. Min. Co. 167 Fed. 709; Gibbs v. McNeeley, 60 L.R.A. 152, 55 C. C. A. 70, 118 Fed. 120; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689, 60 C. C. A. 290, 125 Fed. 454.

The size of a business alone does not constitute a monopoly in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of § 2 of the Anti-trust Act; but to render a combination illegal thereunder it must intentionally or necessarily prevent other persons from engaging in such business, thereby stifling competition.

United States v. American Naval Stores Co. 172 Fed. 458; Re Greene, 52 Fed. 104.

A combination which does not exclude other persons from engaging in the business does not create a monopoly.

National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders Asso. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, 94 C. C. A. 535, 169 Fed. 259.

It will not be presumed that the members of a labor organization will carry out the purposes, lawful in themselves, of their association, in an unlawful manner.

Sheffield v. Balmer, 52 Mo. 474, 14 Am. Rep. 430; Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 21 L.R.A. 102, 26 Atl. 974, 23 Atl. 104.

The labor union, known as the United Mine Workers of America, does not constitute a common-law conspiracy.

Pettibone v. United States, 148 U. S. 197, 37 L. ed. 419, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542; State v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710, 9 Atl. 559.

The obligation or pledge which an initiate in a labor union is required to take is to be construed with reference to the declared purposes of the organization, and is binding only in so far as those purposes are lawful and are to be attained by lawful means.

Schneider v. Local Union No. 60, 116 La. 270, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 891, 114 Am. St. Rep. 549, 40 So. 700, 7 Ann. Cas. 868.

That a mere combination of persons may constitute a conspiracy such combination must be for an unlawful purpose.

Pettibone v. United States, supra.

Neither the petitioner nor any of its employees is in anywise connected with the Union or any of its branches, nor is any one of these by-laws sought to be enforced against petitioner.

States ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 402, 60 S. W. 91; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exch. 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 610; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live-Stock Exch. 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 386, 32 N. E. 274.

There can be no conspiracy to do that which is lawful in a lawful manner.

Porter v. Mack, 50 W. Va. 581, 40 S. E. 459; 2 Cooley's Bl. Com. 4th ed. bk. 4, p. 1312.

A labor organization as such, under the common-law definition of the term, does not constitute a conspiracy, either under the laws of West Virginia or under the laws of other states.

Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 37 Mont. 264, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 707, 127 Am. St. Rep. 722, 96 Pac. 127; Macaulay Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L.R.A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1; National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 58 L.R.A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369; State v. Van Pelt, 136 N. C. 663, 68 L.R.A. 760, 49 S. E. 177, 1 Ann. Cas. 495; Ames v. Union P. R. Co. 62 Fed. 14; State v. Stockford, 77 Conn. 227, 107 Am. St. Rep. 28, 58 Atl. 769.

The contracts of petitioner with its several employees are such as not to be enforceable in a court of equity, nor can it call on a court of equity to protect and uphold such a contract.

Slaughter v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 55 W. Va. 642, 65 L.R.A. 342, 104 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 47 S. E. 247, 2 Ann. Cas. 335; Charleston Natural Gas Co. v. Kanawha Natural Gas, Light & Fuel Co. 58 W. Va. 22, 112 Am. St. Rep. 936, 50 S. E. 876, 6 Ann. Cas. 154; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co. 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 527; Tarr v. Stearman, 264 Ill. 110, 105 N. E. 958.

The court could neither award nor perpetuate an injunction against persons not parties to the suit.

2 High, Inj. 4th ed. § 1548; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Johns. Ch. 25, and note; Sage v. Quay, Clarke, Ch. 347; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 107, 41 L. ed. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 262; Iveson v. Harris, 7 Ves. Jr. 257, 13 Standard Enc. Proc. 179; Harvey v. Smith, 179 Mass. 592, 61 N. E. 217; State ex rel. Pew v. District Ct. 34 Mont. 233, 85 Pac. 525; Acme Cement Plaster Co. v. Keys, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 186; Peterson v. Smith, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 69 S. W. 542.

An injunction issues only to avert threatened substantial damages or injury.

Atkins v. W. A. Fletcher Co. 65 N. J. Eq. 658, 55 Atl. 1074; Purvis v. Local No. 500, U. B. C. J. 214 Pa. 348, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 642 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 63 Atl. 585; Union L.R.A. 1918C.

P. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102; Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Asso. 59 N. J. Eq. 49, 46 Atl. 208; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Reliable Lodge, 111 Fed. 264.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in equity, commenced October 24, 1907, in the United States circuit (afterwards district) court for the northern district of West Virginia, by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, against certain citizens of the state of Ohio, sued individually and also as officers of the United Mine Workers of America. Other noncitizens of plaintiff's state were named as defendants, but not served with process. Those who were served and who answered the bill were T. L. Lewis, vice president of the U. M. W. A. and of the International Union U. M. W. A.; William Green, D. H. Sullivan, and "George" W. Savage (his correct Christian name is Gwilym), respectively president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer of district No. 6, U. M. W. A.; and A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, and Lee Rankin, respectively president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer of sub-district No. 5 of district No. 6.

Plaintiff owns about 5,000 acres of coal lands situate at or near Benwood, in Marshall county, West Virginia, and within what is known as the "Panhandle district" of that state, and operates a coal mine thereon, employing between 200 and 300 men, and having an annual output, in and before 1907, of about 300,000 tons. At the time of the filing of the bill, and for a considerable time before and ever since, it operated its mine "nonunion," under an agreement with its men to the effect that the mine should be run on a nonunion basis, that the employees should not become connected with the Union while employed by plaintiff, and that, if they joined it, their employment with plaintiff should cease. The bill set forth these facts, inter alia, alleged that they were known to defendants and each of them, and "that the said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined, and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely: to cause your orator's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled, until such time as your orator shall submit to the demand of the Union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand, unionize its plant by employing only Union men who shall become subject to the orders of the Union," etc. The general object of the bill was to obtain an injunction to restrain defendants from interfering with the relations existing between plaintiff and its employees in order to compel plaintiff to "unionize" the mine.

A restraining order having been granted, followed by a temporary injunction, the served defendants filed answers, and thereupon made a motion to modify the injunction, which was refused. 172 Fed. 963. An appeal taken by defendants from this order was dismissed by the circuit court of appeals. 100 C. C. A. 137, 176 Fed. 549. Afterwards they applied for and obtained leave to withdraw their answers and file others; the order, however, prescribed that the withdrawn answers were "not to be removed from the file." The new answers denied all material averments of the bill, some of which had been admitted in the former answers. Plaintiff, having filed replications, obtained an order that the former answers should be treated as evidence on behalf of the plaintiff upon the issue joined. Upon this evidence and other evidence introduced before the court orally, the case was submitted, with the result that a final decree was made January 18, 1913, granting a perpetual injunction. 202 Fed. 512. This was reversed by the circuit court of appeals June 1, 1914 (131 C. C. A. 425, 214 Fed. 685), but the mandate was stayed pending an application to this court for a writ of certiorari. Afterwards an appeal was allowed. This court dismissed the appeal, but granted the writ of certiorari (241 U. S. 644, 60 L. ed. 1218, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 450), the record on appeal to stand as a return.

The final decree of the district court included an award of injunction against John Mitchell, W. B. Wilson, and Thomas Hughes, who, while named as defendants in the bill, were not served with process and entered no appearance except to object to the jurisdiction of the court over them. Under the Federal practice, the appearance to object did not bind these parties to submit to the jurisdiction on the overruling of the objection (Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, 479, 25 L. ed. 237, 238; Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 206, 36 L. ed. 942, 945, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 209, 37 L. ed. 699, 705, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. ed. 517, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Davis v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 217 U. S. 157, 174, 54 L. ed. 708, 718, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 823, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, 18 Ann. Cas. 907), and L.R.A.1918C).

since the injunction operates only in personam, it was erroneous to include them as defendants. It also was erroneous to include personal relief by injunction against certain named parties who, pending suit, were chosen to succeed some of the original defendants as officers of the international, district, and subdistrict unions, but who were not served with process and did not appear, they being included upon the ground that they were "before the court by representation through service having been had upon their said predecessors in office." This is not a representative suit within the meaning of equity rule 38; nor is there such privity between the holder of an office in a voluntary association and his successor as to bind the latter by process issued against the former.

But these procedural difficulties do not affect that part of the decree which awarded an injunction against the answering defendants (Lewis, Green, Sullivan, Savage, Watkins, Zelenka, and Rankin) "individually," and not as officers of the Union or its branches, except as to Savage, against whom the decree goes in both his individual and official capacities, he alone having retained at the time of the final decree the same office he held at the beginning of the suit. If there was error in excluding the "official" responsibility of the others, it was not one of which they could complain, and it was not assigned for error upon their appeal to the circuit court of appeals. If they were subject to injunction at all, they were so in their individual capacities. Whether the injunction will bind their successors in office, or their fellow members of the Union, will depend upon questions of confederacy, agency, notice, and the like, which may be determined hereafter, under due process of law, if and when proceedings are taken to enforce the injunction against parties other than the answering defendants. The clause in the decree enjoining, as confederates, all present and future members of the Union, without naming them, is brutum fulmen in the absence of proof of confederacy submitted hereafter against particular members sought to be held for violating the injunction; its inclusion is not a matter of which the answering defendants may complain, nor was it assigned as error.

We proceed, therefore, to consider the case as it stands against the answering defendants.

The district court based its decision upon two grounds: (1) That the organization known as the United Mine Workers of America, and its branches, as conducted and managed at the time of the suit and for many years before, was a common-law conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade, and also and especially a conspiracy against the rights of nonunion miners in West Virginia; and (2) that the defendants, in an effort to compel the plaintiff to enter into contractual relations with the Union relating to the employment of labor and the production of coal, although having knowledge of express contracts existing between plaintiff and its employees which excluded relations with the Union, endeavored by unlawful means to procure a breach of these contracts by the employees.

A brief recital of previous transactions between the parties becomes material. The Union is a voluntary and unincorporated association which was organized in the year 1890 in the states of Ohio and Indiana, and afterwards was extended to other states. It is made up of national or "international," district, subdistrict, and local unions. District No. 6 comprises the coal districts of Ohio and the Panhandle of West Virginia. Subdistrict No. 5 of that district comprises five counties and parts of counties in Ohio, and the Panhandle.

The answering defendants were and are active and influential members—leaders—of the Union, as well as officers. Savage, Lewis, and Sullivan have been members from its formation in 1890, and have held important offices in it and attended the national conventions. The others are long-time members, and possessed an influence indicated by the offices they held, but not limited to the duties of those offices.

From 1897 to 1906 what were known as joint interstate conferences were held annually or biennially between officials of the Union and representatives of the operators in the "Central Competitive Field" (which includes Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, but not West Virginia), for the purpose of agreeing upon the scale of wages and the conditions of employment in that field. In addition there were occasional conferences of the same character affecting other states and districts.

Plaintiff's mine is within the territorial limits of subdistrict No. 5 of district No. 6. Coal-mining operations were commenced there in the early part of the year 1902, and the mine was operated "non-union" until April, 1903, when, under threats from the Union officials, including defendants Watkins and Sullivan, that a certain unionized mine in Ohio, owned by the same proprietors, would be closed down if the men at the Hitchman were not allowed to organize, plaintiff consented to the unionization of the latter mine. This went into effect on the 1st of April, 1903, and upon the very next day the men were called out on strike because of a disagreement with the company as to the basis upon which mining should be paid for. The strike continued until May 23, requiring plaintiff to cease operations and preventing it from fulfilling its contracts, the most important of which was one for the daily supply of engine coal to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at a coaling station adjoining the mine. The financial loss to plaintiff was serious: The strike was settled and the men resumed work upon the basis of a modification of the official mining scale applicable to the Hitchman mine.

Again, in the spring of 1904, there was difficulty in renewing the scale. A temporary scale, agreed upon between operators and miners for the month of April, 1904, was signed in behalf of the Hitchman company on the 18th of April. Two days later the men at the Hitchman struck, and the mine remained idle for two months, during which time plaintiff sustained serious losses in business and was put to heavy expense in obtaining coal from other sources to fill its contract with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. The strike was settled by the adoption of the official scale for the Panhandle district, with amendatory local rules for the Hitchman mine.

After this there was little further trouble until April 1, 1906, when a disagreement arose between the Union and an association of operators with which plaintiff was not connected—the association being in fact made up of its competitors—about arranging the terms of the scale for the ensuing two years. At the same time a similar disagreement arose between the operators and the Union officials in the Central Competitive Field. The result was a termination of the interstate conferences and a failure to establish any official scale for the ensuing two years, followed by a widespread strike, or a number of concurrent strikes, involving the most of the bituminous coal-producing districts. There was absolutely no grievance or ground of disagreement at the Hitchman mine, beyond the fact that the mining scale expired by its own terms on March 31, and the men had not received authority from the Union officials either to renew it or agree to a new one in its place. Plaintiff came to an understanding with the local union to the effect that if its men would continue at work, the company would pay them from April 1st whatever the new scale might be, except that if the new scale should prove to be lower than that which expired, on March 31, there should be no reduction in wages, while if the scale was raised the company would pay the increased amount, dating it back to April 1st. This was satisfactory to the men; but as the question of a new scale was then under discussion at a conference between the officials of the Union and the representatives of the Operators' Association, and plaintiff's employees wished to get the sanction of their officers, the manager of the Hitchman mine got into communication with those officials, including defendant Green, president of district No. 6, and endeavored to secure their assent to the temporary arrangement, but without success. Then a committee of the local union, including Daugherty, its president, took up the matter with Green and received permission to mine and load engine coal until further notice from him. Under this arrangement the men remained at work for about two weeks. On April 15th, defendant Zelenka, vice president of the subdistrict, visited the mine, called a meeting of the miners, and addressed them in a foreign tongue, as a result of which they went on strike the next day, and the mine was shut down until the 12th of June, when it resumed as a "nonunion" mine, so far as relations with the U. M. W. A. were concerned.

During this strike plaintiff was subjected to heavy losses and extraordinary expenses with respect to its business, of the same kind that had befallen it during the previous strikes.

About the 1st of June a self-appointed committee of employees called upon plaintiff's president, stated in substance that they could not remain longer on strike because they were not receiving benefits from the Union, and asked upon what terms they could return to work. They were told that they could come back, but not as members of the United Mine Workers of America; that thenceforward the mine would be run nonunion, and the company would deal with each man individually. They assented to this, and returned to work on a nonunion basis. Mr. Pickett, the mine superintendent, had charge of employing the men, then and afterwards, and to each one who applied for employment he explained the conditions, which were that while the company paid the wages demanded by the Union and as much as anybody else, the mine was run nonunion and would continue so to run; that the company would not recognize the United Mine Workers of America; that if any man wanted to become a member of that Union he was at liberty to do so; but he could not be a member of it and remain in the employ of the Hitchman Company; that if he worked for the company he would have to work as a nonunion man. To this each man employed gave his assent, understanding that while he worked for the company he must keep out of the Union.

Since January, 1908 (after the commencement of the suit), in addition to having this verbal understanding, each man has been required to sign an employment card expressing in substance the same terms. This has neither enlarged nor diminished plaintiff's rights, the agreement not being such as is required by law to be in writing.
L.R.A.1918C.

Under this arrangement as to the terms of employment, plaintiff operated its mine from June 12, 1906, until the commencement of the suit in the fall of the following year.

During the same period a precisely similar method of employment obtained at the Glendale mine, a property consisting of about 1,200 acres of coal land adjoining the Hitchman property on the south, and operated by a company having the same stockholders and the same management as the Hitchman; the office of the Glendale mine being at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's office. Another mine in the Panhandle, known as the Richland, a few miles north of the Hitchman, likewise was run "nonunion."

In fact, all coal mines in the Panhandle and elsewhere in West Virginia, except in a small district known as the Kanawha field, were run "nonunion," while the entire industry in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois was operated on the "closed-shop" basis, so that no man could hold a job about the mines unless he was a member of the United Mine Workers of America. Pennsylvania occupied a middle ground, only a part of it being under the jurisdiction of the Union. Other states need not be particularly mentioned.

The unorganized condition of the mines in the Panhandle and some other districts was recognized as a serious interference with the purposes of the Union in the Central Competitive Field, particularly as it tended to keep the cost of production low, and through competition with coal produced in the organized field, rendered it more difficult for the operators there to maintain prices high enough to induce them to grant certain concessions demanded by the Union. This was the subject of earnest and protracted discussion in the annual international convention of the U. M. W. A. held at Indianapolis, Indiana, in the month of January, 1907, at which all of the answering defendants were present as delegates and participated in the proceedings. The discussion was based upon statements contained in the annual reports of John Mitchell, as president of the Union (joined as a defendant in the bill, but not served with process), and of defendant Lewis as vice president, respecting the causes and consequences of the strike of 1906, and the policy to be adopted by the Union for the future. In these reports it was made to appear that the strike had been caused immediately by the failure of the joint convention of operators and miners representing the Central and Southwestern Competitive Fields, held in the early part of the year 1906, to come to an agreement for a renewal of the mining scale; that the strike was widespread, involving not less than 400,000 mine workers, was terminated by "district settlements" with variant results in different parts of the territory involved, and had not been followed by a renewal of the former relations between the operators and miners in the Central Competitive Field. Another result of the strike was a large decrease in the membership of the Union. Two measures of relief were proposed: first, that steps be taken to re-establish the joint interstate conferences; and second, the organization of the hitherto unorganized fields, including the Panhandle district of West Virginia, under closed-shop agreements, with all men about the mines included in the membership of the United Mine Workers of America. In the course of the discussion the purpose of organizing West Virginia in the interest of the unionized mine workers in the Central Competitive Field, and the probability that it could be organized only by means of strikes, were repeatedly declared and were disputed by nobody. All who spoke advocated strikes, differing only as to whether these should be nation-wide or sectional. Defendant Lewis, in his report, recommended an abandonment of the policy of sectional settlements which had been pursued in the previous year. This recommendation, interpreted as a criticism of the policy pursued under the leadership of President Mitchell in the settlement of the 1906 strike, was the subject of long and earnest debate, in the course of which Lewis said: "When we organize West Virginia, when we organize the unorganized sections of Pennsylvania, we will organize them by a strike movement." And again, towards the close of the debate: "No one has made the statement that we can organize West Virginia without a strike." Defendant Green took part, favoring the view of Mr. Lewis that strikes should be treated nationally instead of sectionally. In the course of his remarks he said: "I say to you, gentlemen, one reason why I opposed the policy that was pursued last year was because, over in Ohio, we were peculiarly situated. We had West Virginia on the south and Pennsylvania on the east, and after four months of a strike in eastern Ohio we had reached the danger line. We felt keenly the competition from West Virginia, and during the suspension our miners in Ohio chafed under the object lesson they had. They saw West Virginia coal go by, trainload after trainload passing their doors, when they were on strike. This coal supplied the markets that they should have had. There is no disguising the fact, something must be done to remedy this condition. Year after year Ohio has had to go home and strike in some portion of the district to enforce the interstate agreement that was signed up here. . . . I confess here and now that the overwhelming sentiment in Ohio was that a settlement by sections would not correct the conditions we complained of. Now, something must be done; it is absolutely necessary to protect us against the competition that comes from the unorganized fields east of us." Mr. Mitchell opposed the view of defendant Lewis, reiterating an opinion, repeatedly expressed before, that West Virginia and the other unorganized fields "would not be thoroughly organized except as the result of a successful strike;" but declaring that "they will not be organized at all, strike or no strike, unless we are able to support the men in those fields from the first day they lay down their tools. . . . Now, I believe it is possible, indeed, I believe it is probable, that in the not distant future we will be able to inaugurate a movement in West Virginia and the other unorganized fields that will involve them in a strike, and then we will expect you to furnish the sinews of war, as you have done in the past, to keep these men in idleness."

The discussion continued during three days, and at the end of it the report of a committee which expressed disagreement with vice president Lewis's opposition to sectional settlements and recommended "a continuation in the future of the same wise, conservative, business-like policies" that had been pursued by President Mitchell, was adopted by a viva voce vote.

The plain effect of this action was to approve a policy which, as applied to the concrete case, meant that, in order to relieve the union miners of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois from the competition of the cheaper product of the nonunion mines of West Virginia, the West Virginia mines should be "organized" by means of strikes local to West Virginia, the strike benefits to be paid by assessments upon the Union miners in the other states mentioned, while they remained at work.

This convention was followed by an annual convention of subdistrict 5 of district 6, held in the month of March, 1907, at which defendants Watkins and Rankin were present as president and secretary of the subdistrict. Defendant Lewis, as national vice president, occupied the chair during several of the sessions. Defendant Zelenka was present as a delegate, and also Thomas Hughes, who, while named as a defendant in the present suit, was not served with process. Watkins and Rankin in their reports recommended the complete unionization of the mines in the Panhandle counties, with particular reference to the Hitchman, the Glendale, the Richland, and two others; and as a result it was resolved "that the sub-district officers, together with the district officers, be authorized to take up the work of organizing every mine in the subdistrict as quickly as it can be done."

Evidently in pursuance of this resolution, defendants Green, Zelenka, and Watkins, about July 1, 1907, called at plaintiff's office and laid before its general manager, Mr. Koch, a proposition for the unionization of the mine. He declined to consider it, but at their request laid it before plaintiff's board of directors, who rejected the proposition, and the manager informed Green of this. In one of the interviews Koch informed these defendants of the terms of plaintiff's working agreement with its employees to the effect that the mine was to be run nonunion and they were not to become members of the Union.

About the same time, a Mr. McKinley, who was operating the Richland mine nonunion, was interviewed by the Union leaders, notified of the resolution adopted by the subdistrict convention, and, having asked that his mine be let alone, was met with the threat that they would secure the support of his men, and that if he did not recognize the Union, they would shut down his mine. In one of the interviews that ensued he was told that it was their purpose to organize the Glendale, the Hitchman, the Richland, and some other mines; that at the Glendale they had twenty-four men who had joined the organization, "and that they had sixty men who had signed up or had agreed to join the organization at Hitchman, and that they were going to shut the mine down as soon as they got a few more men." With respect to their progress at his own mine he was kept in the dark until about the middle of October, 1907, when, through the activities of the organizer Hughes, they succeeded in shutting it down, and it remained closed until a restraining order was allowed by the court, immediately after which it resumed nonunion.

The evidence renders it clear that Hughes was sent into the Panhandle to organize all the mines there, in accordance with the resolution of the subdistrict convention. The bill made a statement of his activities, and alleged that he was acting as an organizer, for the Union. Defendants' final answers made a complete denial, but in this are contradicted by admissions made in the earlier answers and by other and undisputed evidence. The only defendant who testified upon the subject declared that Hughes was employed by district No. 6 as an organizer, but denied that he had power or authority to shut down the Hitchman mine.

He arrived at that mine sometime in September, 1907, and remained there or in that vicinity until the latter part of October, conducting a campaign of organization at the Hitchman and at the neighboring Glendale and Richland mines.

The evidence shows that he had distinct and timely notice that membership in the Union was inconsistent with the terms of employment at all three mines, and a violation of the express provisions of the agreement at the Hitchman and Glendale.

Having unsuccessfully applied to Koch and McKinley for their co-operation, Hughes proceeded to interview as many of the men as he could reach and to hold public meetings in the interest of the Union. There is clear and uncontradicted evidence that he did not confine himself to mere persuasion, but resorted to deception and abuse. In his public speeches he employed abusive language respecting Mr. Pickett, William Daugherty, and Jim Jarrett.<sup>1</sup> He prophesied, in such a way that ignorant, foreign-born miners, such as he was addressing, naturally might believe him to be speaking with knowledge, that the wages paid by the Hitchman would be reduced unless the mine was unionized. The evidence as to the methods he employed in personally interviewing the miners, while meager, is significant. Myers, a Hitchman miner, testified: "He told me that he was a good friend of Mr. Koch, and that Mr Koch had nothing against having the place organized again. He said he was a friend of his, and I made the remark that I would ask Mr. Koch and see if it was so; and he said no, that was of no use, because he was telling me the truth." He did not confine his attentions to men who already were in plaintiff's employ, but in addition dissuaded men who had accepted employment from going to work.

A highly significant thing, giving character to Hughes's entire course of conduct, is that while his solicitation of the men was more or less public, as necessarily it had to be, he was careful to keep secret the number and the names of those who agreed to join the Union. Myers, being asked to allow his name to be entered on a book that Hughes carried, tried to see the names already entered, "but he would not show anything; he told me he had it, and I asked him how many names was on it, and he said he had about enough to 'crack off.' " To Stewart, another Hitchman miner, he said "he was forming a kind of secret order among the men; he said he had a few men—he did not state the number of them—and he said each man was supposed to give him so much dues to keep it going, and then he said after he got the majority he would organize the place." Pickett, the mine superintendent, had learned of only five men at the Glendale who were inclined to join Hughes's movement; but when these were asked to remain outside of the mine for a talk, fifteen other men waited with them, and upon being reminded that while the company would not try to prevent them from becoming members of the Union, they could not be members and at the same time work for the Glendale Company, they all accepted this as equivalent to a notice of discharge. And, as has been stated, the owner of the Richland, while repeatedly threatened with unionization, was kept in the dark as to the progress made by the organizer amongst his employees until the mine was actually shut down.

A highly significant thing, giving character to Hughes's entire course of conduct, is that while his solicitation of the men was more or less public, as necessarily it had to be, he was careful to keep secret the num-

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Pickett was superintendent of the Hitchman and Glendale mines, and it was with him that the miners made their agreements to refrain from membership in the Union; Daugherty and Jarrett were miners at the Hitchman, and had been, respectively, president and financial secretary of the local union at the time of the 1906 strike, when the local deserted the U. M. W. A.

The question whether Hughes had "power or authority" to shut down the Hitchman mine is beside the mark. We are not here concerned with any question of ultra vires, but with an actual threat of closing down plaintiff's mine, made by Hughes while acting as agent of an organized body of men who indubitably were united in a purpose to close it unless plaintiff would conform to their wishes with respect to its management, and who lacked the power to carry out that purpose only because they had not as yet persuaded a sufficient number of the Hitchman miners to join with them, and hence employed Hughes as an "organizer" and sent him to the mine with the very object of securing the support of the necessary number of miners. They succeeded with respect to one of the mines threatened (the Richland), and preparations of like character were in progress at the Hitchman and the Glendale at the time the restraining order was made in this cause.

If there be any practical distinction between organizing the miners and organizing the mine, it has no application to this case. Unionizing the miners is but a step in the process of unionizing the mine followed by the latter almost as a matter of course. Plaintiff is as much entitled to prevent the first step as the second, so far as its own employees are concerned, and to be L.R.A.1918C.

protected against irreparable injury resulting from either. Besides, the evidence shows, without any dispute, that defendants contemplated no half-way measures, but were bent on organizing the mine, the 'consent of plaintiff to be procured through such a control of its employees as would render any further independent operation of the mine out of the question. This is evident from the discussions and resolutions of the international and subdistrict conventions, from what was said by defendants Green, Zelenka, and Watkins to plaintiff's manager, and to the operator of the Richland, and from all that was said and done by Hughes in his effort to organize the Hitchman, Glendale, and Richland mines.

In short, at the time the bill was filed, defendants, although having full notice of the terms of employment existing between plaintiff and its miners, were engaged in an earnest effort to subvert those relations without plaintiff's consent, and to alienate a sufficient number of the men to shut down the mine, to the end that the fear of losses through stoppage of operations might coerce plaintiff into "recognizing the union" at the cost of its own independence. The methods resorted to by their "organizer" were such as have been described. The legal consequences remain for discussion.

The facts we have recited are either admitted or else proved by clear and undisputed evidence and indubitable inferences therefrom. The proceedings of the international and subdistrict conventions were shown by the introduction of official verbatim reports, properly authenticated. It is objected that these proceedings, especially in so far as they include the declarations and conduct of others than the answering defendants, are not admissible because the existence of a criminal or unlawful conspiracy is not made to appear by evidence aliunde. The objection is untenable. In order that the declarations and conduct of third parties may be admissible in such a case, it is necessary to show by independent evidence that there was a combination between them and defendants, but it is not necessary to show by independent evidence that the combination was criminal or otherwise unlawful. The element of illegality may be shown by the declarations themselves. The rule of evidence is commonly applied in criminal cases, but is of general operation; indeed, it originated in the law of partnership. It depends upon the principle that when any number of persons associate themselves together in the prosecution of a common plan or enterprise, lawful or unlawful, from the very act of association there arises a kind of partnership, each member being constituted the agent of all, so that the act or declaration of one, in furtherance of the common object, is the act of all, and is admissible as primary and original evidence against them. Pleasant v. Fant, 22 Wall. 116, 119, 22 L. ed. 780, 782; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 218, 47 L. ed. 446, 451, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294; Story, Part. §§ 107, 108; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 112, 113 (184 b, c); 2 Starkie, Ev. 2d ed. 25, 26; Rex v. Hardwick, 11 East, 578, 585, 589, 103 Eng. Reprint, 1129; Sandilands v. Marsh, 2 Barn. & Ald. 673, 679, 106 Eng. Reprint, 511; Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 104, 105, 127 Eng. Reprint, 771, 9 Revised Rep. 711; Van Reimsdyk v. Kane (Story, J.) 1 Gall. 630, 635, Fed. Cas. No. 16,872; Aldrich v. Warren, 16 Me. 465, 468; Pierce v. Wood, 23 N. H. 519, 531; Page v. Parker, 40 N. H. 47, 62; State v. Thibeau, 30 Vt. 100, 105; Jenne v. Joslyn, 41 Vt. 478, 484; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Met. 560, 563, 35 Am. Dec. 382; Lowe v. Dalrymple, 117 Pa. 564, 568, 12 Atl. 567; Main v. Aukam, 4 App. D. C. 51, 56.

Upon a kindred principle, the declarations and conduct of an agent, within the scope and in the course of his agency, are admissible as original evidence against the principal, just as his own declarations or conduct would be admissible. Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How. 146, 164, 165, 16 L. ed. 86, 92; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 104, 30 L. ed. 299, 300; La Abra Silver Min. Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 423, 498, 44 L. ed. 223, 250, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168. And since the evidence of Hughes's agency is clear and undisputed,—that as the representative of a voluntary association of which the answering defendants were active members, and in the execution of a purpose to which they all had given consent, and in which some of them were actively co-operating, he was engaged in an effort to organize the coal mines of the Panhandle district,—it is equally clear that his declarations and conduct while so doing are evidential against the defendants.

What are the legal consequences of the facts that have been detailed?

That the plaintiff was acting within its lawful rights in employing its men only upon terms of continuing nonmembership in the United Mine Workers of America is not open to question. Plaintiff's repeated costly experiences of strikes and other interferences while attempting to "run union" were a sufficient explanation of its resolve to run "nonunion," if any were needed. But neither explanation nor justification is needed. Whatever may be the advantages of "collective bargaining," it is not bargaining at all, in any just sense, unless it is voluntary on both sides. The same L.R.A.1918C.

liberty which enables men to form unions, and through the union to enter into agreements with employers willing to agree, entitles other men to remain independent of the union and other employers to agree with them to employ no man who owes any allegiance or obligation to the union. In the latter case, as in the former, the parties are entitled to be protected by the law in the enjoyment of the benefits of any lawful agreement they may make. This court repeatedly has held that the employer is as free to make nonmembership in a union a condition of employment, as the working man is free to join the union, and that this is a part of the constitutional rights of personal liberty and private property, not to be taken away even by legislation, unless through some proper exercise of the paramount police power. Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 174, 52 L. ed. 436, 442, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 14, 59 L. ed. 441, 446, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. In the present case, needless to say, there is no act of legislation to which defendants may resort for justification.

Plaintiff, having in the exercise of its undoubted rights established a working agreement between it and its employees, with the free assent of the latter, is entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of the resulting status, as in any other legal right. That the employment was "at will," and terminable by either party at any time, is of no consequence. In Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 38, 60 L. ed. 131, 134, L.R.A. 1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283, this court ruled upon the precise question as follows: "It is said that the bill does not show an employment for a term, and that under an employment at will the complainant could be discharged at any time for any reason or for no reason, the motive of the employer being immaterial. The conclusion, however, that is sought to be drawn, is too broad. The fact that the employment is at the will of the parties, respectively, does not make it one at the will of others. The employee has manifest interest in the freedom of the employer to exercise his judgment without illegal interference or compulsion, and, by the weight of authority, the unjustified interference of third persons is actionable although the employment is at will." (Citing many cases.)

In short, plaintiff was and is entitled to the good will of its employees, precisely as a merchant is entitled to the good will of his customers although they are under no obligation to continue to deal with him. The value of the relation lies in the reasonable probability that, by properly treating its employees, and paying them fair wages, and avoiding reasonable grounds of complaint, it will be able to retain them in its employ, and to fill vacancies occurring from time to time by the employment of other men on the same terms. The pecuniary value of such reasonable probabilities is incalculably great, and is recognized by the law in a variety of relations. See Brennan v. United Hatters (cited with approval in Truax v. Raich, supra), 73 N. J. L. 729, 749, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Brown v. Honiss, 74 N. J. L. 501, 514, et seq., 68 Atl. 150; Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 767, 53 Atl. 230; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, 565, 566; Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L.R.A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125, and cases there cited; L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 200 Mass. 110, 117 et seq., 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1236, 85 N. E. 897.

The right of action for persuading an employee to leave his employer is universally recognized,—nowhere more clearly than in West Virginia,—and it rests upon fundamental principles of general application, not upon the English statute of laborers. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 255, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 886; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, 567; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 13, 38 L. ed. 55, 62, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 569, 572.

We turn to the matters set up by way of justification or excuse for defendants' interference with the situation existing at plaintiff's mine.

The case involves no question of the rights of employees. Defendants have no agency for plaintiff's employees, nor do they assert any disagreement or grievance in their behalf. In fact, there is none; but, if there were, defendants could not, without agency, set up any rights that employees might have. The right of the latter to strike would not give to defendants the right to instigate a strike. The difference is fundamental.

It is suggested as a ground of criticism that plaintiff endeavored to secure a closed nonunion mine through individual agreements with its employees, as if this furnished some sort of excuse for the employment of coercive measures to secure a closed union shop through a collective agreement with the Union. It is a sufficient answer, in law, to repeat that plaintiff had a legal and constitutional right to exclude union men from its employ. But it may be worth while to say, in addition: "First, that there was no middle ground open to plaintiff; no option to have an 'open shop' employing union men and nonunion men indifferently; it was the Union that insisted upon closed-shop agreements, requiring even carpenters employed about a mine to be members of the Union, and making the employment of any nonunion man a ground for a strike; and, secondly, plaintiff was in the reasonable exercise of its rights in excluding all union men from its employ, having learned, from a previous experience, that, unless this were done, union organizers might gain access to its mine in the guise of laborers.

Defendants set up, by way of justification or excuse, the right of workingmen to form unions, and to enlarge their membership by inviting other workingmen to join. The right is freely conceded, provided the objects of the union be proper and legitimate, which we assume to be true, in a general sense, with respect to the Union here in question. Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 439, 55 L. ed. 797, 805, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492. The cardinal error of defendants' position lies in the assumption that the right is so absolute that it may be exercised under any circumstances and without any qualification; whereas in truth, like other rights that exist in civilized society, it must always be exercised with reasonable regard for the conflicting rights of others. Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 749, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698. The familiar maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas"—literally translated, "So use your own property as not to injure that of another person," but by more proper interpretation, "so as not to injure the rights of another" (Broom, Legal Maxims, 8th ed. 289)—applies to conflicting rights of every description. For example, where two or more persons are entitled to use the same road or passage, each one, in using it, is under a duty to exercise care not to interfere with its use by the others, or to damage them while they are using it. And a most familiar application is the action for enticing an employee, in which it never was a justification that defendant wished to retain for himself the services of the employee. 1 Bl. Com. 429; 3 Bl. Com. 142.

Now, assuming defendants were exercising, through Hughes, the right to invite men to join their Union, still they had plain notice that plaintiff's mine was run "non-union," that none of the men had a right to remain at work there after joining the Union, and that the observance of this agreement was of great importance and value both to plaintiff and to its men, who had voluntarily made the agreement and desired to continue working under it. Yet defendants, far from exercising any care to refrain from unnecessarily injuring plaintiff, deliberately and ad-visedly selected that method of enlarging their membership which would inflict the greatest injury upon plaintiff and its loyal employees. Every Hitchman miner who joined Hughes's "secret order" and permitted his name to be entered upon Hughes's list was guilty of a breach of his contract of employment and acted a lie whenever thereafter he entered plaintiff's mine to work. Hughes not only connived at this, but must be deemed to have caused and procured it, for it was the main feature of defendants' plan, the sine qua non of their program. Evidently it was deemed to be necessary, in order to "organize the Panhandle by a strike movement," that at the Hitchman, for example, man after man should be persuaded to join the Union, and, having done so, to remain at work, keeping the employer in ignorance of their number and identity, until so many had joined that, by stopping work in a body, they could coerce the employer and the remaining miners to "organize the mine;" that is, to make an agreement that none but members of the Union should be employed; that terms of employment should be determined by negotiation not with the employees, but with union officers,—perhaps residents of other states and employees of competing mines,—and that all questions in controversy between the mine operator and the miners should likewise be settled with outsiders.

True, it is suggested that, under the existing contract, an employee was not called upon to leave plaintiff's employ until he actually joined the Union, and that the evidence shows only an attempt by Hughes to induce the men to agree to join, but no attempt to induce them to violate their contract by failing to withdraw from plaintiff's employment after actually joining. But, in a court of equity, which looks to the substance and essence of things and disregards matters of form and technical nicety, it is sufficient to say that to induce men to agree to join is but a mode of inducing them to join, and that when defendants "had sixty men who had signed up or agreed to join the organization at Hitchman," and were "going to shut the mine down as soon as they got a few more men," the sixty were for practical purposes, and therefore, in the sight of equity, already members of the Union, and it needed no formal ritual or taking of an oath to constitute them such; their uniting with the Union in the plan to subvert the system of employment at the Hitchman mine, to which they had voluntarily agreed and upon which their employer and their fellow employees were relying, was sufficient.

But the facts render it plain that what the defendants were endeavoring to do at L.R.A.19180.

the Hitchman mine and neighboring mines cannot be treated as a bona fide effort to enlarge the membership of the Union. There is no evidence to show, nor can it be inferred, that defendants intended or desired to have the men at these mines join the Union, unless they could organize the mines. Without this, the new members would be added to the number of men competing for jobs in the organized districts, while nonunion men would take their places in the Panhandle mines. Except as a means to the end of compelling the owners of these mines to change their method of operation, the defendants were not seeking to enlarge the Union membership.

In any aspect of the matter, it cannot be said that defendants were pursuing their object by lawful means. The question of their intentions—of their bona fides—cannot be ignored. It enters into the question of malice. As Bowen, L. J., justly said, in the Mogul S. S. Case, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 613: "Intentionally to do that which is calculated in the ordinary course of events to damage, and which does, in fact, damage another in that other person's property or trade, is actionable if done without just cause or excuse." And the intentional infliction of such damage upon another, without justification or excuse, is malicious in law. Bitterman v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 207 U. S. 205, 223, 52 L. ed. 171, 182, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 693; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 744 et seq., 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698, and cases cited. Of course, in a court of equity, when passing upon the right of injunction, damage threatened, irremediable by action at law, is equivalent to damage done. And we cannot deem the proffered excuse to be a "just cause or excuse," where it is based, as in this case, upon an assertion of conflicting rights that are sought to be attained by unfair methods, and for the very purpose of interfering with plaintiff's rights, of which defendants have full notice.

Another fundamental error in defendants' position consists in the assumption that all measures that may be resorted to are lawful if they are "peaceable,"—that is, if they stop short of physical violence, or coercion through fear of it. In our opinion, any violation of plaintiff's legal rights contrived by defendants for the purpose of inflicting damage, or having that as its necessary effect, is as plainly inhibited by the law as if it involved a breach of the peace. A combination to procure concerted breaches of contract by plaintiff's employees constitutes such a violation. Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640,

85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. [1905] A. C. 239, 244, 250, 253, 1 B. R. C. 1, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 525, 53 Week. Rep. 593, 92 L. T. N. S. 710, 21 Times L. R. 441, 2 Ann. Cas. 436; George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Asso. 77 N. J. Eq. 219, 223, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 445, 79 Atl. 262.

The present is not a case of merely withholding from an employer an economic need—as a supply of labor—until he assents to be governed by union regulations. Defendants have no supply of labor of which plaintiff stands in need. By the statement of defendant Lewis himself, made in his formal report to the Indianapolis convention of 1907, out of more than 370,000 coal miners in the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, less than 80,000 (about 22 per cent) were members of the Union. Considering the Panhandle separately, doubtless the proportion was even smaller, and the supply of nonunion labor ample. There is no reason to doubt that if defendants had been actuated by a genuine desire to increase the membership of the Union without unnecessary injury to the known rights of plaintiff, they would have permitted their proselytes to withdraw from plaintiff's employ when and as they became affiliated with the Union,—as their contract of employment required them to do,—and that in this event plaintiff would have been able to secure an adequate supply of nonunion men to take their places. It was with knowledge of this, and because of it, that defendants, through Hughes as their agent, caused the new members to remain at work in plaintiff's mine until a sufficient number of men should be persuaded to join so as to bring about a strike and render it difficult if not practically impossible for plaintiff to continue to exercise its undoubted legal and constitutional right to run its mine "nonunion."

It was one thing for plaintiff to find, from time to time, comparatively small numbers of men to take vacant places in a going mine, another and a much more difficult thing to find a complete gang of new men to start up a mine shut down by a strike, when there might be a reasonable apprehension of violence at the hands of the strikers and their sympathizers. The disordered condition of a mining town in time of strike is matter of common knowledge. It was this kind of intimidation, as well as that resulting from the large organized membership of the Union, that defendants sought to exert upon plaintiff, and it renders pertinent what was said by this court in the Gompers Case, 221 U. S. 418, 439, L.R.A.1918C.

55 L. ed. 797, 805, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492, immediately following the recognition of the right to form labor unions: "But the very fact that it is lawful to form these bodies, with multitudes of members, means that they have thereby acquired a vast power, in the presence of which the individual may be helpless. This power, when unlawfully used against one, cannot be met, except by his purchasing peace at the cost of submitting to terms which involve the sacrifice of rights protected by the Constitution; or by standing on such rights and appealing to the preventive powers of a court of equity. When such appeal is made, it is the duty of government to protect the one against the many as well as the many against the one."

Defendants' acts cannot be justified by any analogy to competition in trade. They are not competitors of plaintiff; and if they were, their conduct exceeds the bounds of fair trade. Certainly, if a competing trader should endeavor to draw custom from his rival, not by offering better or cheaper goods, employing more competent salesmen, or displaying more attractive advertisements, but by persuading the rival's clerks to desert him under circumstances rendering it difficult or embarrassing for him to fill their places, any court of equity would grant an injunction to restrain this as unfair competition.

Upon all the facts, we are constrained to hold that the purpose entertained by defendants to bring about a strike at plaintiff's mine in order to compel plaintiff, through fear of financial loss, to consent to the unionization of the mine as the lesser evil, was an unlawful purpose, and that the methods resorted to by Hughes—the inducing of employees to unite with the Union in an effort to subvert the system of employment at the mine by concerted breaches of the contracts of employment known to be in force there, not to mention misrepresentation, deceptive statements, and threats of pecuniary loss communicated by Hughes to the men—were unlawful and malicious methods, and not to be justified as a fair exercise of the right to increase the membership of the Union.

There can be no question that plaintiff was threatened with danger of an immediate strike as a result of the activities of Hughes. The effect of his arguments and representations is not to be judged from the testimony of those witnesses who rejected his overtures. Naturally, it was not easy for plaintiff to find men who would testify that they had agreed with Hughes to break their contract with plaintiff. One such did testify. But the true measure of the extent of his operations and the probability of his carrying them to success are indicated by his declaration to Myers that he had about enough names at the Hitchman to "crack off," by the statement to McKinley that twenty-four men at the Glendale mine had joined the organization, and sixty at the Hitchman, and by the fact that they actually succeeded in shutting down the Richland about the middle of October. The declaration made concerning the Glendale is corroborated by the evidence of what happened at that mine.

That the damage resulting from a strike would be irremediable at law is too plain for discussion.

Therefore, upon the undisputed facts of the case, and the indubitable inferences from them, plaintiff is entitled to relief by injunction. Having become convinced by three costly strikes, occurring within a period of as many years, of the futility of attempting to operate under a closed-shop agreement with the Union, it established the mine on a nonunion basis, with the unanimous approval of its employees,—in fact, upon their suggestion,—and under a mutual agreement, assented to by every employee, that plaintiff would continue to run its mine nonunion and would not recognize the United Mine Workers of America; that if any man wanted to become a member of that Union, he was at liberty to do so, but he could not be a member and remain in plaintiff's employ. Under that agreement plaintiff ran its mine for a year and more, and, so far as appears, without the slightest disagreement between it and its men, and without any grievance on their part. Thereupon defendants, having full notice of the working agreement between plaintiff and its men, and acting without any agency for those men, but as representatives of an organization of mine workers in other states, and in order to subject plaintiff to such participation by the Union in the management of the mine as necessarily results from the making of a closed-shop agreement, sent their agent to the mine, who, with full notice of, and for the very purpose of subverting, the status arising from plaintiff's working agreement, and subjecting the mine to the Union control, proceeded, without physical violence, indeed, but by persuasion accompanied with threats of a reduction of wages and deceptive statements as to the attitude of the mine management, to induce plaintiff's employees to join the Union and at the same time to break their agreement with plaintiff by remaining in its employ after joining; and this for the purpose not of enlarging the membership of the Union, but of coercing plaintiff, through a strike or the threat of one, into recognition of the Union.

L.R.A.1918C.

As against the answering defendants, plaintiff's right to an injunction is clear: as to the others named as defendants, but not served with process, the decree is erroneous, as already stated.

Respecting the sweep of the injunction, we differ somewhat from the result reached by the district court.

So far as it restrains—(1) Interfering or attempting to interfere with plaintiff's employees for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine without its consent, by representing or causing to be represented to any of plaintiff's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or in entering the employment of plaintiff, by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the Union, or because plaintiff runs a nonunion mine; (2) interfering or attempting to interfere with plaintiff's employees for the purpose of unionizing the mine without plaintiff's consent, and in aid of such purpose knowingly and wilfully bringing about the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service known at the time to exist with plaintiff's present and future employees; (3) knowingly and wilfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future, to leave plaintiff's service on the ground that plaintiff does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or runs a nonunion mine, etc.; (4) interfering or attempting to interfere with plaintiff's employees, so as knowingly and wilfully to bring about the breaking by plaintiff's employees, present and future, of their contracts of service, known to the defendants to exist, and especially from knowingly and wilfully enticing such employees, present or future, to leave plaintiff's service without plaintiff's consent; (5) trespassing on or entering upon the grounds and premises of plaintiff or its mine for the purpose of interfering therewith or hindering or obstructing its business, or with the purpose of compelling or inducing, by threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any of plaintiff's employees to refuse or fail to perform their duties as such; and (6) compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, or abusive or violent language, any of plaintiff's employees to leave its service or fail or refuse to perform their duties as such employees, or compelling or attempting to compel by like means any person desiring to seek employment in plaintiff's mine and works from so accepting employment therein;—the decree is fully supported by the proofs. But it goes further, and awards an injunction against picketing and against acts of physical violence, and we find no evidence that either of these forms of interference was threatened. The decree should be modified by eliminating picketing and physical violence from the sweep of the injunction, but without prejudice to plaintiff's right to obtain an injunction hereafter against these forms of interference if proof shall be produced, either in proceedings supplemental to this action or in an independent action, that such an injunction is needed.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed, and the decree of the District Court is modified as above stated, and as so modified it is affirmed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Brandels, dissenting:

This suit was begun October 24, 1907. The Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, plaintiff below, is the owner of a coal mine in West Virginia. John Mitchell and nine others, defendants below, were then the chief executive officers of the United Mine Workers of America and of its district and subdistrict organizations having "jurisdiction" over the territory in which plaintiff's mine is situated, and were sued both individually and as such officers. The mine had been "unionized" about three years prior to April 16th, 1906; and until about that date was operated as a "union" mine, under a collective agreement with a local union of the United Mine Workers of America. Then a strike was declared by the union, and a short shutdown followed. While the strike so declared was still in force, as the bill alleges, the company reopened the mine as a closed nonunion mine. Thereafter persons applying for work were required, as a condition of obtaining employment, to agree that they would not, while in the service of the company, be a member of the union, and if they joined the Union would withdraw from the company's employ.<sup>2</sup>

Alleging that efforts were being made illegally to unionize its mine "without its consent," the company brought in the United States circuit (now district) court for the northern district of West Virginia this suit to enjoin such efforts. District Judge Dayton granted a restraining order upon the filing of the bill. An order was entered May 26, 1908, continuing it as a temporary injunction. A motion to modify the same was denied, September 21, 1909 (172 Fed. 963). An appeal from this order was dismissed by the circuit court of appeals, March 11, 1910 (100 C. C. A. 137, 176 Fed. 549). The case was then heard on the merits; defendants having denied in their answer all the charges of unlawful conduct set forth in the bill; and on January 18, 1913, a decree was entered for a perpetual injunction substantially in the form of the restraining order (202 Fed. 512). This decree was reversed by the circuit court of appeals on June 1, 1914 (131 C. C. A. 425, 214 Fed. 685); but a stay was granted pending an application to this court for a writ of certiorari. The company appealed to this court and also applied for a writ of certiorari. The appeal was dismissed, as the jurisdiction of the circuit (district) court was rested wholly upon diversity of citizenship, plaintiff being a corporation organized under the laws of West Virginia and all the defendants citizens and residents of other states (241 U. S. 644, 60 L. ed. 1218, 36 Sup.

<sup>2</sup> About two months after the restraining order was issued in this case the plaintiff company began the practice of requiring applicants for work to sign employment cards, in the following terms:

"I am employed by and work for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company with the express understanding that I am not a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and will not become so while an employee of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is run nonunion and agrees with me that it will run nonunion while I am in its employ. If at any time I am employed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company I want to become connected with the United Mine Workers of America or any affiliated organization, I agree to withdraw from the employment of said company, and agree that while I am in the employ of that company I will not make any efforts amongst its employees to bring about the unionizing of that mine against the company's wish. I have either read the above or heard the same read."

L.R.A.1918C.

Prior to that time, the agreement rested in oral understanding merely, and is sufficiently indicated in the following excerpts from the testimony of the mine superintendent as to what he told the men applying for employment:

I also told them that any man who wanted to become a member of the United Mine Workers—that that was his business—but he could not be a member of the United Mine Workers and be affiliated with the United Mine Workers and be under the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, or be under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers: that the mine was run nonunion so far as the United Mine Workers of America were concerned.

Q. You mean you made every man understand that while he worked for the Hitchman Company he must keep out of the Union?

A. Yes, sir; or at least they said they understood it.

Ct. Rep. 450). A writ of certiorari was granted, however, March 13, 1916. The case was argued at that term and a reargument was ordered.

The district court held that the United Mine Workers of America, with its subordinate branches, constitutes an unlawful organization—illegal both under the law of West Virginia and under the Federal Anti-trust Act; that its long-continued effort to unionize the mines of West Virginia had not been “in the interest either of the betterment of mine labor in the state or of upholding that free commerce in coal between the states guaranteed by Federal law, but to restrain and even destroy it” for the benefit of “rival operators and producers in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Indiana, competitive fields” in which the mines have been unionized; and that “in pursuit of its unlawful purposes” the Union “have sought and still seek to compel the plaintiff . . . to submit to contractual relations with it as an organization relating to the employment of labor and production contrary to the will and wish of said company; that its officers, in pursuance of such unlawful effort to monopolize labor and restrain trade, and with knowledge of the express contracts existing between this plaintiff and its employees, have unlawfully sought to cause the breach of the said contracts on the part of its said employees.”

The decree, besides the usual injunction against threat, intimidation, force, or violence, and against inducing breaches of employees' contracts or trespassing upon plaintiff's property, enjoined defendants (and others hereinafter described), among other things, from:

1. “Representing [“for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine without plaintiff's consent”] . . . to any of plaintiff's employees or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person . . . is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or in entering the employment of plaintiff, . . . representing . . . to such employee . . . that such loss or trouble . . . may come by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because plaintiff runs a nonunion mine.”

2. “. . . knowingly and wilfully enticing [“for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent”] plaintiff's employees, present or future, . . . to leave plaintiff's service, giving or assigning . . . as a reason . . . for leaving of plaintiff's service, that plaintiff does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or that plaintiff runs a nonunion mine.

L.R.A.1918C.

3. “. . . knowingly and wilfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future . . . to leave plaintiff's service without plaintiff's consent, against plaintiff's will and to plaintiff's injury.”

4. “. . . establishing a picket . . . for the purpose of inducing . . . by . . . persuasion . . . any person . . . coming to plaintiff's mine to accept employment . . . to refuse . . . to accept service with plaintiff.”

5. “. . . interfering in any manner whatsoever, either by . . . persuasion or entreaty with any person in the employ of plaintiff who has contracted with and is in the actual service of plaintiff to . . . induce him to quit the service of plaintiff . . . or assisting, or abetting in any manner” his doing so.

Three of the defendants—Mitchell, Wilson, and Hughes—were never served with process and did not enter any appearance except to object to the jurisdiction of the court over them. Of the remaining seven all but two had, prior to the entry of the final decree, ceased to hold any office either in the United Mine Workers of America or in any of the district or subdistrict organizations. Nevertheless the decree directed that the injunction issue against each of the ten original defendants, “individually;” and also in their official capacities against their successors in office (who were named in the decree), although these had not been served with process or been named in the bill; the court declaring such persons to be “before the court by representation through service having been made upon their said predecessors in office, sued as such officers and as members of the United Mine Workers of America.” The decree extended the injunction, among others, also to “all persons now members of said United Mine Workers of America, and all persons who, though not now members, do become members of said United Mine Workers of America.”

The circuit court of appeals, reversing the decree of the district court, held that the United Mine Workers of America was not an unlawful organization under the laws of West Virginia, that its validity under the Federal Anti-trust Act could not be considered in this proceeding; that so long as defendants “refrained from resorting to unlawful measures to effectuate” their purpose “they could not be said to be engaged in a conspiracy to unionize plaintiff's mine;” that “the evidence failed to show that any unlawful methods were resorted to by these defendants in this instance;” and specifically, that there was nothing in the individual contracts which barred defendants from inducing the employees to join the Union. With these conclusions I agree substantially.

First: The alleged illegality of the United Mine Workers of America under the law of West Virginia.

The United Mine Workers of America does not appear to differ essentially in character and purpose from other international unions which, like it, are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Its membership is said to be larger than that of any other, and it may be more powerful. But the common law does not limit the size of unions or the degree to which individual workmen may, by union, increase their bargaining power. As stated in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 439, 55 L. ed. 797, 805, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492: "The law, therefore, recognizes the right of workingmen to unite and to invite others to join their ranks, thereby making available the strength, influence, and power that come from such association." We do not find, either in the decisions or the statutes of West Virginia, anything inconsistent with the law as declared by this court. The union is not an unlawful organization, and is not in itself an unlawful conspiracy. We have no occasion to consider the legality of the specific provisions contained in its constitution or by-laws.

Second: The alleged illegality of the United Mine Workers of America under the Federal Anti-trust Act.

The district judge undertook to pass upon the legality of the United Mine Workers of America under the Federal Anti-trust Act; but the question was not in issue in the case. It had not been raised in the bill or by answer. Evidence bearing upon the issue was properly objected to by defendants and should have been excluded.

Third: The alleged conspiracy against the West Virginia mines.

It was doubtless the desire of the United Mine Workers to unionize every mine on the American continent, and especially those in West Virginia, which compete directly with the mines of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and other states already unionized. That desire and the purpose to effect it were not unlawful. They were part of a reasonable effort to improve the condition of workingmen engaged in the industry by strengthening their bargaining power through unions, and extending the field of union power. No conspiracy to shut down or otherwise injure West Virginia was proved, nor was there any averment in the bill of such conspiracy, or any issue otherwise raised by the pleadings.

which justified the consideration of that question by the district court.<sup>3</sup>

Fourth: "Unionizing plaintiff's mine without plaintiff's consent."

The fundamental prohibition of the injunction is against acts done "for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine without plaintiff's consent." Unionizing a shop does not mean inducing the employees to become members of the Union.<sup>4</sup> It means inducing the employer to enter into a collective agreement with the Union governing the relations of the employer to the employees. Unionizing implies, therefore, at least formal consent of the employer. Both plaintiff and defendants insisted upon exercising the right to secure contracts for a closed shop. The plaintiff sought to secure the closed nonunion shop through individual agreements with employees. The defendants sought to secure the closed union shop through a collective agreement with the Union. Since collective bargaining is legal, the fact that the workingmen's agreement is made not by individuals directly with the employer, but by the employees with the Union and by it, on their behalf, with the employer, is of no significance in this connection. The end being lawful, defendant's efforts to unionize the mine can be illegal only if the methods or means pursued were unlawful; unless, indeed, there is some special significance in the expression "unionizing without plaintiff's consent."

It is urged that a union agreement curtails the liberty of the operator. Every agreement curtails the liberty of those who enter into it. The test of legality is not whether an agreement curtails liberty, but whether the parties have agreed upon something which the law prohibits or declares otherwise to be inconsistent with the public welfare. The operator, by the union agreement, binds himself: (1) To employ only members of the Union; (2) to negotiate with the union officers instead of with employees individually the scale of wages and the hours of work; (3) to treat with the duly constituted representatives of the Union to settle disputes concerning the discharge of men and other controversies arising out of the employment. These are the chief features of a "unionizing" by which the employer's liberty is curtailed. Each of them is legal. To obtain any of them or all of them men may lawfully strive and even strike. And, if the Union may legally strike to obtain each of the things for which the agreement provides, why may it not strike or use equivalent economic pressure to secure an agreement to provide them?

<sup>3</sup> This alleged conspiracy not being in issue, the district court improperly allowed the introduction, and considered, a mass of documents referring to various mine workers' conventions, and joint conventions of miners and operators, held years previous to the filing of the bill. Judge Dayton laid great stress on reported declarations of the delegates to these conventions, although the declarations of alleged co-conspirators were obviously inadmissible, there being no foundation for the conspiracy charge.

<sup>4</sup> A witness for the defendants testified as follows:

"There is a difference between unionizing

It is also urged that defendants are seeking to "coerce" plaintiff to "unionize" its mine. But coercion, in a legal sense, is not exerted when a union merely endeavors to induce employees to join a union with the intention thereafter to order a strike unless the employer consents to unionize his shop. Such pressure is not coercion in a legal sense. The employer is free either to accept the agreement or the disadvantage. Indeed, the plaintiff's whole case is rested upon agreements secured under similar pressure of economic necessity or disadvantage. If it is coercion to threaten to strike unless plaintiff consents to a closed union shop, it is coercion also to threaten not to give one employment unless the applicant will consent to a closed nonunion shop. The employer may sign the union agreement for fear that labor may not be otherwise obtainable; the workman may sign the individual agreement, for fear that employment may not be otherwise obtainable. But such fear does not imply coercion in a legal sense.

In other words, an employer, in order to effectuate the closing of his shop to union labor, may exact an agreement to that effect from his employees. The agreement itself being a lawful one, the employer may withhold from the men an economic need—employment—until they assent to make it. Likewise an agreement closing a shop to nonunion labor being lawful, the union may withhold from an employer an economic need—labor—until he assents to make it. In a legal sense an agreement entered into, under such circumstances, is voluntarily entered into; and as the agreement is in itself legal, no reason appears why the general rule that a legal end may be pursued by legal means should not be applied. Or, putting it in other words, there is nothing in the character of the agreement which should make unlawful means used to attain it, which in other connections are recognized as lawful.

Fifth: There was no attempt to induce employees to violate their contracts.

The contract created an employment at will; and the employee was free to leave at any time. The contract did not bind the employee not to join the Union; and he was free to join it at any time. The contract merely bound him to withdraw from plaintiff's employ if he joined the Union. There is evidence of an attempt to induce plaintiff's employees to agree to join the Union: but none whatever of any attempt to induce them to violate their contract. Until an employee actually joined the Union he was not, under the contract, called upon to leave plaintiff's employ. There consequently would be no breach of contract until the employee both joined the Union and failed to withdraw from plaintiff's employ. There was no evidence that any employee a mine and unionizing the employees in a mine; unionizing the employees is having the men join the organization; unionizing a mine is creating joint relations between the employers and employees; a mine cannot be unionized unless the employer enters into contractual relations with the union; it is not the policy or purpose of the United Mine Workers as an organization to coerce a man into doing a thing against his will; this distinction between unionizing a mine and unionizing the employees of a mine has existed since the organization came about, and this method of unionizing a mine existed in 1906 and 1907."

A witness for the plaintiff testified that "the term 'union,' when applied to mining, means the United Mine Workers, and a union mine is a mine that is under their jurisdiction and so recognized. . . ." The contrary is "nonunion or open shop." And further: "The men might be unionized at a mine and the mine owners not recognize the Union. That would in effect be an open shop. When I said 'unionize the employees,' I meant practically all of the em-employees; but a union mine, as I understand it, is one wherein the closed shop is practically enforced." In such case, the witness explained, the operator would be practically in contract relation with the organization.
L.R.A.1918C.

It was also testified: "The difference between organizing the men at the mine and organizing the mine is that when the miners are organized the work of organizing the mine is only just started. They next proceed to meet with the operator who owns the mine, or operates it, for the purpose of making contracts or agreements. Under the constitution and methods of the United Mine Workers a mine cannot be organized without the consent of the owner, and it is not the object or purpose of the United Mine Workers to do so, and never has been; it has never been attempted as far as witness knows. After a mine has been organized, the agreement between the employer and the organization is paramount. The constitution of the organization has nothing to do with the workings afterwards: that agreement does not take away from the operator the control of his men."

was persuaded to do that, or that such a course was contemplated. What perhaps was intended was to secure agreements or assurances from individual employees that they would join the Union when a large number of them should have consented to do so; with the purpose, when such time arrived, to have them join the Union together and strike—unless plaintiff consented to unionize the mine. Such a course would have been clearly permissible under the contract.

Sixth: Merely persuading employees to leave plaintiff's employ, or others not to enter it, was not unlawful.

To induce third persons to leave an employment is actionable if done maliciously and without justifiable cause, although such persons are free to leave at their own will. Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 38, 60 L. ed. 131, 134, L.R.A.1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283; Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 885. It is equally actionable so to induce others not to enter the service. The individual contracts of plaintiff with its employees added nothing to its right in this connection, since the employment was terminable at will.

As persuasion, considered merely as a means, is clearly legal, defendants were within their rights if, and only if, their interference with the relation of plaintiff to its employees was for justifiable cause. The purpose of interfering was confessedly in order to strengthen the Union, in the belief that thereby the condition of workmen engaged in mining would be improved; the bargaining power of the individual workingman was to be strengthened by collective bargaining; and collective bargaining was to be insured by obtaining the union agreement. It should not, at this day, be doubted that to induce workingmen to leave or not to enter an employment in order to advance such a purpose is justifiable when the workmen are not bound by contract to remain in such employment.

Seventh: There was no "threat, violence, or intimidation."

The decree enjoined "threats, violence, or intimidation." Such action would, of course, be unlawful though employed in a justifiable cause. But there is no evidence that any of the defendants have resorted to such means. The propaganda among plaintiff's employees was conducted almost entirely by one man, the defendant Hughes, a district No. 6 organizer. His actions were orderly and peaceable, consisting of informal talks with the men, and a few quietly conducted public meetings<sup>5</sup> in which he argued the benefits of organization and pointed out to the men that, although the company was then paying them according to the Union scale, there would be nothing to prevent a later reduction of wages unless the men united. He also urged upon the men that if they lost their present jobs, membership in the Union was requisite to obtaining employment in the Union mines of the neighboring states. But there is no suggestion that he exceeded the moderate bounds of peaceful persuasion, and indeed, if plaintiff's witnesses are to be believed, men with whom Hughes had talked, his argument made no impression on them, and they expressed to him their satisfaction with existing conditions at the mines.

When this suit was filed no right of the plaintiff had been infringed and there was no reasonable ground to believe that any of its rights would be interfered with; and, in my opinion, the Circuit Court of Appeals properly reversed the decree of the District Court, and directed that the bill be dismissed.

Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Clarke concur in this dissent.

<sup>5</sup> Following is a notice of one of Hughes's meetings which was torn from a telegraph pole in the street by the plaintiff's mine superintendent:

"Notice to the miners of the Hitchman mine. There will be a mass meeting Friday evening at 6:30 P. M. at Nick Heil's Base Ball Grounds, for the purpose of discussing the principles of organization. President Wm. Green will be present. All miners are cordially invited to attend."

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

C. B. HARPER et al., Appts.,
v.

HENRY S. WALLERSTEIN.

(— Va. —, 94 S. E. 781.)

Specific performance — contract to convey lot by number.

1. A contract to convey certain property L.R.A.1918C.

situated in a particular city with a certain number on a certain street, and all improvements thereon, covers all the property shown by the records to belong to the numbered lot, and not merely the portion of the lot covered by buildings.

For other cases, see Contracts, II. d, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to description of land in deed or contract by reference to street number, see annotation following this case, post, 520.

Vendor and purchaser — sufficiency of description of property.

2. The description of a lot to be conveyed as a certain number on a certain street in a city having a known system of notation, regulated by municipal laws and acted upon by everyone, is sufficient.

For other cases, see Specific Performance, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 24, 1918.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court of the City of Richmond in favor of plaintiff in a suit to compel specific performance of a written contract made by him with defendants for the purchase of certain real property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Daniel Grinnan and John B. Gayle, for appellants:

A court of equity will not enforce a contract between parties except where the contract is complete in every detail.

Fry, Spec. Perf. of Contr. § 722; Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 589, 24 S. E. 258; Smith v. Mullen, 113 Va. 675, 75 S. E. 130; Shield v. Adkins, 117 Va. 623, 85 S. E. 492; Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contr. 2d ed. §§ 152, 159, 229; Graham v. Hendren, 5 Munf. 185; Grayson Lumber Co. v. Young, 118 Va. 122, 86 S. E. 826; Mathews v. Jarrett, 20 W. Va. 415; Hall v. Cotton, 167 Ky. 464, L.R.A. 1916C, 1124, 180 S. W. 779; Bates v. Harris, 144 Ky. 399, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 154, 138 S. W. 276; Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Powers, 107 Va. 393, 59 S. E. 370; Creecy v. Grief, 108 Va. 320, 61 S. E. 769; Van Dyke v. Norfolk S. R. Co. 112 Va. 835, 72 S. E. 659; Reger v. McAllister, 70 W. Va. 52, 73 S. E. 48; Smith v. Peterson, 71 W. Va. 364, 76 S. E. 804.

Messrs. Arden Howell and Samuel A. Anderson, for appellee:

There is no ambiguity in the description of the property because the description is applicable only to the lot in controversy, which has been easily identified, the identification being unquestioned. The contract being certain and definite in all other respects, the decree of the chancery court enforcing its performance was plainly right.

Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Crane's Nest Coal & Coke Co. 102 Va. 405, 46 S. E. 393; Hardin v. Kelley, 89 Va. 332, 15 S. E. 894; Trout v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 107 Va. 576, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 702, 59 S. E. 394; Holston Salt & P. Co. v. Campbell, 89 Va. 396, 16 S. E. 274; Williamson v. Payne, 103 Va. 551, 49 S. E. 660; Sulphur Mines Co. v. Thompson, 93 Va. 293, 25 S. E. 232; Lennig v. White, 1 Va. Dec. 875; Warren v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 474; Thorn v. Phares, 35 W. Va. 772, 14 S. E. 399; Tallman v. Franklin, 14 N. Y. 584; Engler v. Garrett, 100 Md. 387, 59 Atl. 648; Fowler v. Fowler, 204 L.R.A. 1918C.

Ill. 82, 68 N. E. 414; Scheible v. Slagle, 89 Ind. 324; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beck, 152 Ind. 421, 53 N. E. 439.

Whittle, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

From a decree of the chancery court of the city of Richmond, granting to the appellee specific performance of a written contract of sale between appellants and appellee of "that certain property situated in the city of Richmond, Virginia, 'No. 504 East Marshall street and all improvements thereon,'" which the court ascertained fronted 26 feet on East Marshall street, and extended back at a right angle and between parallel lines 98.70 feet, this appeal was granted.

The sale was negotiated by an employee of real estate brokers, agents for appellants, and the contract was prepared in their office. The sole question is: What property is embraced by the description, ". . . the following property, to wit, No. 504 East Marshall street and all improvements thereon?"

The entire property owned by appellants was L-shaped, one end of which fronted on East Marshall street, and the other end on North Fifth street. The former was improved with a store building 66 feet and 3 inches in length; the latter with a brick stable extending entirely across the lot from the North Fifth street front. There is a vacant space in rear of the storehouse, which runs back to a temporary wooden shed attached to the side of the stable toward its rear end.

Appellants admit the execution of the contract of sale, but say that they had in mind and only intended to sell the 66 feet and 3 inches of the lot fronting on East Marshall street actually covered by the building; but they did not disclose that fact to appellee. Appellee, on the other hand, examined the land books and records to identify the property designated No. 504 East Marshall street. On the land books he found it charged to appellants as No. 504, containing 26 feet by 98.70 feet. He moreover inspected a partition deed dated February 18, 1880, between T. H. Ellett and Mary Etta Brown, in which reference was made to a plat drawn by Bates and Bolton January 30, 1880, which papers, and the deed from Ellett, trustee, and Mary Etta Brown and her husband, to appellants, also described lot 504 as having a depth of 98.70 feet. These records and the testimony of J. S. Clark, a civil engineer, fully and plainly identify the property described in the contract of sale and fix its dimensions as understood by appellee and established by the decree under review. Indeed, appellants themselves must so have regarded it, at least for purposes of taxation, since it was their duty to cause it to be correctly entered on the land books, where, as observed, the foregoing dimensions appear. Code, § 634. These, then, being the established facts, the controlling principles of law are not difficult of application.

The case of Virginia Iron, Coal, & Coke Co. v. Crane's Nest Coal & Coke Co. 102 Va. 405, 410, 46 S. E. 393, holds that "a conveyance of all the coal underlying the grantor's tract of land known as the 'Sandy Ridge tract,' adjoining the lands of certain named owners, though not a complete description, will convey the coal underlying the tract as it has been known for twenty years prior to the conveyance, although the grantor may have intended to except a portion of the tract the coal under which he had previously contracted to sell to another, and although the description would have been equally as accurate if the excepted land was not included. A grantor will not be allowed to change the effect of his conveyance by a statement that he did not intend to include this or that parcel of land therein, when such intention was not made known to his grantee at the time and acquiesced in by him."

In Trout v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 107 Va. 576, 583, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 702, 59 S. E. 397, the court quotes with approval from Melton v. Watkins, 24 Ala. 433, 60 Am. Dec. 481, as follows: "It [the parol evidence] varied by parol the legal effect of the deed and took from the grantee an interest which the deed conveyed to him. The rule is too well settled to require the citation of authority that all previous or contemporaneous parol agreements or understandings between the parties materially altering or varying by adding to or subtracting from the written agreement must be considered as merged in that agreement, and the writing must be regarded as the evidence and sole expositor of the contract of the parties when it is clear and unambiguous."

In Warren v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 474, it is said: "Intrinsic certainty in a deed relative to specific property is simply impossible. The description can be made certain only by proof or recognition of the identity of the subjects to which it refers, or other objects or things that more or less directly and distinctly indicate and determine it. And in the application of deeds and other documents to lands and lots extensive latitude is allowed for the discovery and proof, not only of visible monuments or objects mentioned, but of mathematical lines of other lands and lots, and various classes of facts to which the description or suggestions in the deed may apply. . . . The certainty of a deed is determined by the principles of the common law. The recordation is regulated by the statutes alone."

In Thorn v. Phares, 35 W. Va. 772, 14 S. E. 399, it is held: "The main object of a description of the land sold or conveyed, in a deed of conveyance, or in a contract of sale, is not in and of itself to identify the land sold—that it rarely does or can do without helping evidence—but to furnish the means of identification; and when this is done it is sufficient. That is certain which can thus be made certain."

With respect to the sufficiency of the description of lot No. 504:

In Flanigen v. Philadelphia, 51 Pa. 491, syllabus, it is said: "In a city having a known system of notation, regulated by municipal laws and acted upon by everyone, the description of premises in ejectment by a number is sufficiently definite."

That the city of Richmond has such a system, see City Code, § 35, p. 312.

So in Tallman v. Franklin, 14 N. Y. 584, 592, it is said: "Nor do I think there was such an uncertainty in the . . . lots as to render the contract incapable of execution, and therefore void. They are described as building lots on One Hundred Thirty-second and One Hundred Thirty-third streets, between the Fifth and Sixth avenues. The numbers of the lots are given."

So also in Engler v. Garrett, 100 Md. 387, 397, 59 Atl. 648, 650, the court says: "Nor do we think there can be any objection to the contract on the ground of uncertainty. It describes the property as No. 2035 North Fulton avenue, and further designates it as the property occupied by Samuel S. Linthicum. This certainly is quite as definite and certain as the description we held good in the case of Kraft v. Egan, 76 Md. 252, 25 Atl. 469, where it is said that a decree for specific performance will not be refused merely because the contract does not state in what county or state the lands agreed to be conveyed lie, provided the description of the premises is not thereby rendered altogether indefinite."

In Scheible v. Slagle, 89 Ind. 324, syllabus, it is said: "The office of a description in a deed is not to identify the land conveyed, but to furnish the means of identification; and, when there is a general designation of the property intended to be conveyed, parol evidence is competent to show what property the description covers."

And in the opinion, at pages 380 and 381 of 89 Ind., it is said: "The rule prohibiting the contradiction of written instruments by oral evidence is not invaded by permitting testimony of the declarations of the grantor as to the character and condition of the property in cases where there is a mere general description of the real estate which the grantor assumes to convey. Where there is a general designation of the property intended to be conveyed, it is competent to show by parol what property the description covers."

In Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beck, 152 Ind. 421, 53 N. E. 439, it is said: "Uncertainty in the description in a deed is immaterial, if the premises intended to be conveyed can be identified by means of the description, in connection with other conveyances, plats, lines, or records, well known in the neighborhood, or on file in public offices."

The latest pronouncement of this court on the subject will be found in the case of As-

berry v. Mitchell, 121 Va. —, L.R.A. 1918A, 785, 93 S. E. 638.

We think the cases relied on by appellants, of which Grayson Lumber Co. v. Young, 118 Va. 122, 86 S. E. 826, is a type, are distinguishable from the case in judgment. In that case it was sought by extrinsic evidence to supply defects and omissions in the terms of the written contract; not, as in this case, merely to apply the contract to its subject-matter.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the decree appealed from is without error, and should be affirmed.

Burks, J., absent.

Annotation—Description of land in deed or contract by reference to street number.

As to description of property by local appellation as sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, see notes to Bates v. Harris, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 154; and as to description of property by ownership or acreage, without other particular description, as sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, see annotation to Hall v. Cotton, L.R.A.1916C, 1124.

The present annotation, like that above referred to, is confined to the general question whether or not land is sufficiently described when reliance must be placed principally upon the fact that the property is described by street and number, and excludes cases where a full description is given.

The general rule (see, for extended general discussion, note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 154) is that the description of land in a deed or contract, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, while it need not itself fully and definitely identify the property, must contain sufficient particulars to afford or point out the means whereby identification may be completed by parol evidence. Applying this rule to the specific question under discussion, the decided weight of authority is to the effect that, for the purpose of the Statute of Frauds, land to be conveyed is sufficiently described when designated by a certain number on a certain street, provided the place in which the street is located is also identified, the theory being that when all of these elements are present the description given can be applied, by the aid of extrinsic evidence, to the exact property as to which the minds of the parties met, and its identity thus established. This has been the position taken with respect to the following descriptions: "No. 48 Angier L.R.A.1918C.

avenue in the city of Atlanta, Fulton county, Georgia" (Boney v. Cheshire (1917) — Ga. — 92 S. E. 636); "house No. 35 Center street, Woodbury, New Jersey" (Claphan v. Barber (1903) 65 N. J. Eq. 550, 56 Atl. 370); "two double houses on Carmine place, and known as 15 and 25 Carmine place in the city of Buffalo, New York" (Forsyth v. Leslie (1902) 74 App. Div. 517, 77 N. Y. Supp. 826); "building and lot known as No. 20 South Saginaw street Pontiac, Michigan" (Hilberg v. Greer (1912) 172 Mich. 505, 138 S. W. 201).

But in a few instances the courts have added a seeming qualification by ruling that a description by street and number and place is sufficient where there is a known system of notation, regulated by law and acted upon by everyone. This was the case in HARPER v. WALLERSTEIN, ante, 517, wherein the property was described as "No. 504 East Marshall street" in the city of Richmond, Virginia, and in Flanigen v. Philadelphia (1866) 51 Pa. 491, the pertinent headnote of which is quoted in HARPER v. WALLERSTEIN, and which was an ejectment suit for the "premises situated No. 136 South Third street in the city of Philadelphia."

And many other descriptions have been declared sufficiently definite to satisfy the Statute of Frauds although they were far from complete and definite in themselves, and the main reliance was put upon the fact that the place, street, and street number were given. Thus, in Kempner v. Gans (1908) 87 Ark. 221, 111 S. W. 1123, rehearing denied in (1908) 87 Ark. 228, 112 S. W. 1087, it was held that the description, "property Nos. 207, 209, 211 West Second street, Little Rock, Arkansas, being 70 ft. front by 75 ft. deep," was sufficiently definite to identify the property and warrant a decree of specific performance. So, in Fuller v. Wood (1911) 137 Ga. 66, 72 S. E. 504, the description, "lots Nos. 181-179 Fraser street in the city of Atlanta, county of Fulton, state of Georgia, the same land and houses are located at the northwest corner of Fraser and Fulton streets, the same being properly deeded or conveyed jointly to Nelson Wood and Lizzie Fuller and held fully described on the deed books of Fulton county records," was held not void on its face, but rather sufficiently definite so that, since the evidence applied the description to the subject-matter, it was error to submit the question of the sufficiency to the jury with a direction to cancel the contract if they found it void for want of sufficient description. And again, in Tallman v. Franklin (1856) 14 N. Y. 584, quoted in HARPER v. WALLERSTEIN, where the contract described the land as Harlem building lots on One Hundred Thirty-second and One Hundred Thirty-third streets between Fifth and Sixth avenues, numbered 132, 133, 134, 135, 154, 155, 156, 157, and made reference to a previous sale in which the property was minutely described and a map thereof specifically referred to, it was held that evidence competent to show what the description fitted at the time the language was used was admissible. And in Ochs v. Kramer (1908) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 762, 107 S. W. 260, rehearing denied in (1908) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1205, 108 S. W. 235, a contract reading as follows: "The following described real estate, to wit, situate in the city of Newport, county of Campbell and state of Kentucky, and being Anna Kramer and heirs' property located at 116 East Eighth street, Newport, Kentucky," was declared to contain a description sufficient to authorize enforcement of the contract. And again in Wettersten v. Fisher (1916) 79 Or. 473, 154 Pac. 534, where the contract described the land as "lot eight (8), block seven (7) in Central Albina [an] addition to the city of Portland, Multnomah county, Oregon, which property is familiarly known and described as 889 Berthwick street in said city," and stated that such lot was the only real property belonging to a certain estate, and was occupied by a named person, it was held that there was a description sufficient for the purpose of an ejectment suit. And, in connection with the point that the name of the occupant of the premises aids the description, see Engler v. Garrett (1905) 100 Md. 387, 59 Atl. 648, as set out infra.

It seems to be practically unquestioned that in addition to the street and street number the city or town must be identified by the writing, and considerable controversy has been had as to what constitutes a sufficient designation of the name of the place where the street is located. Upon this point the weight of authority is to the effect that the place named in the heading or date line may be considered in locating the situs of the mentioned street, the courts proceeding upon the theory that in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary the inference is that the property is located in such place. Applying this rule, it was held in Murray v. Mayo (1892) 157 Mass. 248, 31 N. E. 1063, that a contract dated at "Springfield, Massachusetts," for the sale of a house described as "house and lot 343 Worthington street," was sufficient,—the house at 343 Worthington street, Springfield, being well known and the lot well defined by monuments, consisting of fences,—to form the basis for an action for breach of contract within the rule that any description in a deed or contract of sale of real estate from which the property can be exactly located is sufficient, although parol evidence is necessary to apply the description to the land and fix the boundaries. So, in Kilday v. Schanupp (1916) 91 Conn. 29, L.R.A.1917A, 151, 98 Atl. 335, a contract of sale reading, "Nos. 38-40 Emmett avenue three tenement house and lot 50 front by 150 deep, and one empty lot 50 by 150 next to second house," and dated at "Derby, Connecticut," was held sufficiently definite as to locality, on the ground that the fact that the agreement was dated at Derby, Connecticut, showed where the property was located. And the description, "the western portion of lot forty-one (41) Flannery ward, together with all improvements thereon . . . seller is to occupy residence No. 221 Thirty-Sixth street, West" for a certain time, in a contract headed and dated at "Savannah, Georgia," was held in Singleton v. Close (1908) 130 Ga. 716, 61 S. E. 722, to sufficiently identify the property sold so as to allow extrinsic proof to apply the contract to the subject-matter, for the purpose of enforcing the same by specific performance. And an acknowledgment of a lien on "building at 5420 to 5428 Indiana avenue," and dated at Chicago, was held in Gage v. Cameron (1904) 212 Ill. 146, 72 N. E. 204, to identify the property sufficiently for the purpose of identifying the building upon which the lien was acknowledged. So, a contract describing property as "lot twenty-seven, block 3/929 and better known as No. 126 McKinnon street," and dated at "Dallas, Texas," was held in Frazier v. Lambert (1909) 53 Tex. Civ. App. 506, 115 S. W. 1174, to sufficiently identify the lot so that an action for breach of the contract might be maintained. And in Bush v. Black (1914) 142 Ga. 158, 82 S. E. 530, a contract describing property as "No. 401 Spring, known as the Cob home, 50x160 more or less," and headed "Atlanta, Georgia," was held sufficient under the Statute of Frauds, it being said that the description could be applied to its subject-matter by proper allegation and proof. Likewise the description, "26 Ponce de Leon avenue, 70x185 and 15 foot alley included," in a contract dated at "Atlanta, Georgia," was held sufficiently full and definite to form the basis for the recovery of damages for breach of the same, in King v. Brice (1916) 145 Ga. 65, 88 S. E. 960. And in Tobin v. Larkin (1903) 183 Mass. 389, 67 N. E. 340, a contract of sale reading "house and land No. 10 Howard street, belonging to Bridget Larkin . . . lot 100 by 210 feet," and dated "Lawrence, Massachusetts," was held sufficient to warrant enforcement by specific performance, although Bridget Larkin was only one of three tenants in common, the court taking the view that the phrase, "belonging to Bridget Larkin," could be discarded as immaterial and still leave a "complete designation" of the property whose boundaries and dimensions could be ascertained by reference to the deeds. And a memorandum made in the attempted execution of a power of sale, dated at "Newburyport," and reading "a quarter interest in store No. 32 Market square which I own and relinquish," was held sufficient under the Statute of Frauds in Coates v. Lunt (1911) 210 Mass. 314, 96 N. E. 685; but there was no discussion of the fact that no place of location was named in the body of the memorandum. And in Engler v. Garrett (1905) 100 Md. 387, 59 Atl. 648, quoted in HARPER v. WALTERSTEIN, ante, 517, it was held that a contract of sale describing the property as the "house No. 2035 N. Fulton avenue," and dated at "Baltimore, Maryland," and giving the name of the tenant, was sufficiently definite to warrant enforcement by specific performance, although it did not designate the county or state in the body of the instrument, since the tenant, being named, could be found and identified and his local habitation ascertained.

But it has been held that a deed or contract which merely describes the land in question by street and number is insufficient, under the Statute of Frauds, where the body of the instrument does not designate the place in which the street is located. Thus, in Broadway Hospital & Sanitarium v. Decker (1907) 47 Wash. 586, 92 Pac. 445, an option contract which was dated at Seattle, Washington, and described the property as "house No. 322 Broadway," was held too indefinite to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the court saying that the description could be referred to any city in the world where a street named Broadway might exist, and seemingly ignoring the rule laid down in some of the foregoing cases in which the date line or heading was looked to as prima facie establishing the place where the property was located. And again in Ross v. Allen (1891) 45 Kan. 231, 10 L.R.A. 835, 25 Pac. 570, it was held that a memorandum of an alleged contract for the sale of certain city lots in Leavenworth, Kansas, described as follows: "property number 617 and 619 Delaware street, block 74, city proper," and dated at "Leavenworth,"—was vague, indefinite, and insufficient, under the Statute of Frauds, so that it could not be enforced, the court arguing that the memorandum did not show whether the property was realty or personalty, or that it was located in any certain state, county, or city, and therefore that the case did not fall within the rule that any designation is sufficient where the description given can, with the aid of extrinsic evidence, be applied to the exact property intended to be sold. G. J. C.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

STANDARD CHEMICAL & OIL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF TROY.

(— Ala. —, 77 So. 383.)

Municipal corporation — jurisdiction —
exaction of license taxes outside limits.

1. Municipal corporations may exact a license tax from businesses such as the production of fertilizers and the operation of oil mills outside their boundaries, but within territory to which their police jurisdiction extends, for defraying the expenses of the police administration.

For other cases, see License, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — discriminatory ordinance — proof.

2. An ordinance imposing a license tax on manufacturing establishments outside the city limits, but within its police jurisdiction, which maintain offices within the city, cannot be held to be discriminatory for not imposing the tax upon establishments so located which do not maintain offices within the city, in the absence of anything to show the existence of such establishments. For other cases, see License, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

License — amount of fee — expenses of supervision.

3. A license tax upon a business under the police power may include the expense of municipal supervision over the particular business at the place where licensed in addition to the expense of issuing the license. For other cases, see License, II. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 20, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in favor of plaintiff in a suit to recover certain business license taxes alleged to be due by defendant to plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Wilkerson, for appellant:

The privilege license claimed is a license for revenue only, and not for police regulation; and even if a license tax for police regulation were authorized here, the laws of Alabama cannot be made the basis for a recovery.

Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 556, 70 L. R.A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 38 So. 67.

By defendant's plea it is shown that person selling fertilizers within the police jurisdiction are charged a license of only $10. This is a discrimination allowing a person or corporation to sell fertilizers within the city for $10 where they have no factory, and requiring one with a factory to pay a license tax of $100.

Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L.R.A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 38 So. 67.

Mr. C. C. Brannen for appellee.

Note. — As to power of city to extend exercise of taxing or licensing power beyond the corporate limits, see annotation following this case, post, 528.

Questions as to the amount of license fees exacted of the public are treated in notes cited in the L.R.A. Indexes, under the title, "License," subtitle, "Amount; grading of fee."

L.R.A.1918C.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial was had by the court without a jury on an agreed statement of facts. The suit was predicated on ordinances of the city of Troy, being instituted by the municipality, appellee, against appellant, the Standard Chemical & Oil Company, a corporation, and sought to recover of the defendant certain business license taxes claimed to be due by it to the municipality under said ordinances, for the carrying on of the business of manufacturing or mixing fertilizers, and the business of an oil mill.

Count 2 was for license taxes claimed to be due for carrying on the business of manufacturing or mixing fertilizers outside of the corporate limits of Troy, "but within the police jurisdiction thereof;" the defendant having an agency or office in the city of Troy for the sale of fertilizers, and for which business plaintiff had, by an ordinance duly and legally adopted, imposed a license or privilege tax, the ordinance being set out as a part of each count. Count 3 was of like tenor, though it claimed the designated sum as due plaintiff from defendant as license taxes for the carrying on of "the business of an oil mill . . . outside of the corporate limits of the city of Troy, but within the police jurisdiction thereof." To each count defendant's demurrer was overruled.

The question for decision is, May the city, under a valid ordinance and in the reasonable exercise of its police power, impose a license on a manufacturing business of the nature here dealt with, operated without the city limits, but within its police jurisdiction? That is to say, does the right to reasonably enforce police and sanitary regulations embrace the right to license and tax businesses carried on without the corporate limits of a city, but within its police jurisdiction, having due regard to the cost to the city of furnishing police protection in the indicated zone, and to the value of the same to the business concerns affected?

Mr. Dillon observes of the exercise of the police power: "The natural and appropriate, although not the exclusive, function of ordinances is in legislation by the people of the locality, or their duly constituted representatives, for the conduct or government of the municipality and its inhabitants. Such legislation usually relates to the exercise of the police power delegated to the municipality by the legislature, and is the means by which the municipality exercises the powers of restraint over the inhabitants and the use of property within the territorial limits, which are confided to the municipal government for the general good of the city and its inhabitants. The suppression of nuisances, the preservation of the public health, the prevention of fires, the regulation of trades and occupations and of the use and storage of dangerous articles, the establishment and control of markets, the suppression of disorderly conduct and breaches of the peace, and other similar matters, when regulated, controlled, or directed by ordinances, are the result of the exercise by the municipality of the police power of the state under a delegation thereof by statute or by charter. The limitations of the police power have never been defined, and it is probable that no general limit can be placed upon it other than the requirement that its exercise must be confined to those matters which have a real and substantial relation to the public welfare." Mun. Corp. 5th ed. vol. 2, § 660.

Treating of paramount police power, Mr. Justice Field expressed the doubt that the legislature, by any contract with an individual, could restrain the power of a subsequent legislature "to legislate for the public welfare, and to that end suppress any and all practices tending to corrupt the public morals." Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. ed. 302. And Mr. Justice Bradley thus defined the power: "The plaintiff in error boldly takes the ground that, being a corporation, it has a right, by contract, to manufacture and sell beer forever, notwithstanding and in spite of any exigencies which may occur in the morals or the health of the community, requiring such manufacture to cease. We do not so understand the rights of the plaintiff. The legislature had no power to confer any such rights. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the extent and boundaries of the police power, and however difficult it may be to render a satisfactory definition of it, there seems to be no doubt that it does extend to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens, and to the preservation of good order and the public morals. The legislature cannot, by any contract, divest itself of the power to provide for these objects. They belong emphatically to that class of objects which demand the application of the maxim, 'Salus populi suprema lex;' and they are to be attained and provided for by such appropriate means as the legislative discretion may devise. That discretion can no more be bargained away than the [police] power itself." Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 33, 24 L. ed. 989, 992.

This definition of the police power was adopted by our court in American U. Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 67 Ala. 26, 32, 42 Am. Rep. 90, where the supremacy of the police power of the state was maintained as to the terms on which foreign corporations may prosecute their business within the state. Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 L.R.A. 1918C.

Am. Rep. 85; Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Parsons, 100 Ala. 662, 27 L.R.A. 263, 46 Am. St. Rep. 92, 13 So. 602; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 85 Ala. 619, 7 L.R.A. 266, 5 So. 311.

Concerning the exercise of the police power of regulation by license, and its distinction from the exercise of the power to the end of raising revenue, the supreme court of New Jersey observes: "A power to license is of the same nature as a power to regulate. Under a charter authorizing the regulation of a business or occupation, an ordinance compelling persons engaged in such business or occupation to take out licenses may be adopted, if a license is an appropriate method of regulating the prosecution of the business. Burroughs, Taxn. 392. And if the power to license is given in express words, it nevertheless is included in the classification of police powers. . . . The distinction between the power to license as a police regulation, and the same power when conferred for revenue purposes, is of the utmost importance. If the power be granted with a view to revenue, the amount of the tax, if not limited by the charter, is left to the discretion and judgment of the municipal authorities; but if it be given as a police power for regulation merely, a much narrower construction is adopted; the power must then be exercised as a means of regulation, and cannot be used as a source of revenue. Cooley, Taxn. 408; Cooley Const. Lim. 201; State, North Hudson County R. Co., Prosecutors, v. Hoboken, 41 N. J. L. 71, 79, 81.

That wide discretion is conceded by the courts to the legislative authority in respect of the ground of classification has been recognized by this court. In Mobile v. Orr, 181 Ala. 308, 314, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 575, 61 So. 922, Mr. Justice Sayre, speaking for the court in this connection, observes that courts "must be reluctant to disturb even a municipal ordinance enacted in pursuance of a comprehensive grant of power, and designed presumably to promote the public health and comfort, but the power to condemn is more freely exercised in such cases, for, as to municipal ordinances, it was an ancient jurisdiction of judicial tribunals to pronounce upon their reasonableness and consequent validity. It was always the doctrine of the courts that every ordinance or by-law must be reasonable, and not inconsistent with the general principles of the law of the land, particularly those having relation to the liberty of the citizen and the rights of private property Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 371, 30 L. ed. 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064."

The subjects and purposes of regulation, with the manner of the exercise of the power, under the police powers of the state and of municipalities, have been often discussed by the courts. For example, the police power has been held to extend to the regulation of slaughtering cattle and of market places (Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 752, 28 L. ed. 587, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Petz v. Detroit, 95 Mich. 181, 54 N. W. 644); to the prohibiting of combinations between connecting lines of railway (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 700, 40 L. ed. 859, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714); to declaring liability as for fires caused by engines (St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 23, 41 L. ed. 619, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243); to prescribing the manner in which railway crossings shall be kept in repair (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 170 U. S. 74, 42 L. ed. 954, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513); to the regulation of the killing and exportation of game (Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 336); to the regulation of telephone rates (Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 256, 259, 55 Am. Rep. 201, 5 N. E. 178); to the regulation of the transportation of natural gas (Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 566, 12 L.R.A. 656, 660, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613, 28 N. E. 76); to the requiring of street railways to sprinkle their tracks (State v. Canal & C. R. Co. 50 La. Ann. 1205, 56 L.R.A. 287, 24 So. 271); to quarantine (Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 133, 28 L.R.A. 788, 63 N. W. 424); to the regulation of the construction of sewers from adjoining townships (State, Millburn Twp., Prosecutor, v. South Orange, 55 N. J. L. 262, 26 Atl. 75); to prescribing the method of the use of land for burial purposes (Newark v. Watson, 56 N. J. L. 673, 24 L.R.A. 843, 29 Atl. 487); to the regulation of the storing of gunpowder within designated limits (Davenport v. Richmond, 81 Va. 642, 59 Am. Rep. 694); to the requiring of property owners to keep sidewalks free of ice and snow (Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 277, 10 L.R.A. 178, 19 Am. St. Rep. 497, 25 N. E. 480); to requiring the maintenance of safe cattle guards and crossings (Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Parsons, 100 Ala. 665, 27 L.R.A. 263, 46 Am. St. Rep. 92, 13 So. 602); to the requiring of foreign corporations to appoint a resident agent (American U. Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra); to the regulation of traffic at and about depots, including the soliciting of patronage by cab drivers (Ex parte Bizzell, 112 Ala. 210, 21 So. 371); to the regulation of the sale of cottonseed (Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 63, 44 Am. Rep. 128); and of the sale of milk (Ridgeway v. Bessemer, 9 Ala. App. 470, 64 So. 189; Birmingham v. Goldstein, 151 Ala. 473, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 568, 125 Am. St. Rep. 33, 44 So. 113); to the prevention of stock running at large (Felmar v. Curtis, 86 Ala. 354, 5 So. 678); to the licensing of occupations generally (Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 363, 45 Am. Rep. 85; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 660, 731).

Some of the foregoing authorities dealt with constructions of city ordinances regulating businesses that of necessity extended beyond the corporate limits, through not beyond the police jurisdiction of municipalities. See also 2 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. 657; 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 137; 28 Cyc. 266, 703.

The Van Hook Case, supra, by Mr. Justice Somerville, involved the construction of an ordinance of the city of Selma requiring a license of all persons engaged in selling goods, wares, and merchandise without the corporate limits of the city and within the limits of its police jurisdiction, and the ordinance was held to have been passed in valid exercise of the police power invested under the charter of that city. Appellant here insists that the authority of the city of Selma to license within its corporate limits and within its police jurisdiction was granted by the act of February 12, 1879 (Acts 1878-79 p. 454), and that like express authority is not contained in the charter of the city of Troy, nor in the general statutes having application to municipalities of the class to which Troy belongs by reason of its population. Code, §§ 1046-1460.

It is true that the charter of Selma, under which the ordinance construed and upheld in the Van Hook Case was adopted, contained the following provisions: "The corporate authorities of the city of Selma shall have and exercise all the police powers and jurisdiction conferred by the charter of the city, outside of the corporate limits on the west to valley creek, and north and east of the corporate limits over an area extending outward from the corporate limits one-half mile, and from Valley creek on the west to Beech creek on the southeast of said city; to arrest, try, and punish all persons guilty of violations of the ordinances and by-laws of said city; for the arrest, trial, and commitment of persons charged with violations of the laws of the state of Alabama; for regulating and licensing the sale of malt, vinous, and spirituous liquors, goods, wares, and merchandise; for regulating, licensing, and establishing markets and slaughterhouses; for the abatement of nuisances; and for regulating and licensing shows, theaters, and all exhibitions for amusement." Acts 1878-79, p. 454, § 1.

It is conceded that the original charter of the city of Troy contained no such provisions. However, the ordinance in question, of date December 27, 1916, was ordained pursuant and subject to the several provisions contained in the Municipal Code having application. Code, §§ 1046 et seq. By statute the police power of the state is conferred on cities of the class to which the city of Troy belongs. Full power to adopt ordinances to the ends defined by the statute, and "not inconsistent with the laws of the state, to carry into effect or discharge the powers and duties conferred by this chapter, and to provide for the safety, preserve the health, promote the prosperity, improve the morals, order, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants of the municipality, and to enforce obedience to such ordinances." is the ample grant to such municipalities of the police power of the state. Code, § 1251; Borok v. Birmingham, 191 Ala. 75, 67 So. 389, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 1061; Herbert v. Demopolis School Bd. of Edu. — Ala. —, 73 So. 321.

It has been held that it is no objection to a municipal ordinance not in contravention of a state law that it affords additional regulation "complementary to the end state legislation would effect." Turner v. Lineville, 2 Ala. App. 454, 56 So. 603; Borok v. Birmingham, supra. The extent of the police jurisdiction of cities of the class of Troy has been thus defined: This power shall be extended to and "cover all adjoining territory within 3 miles of the corporate limits; and in cities having less than 6,000 inhabitants, and in towns, such police jurisdiction shall extend also to the adjoining territory within a mile and a half of the corporate limits of such city or town. Ordinances of a city or town enforcing police or sanitary regulations, and prescribing fines and penalties for violations thereof, shall have force and effect in the limits of the city or town and in the police jurisdiction thereof, and on any property or rights of way belonging to the city or town." Code 1907, § 1230.

It will be observed that the exercise of the police power is thus extended to adjoining territory within  $1\frac{1}{2}$  and 3 miles, as the case may be, of the corporate limits, and to and over any property or rights of way belonging to the city, wherever situate, to the end that the municipality may "provide for the safety, preserve the health, promote the prosperity, improve the morals, order, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants of the municipality." This manifold governmental end of the municipality is as clearly indicated in the foregoing statute as it was in the charter construed in Van Hook's Case.

That such manufacturing establishments sought to be regulated by the ordinance in question enjoy police protection maintained at the expense of the city of Troy, and that the inhabitants residing and being within the municipal limits and the police jurisdiction of the city, or within reasonable proximity to the plant in question, may need the reasonable protection of such ordinance, as it affects their safety, health, comfort, and convenience, cannot be gainsaid. And it is but reasonable that such manufacturing business should be made to bear its proportionate share of the burden of maintaining the police administration in that vicinity. Ordinances imposing a regulatory privilege tax on manufacturing plants, enacted under the police power to conserve the general substantial public welfare of the immediate community where they have application, and which are reasonably necessary to promote that end, will be held to have been adopted in the proper exercise of the police power for the purpose of regulation, and not for the purpose of taxation. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 768; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. 665; 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. 2200, 2203, 2205; 28 Cyc. 744, 745.

The important distinction pointed out by the text-writers, and the one on which the foregoing decisions rest, is between the exercise of the power to license, merely as a reasonable police regulation, and its exercise for the purpose of raising revenue, and it is a test to be applied in determining the validity of municipal ordinances adopted for such governmental ends. State, North Hudson County R. Co. Prosecutors, v. Hoboken, 41 N. J. L. 71. This power to regulate may be expressed as well in ordinances imposing privilege taxes as in measures dealing with sanitation and nuisances, or with the disposition, maintenance, and duties of the municipal constabulary, within the confines of the police jurisdiction. And as there can be no efficient enforcement of any character of police regulation without the incurring of a reasonable expense, the necessary outlay may be provided, in part at least, by a reasonable license imposed solely for such purpose. Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 363, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Davis v. Petrinovich, 112 Ala. 654, 36 L.R.A. 615, 21 So. 344; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 85 Ala. 619, 7 L.R.A. 266, 5 So. 311; Ex parte Sikes, 102 Ala. 173, 24 L.R.A. 774, 15 So. 522.

Of this power Mr. Justice Sharpe says: "As auxiliaries to the state government, municipalities have from time immemorial been accustomed to have and to exercise legislative authority in matters properly pertaining to local government. The regulation of such matters may be shared in by or left wholly to the discretion of local law-makers, because they are presumed to have knowledge of local needs. The bestowal of such authority is not a delegation of the discretion which the Constitution either impliedly or expressly restricts to the general assembly, and therefore that body may grant or withhold the authority. The power to impose privilege taxes within reasonable limits is among those usual and necessary to be conferred both for defraying expenses of the local government and as a means of regulating the conduct of business, and is classed as a police power, even though it be not for protection against harmful occupations." Southern Exp. Co. v. Tuscaloosa, 132 Ala. 326, 329, 330, 31 So. 461.

Since both sides appear to find comfort in the Van Hook Case, it may be well to say that the learned circuit judge trying this case, in his opinion, correctly pointed to the fact that in Van Hook's Case it was emphasized that the exercise of the police power of regulation by the imposition of a privilege tax was under general municipal police powers, rather than under the peculiar charter powers of the city of Selma.

In Ridgeway v. Bessemer, 9 Ala. App. 470, 64 So. 189, discussing privilege taxes, it was said that it made no difference that the dairyman lived and kept his cows outside of the corporate limits of the city, for by his sales he was doing business within the city and therefore was subject to such tax. The ordinance there considered enacted a schedule of licenses for the "various businesses, professions, or vocations carried on or engaged in in the city of Bessemer, Alabama," and imposed a privilege tax on the business of "dairying" of $1 for each cow up to twenty cows, and 50 cents for each cow above the number of twenty. Thus the application of the police power, through regulation by license, was extended to affect cows kept at the home of the dairyman and beyond the corporate limits of the city. See also Birmingham v. Goldstein, 151 Ala. 473, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 568, 125 Am. St. Rep. 33, 44 So. 113.

The judgment of conviction under the second count of the complaint is supported by evidence showing that the city, in the adoption of the ordinance, was in the proper exercise of its police power.

It is settled law that one who assails a statute or an ordinance on the ground that it is discriminatory and unreasonable has the burden of showing such to be the case. Denson v. Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. — Ala. —, 73 So. 525, 530; Briggs v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 188 Ala. 262, 66 So. 95, 7 N. C. C. A. 466. The appellant company has failed to discharge this burden by showing that there were other like manufacturing establishments located within the police jurisdiction of the city of Troy and without the city limits, with offices not maintained within the city limits, but within the police jurisdiction of the municipality. The maintenance of police administration without the city, but within its police jurisdiction, as affected by the existence and operation of such manufacturing plants, would not be affected by the fact that the owner or operating company did not maintain an office within the city for the sale of its products. In the absence of such proof, we cannot say that the ordinance here in question is unreasonable and discriminatory against such manufacturing companies with sales offices within the city limits, but with plants or manufacturing businesses maintained and operated without the city limits though within the police jurisdiction of the city.

In the case of Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L.R.A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 38 So. 67, the ordinance was declared void because the basis for the discrimination in license fees was the fact that trading stamps were given by some to their customers. This was merely a method of advertising, a feature in the conduct of business, and for such reason the ordinance was arbitrary and discriminatory in favor of those conducting like businesses but not so advertising. The case of Montgomery v. Kelly condemned the tax there imposed because it was not a police tax, levied to regulate or afford police protection to the business taxed, but was an occupation license tax, and which discriminated against Kelly, as it did not apply to merchants of his general class, but only applied to those who issued trading stamps. It is true that there is an expression on page 556 of 142 Ala. of the opinion, which would indicate that a tax for police purposes could not be levied against useful lines of trade and business, but this expression is in conflict with the case of Van Hook v. Selma, supra, 70 Ala. pages 364, 365, 45 Am. Rep. 85, wherein the true rule is set out as follows: "We declare the true rule to be, in the case of useful trades and employments, and a fortiori in other cases, that, as an exercise of police power merely, the amount exacted for a license, though designed for regulation, and not for revenue, is not to be confined to the expense of issuing it; but that a reasonable compensation may be charged for the additional expense of municipal supervision over the particular business or vocation at the place where it is licensed. For this purpose the services of officers may be required, and incidental expenses may be otherwise incurred in the faithful enforcement of such police inspection or superintendence. Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 347, 83 Am. Dec. 740; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298; Tenney v. Lenz, 16 Wis. 566; State v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123; Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 245 [201], and note 1 on page 246, with cases cited; Ex parte Marshall, 64 Ala. 266."

We therefore hold that the said Kelly Case must be qualified and overruled in so far as it conflicts with the above-quoted rule.

Under the agreed statement of facts, there is a practical, substantial reason for the different basis of privilege taxation for police purposes only, in the case of manufacturing plants located without the city, but within its police jurisdiction, and maintaining sales offices within the city. And the fact that the ordinance is directed to such manufacturing plants, so located, and so maintaining offices within the city for the sale of their products, in the absence of proof that there are like plants, similarly located, which do not maintain such offices within the city, leaves it free of the charge of being discriminatory and unreasonable.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Power of city to extend exercise of taxing or licensing power beyond the corporate limits.

This note supplements the note to Robinson v. Norfolk, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294, on the above question.

As to power of municipality over interurban vehicles used for hire, see the note to Argenta v. Keath, L.R.A.1918B, 891.

As to applicability to vehicles owned by nonresidents, of city ordinance imposing a license upon the use of vehicles, see the note to Pegg v. Columbus, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453, and the earlier note there referred to.

It will be noticed that in STANDARD CHEMICAL & OIL CO. v. TROY, ante, 523, where the police power of the city was by statute extended to adjoining territory for a certain distance beyond its boundaries, it was held authorized to exact a license tax from a concern producing fertilizer and operating oil mills outside the city boundaries, but within the territory to which its police jurisdiction extended, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of police administration.

In other cases legislation giving a municipality authority to exercise its licensing power for police purposes outside its boundaries, and ordinances passed in pursuance thereof, have been sustained.

Thus, in Van Hook v. Selma (1881) 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 85, it was held that it was within the power of the legislature to confer on a municipality power over a specified territory outside the limits of a city, and an ordinance passed in pursuance of such power, providing for the payment of a license fee by persons selling goods within such territory, was sustained.

And statutes giving municipalities power to regulate and license the sale of intoxicating liquor within a certain number of miles of their limits have been held constitutional and valid. Jordan v. Evansville (1904) 163 Ind. 512, L.R.A.1918C.

67 L.R.A. 613, 72 N. E. 544, 2 Ann. Cas. 96; Lutz v. Crawfordsville (1886) 109 Ind. 466, 10 N. E. 411; Toledo v. Edens (1882) 59 Iowa, 352, 13 N. W. 313; State v. Shroeder (1879) 51 Iowa, 197, 1 N. W. 431; Centerville v. Miller (1879) 51 Iowa, 712, 2 N. W. 527.

And ordinances requiring licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor within the extraterritorial limits fixed by such statutes, and prohibiting its sale without obtaining a license from the municipality, have been sustained, and convictions had for a violation thereof. Jordan v. Evansville (Ind.) supra; Lutz v. Crawfordsville (1886) 109 Ind. 466, 10 N. E. 411, supra; Centerville v. Miller (1879) 51 Iowa, 712, 2 N. W. 527, supra; Toledo v. Edens (1882) 59 Iowa, 352, 13 N. W. 313, supra.

And in Fredericktown v. Fox (1884) 84 Mo. 59, a town incorporated under a statute giving it the power to provide for licensing and regulating dramshops and tippling houses "in and to the distance of one-half mile from the corporate limits" was held to have ample power to adopt an ordinance forbidding any person engaging in keeping a dramshop, tippling house, or any other kind of liquor saloon within the corporate limits of the town, or within half a mile thereof, without procuring a license therefrom.

And under a similar statute a town has been held to have authority to prohibit or license and regulate dramshops in territory situated in another county, but within a half mile of the town limits. Gower v. Agee (1908) 128 Mo. App. 427. The court referred to Fredericktown v. Fox (Mo.) supra, and other cases, and said: "The interpretation placed on the statute in the above cases supports the conclusion that police power may be delegated by the legislature to a municipality over territory immediately adjacent to its limits, where an exercise of such authority is necessary to the preservation and protection of the peace and good order of the town and its inhabitants, and that, as the statute under which such authority may be enjoyed, provides no exception in cases where the protecting belt may lap over into territory located in another county or municipality, it cannot be said with reason that the legislature intended to place such restriction on the exercise of the power. Counsel for defendant imagines a situation with respect to which he propounds this question: 'If this town can reach over the county line and control a part of Buchanan county, what would be the status should the Buchanan county court, under the same statute as the Clinton county court acted in incorporating the town of Gower, establish and create a town or village with like powers, on the Buchanan county side of the line and opposite the town of Gower?' He concludes that 'there would be an irreconcilable conflict of jurisdiction of two villages, both of which with like power and authority over the same territory to an extent that would include every foot of ground and every inhabitant of the other,—a condition unheard of and almost unimaginable in a practical sense, and absolutely intolerable and impossible in a legal sense.' The very situation supposed is to be found in the case of the Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. Chicago (1878) 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545. There, under a statute which authorized cities and towns 'to direct the location and regulate the management and construction of packing houses, renderies, tallow chandleries, bone factories, soap factories, and tanneries within the city or village, and within the distance of 1 mile without the city or village limits,' the city of Chicago adopted an ordinance 'prohibiting any person or corporation within the city or within 1 mile of the city limits' from engaging in such business. Under a license issued by the town of Lake, which adjoined the city of Chicago, a packing house was established within 1 mile of the limits of the latter city. The supreme court of Illinois saw no difficulty in the way of the conclusion that the prosecution of the business in this territory was subject to the police regulations of each municipality. 'To accomplish this purpose (i. e., the protection of the inhabitants of cities and villages against the maintenance of intolerable nuisances), the power was conferred upon cities and villages to regulate these establishments for the distance of 1 mile beyond their corporate limits, even if that should lap over and embrace a portion of territory included in the boundaries of another municipality. Each, to that extent, has the right to protect its inhabitants, and such establishments, located in such territory, are subject to police power of both corporate bodies. This is within the letter, and we have no doubt the spirit, of the law. Nor does the fact that appellant is liable to pay a fee to each municipality for the privilege of pursuing a vocation the general assembly regards of such a character as to require regulation and control militate against the grant or exercise of the power.' Had the town of Gower been bisected by the county line, and each part incorporated by the county court of the county in which it was located, a dramshop could not be maintained in either town within a half mile of the line without licenses from both. To hold otherwise would be to say that towns situated on border lines cannot enjoy the protection of the statute, and are impotent against the corrupting and demoralizing influence of nuisances set up at their very doors. A construction of the statute so harsh and narrow manifestly was not within the contemplation of the legislature which enacted it, and does not receive our sanction."

And the right of the legislature to confer power on towns to regulate and license the sale of intoxicating liquors beyond their limits, and beyond the limits of a particular county, was upheld in Meskeu v. Highlands (1897) 9 Colo. App. 255, 47 Pac. 846, where a conviction was sustained for selling intoxicating liquor within 1 mile of a town in violation of an ordinance, although the place where the sale was made was in a different county from the town passing the ordinance, and also within a mile of other incorporated towns.

And in Emerich v. Indianapolis (1888) 118 Ind. 279, 20 N. E. 795, a conviction for selling liquor outside the corporate limits of a city, but within 2 miles of its boundaries, in violation of an ordinance requiring a license, was sustained against one who was a resident of, and whose place of business was located in, a township other than that in which the municipality passing the ordinance was situated, and was within 2 miles of the corporate limits of another town, the court recognizing the power of the legislature to determine over what territory the jurisdiction of municipalities should extend, and also the validity of the ordinance involved.

The case of Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. Lincoln (1908) 82 Neb. 59, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 221, 117 N. W. 284, although not directly in point in this note, is of interest in this connection. In that case a city under its charter was held authorized to enact an ordinance imposing upon telephone companies a business or occupation tax measured by the gross receipts within the city, and the fact that tolls and rentals collected within the city were in part for messages over lines lying in part beyond the city limits was held not to invalidate the tax.

J. T. W.

TEXAS CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS.

WILL MCGLOTHLIN, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 198 S. W. 784.)

Assault — resisting entry upon real estate.

One in possession of real estate under claim of title is not liable for assault in using merely the necessary force to resist an entry by one who has secured a lease from another also claiming title to the property.

For other cases, see Assault and Battery, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Prendergast, J., dissents.)

(November 7, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Criminal District Court for Dallas County convicting him of aggravated assault. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. S. Baskett for appellant.

Mr. E. B. Hendricks, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Davidson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of aggravated assault, his punishment being assessed at a fine of $50. He is charged with having committed an assault upon a woman. Without going into specific detail of the matter, and the charges given and refused, we are of opinion the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict.

Substantially and briefly stated, appellant and Gregory claimed ownership in 4 acres of land upon which a small house was situated, and it seems both claimed title from a party who until recently occupied it, but had moved to Haskell county. Appellant obtained possession from the seller, who had moved to Haskell county and had placed a Mexican as his renter in charge of the house. The Mexican was occupying it. Gregory was desirous of getting possession of the property, and undertook to put Mrs. Welch, the alleged assaulted party, and her husband, in possession of the house, and get the Mexican out, who was holding it under McGlothlin, or at least to take charge of the house, so as to put Gregory in possession, thus giving him an advantage in any litigation that might arise. Appellant was notified of that at his home in Ft. Worth and at once came upon the scene. When he reached the place, he found Welch had moved some of his personal effects into the house, and was unloading more of such effects with a view of putting those in the house. Mrs. Welch came in a hack with this load of goods, and undertook to go in the house. Appellant was standing in the door. During their interview she undertook to enter the room. He had his hands across the door, and she claims that he had his fist up and it came down and struck her on the breast. We suppose that she was undertaking to convey the idea that he intentionally struck her; however, she does not say that. If there was any assault it was committed by this act. There was an effort on her part to enter, and by appellant to prevent the entry of Welch and his wife. Mrs. Welch did not succeed in entering the house. They then went around to the opposite side of the house and sat down and had a conversation—the various parties, Gregory, Welch, and appellant. The occurrence at the door came up, and appellant denied striking the woman, and said, if he did, it was unintentional; that he had no purpose to injure her or in any way hurt her.

These matters resulted ultimately in litigation, which seems to be now pending, between Gregory and appellant, as to the ownership of the property. Appellant, through his Mexican tenant, was in possession of the house, and Gregory was undertaking to get possession through Welch and his wife's occupancy. This was prevented by the act of appellant, and if there was any assault, or his hand or fist struck her during the mêlée, he says it was unintentional; but, whether or not, it all came up in this way.

Note. — As to use of force to protect possession of real property by one not in actual possession, see annotation following this case, post, 532.

L.R.A.1918C.

She was trying to enter, and he was preventing her as best he could, he says, without assaulting her, or without any intent to injure. Under this showing, we are of opinion that appellant ought not to have been convicted.

The bills of exception with reference to charges are not discussed. Appellant had the right, we think, to use reasonable force to prevent the intrusion upon his possession of the property. There seems to be, even from the standpoint of the state, no contention that he used any more force than was necessary, if he used any. That has been sufficiently stated, however.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Prendergast, J., dissenting (December 5, 1917):

Mrs. Lucy Welch, the woman whom appellant was convicted of committing an aggravated assault and battery upon, swore that when she attempted to go in the house appellant's fist "came down and struck me, it struck me right here [on the breast]. When he did that, I asked him to consider my condition. I was in the family way. The baby I have in my lap right here now."

She further said everything was quiet for a few minutes, and Mr. Gregory tried to reason with him. She swore that, when she attempted to get in the house again, his fist "came down again. I mean that he hit me. . . . When he hit me, his hand was closed."

Mr. Gregory, who was present and saw and heard it all, swore: "Mrs. Welch started in, and he took his hand and hit her and shoved her back. He struck her somewhere right along here [on her breast] on the front part of her body. . . . I told him he ought to be ashamed of himself for striking a lady like he did her in the condition she was in. I don't remember that he opened his mouth. I took hold of his hand, and I turned around to Mr. Welch, and asked him he didn't want an officer, and he said he did, and just about that time he [defendant] reached around and struck her again." Then he got in a buggy and went off after an officer. Mr. Welch, the husband of Mrs. Welch, who was present and saw and heard it all, swore: "She told him [appellant] that her things were there, told him that was her home, and started in, and Mr. McGlothlin knocked her back with his hand, and she started in the second time, and he also knocked her back."

On cross-examination, he swore: "I saw Mr. McGlothlin strike my wife. I was about 8 feet from her at that time. . . . He struck her in the breast. It was hard enough to stagger her back. She staggered back something like a step. It was just a short time, not over a quarter of a minute or something like that, after he struck her the first time, until he struck her again. She started in the second time, and he knocked her back." Mr. Welch further testified that he did not resent this beating of his wife by appellant, because he was a law-abiding man, and sent for an officer.

Appellant himself swore on cross-examination that, when Mrs. Welch came up to the door to come in, he was standing there and had hold of the screen door with his left hand. "At the time she came up to me, I am not positive whether I had one or two hands on the door. She was insisting on getting in. She said she wanted to get in the house. I wasn't going to let her get in. I was determined she was going to stay out, no matter what force I took. I was going to keep her out. I did keep her out."

It is thus seen that three witnesses swore positively and unequivocally that appellant beat Mrs. Welch up with his fist; that he struck her in the breast with his fist two separate and distinct times swearing, "I was determined she was going to stay out, no matter what force I took." He had no right to thus beat her up. That the evidence clearly justified his conviction there can be no particle of doubt.

Twelve fair and impartial jurors heard all this testimony, and saw the witnesses, and heard them when they testified. Upon their oaths they found that appellant had struck and beat her up, as she and the other two witnesses swore, and that in doing so he violated the law. An able, fair, and impartial judge, who also saw and heard all these witnesses, and heard this testimony, so held. The statute is clear and plain that the "jury are the exclusive judges of the facts in every criminal cause" (Code Crim. Proc. art. 734), and "the jury, in all cases, are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight to be given to the testimony" (Code Crim. Proc. art. 786). That statute is just as binding on the judges of this court as any other plain and clear statutory law can be. The judges of this court cannot be as competent to determine the facts, not hearing or seeing the witnesses, as the jury and judge of the lower court can be. The law says the jury are the exclusive judges of the facts and of the weight to be given to the testimony. But two judges of this court, in effect, by their decision herein, say that the jury are not the exclusive judges of the facts, nor are the jury the exclusive judges of the weight to be given to the testimony; but that they, the judges, and not the jury, are the exclusive judges of the facts and the credibility of the witnesses.

The court gave a correct and full charge submitting every issue raised by the testimony in this case. There was no Mexican in the house, nor anywhere near the premises, at the time appellant beat up this woman. After appellant beat her up, she and her husband went around to some out-houses to protect themselves against the cold weather. It was very cold at the time. Appellant refused to let her in the house, where Mr. Gregory had built a fire for her. As soon as Mr. Gregory went off after an officer, appellant had all of her household and kitchen goods moved out of the house and off of the premises. He also moved off of the premises the vehicles in which a part of her goods were held, and in which she rode at the time she went to the house, and put up the fence. Then he went around to where Mr. and Mrs. Welch were sheltering themselves, and attempted to show them a deed he claimed he had to this property. Gregory was not there at the time, but off after an officer, and, while he did not again beat her up there, she swore: "I told him right then that he hit me twice. He said if he did, he didn't know it."

He swore: "At the time I understood her to say I had hurt her. I told her, if I did, I didn't intend to. I am not positive whether she said I struck her or not. I understood her to say that I hurt her."

Undoubtedly this case should have been affirmed, and not reversed.

Annotation—Assault: use of force to protect possession of real property by one not in actual possession.

In connection with this question reference may be made to the following notes:

Homicide to prevent entrance of dwelling, State v. Gray, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 71.

Civil liability for assault committed in regaining possession of land by one entitled to possession, Walker v. Chanslor, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455.

Criminal liability for assault committed in regaining possession of land by one entitled to possession, Hickey v. United States, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 728.

Right to employ force in retaking property sold conditionally, W. T. Walker Furniture Co. v. Dyson, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607, and Biggs v. Seufferlein, L.R.A.1915F, 673; see also note to Flaherty v. Ginsberg, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1132, as to liability for the abuse of the right to retake property sold conditionally.

Right to use force to recover possession of personal property, Stanley v. Payne, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, and State v. Scott, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1148.

Right to use deadly weapon in resisting trespass, Newcome v. Russell, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724.

Assault: resisting seizure of property under process, State v. Selengut, L.R.A. 1916B, 957.

There are numerous cases supporting the proposition that one in actual possession of real property may use all necessary force to protect his possession. It is the purpose of this note, however, as is indicated in the title, to bring together cases presenting some such similar situation as is presented in McGLOTHLIN v. STATE, ante, 530, where the person seeking to defend the property is in possession under claim of title or through another person.

It is held in McGLOTHLIN v. STATE, that one in possession of a house through his tenant has the right to use reasonable force to prevent intrusion upon his possession, and is not liable for assault in the absence of a contention that he used more force than was necessary to resist an entry.

But it was stated in Montgomery v. Com. (1901) 99 Va. 833, 37 S. E. 841, that a landlord had no right to order a person off premises in possession of his tenant, although he was apparently an intruder; and where such intruder injured the landlord with a corn cutter after the latter had assaulted the former with it, the court reversed a conviction of the intruder for assault with intent to kill.

In Suggs v. Anderson (1853) 12 Ga. 461, holding that it was no justification of an assault and battery that the defendant was the owner of the house in which the plaintiff was at the time it was committed, the house was being occupied by another, and there was no unwarranted intrusion upon the property.

Where, in an action for assault and battery, the question as to who was in actual possession of a mill was in dispute, the court, in Parsons v. Brown (1853) 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 590, stated that, if the defendant had possession in fact, the law would justify him in using violence, if necessary, in order to defend his possession; but a right to possession would not justify him in committing an assault and battery upon another for the purpose of reducing his right to actual possession.

L.R.A.1918C.

A person was convicted of breach of peace by assaulting and striking a road commissioner who was working over the line, the court refusing to let him justify on the ground of defense of property because there was no evidence tending to show that he had actual possession of the strip after the fence was removed, and constructive possession was not enough. This, said the court, reversing the judgment on appeal in State v. Cleveland (1909) 82 Vt. 158, 72 Atl. 321, was error, for, independently of whether constructive possession was enough or not, the accused had actual possession, as it was manifest from the tenor of his testimony that the fence was moved back merely for convenience in building, he all the time claiming to the true line, and therefore his possession of said strip was not thereby affected, but was thereafter just as actual as it was of the rest of the land, and that it was actual of that is not denied.

In Taylor v. State (1904) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 122, 122 Am. St. Rep. 675, 80 S. W. 378, an appeal from conviction for aggravated assault alleged to have been committed upon prosecutrix while she was attempting to untie a mule which accused persisted in tying to a tree on property claimed to be in the possession of prosecutrix, the court stated that there was no error in the refusal to give the following charge requested by accused: "Before prosecuting witness, Mrs. Radney, can justify an interference with defendant, or with his staking said mule to the tree, as testified before you in evidence, the state must show that the same was done in preventing or interrupting an intrusion upon property lawfully in her possession or under her control. Such possession, in order to authorize an interference on her part, must be of corporeal property, and not of a mere right; and the possession must be actual, and not merely constructive. Now, if you believe from the evidence that the complaining witness, Mrs. Radney, and her mother, owned the property upon which said tree was situated, but you further believe that they removed all fences therefrom and turned the same out on the public commons, and that said state of affairs had existed for some time, then you are charged that the said witness, Mrs. Radney, did not have actual possession of said property, but only constructive possession thereof, and that such possession could not justify any interference by her with defendant in staking his said mule to said tree upon the same." The court said L.R.A.1918C.

that, if the land in question was the property of prosecutrix, whether fenced or not, she had a right, under the statute authorizing the defense of property, to use whatever force was necessary to protect her property from the intrusion or trespass upon the same by anyone. The court, in this connection, should have defined the prosecutrix's right to defend her property under the statute, but it was not required to give the charge requested. The court further observes that defendant's insistence was that the tree where the difficulty occurred, and where he had the mule tied, was not on prosecutrix's land at all. If it was not, then she had no right whatever to interfere with his tying the mule to the tree.

Where accused shot and wounded prosecutor while the latter was attempting to change the position of a fence, the court, in Roch v. State (1907) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 48, 105 S. W. 202, on appeal from a conviction of assault with intent to murder, stated that, if accused's "testimony which was rejected be true, he had a right, under an agreement with prosecutor, to the land attempted to be taken in by the fence. Certainly, such being the case, he had a right to a charge on the law of the defense of property. Of course, if this testimony, as the prosecutor insists in his statement, is not true, then the converse of the law ought to be charged. We understand the law of this state to be that, where one is in lawful possession of property, he has a right by every means to prevent any invasion of same by a third party."

Generally, servants or agents in charge of property have the right to use necessary force to protect the property.

Thus, a servant in possession may use reasonable force in exercising his authority to prevent trespass upon his master's property. Howe v. Oldham (1893) 69 Hun, 615, 52 N. Y. S. R. 734, 23 N. Y. Supp. 700.

So a carpenter and a bricklayer in possession of a house in the course of its building have the right to order away all persons having no right to enter the building; and upon their refusal to depart they have a right to put them out without using any unnecessary violence. United States v. Bartle (1805) 1 Cranch, C. C. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 14,531.

A foreman who had received instructions to exclude all persons who had no business with the firm was, in Woodman v. Howell (1867) 45 Ill. 367, 92 Am. Dec. 221, held to have the right to use the necessary force to put out of the office a person whom he had ordered to depart, but who had refused to do so. The court stated that such person knew that he had obtained no authority from anyone capable of granting it to go into or remain in the office, nor did he seem to have questioned the foreman's authority from his employer to exclude him from the office, but he seemed to have wilfully persisted in his wrongful occupancy of the room, as it unquestionably was after his being requested to depart.

So, where a servant had been convicted of assault and battery upon an employer, the court, in Com. v. Ribert (1891) 144 Pa. 413, 22 Atl. 1032, in reversing judgment, stated that defendant should have been allowed to testify as to an agreement claimed to have been made between him and his employers whereby he was to have exclusive possession of the room in which he was working, and the prosecutor was not to enter, since the question would then have been, not whether the assault was wanton, but whether more violence was used in ejecting the prosecutor than the occasion required.

In Taylor v. Adams (1885) 58 Mich. 187, 24 N. W. 864, a son acting as agent of his mother, the owner and possessor of real estate, was said to have the right to use such reasonable force as was necessary to expel a tortious intruder from the premises. The court considered erroneous a charge that, if the defendant "used a greater degree of force than was reasonably necessary,—if he used force in excess of what was reasonably necessary for the purpose of ejecting her,—then he is liable for the results that necessarily followed such excess, in actual damages to compensate her for the injuries which followed such excess of force," stating that it leaves out of consideration by the jury any contributory element by the plaintiff, which was wrongful, necessarily calculated to induce the very excess complained of, and which, if the jury found existed, would relieve the defendant of all the claimed liability.

In Slingerland v. Gillespie (1904) 70 N. J. L. 720, 59 Atl. 162, 1 Ann. Cas. 886, a man left his daughter, the plaintiff, in charge of his property, with directions to protect his land, and resist any attempts to enter upon it, either upon the right of way or otherwise, except by persons who should show to her the proper authority to do so. In attempting to prevent the servants of a water company from constructing a pipe line on the land, the plaintiff was injured when the servants of such company rolled large pipes against her. In reversing a judgment for the defendants, the court said that the plaintiff was justified under her authority in resisting the defendants or their servants in any attempt to enter upon the land of her father outside the right of way, no matter what her motive in so doing may have been. The defendants had no right to enter upon the Slingerland land outside the right of way, for the purpose of moving the pipes upon the right of way. It would have been a trespass upon the land of Slingerland to have broken down a fence on his land adjacent to the right of way, while moving the pipes into position on the right of way, for which he could have recovered nominal damages at least. If the daughter was authorized to resist the defendants if they came upon the land of her father, she could use all the force necessary in so doing, and if, in exercising this lawful right, she was injured by the defendants while they were moving the pipes off the land of her father, and while she was where she had a lawful right to be, the defendants must answer for the damages. The fact that she had in mind at the same time a design, in exercising this lawful right, to hinder or delay the defendants in doing acts which, if they had been done on the right of way, would have been lawful, is of no concern. One may resist another in a trespass upon his land, whatever the motive in so doing may be. It is not the design of the resister, but the act of the trespasser, which is wrongful.

Where a son occupied a house merely as the servant and under the direction of the father, it was held, in Comstock v. Dodge (1869) 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, that the father, who owned the house, was in possession, so as to entitle him to use the necessary force to expel from the premises a guest of the son's wife who refused to depart when ordered to do so by the father.

It was held in State v. Lockwood (1897) 1 Penn. (Del.) 76, 39 Atl. 589, that, where a mere guest refused to go when ordered out of the house by the husband, the husband, as head of the family, had the right to eject him, using so much force as was necessary for the purpose, but no more; and this was so although the dwelling house occupied by the family was the property of the wife. The court said that, if they were dwelling in this house as man and wife, and this prosecuting witness was a mere guest, and failed to go out of the house at the bidding of the husband, the latter had a right to use all the force necessary to eject him, but no more; that he had no right to use undue force; that, if a man is attacked in his own house or the house of another, he has a right to use so much force as is necessary for his own protection.

It was stated in Cole v. Rowen (1891) 88 Mich. 219, 13 L.R.A. 848, 50 N. W. 138, an action to recover damages for assault and battery, that a depot master acting under the direction of a railroad company had the right to enforce the rules and regulations of such company by ejecting, with no more force than was necessary, a hackman who persisted in occupying a place assigned to another hackman.

In affirming a judgment for plaintiff in Liebstadter v. Federgreen (1894) 80 Hun, 245, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1039, an action to recover damages for assault, the court stated that, when the plaintiff hired the store of the defendant, he took that store as it had been theretofore used and occupied by the defendant himself; that gave him the right to the use of the cellar; the defendant, by surreptitiously and wrongfully barring plaintiff's access to the cellar, did not thereby acquire a lawful possession thereof (within the meaning of Bristor v. Burr (1890) 120 N. Y. 431, 8 L.R.A. 710, 24 N. E. 937), which would entitle him to resist with force and violence the efforts of the plaintiff to enter thereupon. The mere actual physical possession of premises by a person is not alone sufficient to justify him in using force and violence either to prevent the entry of the lawful occupant thereon, or, to eject him therefrom after he has entered.

It is stated in Wood v. Gale (1839) 10 N. H. 247, 34 Am. Dec. 150, that, where a female of ill repute persists in associating with a ward, the guardian may remove her from the ward's premises on her refusal to go; and to protect his ward from a threatened return, a farther removal, under some circumstances, may be justifiable. In this case the removal of such a female to the nearest village half a mile distant was deemed justifiable. J. D. C.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, & TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY OF TEXAS et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

(245 U. S. 484, 62 L. ed. —, P.U.R.1918B, 602, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 178.)

Commerce — state regulation — starting time for interstate trains — connections.

As applied to through interstate trains originating outside the state on the lines of other carriers, an order of a state railway commission under which a railway company must start its passenger trains in the state at the point of origin and at local stations on schedule time, with an allowance of not more than thirty minutes for connections, is an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce,—especially where there is sufficient accommodation for local traffic independent of the through trains.

For other cases, see Commerce, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 14, 1918.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals, Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas, to review a judgment, a review of which was denied in the Supreme Court, imposing a fine upon defendant for violating an order of the State Railroad Commission requiring passenger trains to start on schedule time, with an allowance of not more than thirty minutes for connections. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alexander H. McKnight, C. S. Burg, Joseph M. Bryson, Alexander Britton, and Charles C. Huff, for plaintiffs in error:

Where a railroad company has provided

Note. — A question of collateral interest in connection with the point decided in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Texas is considered in the note to St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Langer, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 478, and earlier notes there referred to, on "Power to compel stoppage of trains at stations," including interstate trains. More closely in point is State ex rel. Caster v. Dickinson, L.R.A.1918B, 534, in which the Kansas supreme court holds that a statute making it L.R.A.1918C.

the duty of the Public Utilities Commission to require interstate railroad companies to provide proper facilities and to stop all passenger trains a reasonable time at or near the state line casts an unwarranted burden on interstate railroad commerce, deprives interstate railroad companies of their property in lawfully established interstate passenger fares, and is unconstitutional and void.

ample facilities for the adequate accommodation of its local passenger business, a state statute or an order of a state commission requiring it to stop an interstate train at stations where it is not scheduled to stop is void under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 41 L. ed. 107, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1096; Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 41 L. ed. 1064, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 203 U. S. 335, 51 L. ed. 209, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. ed. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121; Herndon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 218 U. S. 156, 54 L. ed. 977, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 237 U. S. 220, 59 L. ed. 926, P.U.R.1915C, 309, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Mayes, 201 U. S. 321, 50 L. ed. 772, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Murphey, 196 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 444, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, 2 Ann. Cas. 514; McNeill v. Southern R. Co. 202 U. S. 543, 50 L. ed. 1142, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 424, 56 L. ed. 257, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 444, 56 L. ed. 263, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 145; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Covington, 235 U. S. 537, 59 L. ed. 350, L.R.A.1915F, 792, P.U.R.1915A, 231, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Blackwell, 244 U. S. 310, 61 L. ed. 1160, L.R.A.1917F, 1184, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 640.

It has been the purpose of Congress constantly to promote, and often to require, the formation and operation of continuous lines of transportation.

Union P. R. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 2 C. C. A. 174, 10 U. S. App. 98, 51 Fed. 309, affirmed in 163 U. S. 564, 41 L. ed. 265, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1173; The St. Louis, 48 Fed. 312.

If the order was within the police power, the police power of the state does not give it the right to violate any provision of the Federal Constitution.

Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Murphey, 196 U. S. 206, 49 L. ed. 449, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, 2 Ann. Cas. 514; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Kaw Valley Drainage L.R.A.1918C.

Dist. 233 U. S. 75, 79, 58 L. ed. 857, 859, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564.

Messrs. B. F. Looney, Attorney General of Texas, and Luther Nickels, for defendant in error:

The power of the state to provide for the convenience of its citizens traveling in intrastate commerce stands upon the same ground as its power to provide for the public safety, health, etc.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 27 L. ed. 442, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Covington, 235 U. S. 537, 548, 59 L. ed. 350, 354, L.R.A.1915F, 792, P.U.R.1915A, 231, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398.

There is nothing to condemn the order, even if an incidental effect upon commerce were admitted.

Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 41 L. ed. 1064, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Covington, 235 U. S. 537, 59 L. ed. 350, L.R.A.1915F, 792, P.U.R.1915A, 231, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit brought by the state of Texas to recover penalties for violation of an order of the State Railroad Commission. This order required passenger trains in Texas to start from their point of origin and from stations on the line in accordance with advertised schedule, allowing them not exceeding thirty minutes at origin or points of junction with other lines to make connection with trains on such other lines, and not exceeding ten minutes more if, at the end of the thirty minutes, the connecting trains were in sight. There were some other qualifications not necessary to be stated. The defendant's passenger trains concerned were numbers 9 and 209, and were parts of a train, also numbered 9, of the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas Railway, a different corporation, taken charge of by the defendant at Denison, Texas, about 5 miles south of the Texas and Oklahoma state line, under a contract with the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas. In pursuance of this contract they were forwarded via Dallas and Fort Worth to Hillsboro, thence as one train to Granger and there again divided, the two parts going respectively to Galveston and San Antonio. There were similar arrangements for trains to the north. The cars received by the defendant came from St. Louis and Kansas, City, Missouri, uniting at Parsons, Kansas, and thence proceeding south to Denison. The court of civil appeals at first held that the movement must be regarded as a continuous one from Kansas City and St. Louis, and that the order did not apply to the train; but, on a rehearing, decided that, as the defendant took control at Denison with new crews and engines, and as the defendant could not go beyond the state line, the movement, so far as the defendant was concerned, was wholly within the state. Breaches of the order having been proved, it affirmed a judgment imposing a fine. A writ of error was refused by the supreme court of the state.

The supreme court gave up the manifestly untenable ground taken by the court of civil appeals, and recognized that the defendant's trains were instruments of commerce among the states, but it construed the order as applying to them none the less, and held it valid as so applied. The only question with which we have to deal is whether the State Commission could intermeddle in this way, especially when there was sufficient accommodation for local traffic independent of the through trains. The defendant in error attempts to open this last matter, because the opinion of the court of civil appeals in which the fact was stated was reversed by it for a different reason, and that of the court of first instance was the other way. But we regard the decision of the intermediate and the supreme court as proceeding upon the assumption that we have stated and that we see no reason to disturb. Again, the question is not what the State Commission might require of a road deriving its powers from the state, with regard to local business (Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 283, 54 L. ed. 472, 481, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330), but whether the order, if applied to this case, would not unlawfully interfere with commerce among the states.

On its face the order as applied was an interference with such commerce. It undertook to fix the time allowed for stops in the course of interstate transit. It was a serious interference, for it made the defendant liable for an interstate train not starting on schedule time, when the train did not come into the defendant's hands, from another company in another state, until too late. This, as we understand the facts, was the train to which the advertised schedule applied, and, if so, the mere statement of the result is enough to show that the burden imposed not only was serious, but was unwarranted as well as unjust. The suggestion that compliance with the order could have been secured by having an extra train ready to run if the regular one was not on time hardly is practical, and is not an adequate answer, even in form. For the defendant advertised, or at least had the right to advertise, the interstate train, and, if it did so, would not free itself from liability for a delay on the part of that train by offering another. We think it plain that this order was applied in a way that was beyond the power of the Commission and courts of the state. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Blackwell, 244 U. S. 310, 61 L. ed. 1160, L.R.A.1917F, 1184, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 640; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 237 U. S. 220, 226, 59 L. ed. 926, 930, P.U.R.1915C, 309, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Covington, 235 U. S. 537, 548, 59 L. ed. 350, 354, L.R.A.1915F, 792, P.U.R.1915A, 231, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158.

Judgment reversed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC
RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.

G. M. BUTLER.

(— Ark. —, 200 S. W. 144.)

Damages — loss of cattle — excess.

1. An allowance of $100 as damages against a carrier for loss of five head of

Note. — The duty of a carrier of live stock to provide stock pens or yards is treated in the annotation following this case, post, 539.

L.R.A.1918C.

cattle and the injury to several others is not excessive.

For other cases, see Damages, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Carrier — absence of stock pens — premature loading of cattle — liability.

2. A carrier which, in response to notification of intention to ship cattle, states the time they should be tendered at the station, is liable in case it becomes necessary to load them prematurely into cars because of inadequacy of stock pens, and they are injured by being compelled to stand in the cars an unnecessarily long time before the cars are put in motion.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 14, 1918.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grant County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to a carload of cattle alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas S. Buzbee and H. T. Harrison, for appellants:

There is nothing in the testimony that justifies a submission to the jury of the question of whether the defendant had exercised reasonable diligence in furnishing facilities to receive and transport the plaintiff's cattle.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughan, 84 Ark. 311, 105 S. W. 573.

Mr. J. C. Ross, for appellee:

Defendants were liable for the injury to plaintiff's cattle.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Ark. 138, 113 S. W. 1035.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to recover damages to a carload of cattle sustained by reason of the negligence of the railway company in having the cattle loaded and held for so long a time at Fordyce, Arkansas, the point of origin of the shipment, before moving, that seventeen head got down in the car, as a result of which one died and was removed from the car before it was moved, four others died subsequently, and several were badly crippled. Plaintiff sued for $150, and recovered judgment for $100. It is said that the verdict is excessive, and that under the undisputed evidence a verdict should have been directed in favor of the railway company upon the ground that no liability was shown.

Discussing these questions in the order stated it may be said that the verdict is not excessive, if there is any liability. The plaintiff testified that one cow died before the car was put in motion, and that four other head of cattle died from the injuries sustained while the car was standing at Fordyce, and several others were injured. The instructions given by the court were more favorable to the railway company than they should have been, and no exceptions were saved to any instructions given or refused, except upon the ground that a verdict should have been directed in favor of the railway company.

It is argued that the jury did not follow the instructions given, and that no liability is shown under the undisputed evidence. There does not appear to be any conflicts in the testimony, as the cause was submitted to the jury on the testimony offered in behalf of the plaintiff alone, and it may be L.R.A.1918C.

stated as follows: The plaintiff had made arrangements to ship two carloads of cattle on March 11th from Fordyce, Arkansas, to Leola, Arkansas, over defendant's road. On the morning that the cattle were to be shipped, a man by the name of Morgan called the plaintiff and told him that he had some cattle for him, and for the plaintiff to come to Fordyce and load them. The plaintiff went to the depot and made inquiry about cars, and was told, if he wanted the cattle shipped, he must get them down to the station so that they could be loaded when the train came. Plaintiff then put in the cattle pen certain cattle, referred to by the witnesses as the Morgan cattle, which he had bought that day, and he then told the agent of the railway company that he had two more carloads of cattle coming in, and the agent told him the train would be along about 6 P. M. and to get the cattle in by 5:30 P. M. This conversation occurred about 2:30 P. M. The plaintiff then went ahead and had the other two loads of cattle brought in, and when he reached the station with the cattle, about 5:30 P. M., he was informed by the agent that the train was late and would not arrive until about 9 or 10 o'clock. The stock pen was already filled up with the cattle that he had placed there earlier in the afternoon, so that there was no room in the stock pen for the cattle which plaintiff brought in at 5:30 P. M. The agent suggested to plaintiff that he get a lot in town to put his other cattle in, but plaintiff retorted that it was the railway's business to get the lot, whereupon the agent suggested, as a solution of the difficulty, that the plaintiff load the cattle which were already in the stock pen and make room for the cattle which he had just brought in. This was done, and the cattle were properly loaded between 5 and 6 o'clock P. M., after which the plaintiff went to his supper. Upon his return from supper, he found seventeen head of the cattle down in one car, and eight in the other. Plaintiff and four other men got into the cars and succeeded in getting the most of the cattle up before the train came. The train arrived about 9:30 P. M. when the cars were unloaded and all the cattle came out, except the one which was dead. They dragged this one out of the car and left it at Fordyce. The others were then reloaded into the cars, except one which sulked and could not be put in the car. This one, too, was left in Fordyce. The train then moved forward, and the cattle arrived at their destination without any other untoward incident at 2:30 A. M.

We need not decide whether plaintiff was correct in his assumption that it was the duty of the railway company, and not his own duty, to secure a lot in which to confine the cattle which could not be accommodated in the cattle pen. The agent waived the point and received the cattle for shipment, and they were loaded in cars at his suggestion. It is true the plaintiff then knew the train was late, but the day was approaching its close, and something had to be done with the cattle. They had been brought to the station under the direction of the railway's agent. The railway company knew its facilities, and was charged with knowledge of the movement of its trains. In 4 R. C. L. 951, it is said that "where a common carrier accepts live stock for transportation, knowing at the time that the condition of its facilities is such that a loss will result to the shipper by reason of the shipment, such carrier will be responsible for the loss because of its negligence in undertaking the shipment under such conditions."

In support of the proposition stated, the author cites the case of St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 101 Ark. 289, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 546, 142 S. W. 168. In that case the court approved the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant railway company received two carloads of hogs from the Jonesboro, Lake City, & Eastern Railway Company for transportation to East St. Louis, knowing that its stock pens at Jonesboro were so overcrowded that said stock could not be unloaded, then the fact, if it be a fact, that said stock pens were so overcrowded, will not excuse the railway company, if it is otherwise liable."

The testimony in that case was to the effect that the defendant railway company had the custom of unloading hogs at Jonesboro which it received from the connecting railway for shipment to St. Louis, and that the hogs in question were not unloaded because of the overcrowded condition of its pens. Discussing the law of the case, the court said: "It is the duty of a common carrier of live stock to furnish all necessary facilities for the proper rest, exercise, and refreshment of the animals received by it for transportation. The times when and places where rest and refreshment may be necessary must be left to the judgment of the carrier, and not the shipper. The shipper cannot arbitrarily demand of the carrier that it unload the live stock at any particular time or place; but, where the carrier has established a usage of unloading at a particular place for the proper care and necessary preservation of certain live stock, the shipper, in delivering his stock to the carrier for transportation without any notice of a change of usage, has the right to expect that such usage on the part of the carrier will be observed, and, if it is not observed, resulting in loss to the shipper, he may hold the carrier responsible for such loss. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Peterson, 68 Miss. 454, 14 L.R.A. 550, 10 So. 43; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Clark, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 79 S. W. 827; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heggie, 86 Ga. 210, 22 Am. St. Rep. 453, 12 S. E. 363; McAlister v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 74 Mo. 351; Hutchinson, Carr. § 638, and cases cited in note.

So here we say that, when plaintiff was invited to tender his cattle for shipment, and when he did so pursuant to this invitation, he had the right to assume that the railway company had provided and would furnish the facilities needed, and if through the lack of them he was compelled to load his cattle into cars prematurely, and they were compelled to stand in the cars an unnecessarily long time before the cars were put in motion, he is entitled to recover damages to compensate the loss sustained thereby. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Ark. 138, 113 S. W. 1085.

Judgment affirmed.

Annotation—Duty of carrier of live stock to provide stock pens or yards.

This note supplements a note on the same subject in 44 L.R.A. 289.

The duty of a common carrier with reference to the condition of stock pens is considered in the note in 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571.

The rule is well settled that it is the duty of a common carrier of live stock at the place both of receiving and delivering stock, or turning the same over to a connecting carrier, to exercise ordinary and reasonable care to provide reasonable means, including pens, inclosures, and chutes, to care for the live stock tendered it for transportation, and also to feed, water, and care for such stock during transportation. Covington Stock-Yards v. Keith (1890) 139 U. S. 128, 35 L. ed. 73, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cavender (1910) 170 Ala. 601, 54 So. 54; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Dothan Mule Co. (1917) 161 Ala. 341, 49 So. 882 (failure to furnish proper chutes for loading and unloading stock and feeding and caring for them during transportation); CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. BUTLER, ante, 537 (failure to furnish pens sufficient in size); Bush v. Altschul (1917) 128 Ark.

103, 193 S. W. 280 (failure to furnish suitable yards and facilities for resting and feeding stock during transit); St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Crowder (1907) 82 Ark. 562, 103 S. W. 172 (insufficient stock pens); Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Breniman (1912) 22 Colo. App. 1, 125 Pac. 855 (failure to furnish closed yards); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Keys (1906) 6 Ind. Terr. 396, 98 S. W. 138 (failure to furnish sufficient yards in which to feed stock during transit); Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Byrne (1899) 3 Ind. Terr. 740, 49 S. W. 41 (stating the rule); Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Greening (1907) 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1180, 100 S. W. 825 (failure to furnish proper and sufficient yards in which to feed stock during transit); Illinois C. R. Co. v. Eblin (1903) 114 Ky. 817, 71 S. W. 919 (ground of liability same as preceding case); Zakrzewski v. Great Northern R. Co. (1915) 131 Minn. 175, 154 N. W. 966, prior appeal in (1914) 125 Minn. 125, 145 N. W. 801 (failure to furnish sufficient facilities to care for stock at shipping point); Lackland v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1903) 101 Mo. App. 420, 74 S. W. 505 (liability for failure to provide a safe place for receipt and preservation of live stock at place of shipment); Andrews v. McGill (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 179 S. W. 1087 (failure to furnish sufficient pens for use during transportation); St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Drahn (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 357 (insufficient pens for use during transportation); San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Chittim (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 747 (failure to furnish reasonable facilities for watering stock during transportation); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Isenhower (1910) 62 Tex. Civ. App. 223, 131 S. W. 297 (failure to furnish sufficient pens); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Slator (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 102 S. W. 156 (failure to furnish sufficient pens); Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Galton (1907) 45 Tex. Civ. App. 67, 100 S. W. 166 (carrier liable for furnishing muddy and unsuitable pens at place for receiving stock); Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Cage Cattle Co. (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 95 S. W. 705 (failure to provide suitable pens or inclosures at place for receiving stock); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Felker (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 604, 90 S. W. 530 (failure to maintain sufficient pens at connecting point with another road); Casey v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 49, 83 S. W. 20 (failure to furnish sufficient pens at place for receiving stock); L.R.A. 1918C.

ing stock); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Farmbrough (1900) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 55 S. W. 188 (failure to furnish suitable pens at place of shipment); Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (1905) 40 Wash. 163, 111 Am. St. Rep. 883, 82 Pac. 161 (failure to furnish sufficient pens at place of destination).

Generally, the question as to whether or not facilities furnished by a carrier for caring for and feeding stock and keeping the same are reasonably sufficient is one for the jury. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Galton (1907) 45 Tex. Civ. App. 67, 100 S. W. 166; Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Cage Cattle Co. (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 95 S. W. 705; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Slator (1907) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 102 S. W. 156.

Open cattle pens in which to keep live stock during cold and inclement weather do not comply with the duties imposed upon the carrier. Bush v. Altschul (1917) 128 Ark. 103, 193 S. W. 280.

It has been held that a carrier of live stock must furnish facilities to care for the stock at the point of shipment, and that the pens must be so equipped that the shipper can, with a reasonable degree of safety and convenience, assemble and care for the stock. Zakrzewski v. Great Northern R. Co. (1914) 125 Minn. 125, 145 N. W. 801.

In supplying cattle pens to receive stock at designated points, it is the duty of the carrier to supply the same in accordance with the volume of business at the point to be supplied, and to anticipate and make suitable provision for the amount of stock that it will probably receive, but it need not furnish sufficient equipment to meet business tendered to it and also that of other carriers at that point. Casey v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 49, 83 S. W. 20.

Where the shipper abandoned his stock during transportation, and continued his journey without them and made no demand upon the carrier to furnish facilities for feeding the stock during transit, he cannot hold the carrier liable for injury to the stock due to lack of feed and care, on the ground that there were no sufficient facilities to be had for feeding and caring for them. Weaver v. Southern R. Co. (1912) 11 Ga. App. 355, 75 S. E. 447.

Where a shipper consented to transportation of cattle without unloading and feeding them, he thereby waived his right to hold the carrier liable for injury thereby resulting, although his consent was gained by the representations of the agents of the carrier that there were no proper and sufficient facilities for feeding and caring for the stock within such time, and that, if he did not consent to the extension of time for unloading and feeding them, the carrier would unload them in inadequate pens, where there would be no facilities to feed and water them. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Graham (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 432.

Shipment of live stock is usually made under a contract by which the shipper agrees to accompany the stock either in person or by an employee, and to feed and water them during transit at his own expense and risk. A contract of this character does not have the effect of relieving the carrier from liability for injury to stock during transit due to its failure to provide reasonable facilities for feeding, watering, and resting the stock during transit. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Dothan Mule Co. (1909) 161 Ala. 341, 49 So. 882; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Eblin (1903) 114 Ky. 817, 71 S. W. 919; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Chittim (1911) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 747.

Where the contract of transportation provides that the stock shall be in charge of the shipper, the carrier furnishing free transportation for that purpose, and the shipper assuming the duty of loading, unloading, and feeding the stock, the carrier is not liable for an injury to the stock due to the negligence of the shipper. Grieve v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1898) 104 Iowa, 659, 74 N. W. 192.

If the shipper of cattle enters into a contract by which, in consideration of a lower freight charge, he assumes the risk of injury to the animals, he cannot hold the carrier liable for injury to the stock from a defective cattle shed, unless the defect was due to the failure of defendant to exercise ordinary care. Candee v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1901) 73 Conn. 667, 49 Atl. 17.

Under an agreement by the carrier to provide the shipper of stock with all proper facilities on the train and at stations for taking care of the same, the carrier is liable for injuries to stock due to a want of food, water, and attention owing to its failure to furnish facilities for feeding and caring for them during transit. Comer v. Stewart (1896) 97 Ga. 403, 24 S. E. 845.

Where the shipper of cattle undertook to unload his own cattle without notice to the carrier or his agents, and in doing so used a chute he knew was defective, he cannot recover damages for injury to his cattle due to such defect. Candee v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.) supra.
A. G. S.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

JULIUS WRIGHT et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

SARAH THREATT et al.

(146 Ga. 778, 92 S. E. 640.)

Contract — promise to pay another's debt — consideration.

A promise to answer for the default or miscarriage of another must be in writing and be supported by a consideration. A promise to pay an existing debt of another, which has only love and affection for a consideration, and which is executory, and from which no benefit accrues to the promisor or to the debtor, is nudum pactum, and cannot be enforced.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c; I. e, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 16, 1917.)

Headnote by HILL, J.

Note. — For love and affection as consideration for executory promise to pay existing debt of another, see annotation following this case. post. 543.
L.R.A.1918C.

ERROR to the Superior Court for Bibb County to review a decree in favor of defendant Threatt, in an interpleader action for the determination of the respective rights and interests of the parties in the proceeds of a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by HILL, J.:

The American National Insurance Company brought an action against Sarah Threatt, W. F. Boddie, and Julius Wright, and alleged substantially as follows: On January 14, 1914, Willie Threatt applied for, and petitioner issued to him, a policy of insurance for the principal sum of $320. Under the terms of the policy, in case of the death of the insured, the amount of $320 was to be payable to Sarah Threatt, his sister, as the beneficiary. The insured kept up and paid his premiums under the policy, and died while it was in force. Sarah Threatt, as beneficiary, furnished to petitioner proper proofs of death, and under the terms of the policy the amount of $320 became due and payable to her. On April 27, 1915, she gave a power of attorney to Dr. W. F. Boddie, authorizing him to collect from petitioner the sum of $48 out of the proceeds of the policy; and a copy of the power of attorney was delivered to petitioner. On April 30, 1915, she executed and delivered to petitioner what purports to be a revocation of the power of attorney. A similar power of attorney was given to Julius Wright, authorizing him to collect $18.15 out of the proceeds of the policy, and was delivered to petitioner; and a similar revocation thereof was delivered to petitioner on April 30, 1915. Petitioner has been notified by all of the defendants that they claim their respective rights and interests in the proceeds of the policy; and they have refused to release petitioner upon the policy and powers of attorney, unless payment of the amounts they claim is made to them. Sarah Threatt claims the full amount of the policy. W. F. Boddie claims $48, and Julius Wright claims $18.15. By reason of these claims it is doubtful and dangerous for petitioner to act in the premises. It is not in collusion with any of the claimants of the fund, and has no interest therein. It prays that it be permitted to pay the fund into court and be discharged from any and all liability to each of the parties defendant upon the policy or the powers of attorney, and that the defendants be required to interplead and have their respective rights and interests in the proceeds of the policy determined in this cause.

An order granting the prayer of the petition was passed, with the provision that Sarah Threatt have the right to apply to the court to have the uncontested portion of the amount of the policy paid over to her, upon five days' notice to the other defendants. She answered, in substance, that the execution of the powers of attorney was procured by fraud upon her (in circumstances detailed), that they were never read to her, and that she was illiterate, unable to read or write. She was informed later by the agent in charge of the office and place of business of the insurance company that she had executed the powers of attorney. She immediately delivered to the insurance company a revocation of the powers of attorney, and has not revived them by act or conduct. No consideration existed for their execution. She prays that they be declared void and of no effect, that the entire proceeds of the policy be awarded to her, and that the other defendants be decreed to have no interest therein. Boddie and Wright by their answer admit most of the allegations of the petition. They do not deny that the purported revocations of the powers of attorney were filed with the plaintiff. They allege that they are entitled to the sums of money for which powers of attorney were given; that they were not procured by fraud, L.R.A.1918C.

but were entered into bona fide, and after full knowledge of every fact which they contain was fully explained and understood by Sarah Threatt before they were signed by her; that they are coupled with an interest, and are irrevocable; that they were given upon a good and valuable consideration, and form a contract of suretyship, for a debt, and the power in each instance is conferred for the purpose of effecting the security, and, whether coupled with an interest or not, is irrevocable; that, at the time and before the powers of attorney were given, Sarah Threatt executed and gave to each of these defendants a contract by which she agreed to answer for the debt or debts of her deceased brother, Willie Threatt, to wit, the expenses for medical services rendered and medicines furnished to him in his last illness by defendant Dr. Boddie in the sum of $48, and the expenses incurred by Julius Wright in furnishing the burial outfit necessary to bury Willie Threatt; that Sarah Threatt is morally as well as legally responsible for the burial expenses of her brother, even if she had not voluntarily in writing made herself responsible for them; that she knew fully all about the writings, which she voluntarily signed, as they were read to her, and it was agreed by her to answer for the debts which respondents had against her deceased brother and his estate. They pray judgment against her for the amount of their claims. On motion, the answer and pleadings of Wright and Boddie were stricken, and the court entered a decree that Sarah Threatt recover the full amount of the policy, with interest. Boddie and Wright excepted.

Mr. H. W. Nalley for plaintiffs in error. Messrs. Grady C. Harris and John R. L. Smith, for defendant in error Threatt:

A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person has to be in writing and supported by a consideration.

Davis v. Tift, 70 Ga. 52; Strickland v. Farmers Supply Co. 14 Ga. App. 661, 82 S. E. 161; Johnson v. Rycroft, 4 Ga. App. 547, 61 S. E. 1052; Beach, Contr. 1896, § 505; Saul v. Southern Seating & Cabinet Co. 6 Ga. App. 843, 65 S. E. 1065; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 910; Russell v. Smith, 97 Ga. 287, 23 S. E. 5.

While a good consideration may support an executed contract, it cannot support an executory contract.

Benjamin & M. Contr. 2d ed. § 19; 9 Cyc. 319; Davis v. Morgan, 117 Ga. 504, 61 L.R.A. 148, 97 Am. St. Rep. 171, 43 S. E. 732; Loudermilk v. Loudermilk, 93 Ga. 443, 21 S. E. 77.

Mr. R. K. Hines also for defendants in error.

Hill, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Did the court err in sustaining the motion to strike, and in dismissing the joint answer of Boddie and Wright, and in entering the judgment to which exception is taken? It appears from the answer that Boddie held an account against the estate of Willie Threatt, for medical attention furnished during the lifetime of Threatt, and that Wright held an account against the estate of Threatt, for expenses incurred in connection with the burial of Threatt. It does not appear that these two accounts were incurred at the request of Sarah Threatt. The bills of particulars attached to the pleadings were made out against "Willie Threatt, Dr.;" but it was averred that at the time and before the powers of attorney were given to Boddie and Wright by Sarah Threatt, she gave to each of them a contract in writing in which she agreed to answer for the debt or debts of her deceased brother, Willie Threatt. These writings bear date ten days after the date of the itemized accounts of Boddie and Wright. It is insisted that the written contracts were bona fide and voluntarily entered into by Sarah Threatt to answer for the debts of her brother which Boddie and Wright held against him and his estate, and were binding on her. The one given to Boddie was in part as follows: "I hereby agree to pay to Dr. W. F. Boddie the sum of forty-eight ($48) dollars, the same being the amount due him by my deceased brother, Willie Threatt, late of Monroe county, Georgia, who died on the 17th day of April, 1915."

It seems clear from the facts in this case that Sarah Threatt was not originally liable for these accounts of the codefendants. It is true she subsequently entered into a written promise to pay these claims, and gave powers of attorney authorizing the codefendants to collect certain sums due her by the insurance company, and to have such sums applied to their claims; but the powers of attorney were subsequently revoked by her. A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, in order to be binding, must be in writing (Civ. Code, § 3222, ¶ 2), and be supported by a consideration. It is nudum pactum unless some benefit accrues to the debtor or to the promisor. Civ. Code, § 4241; Davis v. Tift, 70 Ga. 53 (2), 56; Russell v. Smith, 97 Ga. 287 (1), 23 S. E. 5; Johnson v. Rycroft, 4 Ga. App. 547 (2c), 61 S. E. 1052; Beach, Contr. (1896) § 505; 9 Cyc. 319; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 910. The only consideration stated in the written contracts in this case was "the love and affection" which the promisor, Sarah Threatt, had for her deceased brother. It is insisted that this is a sufficient consideration to support the contracts. We think otherwise. While love and affection as a consideration for a written contract to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another may bind the conscience of the maker, it cannot support an executory contract to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, unless some damage flows from the breach, or the contract is supported by a legal consideration in addition to the moral. Davis v. Morgan, 117 Ga. 504, 61 L.R.A. 148, 97 Am. St. Rep. 171, 43 S. E. 732; Loudermilk v. Loudermilk, 93 Ga. 443 (2), 21 S. E. 77. We think the court below was right in striking the answer of the codefendants, and in entering the judgment to which exception is taken.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Love and affection as consideration for executory promise to pay existing debt of another.

- I. Love and affection; in general, 543.
- II. Moral obligation due to relationship, 545.
- III. Promise to pay debt of relative:
  - a. Relationship as consideration:
    - 1. In general, 545.
    - 2. Statute of Frauds, 545.

- IV. New consideration:
  - a. Possession by promisor of debtor's property, 546.
  - b. Forbearance by promisee:
    - 1. In general, 547.
    - 2. As affected by Statute of Frauds, 547.
  - c. Novation of indebtedness, 548.
- V. Miscellaneous, 548.

It is to be noted that this note is limited to cases considering the validity of agreements to pay the existing debt of a relative, where the consideration is love and affection, and it does not include cases involving this point where L.R.A.1918C.

the agreement is contemporaneous with the creation of a debt.

I. Love and affection; in general.

It is a general rule that love and affection is not a sufficient consideration to support an executory promise, without reference to the character of the promise. Cases holding or applying this rule are not within the scope of this note. The following cases, however, are referred to as illustrative of this rule: Kirkpatrick v. Taylor (1867) 43 Ill. 207; Schnell v. Nell (1861) 17 Ind. 29, 79 Am. Dec. 453; Duvoll v. Wilson (1850) 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 487; Fink v. Cox (1820) 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 145, 9 Am. Dec. 191; Kennedy v. Ware (1845) 1 Pa. St. 445, 44 Am. Dec. 145; Tweddle v. Atkinson (1861) 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 1 Best & S. 393, 121 Eng. Reprint, 762, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 265, 4 L. T. N. S. 468, 9 Week. Rep. 781; Pennington v. Gittings (1830) 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 208.

This rule also applies to an executory promise to pay another's existing debt, and such a promise is not binding because of the insufficiency of the consideration, and where it is not in writing it is also invalid under the Statute of Frauds.

In this connection it is to be noted that where the promise is oral, there is involved the question as to whether or not the consideration is of a sufficiency and character not only to support a contract, but to make the promise an original one; whereas, where the promise is in writing, the only question presented is whether or not the promise is sufficient to support a contract.

While the distinction between the two classes of cases is not always maintained, it is nevertheless a valid one.

It is, of course, a general rule that any consideration, either of benefit to the promisor or of detriment to the promisee, is sufficient to sustain a contract, but where the question is presented as to the validity of an oral promise to pay another's debt, a consideration which would be sufficient to sustain a contract is not necessarily sufficient to remove the promise from the operation of the Statute of Frauds.

In the majority of cases considering the matter, where the promise to pay the debt of a relative is an oral one, it does not clearly appear whether the relationship is held an insufficient consideration for the promise, on the ground that it would be insufficient to support an ordinary promise if in writing, or whether it is insufficient because of the operation of the Statute of Frauds. See further on this point, infra, III. a, 2, "Statute of Frauds."

As heretofore suggested, the consideration in such a case must be not only sufficient to sustain an ordinary contract, but also of such character as to make the promise an original one. If it is a collateral promise, it is void within the Statute of Frauds without reference to the sufficiency of the consideration.

WRIGHT v. THREATT, ante, 541, is authority for the rule that, where the only consideration for an executory promise to pay the debt of another is love and affection, and no benefit accrues to the promisor, the agreement is nudum pactum and unenforceable.

Bret v. J. S. (1600) Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 756, 78 Eng. Reprint, 987, holds that while love and affection is not, in and of itself, a sufficient consideration for an agreement by a widow to pay for past support furnished her minor son, the further agreement of the promisee to continue to furnish board and maintenance for such son constitutes a sufficient consideration for the entire promise.

It is, however, sufficient consideration for a note by a widow to show that it was given out of respect to the memory of her deceased husband, and to secure a debt lawfully due by him. Ridout v. Bristow (1830) 1 Crompt. & J. 231, 148 Eng. Reprint, 1404, 1 Tyrw. 84, 9 L. J. Exch. 48; Nelson v. Searle (1838) 3 Jur. 290, 4 Mees. & W. 795, 150 Eng. Reprint, 1643, 1 Horn & H. 456, 8 L. J. Exch. N. S. 305; Searle v. Waterworth (1838) 2 Jur. 745, 6 Dowl. P. C. 684, 4 Mees. & W. 9, 150 Eng. Reprint, 1321, 1 Horn & H. 281.

Ordinarily proof of relationship between the promisor and the debtor does not, per se, furnish evidence of that degree of moral obligation sufficient to maintain an action on an express promise to pay a debt. Dodge v. Adams (1837) 19 Pick. (Mass.) 429 (promise by father to pay for board theretofore furnished to minor children without his knowledge or request).

In this regard it has been held that for sentimental reasons, or from the very highest moral motives, a mother may have been moved to pay her son's debt, but the law does not enforce such a purely moral obligation, if she promised to pay the debt to induce the promisee to refrain from his announced intention to attach the son's property, no pecuniary benefit coming to her as a consideration for the promise, to remove the promise from the operation of the Statute of Frauds, although there was a consideration for the promise in the legal sense of that term, as such consideration may be either a benefit going to the promisor or a detriment to the promisee.

Where there was no benefit to the promisor, but there was a detriment to the promisee, in that he refrained from suing by attachment, by which means he might have collected all or part of his debt, his foregoing an intended suit, regardless of its results, may be taken as a relinquishment of such a valuable right as to constitute a valid consideration; but while the detriment or loss to the promisee is a good consideration, it is not a sufficient consideration to take a verbal promise to answer for the debt of another out of the Statute of Frauds. Waggoner v. Davidson (1915) 189 Mo. App. 345, 175 S. W. 232.

II. Moral obligation due to relationship.

The general question as to moral obligation being a consideration for a promise, including a promise to pay the existing indebtedness of a relative, is considered in notes appended to Trimble v. Rudy, 53 L.R.A. 353, and Muir v. Kane, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 520.

III. Promise to pay debt of relative.

a. Relationship as consideration.

1. In general.

The rule that love and affection is not, in and of itself, a sufficient consideration to support an executory promise to pay the existing debt of another, finds support not only in the few cases that specifically deal with the question from the standpoint of love and affection as a sufficient consideration, but it is also supported by the following cases, which, while not making a specific point of the love and affection one relative may be supposed to bear for another, nevertheless hold that an executory promise by one relative to pay another's indebtedness is not based upon a sufficient consideration, and hence is not binding: Martin v. Black (1852) 21 Ala. 721 (promise by mother to pay claim against estate of deceased son, where not beneficial to her); Cook v. Bradley (1828) 7 Conn. 57, 18 Am. Dec. 79 (promise by adult son to pay existing debt of indigent father for necessities if the father did not); State Bank v. Livingston (1913) 182 Ill. App. 529 (note given by a widow and heir in payment of claim against husband's estate, where the claim had not been filed against the estate within the prescribed period of time, it not appearing that the widow and heir had received any of the decedent's property); Vehon v. Vehon (1897) L.R.A.1918C.

70 Ill. App. 40 (note by son for amount of father's debt where the latter was not released or the time of payment extended); Gilbert v. Wilbur (1908) 105 Mo. 74, 72 Atl. 868 (note by mother for existing indebtedness of a minor son, who was not released or the time of payment extended); Schroeder v. Fink (1883) 60 Md. 436 (agreement by son to become responsible for indebtedness of deceased father, who left no estate out of which the indebtedness could have been realized); Beasten v. Hendrickson (1876) 44 Md. 609 (agreement by wife to pay debt of husband); Widger v. Baxter (1906) 190 Mass. 130, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 436, 76 N. E. 509 (note of wife as security for her husband's debt); Kircher v. Sprenger (1895) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 144 (note given by widow for husband's debt).

2. Statute of Frauds.

Where promises to pay a relator's debt have been oral, in the following cases they have been held to be within the Statute of Frauds and void without apparently making any particular point of the relationship existing between the promisor and the debtor, although the existence of this relationship has been deemed of sufficient importance to be mentioned by the court. Cases of this kind, therefore, lend some, although perhaps doubtful, support to the rule that the relationship existing between the promisor and the debtor does not form a sufficient consideration to remove an oral promise to pay a relative's debt from the operation of the Statute of Frauds: Connerat v. Goldsmith (1849) 6 Ga. 14 (oral promise by husband to pay for goods theretofore purchased by wife); Zwinge v. Scarlett (1915) 88 N. J. L. 13, 96 Atl. 72 (oral promise by wife to pay debt of husband); Youngs v. Shough (1835) 15 N. J. L. 27 (oral promise by son to pay mother's funeral expenses); Ellison v. Wisheart (1867) 29 Ind. 32 (oral promise by son to pay mother's debt); Chandler v. Davidson (1843) 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 367 (oral promise by a widow to pay the debt of her husband is within the Statute of Frauds, even though there may have been a moral obligation resting upon her to pay the debt); Thwaites v. Curl (1846) 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 472 (oral promise by widow to pay debt of husband contracted for erecting a house upon land in which she had a dower interest); Miller v. Payne (1885) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 296 (abstract) (promise by widow to pay husband's debt); Lyell v. Walbach (1910) 113 Md. 574, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 741, 77 Atl.

1111 (oral promise by wife to pay existing debt of husband); Barker v. Thayer (1914) 217 Mass. 13, 104 N. E. 572 (oral promise by wife to pay for repairs to property owned by her mother, which were charged to her husband, although subsequently to the promise she acquired an interest in the property); Dexter v. Blanchard (1865) 11 Allen (Mass.) 365 (oral promise by father to pay debt of minor son in consideration of forbearance by the promisee is within the Statute of Frauds); Feist v. Root (1915) 189 Mich. 595, 155 N. W. 491 (oral agreement by husband to pay debt of his wife); Goodman v. Felcher (1898) 116 Mich. 348, 74 N. W. 511 (oral agreement by wife to pay existing debt of husband, although it was a lien upon property upon which she held a second mortgage); Buck v. Haynes (1889) 75 Mich. 397, 42 N. W. 949 (oral promise by wife to pay for medical services rendered and to be rendered to her husband); Speckmann v. Foote (1912) 138 N. Y. Supp. 380 (oral promise by wife to pay for necessities for which her husband was primarily liable); Bauer v. Ambs (1911) 144 App. Div. 274, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1024 (oral promise by wife to pay existing debt of her husband); Ruhl v. Heintz (1904) 97 App. Div. 442, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1031 (oral promise by wife to pay for board theretofore furnished for her husband and daughter); Brennan v. Chapin (1892; Com. Pl.) 46 N. Y. S. R. 768, 19 N. Y. Supp. 237 (oral agreement by husband to pay wife's debt); Travis v. Scribia (1877) 12 Hun (N. Y.) 391 (oral promise by wife to pay for trees bought by her husband and set out upon her land, where the trees were charged and the credit extended to her husband); Lennox v. Eldred (1873) 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 410 (oral promise by widow to pay husband's debt); Felder v. Walker (1886) 24 S. O. 596 (oral agreement by wife to pay debt of her husband); Davenport v. Rutledge (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 187 S. W. 988 (oral promise by wife to pay debt of husband for medical services rendered their child); Fletcher v. Puckett (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 170 S. W. 831 (oral agreement by father to pay debt of son); Fisher v. Lutz (1911) 146 Wis. 664, 132 N. W. 592 (oral promise of father to pay debt of minor son).

IV. New consideration.

a. Possession by promisor of debtor's property.

While no attempt has been made to L.R.A.1918C.

make this note exhaustive of the question as to the effect of other considerations to validate an agreement by one relative to pay the existing indebtedness of another, the following cases are referred to as illustrative of the extent of the rule that an agreement to pay the existing debt of a relative, where based upon other valuable considerations, is a valid and binding obligation to the same extent as though the promise were made by a stranger in blood.

For example, it has been held that where the promisor was in possession of property of a relative, his agreement to pay the indebtedness of such relative, whether to prevent the property from being used by the creditor to liquidate his claim, or where his agreement is based upon the fact of his possession and his duty to use the property for the benefit of the creditors of the owner, is sufficient consideration to support the promise: Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Wright (1900) 44 C. C. A. 421, 105 Fed. 155 (note by heirs in payment of debt of their ancestor, although it was not a lien upon the estate); Whelan v. Swain (1901) 132 Cal. 389, 64 Pac. 560 (note by daughter to creditor of mother, who had conveyed property to the daughter when she was insolvent); McIntire v. Schiffer (1903) 31 Colo. 246, 72 Pac. 1056 (agreement by a wife to borrow money on land conveyed to her by her husband, and pay his note with the proceeds); Harris v. Harris (1899) 180 Ill. 157, 54 N. E. 180 (note by son at the request of his father, to cover a debt of the latter, where the son had in his custody a large amount of the father's property); Coquard v. Union Depot Co. (1881) 10 Mo. App. 261 (agreement by husband to pay debt of wife if her trunk were forwarded to him); Rounsevel v. Osgood (1896) 68 N. H. 418, 44 Atl. 535 (agreement to pay for medical services theretofore rendered the parents, where the promisor, in consideration of the conveyance to her of certain property, had theretofore contracted with her parents to support them); Milburn Mfg. Co. v. Tucker (1889) 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 552 (agreement by son to pay deceased father's debt for certain property, of which the son had taken possession, in consideration of the promisee permitting him to retain the property); Roundy, P. & D. Co. v. Baldwin (1915) 161 Wis. 342, 154 N. W. 364 (agreement by father to continue son's business which had been turned over to him, until all obligations of the son were liquidated).

An oral promise by a widow who received her husband's estate, to pay the latter's note if it was not filed as a claim against his estate, is valid and not within the Statute of Frauds. Crawford v. King (1876) 54 Ind. 6; Templeton v. Bascom (1860) 33 Vt. 132.

Compare with Watson v. Reynolds (1875) 54 Ala. 191, holding that a note by a widow for her deceased husband's debt, taken in payment thereof, or to secure forbearance, is not based upon a valid consideration, although the widow was in possession of the personal and real estate of the deceased, no administration having been granted upon his estate.

b. Forbearance by promisee.

1. In general.

It has been held that forbearance upon the part of the creditor is a sufficient consideration to support an agreement to pay the debt of a relative: Rohrbacher v. Aitken (1904) 145 Cal. 485, 78 Pac. 1054 (forbearance by creditor to prosecute claim against debtor's estate is a sufficient consideration to support a note by the widow and children of the deceased for the amount of the claim); Emerson v. Sheffer (1906) 113 App. Div. 19, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1057 (agreement by the creditor to forbear is a sufficient consideration to support a note by the wife and son to secure the payment of a draft owing by the husband); Wicks v. Metcalf (1917) 83 Or. 693, L.R.A.1918A, 493, 163 Pac. 988 (note executed by a wife for her husband's debt to secure an extension of time for its payment); Galena Nat. Bank v. Ripley (1909) 55 Wash. 615, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993, 104 Pac. 807 (note by son in consideration of forbearance by promisee to prosecute claim against the promisor's father's estate).

2. As affected by Statute of Frauds.

It has been held that an oral promise by a father to pay a note of the son which was not surrendered or canceled is within the Statute of Frauds where no benefit accrued to the promisor, although forbearance was thereby procured. This holding is based upon the ground that where the collateral undertaking is not the inducement to the creation of the debt, there must be some further consideration shown having an immediate respect to such liability, for the consideration of the original debt will not attach to the subsequent promise. Westheimer v. Peacock (1856) 2 Iowa, 528. L.R.A.1918C.

To the same effect are: Schaafs v. Wentz (1897) 100 Iowa, 708, 69 N. W. 1022 (holding that an oral promise by a father to pay the debt of a deceased son-in-law if the creditor would not file his claim against the estate is collateral because not supported by a sufficient consideration where no benefit accrued to the promisor, and the promisee suffered no loss, since the son-in-law's estate was insolvent, and he would have obtained nothing on his claim had he filed it); Frohardt Bros. v. Duff (1911) — Iowa, —, 132 N. W. 31 (holding that an oral promise by a father-in-law to pay the debt of his son-in-law is within the Statute of Frauds, even though the promisee forbore to attach property of the promisor upon which the promisee had a lien, it not appearing that the lien was a valid one); Waggoner v. Davidson (1915) 189 Mo. App. 345, 175 S. W. 232 (holding to be invalid an oral promise by a mother to pay the debt of her son, to induce the creditor not to attach the son's property); Beard v. Hardy (1901) 17 Times L. R. (Eng.) 633 (holding that an oral promise by a wife to pay the existing debt of her husband is within the Statute of Frauds, where the only consideration was forbearance of legal proceedings against the husband).

An oral promise by a wife to pay the husband's debt in consideration of the forbearance of a levy of an attachment upon his property is not based upon a sufficient consideration, and is within the Statute of Frauds. Mitchell v. Miller (1898) 25 Misc. 179, 54 N. Y. Supp. 180.

And an oral promise by a wife to pay for goods sold her husband, in consideration of the promisee delivering the balance of the goods to the husband, is within the Statute of Frauds, and not based upon a sufficient consideration. Jeffrey v. Alyea (1916) 36 Ont. L. Rep. 391, 30 D. L. R. 341, 10 Ont. Week. N. 77.

Also an oral agreement by a widow to pay for goods theretofore furnished her husband in consideration of an agreement to furnish her with goods on credit is not based upon a sufficient consideration, and is within the Statute of Frauds. Cardeza v. Bishop (1900) 54 App. Div. 116, 66 N. Y. Supp. 408.

And it has been held that an oral promise by a father to pay for board furnished and to be furnished to his adult son is based upon a sufficient consideration, the consideration being the agreement to continue to furnish board, but it is nevertheless invalid under the Statute of Frauds. Loomis v. Newhall (1833) 15 Pick. (Mass.) 159.

c. Novation of indebtedness.

Where the subsequent agreement to pay a relative's debt amounts to a novation and a substitution of the promisor's debt for that of the relative, this constitutes a sufficient consideration to support the promise: Henderson v. Gilliland (1914) 187 Ala. 268, 65 So. 793 (indorsement by a mother to her son of notes payable to herself, to enable him to use the same to secure the payment of his notes); Vandeventer v. Davis (1909) 92 Ark. 604, 123 S. W. 766 (note given for goods delivered to the children of the maker); Lomax v. Colorado Nat. Bank (1909) 46 Colo. 230, 104 Pac. 85 (note given in settlement of brother's defalcation); Deering v. Veal (1904) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1809, 78 S. W. 886 (surrender of husband's note is a sufficient consideration to support a note of the wife, given in payment thereof); Matthews v. Williams (1873) 25 La. Ann. 585 (a note by a son in payment of notes of the father, barred by the Statute of Limitations, is based upon a sufficient consideration); Cawthorpe v. Clark (1912) 173 Mich. 267, 138 N. W. 1075 (note by a widow is based upon a sufficient consideration where it is given in payment of interest due on a note by her deceased husband, if it is accepted in payment of the interest and the amount is indorsed upon the note, and this is true although it does not appear that the husband left an estate, or that there was any forbearance granted by the creditor); American Wire & Steel Bed Co. v. Schultz (1904) 43 Misc. 637, 88 N. Y. Supp. 396 (agreement by a mother to pay the debt of her son, in consideration of the release of the claim against him); Judy v. Louderman (1891) 48 Ohio St. 562, 29 N. E. 181 (note by a father in payment of a note of his deceased son, which was surrendered, is based upon a sufficient consideration, although the estate of the son is insolvent); Weber & Co. v. Bishop (1899) 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 51 (agreement to pay debt of brother in order to secure advantage to promisor); Davis v. Blum (1916) 104 S. O. 218, 88 S. E. 465 (agreement to pay costs of suit brought by promisor's wife); Reuter v. Sullivan (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 47 S. W. 683 (cancellation of note against husband is a sufficient consideration for note by the widow); Becker v. Noegel (1917) 165 Wis. 73, 160 N. W. 1055 (note by a mother to pay a note of her son, indorsed as accommodation maker by the father, since deceased, is based upon a sufficient consideration where the note is surrendered and the estate of the father is released from liability thereon); La Touche v. La Touche (1865) 11 Jur. N. S. 271, 3 Hurlst. & C. 576, 159 Eng. Reprint, 657, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 85, 11 L. T. N. S. 773, 13 Week. Rep. 563 (note given by wife in renewal of note given by husband and wife for husband's debt is based upon a sufficient consideration).

A note by a widow to cover such of her husband's debts as the creditor is unable to collect from his estate has been held to be valid where based upon the agreement of the creditor to withdraw objections to the allowance to her and her children of a year's support from the husband's estate. Golding v. McCall (1908) 5 Ga. App. 545, 63 S. E. 706.

V. Miscellaneous.

A promise to pay a relative's debt may put the promisee in a worse position than he would be in if the promise had been by a stranger in blood; as, where the relation between the promisor and the debtor is such as to indicate that the debtor may have brought undue influence or duress to bear upon the promisor to secure the promise, the promise is void, although supported by a sufficient consideration. For example, a note by a wife and daughter for the husband's debt, secured by the husband through misrepresentation and coercion, is invalid. Cox v. Adams (1904) 35 Can. S. C. 393, 25 Can. L. T. Occ. N. 25. No attempt has been made to gather the cases bearing upon the validity of a note in payment of another's debt as affected by its being secured by duress or fraud.

Where the widow undertakes to escape responsibility on a note given in payment of notes against her deceased husband and one against herself, the burden of proof is upon her to show that there was no valid consideration for the note, by showing that she was not liable for the payment of the husband's indebtedness and had not received all of his property as distributee. Vaughn v. Bass (1914) 10 Ala. App. 388, 64 So. 543.

A. G. S.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

MIRAMON LUCERO

v.

JOHN B. McMANUS, Superintendent of
New Mexico State Penitentiary.

(— N. M. —, 168 Pac. 713.)

Criminal law — suspension of sentence
— notice of revocation.

A convict is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard upon the question as to whether he has violated the conditions upon which the sentence against him has been suspended, where, as in this case, the suspension was during good behavior, which necessarily involves a question of fact. In proceedings to determine such a question, no particular formalities need be observed, and the convict is not entitled to a jury trial, except upon the question of his identity with the person originally sentenced, if such question is raised.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, II. b; IV. g; Jury, I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 12, 1917.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure petitioner's release from custody to which he had been committed for larceny of a horse. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. B. Renehan, for petitioner:

Breach of a condition of a suspended sentence cannot be arbitrarily adjudged, but the convict is entitled to be heard.

Alvarez v. State, 50 Fla. 24, 111 Am. St. Rep. 106, 39 So. 481, 7 Ann. Cas. 88; People v. Moore, 62 Mich. 496, 29 N. W. 80; 1 Bailey, Habeas Corpus, 199; People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L.R.A. 285, 50 N. W. 310; Conlon's Case, 148 Mass. 168, 19 N. E. 164; State ex rel. O'Connor v. Wolfer, 53 Minn. 135, 19 L.R.A. 783, 39 Am. St. Rep. 582, 54 N. W. 1065, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 487.

The conditions annexed to the pardon of a convicted criminal cannot be enforced after the expiration of his sentence.

Re Prout, 12 Idaho, 494, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1064, 86 Pac. 275, 10 Ann. Cas. 199; Ex parte Clendenning, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1041, note; Ex parte Kelly, 155 Cal. 39, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 337, 99 Pac. 368.

Mr. Harry S. Bowman, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Relator has shown no cause upon which his discharge should be ordered.

Re Lujan, 18 N. M. 310, 137 Pac. 587.

Headnote by PARKER, J.

Note. — As to power of court to suspend sentence or stay execution of sentence, see annotation following this case, post, 551. L.R.A. 1918C.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it must be presumed that the court acted regularly and upon valid and legal grounds.

3 Cyc. 820; 12 Cyc. 887.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On April 29, 1913, the petitioner was sentenced to serve a term in the penitentiary of not less than two, nor more than three years, upon the plea of guilty under an indictment in Bernalillo county charging the larceny of a horse. The judgment of the district court was suspended during the good behavior of the defendant. Thereafter, on November 2, 1915, an indictment was returned in Lincoln county against the petitioner and others, charging them with the larceny of twelve horses. Thereafter, on May 18, 1916, a certified copy of the indictment in Lincoln county was filed in the original cause in Bernalillo county, and thereupon the court found that the petitioner had violated the conditions upon which the sentence theretofore pronounced against him was suspended, and ordered that said sentence be enforced against the petitioner, and that commitment be issued upon the judgment, which was done. The petitioner was arrested and brought to the penitentiary, where he now is confined. Petitioner thereupon sued out a writ of habeas corpus in this court, and the same has been argued and submitted.

Counsel for petitioner make two contentions in the case: First, upon the determination of the question as to the breach of the condition of a suspended sentence, the defendant is entitled to be heard; second, a suspended sentence cannot be enforced after the time for which the sentence was originally imposed has expired.

1. The second contention above stated is foreclosed by a previous holding of this court in Re Lujan, 18 N. M. 310, 137 Pac. 587. In that case the defendant was committed to the penitentiary after the time that his sentence would have expired had he served the same. We held that the fact that the time covered by the sentence had expired was immaterial, and that the sentence might be enforced at any time thereafter upon the breach of the conditions upon which it was suspended. We see no reason to depart from the holding in that case.

2. It appears that the proceedings leading to the issuance of the commitment against the petitioner were entirely ex parte. So far as it appears from the record he was not present in person or by counsel, and had no hearing as to whether he had breached the condition. Counsel on each side state that there is no precedent to be found in the books touching this proposition. Counsel for petitioner likens a suspended sentence to a conditional pardon, and cites authority to the effect that where a man has been conditionally pardoned, and is alleged to have violated the conditions of his pardon, his guilt must be established in due form of law, and by the same processes as apply in other cases.

Alvarez v. State, 50 Fla. 24, 111 Am. St. Rep. 102, 39 So. 481, 7 Ann. Cas. 88, was a case of a conditional pardon. It appears that in that case the petitioner was arrested by the sheriff for having violated the conditions of his pardon upon the request of the state board of pardons. There was no authority in the state board of pardons to ascertain or determine whether or not there had been a violation of, or noncompliance with, the conditions of the pardon, or to rearrest the convict and order the execution of the original sentence. The court held that the order made by the board of pardons undertaking to judge of the violation of the conditions of the pardon and ordering the recommitment of the petitioner was a nullity. The conditional pardon granted to the petitioner, however, in express terms, authorized any sheriff of the state to rearrest him upon his violating the conditions of the pardon, and the court held, therefore, that it became the duty of the sheriff, notwithstanding the nullity of the order of the board of pardons, to arrest the petitioner and detain him until such alleged violation could be inquired into and determined by the proper authorities, and to bring such alleged violation promptly to the attention of some court of general criminal jurisdiction to be there disposed of. The case was heard in the lower court upon a writ of habeas corpus, and the Florida supreme court held that in that proceeding the court below should have instituted an inquiry as to the truth of the alleged violation of the conditions of the pardon. The inquiry not having been made, the case was reversed and remanded to the lower court with directions that in the habeas corpus proceedings it should make inquiry into the truth of the alleged violation of the conditions of the pardon, and if the violation was found to exist, that the petitioner be remanded to custody; or if such violation should not be established, he should be discharged; and that the defendant in the meantime remain in custody, unless he give a certain prescribed bond for his appearance before the court below. The court quotes from and relies upon 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 959 et seq.

In People v. Moore, 62 Mich. 496, 29 N. W. 80, it was held that a statute providing for the rearrest and remanding of the convict L.R.A.1918C.

without warrant upon the alleged violation by him of the conditions of his pardon, without a preliminary examination, was unconstitutional and void. The holding is based upon the proposition that such a proceeding is a violation of the constitutional guaranty against deprivation of liberty without due process of law. The court says: "When a person has been set at liberty under the pardon or the commutation of his sentence by the executive, he becomes once more a full citizen, clothed with all the rights, privileges, and prerogatives that belong to any other free man. He cannot be sent out half free and half slave. . . . And, in order to remand and confine him in prison again, the fact of the violation of such condition must be established by the due administration of the law, as in other cases of the violation of the penal statutes."

In State ex rel. O'Connor v. Wolfer, 53 Minn. 135, 19 L.R.A. 783, 39 Am. St. Rep. 582, 54 N. W. 1065, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 487, the petitioner had been pardoned on condition that he immediately leave, and remain without, the state. After his release he directed his wife to dispose of his property and to join him. She sold the property as directed and met him for the purpose of leaving the state, and as they were about to take the train, she was stricken with paralysis. He gave her such attention as he could and concealed himself in the vicinity to avoid the public. Three days later, while endeavoring to reach a train and take passage out of the state, he was arrested and placed in confinement on the theory that he had forfeited the benefit of his pardon by noncompliance with its condition. The court, in an opinion by Mitchell, J., held that the uniform practice, both English and American, except where otherwise provided by statute, has been that, upon complaint that the prisoner has not performed the condition of his pardon, a warrant is issued, upon which he is arrested and committed to jail until he can be brought before the court for a hearing; that thereupon an order, rule, or some such process, the form of which is not very material, issues by the court in which he was convicted, or some superior court of criminal jurisdiction, and he is brought before the court to show cause why execution should not be awarded against him on his original sentence. On all matters touching the question whether he has failed to perform the condition of his pardon, the prisoner is entitled to be heard, just as he was entitled to be heard why sentence should not be passed upon him when he was originally brought before the bar for sentence. The court further held that it was competent for the prisoner in such cases to present facts constituting an excuse for nonperformance of the strict terms of the condition. The court further held that the prisoner was not entitled to the verdict of a jury as a matter of right, except upon the question as to whether he is the same person who was convicted. The court criticizes People v. Moore, supra, in that it fails to distinguish in regard to some pertinent matters. In the Michigan case it is said that the convict must be arrested and tried in the same manner as in criminal cases, that is, upon an indictment and by a jury, before he can be recommitted. This, the Minnesota court points out, is erroneous. The court shows that, if the violation of the conditions of the pardon is a crime by statute, and if the person is charged with that crime, then he necessarily would have to be convicted the same as of any other crime. But the nonperformance of the condition of the pardon is not a criminal offense, and may be determined by the court itself. The court cites People v. Potter, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 47, where the cases, both English and American, are cited and commented upon.

In Ex parte Brady, 70 Ark. 376, 68 S. W. 34, the petitioner brought habeas corpus on having been arrested and recommitted upon the proclamation of the governor revoking a conditional pardon. The condition attached to the pardon was that he should refrain from selling liquor without a license. He was tried and convicted of selling liquor without a license subsequent to the pardon. The court held that, while it was more regular to have first brought Brady before the circuit court to show cause why the judgment should not be enforced against him, still the failure to do so was an irregularity which furnished no ground for his discharge, because it appeared in the habeas corpus proceeding that the pardon had been annulled by his own acts; that is, it appeared by judicial determination that he had sold liquor without a license in violation of the condition.

In People v. Burns, 77 Hun, 92, 28 N. Y. Supp. 300, the court held that it was not competent for the warden to seize and recommit the defendant without a hearing on the question of his violation of the condition of his commutation, and discharged the defendant from the present custody of the warden, but made an order requiring him to show cause forthwith before the same court why he should not be remanded to the state prison under his original sentence for violation of his conditional pardon. Upon the return day of the order, a jury was impaneled and found that the condition of the pardon had been violated. The court held that the court was not required to submit the question of fact to the jury, but its procedure in doing so was not open to objection. This case was affirmed in 143 N. Y. 665, 39 N. E. 21.

Upon principle it would seem that due process of law would require notice and opportunity to be heard before a defendant can be committed under suspended sentence. The suspension of the execution of the sentence gives to the defendant a valuable right. It gives to him the right of personal liberty, which is one of the highest rights of citizenship. This right cannot be taken from him without notice and opportunity to be heard without invading his constitutional rights. Of course, if the terms of the suspension of the sentence are such as to leave open no question of fact, as where it is provided that the sentence is suspended until the further order of the court in its discretion, it may be that no notice or hearing would be required. In such a case the court would retain the right to enforce the sentence at any time in its discretion, to which the defendant may be held to consent when he accepts the benefits of the court's leniency. Just how far, if at all, arbitrary action by the court might be inquired into even in such a case, it is not necessary or proper for us to decide, for we have no such case before us. Here the sentence was suspended during good behavior, which necessarily involves the determination of a question of fact, in which determination the defendant is entitled to be heard. In such a determination the defendant is not entitled to a jury trial any more than upon the allocution at the time of the original sentence, except in case he pleads want of identity of himself and the person originally sentenced, a state of affairs rarely arising.

It follows that the prisoner should be discharged from present custody, but without prejudice to any further action which may be taken in accordance herewith, in the matter of the enforcement of the sentence; and it is so ordered.

Hanna, Ch. J., and Roberts, J., concur.

Annotation—Power of court to suspend sentence or stay execution of sentence.

This note is supplementary to the notes to State v. Abbott, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112; Fuller v. State, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 242; and Re Hart, L.R.A.1915C, 1169. L.R.A.1918C.

As to power to commit after expiration of term of sentence, see the note to Ex parte Clendenning, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1041.

As to revocation for condition broken of conditional pardon or parole without notice or hearing, see the note to Ex parte Patterson, L.R.A.1915F, 541.

Power to suspend sentence—temporarily.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 113; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 242; and L.R.A.1915C, 1169.

In People ex rel. Hirschberg v. Seeger (1917) 179 App. Div. 792, 166 N. Y. Supp. 913, following People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions (1894) 141 N. Y. 288, 23 L.R.A. 856, 36 N. E. 386, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 675, set out in the annotation in 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112, the power to suspend sentence was held to be inherent in the courts.

And the decision in Ex parte Sparks (1913) 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 665, 132 Pac. 1118, set out in the annotation in L.R.A.1915C, 1169, was followed in Beaublin v. State (1917) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 165 Pac. 213, where it was held that judgment need not necessarily be pronounced at the same term of court at which a conviction was had.

In State v. Burnette (1917) — N. C. —, 91 S. E. 364, where one convicted of illegally importing intoxicants consented to waive his right of appeal, and also consented to a suspension of judgment upon the terms and condition that he appear every three months for one year and show that he had not violated the law regulating the importation and use of intoxicating liquors, he was held bound by his consent.

— indefinitely.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 242; and L.R.A.1915C, 1170.

Attention may be called at this point to a decision of the United States Supreme Court, Ex parte United States (Killits) (1916) 242 U. S. 27, 61 L. ed. 129, L.R.A.1917E, 1178, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 355, which, although it only actually decided that a Federal district court is without power to order that the execution of a sentence of imprisonment, imposed by it upon a plea of guilty, be suspended during good behavior upon conditions wholly extraneous to the legality of the conviction, in effect also apparently denies the right of Federal courts to indefinitely suspend the pronouncing of sentence. This case was relied upon in Miner v. United States (1917) — C. C. A. —, 244 Fed. 422, where the power of a Federal court to pronounce sentence several terms after the trial term was involved. The court, L.R.A.1918C.

after stating that the principle was not open to dispute that the imposition of a penalty by sentence is the function of the judicial department, and that relief therefrom by pardon is exclusively within the executive department, said that the questions are, When has the principle been invaded, and what is the effect of its invasion upon the further jurisdiction of the court over an offender? and further continued: "It is now very generally held that the principle is invaded when a court, by an act done either before sentence or after, attempts to pardon a convict, or to parole him when it is not vested with power of parole, or to parole him in a manner different from that provided by law. That such an act is beyond the jurisdiction of a Federal court, and therefore invalid, has lately been decided by the Supreme Court in the Killits Case. There the prisoner had been convicted and sentence had been imposed. The court then ordered 'that the execution of the sentence be, and it is hereby, suspended during the good behavior of the defendant, and for the purpose of this case the term of this court is kept open for five years.' The Supreme Court held the order invalid and directed that it be vacated. While it is no longer questioned that an order of suspension, either of sentence or of the imposition of sentence, in the exercise of a power of pardon or parole not possessed by a court, is invalid, the courts are divided upon the question of the legal effect of such an invalid order upon the continued jurisdiction of a court to impose or enforce a sentence after the term, some holding that jurisdiction is lost by the illegal act, others that it is retained."

— to suspend part.

Supplementing note in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 115.

In State v. Burnett (1917) — N. C. —, L.R.A.1918A, 955, 93 S. E. 473, where a plea of nolo contendere was entered and judgment continued on payment of costs, the court was held not precluded from pronouncing further sentence, but it was stated that, of course, notice should be given and the defendant allowed a hearing.

Statutes regulating suspension.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 116; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 243; and L.R.A.1915C, 1170.

In Ex parte Bates (1915) 20 N. M. 542, L.R.A.1916A, 1285, 151 Pac. 698, a statute authorizing courts in their discretion to suspend any sentence imposed upon persons convicted of felony, upon such terms and conditions as they should deem proper, was held not to encroach upon the constitutional power of the executive to grant reprieves and pardons.

And a like result was reached in Martin v. People (1917) — Colo. —, 168 Pac. 1171, where a statute gave the court power to suspend sentence upon the giving of a bond in cases involving a conviction for nonsupport of children, and provided for enforcement of sentence in case of breach of the conditions of the bond.

In Casper v. State (1916) 100 Neb. 367, 160 N. W. 92, the Act of 1913, providing for suspension of sentence, was held not to extend to convictions for robbery and larceny from the person, and it was held that a court had no power in such cases to suspend sentence and place the defendant on probation.

It has been held that a statute which provides that judgment must be pronounced within not less than two days nor more than five days after the verdict or plea of guilty, but that, for the purpose of hearing and determining a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment, this time may be extended not more than ten days, and that the court may extend the time not more than twenty days to consider the question of probation, and that, if the question of the defendant's sanity is raised, the court may further extend the time until his sanity is determined, in effect provides that the court has no authority to fix the time for pronouncing judgment for a day later than five days after the verdict; that, if a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment is made, the court may, for the purpose of deciding the same, extend the time for ten days, and that, where the question of probation is considered, the court may for that purpose extend the time twenty days; but that the provisions are not cumulative, and that the latest date to which the court is authorized to extend the time for rendering judgment, where present sanity is not involved, is a day more than twenty-five days after the return of the verdict. Rankin v. Superior Ct. (1910) 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718; People v. Creitser (1914) 25 Cal. App. 647, 145 Pac. 109; People v. Okomoto (1915) 26 Cal. App. 568, 147 Pac. 598.

In Rankin v. Superior Ct. (Cal.) supra, it was held that the purpose of the above provisions, and of another section providing that, if judgment is not rendered within the time fixed, or to which it is continued as provided by the act, the defendant shall be entitled to a new trial, was to prevent delays which occurred in criminal cases between the time the verdict was rendered and the time of passing sentence, and that no intention was shown thereby that the lapse of time and failure to render judgment within the time fixed should oust the court of further jurisdiction to proceed in the case, but that it was implied that the court should retain authority to order a new trial and proceed therewith to final judgment; and that, if it should refuse a new trial and render judgment against the defendant after the authorized time had passed, its action would be erroneous, and the judgment would be reversed if an appeal should be taken.

But in People v. Okomoto (Cal.) supra, a judgment pronounced twenty-seven days after conviction was sustained where no objection was made at the time of pronouncing, and no demand was then made for a new trial upon the ground that the legal time limit had expired.

And a defendant is not entitled to a new trial because sentence was postponed beyond the statutory time, where the minutes of the court, as corrected on the defendant's motion, show that the postponement of the pronouncing of sentence was at the request of defendant. People v. Vaughn (1914) 25 Cal. App. 736, 147 Pac. 116, 117.

And it has been held that the fact that the court exceeded its authority by postponing sentence beyond the time limited by the statute, in a case in which the defendant had pleaded guilty, cannot be urged where the defendant subsequently withdrew his plea of guilty, and later entered another plea of guilty and waived time for pronouncing judgment, and the court at once pronounced sentence. People v. Creitser (Cal.) supra.

Under the Texas Suspended Sentence Statute, providing that in no case shall sentence be suspended except when the proof shall show, and the jury shall find in their verdict, that the defendant has never been convicted of a felony, the court has no power to suspend sentence unless a plea for suspended sentence is filed prior to the beginning of the trial; and a recommendation of the jury for suspended sentence is properly ignored where such a plea was not filed, and the recommendation in such a case is mere surplusage. Bessett v. State (1915) 78 Tex. Crim. Rep. 110, 180 S. W. 249.

Under this law the court cannot suspend sentence unless the jury recommend it to do so, and if they fail to agree as to whether sentence should be suspended, the verdict is incomplete and insufficient to support a judgment. Mills v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 137, 168 S. W. 88.

Under this statute the defendant must prove that he has never before been so convicted of a felony, and where he gives no proof of this fact the court should not submit the issue of suspended sentence to the jury. Holland v. State (1916) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 187 S. W. 944; Waters v. State (1917) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 196 S. W. 536.

Under this act the jury must first find whether the defendant has before been convicted of a felony, and if they find in the affirmative no further inquiry can be made; but if they find in the negative they should then consider whether the evidence justifies a suspension of sentence, and this question is not for the court, and it is not therefore error to submit it to the jury. Coleman v. State (1916) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 185 S. W. 13.

The Texas statute with reference to suspended sentence does not apply to convictions for murder, and in a case where the court does not submit the issue of manslaughter, but only that of murder, a refusal to submit a plea for suspension of sentence is proper. Boyd v. State (1915) 78 Tex. Crim. Rep. 28, 180 S. W. 230; Rose v. State (1916) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 186 S. W. 202.

In State v. Fulco (1915) 136 La. 843, 67 So. 925, a statute providing that, in case of a conviction of a misdemeanor, the court might suspend sentence if it should find that the defendant had never before been convicted of a felony or misdemeanor, and that it should permit testimony as to the general reputation of the defendant and as to whether he had been so convicted, was held to relate to the suspension of sentence, and not to the conviction or sentence, and it was held that the sentence of one convicted of a misdemeanor before the passage of the act might be suspended.

And under this act it has been held that a defendant is not estopped and precluded from obtaining the benefit of it by a failure to offer evidence of good reputation during the trial, but that there is no good reason why the judge should not be permitted to consider an application for a suspension of sentence after conviction, and hear evidence as to whether the defendant had ever before been convicted and as to his general reputation. State v. Serio (1916) 138 La. 678, 70 So. 609; State v. Defatta (1916) 138 La. 1092, 70 So. 195.

But under this act the court has no power to suspend sentence without having heard testimony as to the general reputation of the accused, or as to his having before been convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor. State v. Garland (1916) 140 La. 402, 73 So. 246.

Power to sentence after suspension.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 117, and L.R.A. 1915C, 1172.

The decision in State v. Tripp (1914) 168 N. C. 150, 83 S. E. 630, set out in the prior annotation, was regarded as controlling in State v. Johnson (1915) 169 N. C. 311, 84 S. E. 767, where a court which had continued the prayer for judgment "upon condition of good behavior" was held authorized to pronounce judgment and sentence upon breach of the condition.

And in Ex parte Bates (1915) 20 N. M. 542, L.R.A. 1916A, 1285, 151 Pac. 698, it was held that a court having power to make an order suspending the execution of sentence in criminal cases necessarily, upon a violation of such order, has the power to revoke the same and commit the accused.

And in State v. Greer (1917) — N. C. —, 92 S. E. 147, a trial judge was held to have power to suspend sentence in a criminal case upon certain conditions, and to later give it effect upon breach of the conditions. And it was held that it was the judge's right to determine whether there had been a breach of a condition by reason of the defendant's having again violated the law, and that he was not bound by the verdict of a jury acquitting the defendant in another prosecution.

In Com. v. Miller (1916) 63 Pa. Super. Ct. 548, it was held within the power of the court to order the rearrest of a defendant whose sentence, after conviction of streetwalking, had been suspended and probation granted under the Act of June 19, 1911, P. L. 1055, for a failure to comply with the conditions of probation, and to impose sentence without a readjudication of the question whether the defendant was guilty of streetwalking, since the court was merely imposing the sentence which had been suspended at the time her guilt was adjudicated.

In Neace v. Com. (1915) 165 Ky. 739, 178 S. W. 1062, the court was held to have power to sentence at a term subsequent to that at which a conviction was had, and the fact, in a case where the jury had found the defendant guilty and fixed punishment at life imprisonment, that through inadvertence the court failed to pronounce judgment at the trial term, or the clerk to enter it, was held not to materially prejudice the defendant's right where judgment and sentence were pronounced at the following term.

And in Beaubein v. State (1917) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 165 Pac. 213, a judgment and sentence entered over fifty days after a verdict was returned were sustained, it appearing that a motion for a new trial had been pending, and that on the day fixed for pronouncing judgment the defendant was a fugitive.

And in Miller v. United States (1913) 41 App. D. C. 52, where a rule of court provided that each term should, as to any particular case, be continued until the final disposition of any motion seasonably filed therein, it was held that the court, after a verdict of guilty on two indictments which were consolidated and tried together, and an appeal taken from a conviction on one, did not lose jurisdiction to act further with respect to the other by continuing the government's motion for sentence thereon.

In Miner v. United States (1917) — C. C. A. —, 244 Fed. 422, where the power of the court to sentence after postponing sentence for a number of terms was involved, it was held that, if the court's purpose in postponing sentence was incident to the administration of justice within its conceded powers, and its orders were unconditional and for definite periods, the court had jurisdiction to impose sentence at a term after the trial term, and where it appeared that sentence had been regularly postponed from term to term, and recognizances given and appearance made, and that the postponements were made upon application of the defendant, and against objection by the government, and there was nothing to show that the postponements were conditional, it was held that it should not be assumed that the court was actuated by unlawful considerations, but that it would be assumed that the postponements were made for a lawful purpose, and that, this being so, the order of postponement was valid, and that the court had jurisdiction to sentence at a subsequent term.

In People ex rel. Valiant v. Patton (1917) 221 N. Y. 409, 117 N. E. 614, a section of the Criminal Code providing that the court before whom one is convicted and placed on probation may revoke such probation, and upon such revocation, "if the sentence has been suspended, pronounce judgment at any time thereafter within the longest period for which the defendant might have been sentenced," was held in conflict with another section providing that the period of probation in the case of one convicted of a misdemeanor should not exceed two years, and that the court, in case of violation of the probationary terms, might impose any penalties which might have been imposed before placing the defendant on probation; and the court was held not to have lost power to sentence one convicted of a misdemeanor, who could only have been sentenced for a term of one year, by reason of the fact that one year from the time of conviction had elapsed before the probation was revoked and sentence pronounced.

In Ex parte Lawson (1915) 76 Tex. Crim. Rep. 419, 175 S. W. 698, it was held that a trial court had a right to set aside a judgment suspending sentence only upon final judgment of conviction of a felony in another case, and that an order setting aside a judgment suspending sentence, made after a conviction of other offenses in the trial court, but pending appeals thereof, was unauthorized.

It will be noticed that in LUCERO v. MCMANUS, ante, 549, it was decided that a convict whose sentence had been suspended during good behavior was entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard upon the question whether he had violated the condition, as this involved a question of fact; but the court decided that no particular formalities need be observed in determining the question, and that the defendant was not entitled to a jury trial except upon the question of his identity, if this question was raised.

There appears to be little authority on the point involved in this case.

In State v. Burnett (1917) — N. C. —, L.R.A.1918A, 955, 93 S. E. 473, where the right to pronounce further sentence, after continuing judgment on payment of costs, was upheld, the court stated that of course notice should be given to the defendant and a hearing allowed.

It was held in State v. Burnette (1917) — N. C. —, 91 S. E. 364, that, under chap. 180 of the Public Laws of 1907, creating the criminal court of Pasquotank county, hearings as to compliance with the conditions of a suspended sentence were required to be had in open court, and could not be held in the private law office of a justice of the court.

Power to stay execution of sentence.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 119; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244; and L.R.A.1915C, 1173.

In Ex parte United States (1916) 242 U. S. 27, 61 L. ed. 129, L.R.A.1917E, 1178, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 355, a Federal district court was held to have no power, either inherent, at common law, or by statute, to order that the execution of a sentence to imprisonment, imposed by it upon a plea of guilty, be suspended indefinitely during good behavior, upon considerations wholly extraneous to the legality of the conviction.

The right of a trial court to suspend sentence was recognized in Pensacola Lodge v. State (1918) — Fla. —, 77 So. 613, but it was held to have no power to suspend the execution of a sentence already imposed, except for the purpose of giving effect to an appeal, or in cases where cumulative sentences are imposed, and in some cases of necessity or emergency.

And in People v. Boehm (1917) 176 App. Div. 401, 163 N. Y. Supp. 22, it was held that there was no authority in either the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Penal Law, or in any other statutes of New York, which authorized a court to indefinitely suspend the execution of a sentence after it had been pronounced. In this case an order revoking the suspension of execution of sentence, and directing its execution, was upheld, there being no limitation of time by statute within which such an order might be made.

And in People ex rel. Hirschberg v. Seeger (1917) 179 App. Div. 792, 166 N. Y. Supp. 913, the court was held to have no power to suspend the execution of sentence of one convicted of a violation on the Liquor Tax Law, and an order entered in (1917) 100 Misc. 51, 165 N. Y. Supp. 32, vacating an order suspending the sentence of imprisonment imposed, was affirmed.

And in People v. Shattuck (1916) 274 Ill. 491, 113 N. E. 921, it was held that the execution of sentence could not be indefinitely suspended.

And a judge of the superior court was held in Cook v. Jenkins (1917) 146 Ga. 704, 92 S. E. 212, to have no authority to suspend execution of a sentence imposed in a criminal case, except incidentally to a review of the judgment under which the sentence was imposed.

In People v. Von Den Corput (1917) 177 App. Div. 682, 164 N. Y. Supp. 987, where a statute provided that no court or officer other than the governor can reprieve or suspend the execution of a defendant sentenced to the punishment of death, the appellate division was held to have no power to stay the execution of a sentence of one convicted of murder in the first degree.

In People v. Kaiser (1916) 95 Misc. 681, 159 N. Y. Supp. 322, however, the power of the court to suspend the execution of sentence was upheld, and where the execution of a penitentiary sentence was suspended, and no reference was made to a release on probation, the defendant was held to have had the benefit only of a common-law suspension of the execution of sentence, and not of a probation under the statute, and it was held that, upon revocation of the suspension of sentence, it remained only to carry out the terms of the original sentence.

— power to stay execution of part.

In Cook v. Jenkins (1917) 146 Ga. 704, 92 S. E. 212, where a defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor and a sentence was imposed directing that he be confined to the county jail for a term of six months, to be discharged on the payment of a certain fine, and also that he serve a stated time in the chain gang, but that this latter penalty be suspended on condition that the accused should leave the state, it was held that so much of the sentence as imposed the penalties was legal, but that that part which related to the suspension of the penalty of serving on the chain gang was illegal.

In Williams v. State (1916) 125 Ark. 287, L.R.A.1917B, 586, 188 S. W. 826, it was held that a court which sentenced one convicted of murder could not, after he had begun to serve his sentence, suspend it for the purpose of punishing him for contempt for refusal to testify in another case, the court stating that the court was without power to separate the sentence into parts for the purpose of giving time to punish for other crimes.

In State v. Teal (1918) — S. C. — 95 S. E. 69, a statute provided that the circuit judges should have power in their discretion to suspend sentences imposed by them, upon such terms and conditions as in their judgment might be fit and proper, and a suspension of execution of part of a sentence imposed in a prosecution for seduction, on condition that the defendant pay a certain sum per year for the support of the child, was held within the power of the court, and was not invalid on the ground that it was an additional penalty, the court stating that if the condition named for suspension was too hard the defendant might accept the full term of sentence, and that if the condition for suspension was agreeable he might accept it; that in either event no larger penalty was put upon him, but that he had the advantage of election between the penalties.

In State ex rel. Hallanan v. Thompson (1917) — W. Va. —, 93 S. E. 810, a statute providing that trial courts or a justice before whom any person was convicted "might, for good cause shown, release such defendant from such imprisonment, and suspend the payment of fine and costs," taken in connection with other provisions requiring convicts to work on the road, was held to provide for a suspension of so much of a judgment only as required a prisoner to work on the public road, and not to authorize a release of any part of a jail sentence imposed as punishment for an offense. The court stated that it did not construe the statute as authorizing a court to suspend a jail sentence once imposed as a penalty for an offense, and that if this was its meaning it would be void as in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution limiting the power to remit fines and penalties and to grant pardons to the governor.

Power to enforce after stay of execution.

Supplementing notes in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244; and L.R.A.1915C, 1174.

In People v. Shattuck (1916) 274 Ill. 491, 113 N. E. 921, where the court, after conviction and sentence imposing a fine and a term of imprisonment, delayed for six years to act upon the defendant's motion to vacate the order of jail sentence, it was held to have no power to enforce that part of the sentence, as it could not indefinitely suspend the execution of sentence. And in this case, where the defendant was also sentenced to pay a fine and his confinement in jail ordered until the fine was paid, the court was held to have no power to enforce this part of the sentence, it having delayed, as above stated, for six years to act upon the defendant's motion to vacate the order of jail sentence, and having failed to order execution to issue to collect the fine.

L.R.A.1918C.

But in People ex rel. Pasco v. Trombly (1916) 173 App. Div. 497, 160 N. Y. Supp. 67, it was held that the court did not, by suspending the execution of sentence upon condition that the defendant leave the county within ten days and remain away therefrom for ten years, lose jurisdiction to enforce the original sentence, notwithstanding these conditions required proof to show a breach of them. The court stated that it was probably not a valid exercise of discretion to suspend sentence upon condition that the defendant take himself without the jurisdiction of the court, but that the fact that it erred in prescribing a condition did not operate to make the granting of the favor equivalent to a pardon for the offense, and that, the defendant being within the jurisdiction of the court, it was proper at any time to revoke the order suspending the execution of sentence.

In State v. Jenness (1917) — Me. —, 100 Atl. 933, it was held that, under Rev. Stat. chap. 137, § 12, the court has authority to suspend the execution of sentence and place a defendant on probation, and if it finds that he has violated the terms of his probation, to decree the probation ended, and if the case has been continued for sentence, to impose sentence, and in other cases order compliance with the original sentence; but that in cases where sentence has been imposed the court is authorized, on declaring the probation ended, only to order the original sentence executed, and it cannot direct that a mittimus issue after the expiration of a sentence which the defendant is serving in another case.

In State v. Charles (1917) — S. O. —, 93 S. E. 134, where part of the fine and all the penalty of hard labor fixed by a sentence in a prosecution for violating the dispensary law was suspended during good behavior, and the defendant was subsequently convicted by a jury of disorderly conduct, and assault and battery, a judge other than the one which suspended the sentence was held to have jurisdiction to order the suspended portion of the sentence to be carried into effect. The court stated that there was no ex parte hearing; that the defendant was served with notice, and declined to take part in the hearing further than to plead to the jurisdiction; and that he had had his day in court and could not complain.

In Ex parte Taggert (1916) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 158 Pac. 288, the court held that, assuming that a police judge has power to grant paroles or suspend sentence, yet that, before he can make conditions binding upon one convicted, the latter must consent to them, a defendant whose sentence to imprisonment was suspended without his application or consent, until he was convicted of another offense, could not, after the term of imprisonment fixed had expired, be imprisoned for a breach of the condition.

But where a defendant at his own request has obtained a suspension of the execution of his sentence as to imprisonment during his good behavior, he cannot object to an order that the sentence of imprisonment be enforced, although it was made after the period originally fixed had expired. Hunt v. State (1917) — Ind. —, 117 N. E. 856.
J. T. W.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

COUNTY OF SANTA BARBARA, Appt.,
v.
DOMENICA L. JANSSENS et al., Respts.
(— Cal. —, 169 Pac. 1025.)

Officer — increase of salary — payment of assistant.

1. Under a constitutional provision forbidding the increase of the salary of an officer during his term, the county cannot, when the legislature requires a sheriff whose salary is fixed by law to provide a woman caretaker for female prisoners, make appropriation for her compensation out of the public fund.

For other cases, see Officers, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Sheriff — salary — compensation of assistant.

2. A legislative requirement that the sheriff shall designate some suitable woman to have supervision of female prisoners does not affect the operation of a statutory requirement that the sheriff's salary shall be full compensation for all services rendered by him, his deputies, and assistants.

For other cases, see Officers, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Assumpsit — who liable for money paid.

3. Money illegally paid by a county to a sheriff's assistant cannot be recovered from the sheriff under a statute authorizing an action against the person or persons to whom money shall have been paid without authority of law, although the Constitution prohibits the increase of the sheriff's salary during his term of office.

For other cases, see Assumpsit, II. c, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 31, 1917.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Santa Barbara County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover money paid to defendant

Note. — For provision for compensation of additional deputy or assistant as violation of constitutional inhibition of increase of officer's salary during term, see annotation following this case, post, 561.
L.R.A.1918C.

Janssens, without authority of law, for services rendered by her as jail matron. Affirmed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. U. S. Webb, Attorney General, E. W. Squier, Fred H. Schauer, and G. H. Gould, for appellant:

The requirement of § 1616 of the Penal Code for the designation of a jail matron, whether she was regarded as a deputy or a paid employee, created an expense that should have been paid from the sheriff's salary under the existing law.

Crockett v. Mathews, 157 Cal. 157, 106 Pac. 575; Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. 813; State ex rel. Scott v. Trousdale, 16 Nev. 357; Calaveras County v. Poe, 167 Cal. 519, 140 Pac. 23; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 603, 16 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092; Humiston v. Shaffer, 145 Cal. 195, 78 Pac. 651; Elder v. Garey, 19 Cal. App. 776, 127 Pac. 826; Hanson v. Underhill, 12 Cal. App. 546, 107 Pac. 1016; Applestill v. Gary, 18 Cal. App. 387, 123 Pac. 228; Agard v. Shaffer, 141 Cal. 725, 75 Pac. 343.

If it be assumed that § 1616, Penal Code, imposes additional duties upon the sheriff and that to allow him compensation for such additional duties would not work an increase in his compensation within the inhibition of the Constitution, still the county was not liable for the services of the matron, as such expense is not made by the statute a county charge.

State ex rel. Kranich v. Supple, 22 Mont. 184, 56 Pac. 20; Mechem, Pub. Off. 855, 856, et seq.; 29 Cyc. 1422, 1423; Petersen v. Butte, 44 Mont. 401, 120 Pac. 483, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 538; Wight v. Meagher County, 16 Mont. 479, 41 Pac. 271; Humiston v. Shaffer, 145 Cal. 195, 78 Pac. 651; Irwin v. Yuba County, 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35; Jones v. Lucas County, 57 Ohio St. 189, 63 Am. St. Rep. 710, 48 N. E. 882; Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 68 L.R.A. 264, 106 Am. St. Rep. 890, 49 S. E. 633.

The sheriff is liable for a misappropriation of public money in aiding to authorize the payment of these claims.

Huntington County v. Heaston, 144 Ind. 583, 55 Am. St. Rep. 192, 41 N. E. 457, 43

N. E. 651; Jones v. Lucas County, 57 Ohio St. 189, 63 Am. St. Rep. 710, 48 N. E. 882; Calaveras County v. Poe, 167 Cal. 519, 140 Pac. 23; Hartwell v. Waukesha County, 43 Wis. 311; Crossen v. Wasco County, 6 Or. 215.

Messrs. Canfield & Starbuck, for respondents:

Section 1616 of the Penal Code of California is not unconstitutional when interpreted as providing for the rendering by a new employee directly to the county, at the county's expense, of services that were formerly included among the duties of the sheriff.

Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 61 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092; Miner v. Solano County, 26 Cal. 115; Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. 813; Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 22 Pac. 176; Crockett v. Mathews, 157 Cal. 153, 106 Pac. 575; State ex rel. Scott v. Trousdale, 16 Nev. 357; Newman v. Lester, 11 Cal. App. 577, 105 Pac. 785; Reals v. Smith, 8 Wyo. 159, 56 Pac. 690.

Section 1616 of the Penal Code of California, correctly interpreted, provides for the rendering by a new employee directly to the county, at the county's expense, of services that were formerly included among the duties of the sheriff.

Fernandez v. Winnebago County, 53 Wis. 247, 10 N. W. 447; Tulare County v. May, 118 Cal. 303, 50 Pac. 527; United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747; Patton v. Board of Health, 127 Cal. 388, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66, 59 Pac. 702; Lindsey v. Atty. Gen. 33 Miss. 508; Olmstead v. New York, 10 Jones & S. 481; United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. ed. 482; People ex rel. Throop v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673; White v. Alameda, 124 Cal. 95, 56 Pac. 795; Doyle v. Raleigh, 89 N. C. 133, 45 Am. Rep. 677; State ex rel. Lewis v. Board of Public Works, 51 N. J. L. 240, 17 Atl. 112; McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 444; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Wheeler, 136 Cal. 652, 69 Pac. 435; Jones v. Lucas County, 57 Ohio St. 189, 63 Am. St. Rep. 710, 48 N. E. 882; Johnson v. Black, 103 Va. 477, 68 L.R.A. 264, 106 Am. St. Rep. 890, 49 S. E. 633; Irwin v. Yuba County, 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35; Kelley v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 356, 22 Pac. 1110; San Juan County v. Tulley, 17 Colo. App. 113, 67 Pac. 346.

Sloss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Demurrers to the complaint as amended having been sustained, and the plaintiff declining to further amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The facts alleged, taken in connection with certain statutory provisions, present L.R.A.1918C.

this situation: The defendant Nat Stewart was sheriff of the county of Santa Barbara for a term commencing on the 2d day of January, 1912. The defendant the Title Guaranty & Surety Company was the surety on Stewart's official bond. When Stewart took office his salary as sheriff was fixed by the Political Code at $6,000 per annum. Section 4246, subd. 2, amended 1909. Section 4290 of the same Code provided that "the salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title, . . . their deputies and assistants, . . . and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries provided in this title, unless in this title otherwise provided."

There was no provision for payment by the county of any compensation to the deputies or assistants of the sheriff.

Section 1616 was added to the Penal Code by act approved April 15, 1911, after the commencement of Stewart's term. This section reads: "Whenever any female prisoner or prisoners are confined in any county jail in this state, and no regular jail matron has been appointed, there shall be designated by the sheriff some suitable woman who shall have immediate care of such female prisoner or prisoners. Such female prisoners shall be so kept that they cannot see or be seen by, or converse with, any male prisoners confined in said jail, and it shall be unlawful for any male officer or jailer to search the person of any female prisoner, or to enter into the room or cell occupied by any female prisoner, except in the company of such matron or woman having the care of such female prisoner."

During the years 1912, 1913, and 1914, there were female prisoners confined in the county jail of said county, and no regular jail matron had been appointed to have care of them. The defendant Stewart, as sheriff, designated the defendant Domenica L. Janssens to have the immediate care of said female prisoners, and she performed the required duties in reference to the female prisoners so confined. Thereafter she presented for payment claims against the county for her services, and said claims, which aggregated $1,249, were passed and allowed by the board of supervisors. Warrants for the amount of such claims were drawn by the auditor of said county, and the amounts paid by the treasurer to Mrs. Janssens. Each of the claims was indorsed "O. K., R. D. Smith," or "O. K., R. D. Smith, undersheriff." It is alleged that Stewart, as sheriff, requested the board of supervisors to allow the claims, and that R. D. Smith was a deputy of Stewart, and, as such deputy, approved in writing the claims as correct.

By the prayer of its complaint, the county seeks judgment against the defendants for $1,240, the aggregate of such demands, together with 20 per cent damages for the use of said money, and for costs. Pol. Code, § 4005b.

We think the appellant is right in its contention that Mrs. Janssens had no valid claim against the county for the services rendered by her. The question turns, primarily, upon a determination of the legislative intent in enacting Penal Code, § 1616, but a glance at some of our decisions touching the effect of article 11, § 9, of the Constitution, may be of aid in the task of interpretation. The constitutional provision is that "the compensation of any county . . . officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office."

Where, as in the case of the sheriff of Santa Barbara county, the law allows a fixed salary which shall be in full compensation for all services rendered by the officer, and provides that all deputies employed shall be paid by the principal out of such salary, a statute authorizing the appointment of a new deputy to be paid out of the county funds works an increase of the principal's compensation. Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 16 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092; Calaveras County v. Poe, 167 Cal. 519, 140 Pac. 23. Such an increase would, it seems clear, be effected by § 1616, if that section had undertaken to put upon the county the burden of paying for the services of the woman to be designated. We may concede, as is claimed by the respondents, that the Constitution does not prohibit the diminution of the duties of any county officer and the transfer of a part of such duties to some other officer. But nothing of the kind was contemplated by § 1616. The statute does not create an independent office whose incumbent performs functions separate and distinct from those imposed upon the sheriff. The law had always provided that it was the duty of the sheriff, among other things, to "take charge of and keep the county jail, and the prisoners therein" (Pol. Code, § 4157, subd. 6), and that the sheriff is liable for the escape of prisoners in his charge (Pol. Code, § 4163). We cannot believe that the legislature intended to affect this duty or this liability by providing—as in substance it did provide—that actual contact between female prisoners and jailers should be through or in the presence of a woman. The policy of segregating female prisoners had found expression at the time the Codes were first enacted. Penal Code, § 1598, subd. 4, § 1599. Section 1616 L.R.A.1918C.

gave further protection to such prisoners, and was based upon considerations of propriety and decency too obvious to require explanation. The statute did not, however, assume to take such prisoners out of the custody of the sheriff. It merely regulated the manner in which he should perform that part of his duties which had to do with the care of females. We perceive no force in the argument of respondents based on the fact that the section provides that the sheriff shall "designate" some suitable woman. No different meaning could be given to the statute if it declared that the sheriff should "appoint" a woman. Whether "designated" or "appointed," the woman named is an assistant of the sheriff, performing a part of the duties imposed by law upon him.

Section 1616, as it read at the time of the transactions under consideration, was silent with respect to the compensation of the person thus put in charge of female prisoners. We cannot, therefore, assume that the legislature intended, if it had the constitutional power so to do, to take the case out of the operation of the statute (Pol. Code, § 4290) providing that the sheriff's salary shall be in full compensation of all services rendered by him, his deputies, and assistants. By an amendment recently made to § 1616 of the Penal Code (Stat. 1917, p. 240), it is provided that the woman designated shall be paid out of the general fund of the county. We are not called upon in the present proceeding to consider whether this amendment has any validity. It follows that the payments made to Mrs. Janssens were without authority of law and that they may be recovered by the county in this action.

We think, however, that the complaint does not state a cause of action against the sheriff or his surety. Section 4005b of the Political Code, on which this suit is founded, authorizes the district attorney of the county to bring an action against the person or persons to whom money shall have been paid without authority of law. The payments set forth in the complaint were made to Mrs. Janssens. They were not made to the sheriff. It is alleged that the sheriff approved the claims and requested the board of supervisors to allow them. But this is a very different thing from saying that he received the money. The opinion in Calaveras County v. Poe, supra, does contain an intimation that money thus paid to an assistant might be regarded as paid to the principal. The statement was not, however, made positively, and was not the ground upon which the decision was, in fact, based. The recovery in the case cited was held to be authorized by other provisions of law. If there was no liability on the part of the sheriff it goes without saying that no cause of action was alleged against the surety.

The judgment in favor of the defendants Nat Stewart and the Title Guaranty & Surety Company is affirmed. The judgment in favor of the defendant Janssens is reversed.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Henshaw, J.; Melvin, J.; Victor E. Shaw, Judge pro tem.

Annotation—Provision for compensation of additional deputy or assistant as violation of constitutional inhibition of increase of officer's salary during term.

The question of the constitutional prohibition against change of salary during term as affecting fees is considered in note to Gobrecht v. Cincinnati, 23 L.R.A. 609.

As to applicability to nonconstitutional officer of constitutional provision against increase of salary of officer during his term of office, see note to Richie v. Philadelphia, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 289.

As to change of salary of deputy or other subordinate as violation of constitutional provision against change of salary of public officer during term of office, see note to Muskogee County v. Hart, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 388.

The general rule is that where the compensation of a public officer is, by statute, fixed at a lump sum which is to cover the expense of running the office, it is a violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting an increase of salary during such officer's term to authorize the appointment of a deputy or assistant where there was none before, and to provide that the compensation be met from the public fund.

This rule has been applied and a requirement that the services of a deputy or assistant, authorized after an officer's term began, be paid for from the public funds, held invalid as in effect an increase of such officer's salary, in Dougherty v. Austin (1892) 94 Cal. 601, 16 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092 (deputy county clerk); Welsh v. Bramlet (1893) 98 Cal. 219, 33 Pac. 66 (assistant to district attorney); Agard v. Shaffer (1904) 141 Cal. 725, 75 Pac. 343 (assistant to recorder); Humiston v. Shaffer (1904) 145 Cal. 195, 78 Pac. 651 (dictum); Calaveras County v. Poe (1914) 167 Cal. 519, 140 Pac. 23 (copyist to assist county recorder); SANTA BARBARA COUNTY v. JANSSENS, ante, 558; Hanson v. Underhill (1910) 12 Cal. App. 545, 107 Pac. 1016 (deputy recorder); Applestill v. Gary (1912) 18 Cal. App. 385, 123 Pac. 228 (deputy sheriff); Elder v. Garey (1912) 19 Cal. App. 775, 127 Pac. 826 (deputy county clerk); McFad- L.R.A.1918C.

den v. Borden (1915) 28 Cal. App. 471, 152 Pac. 977 (deputy assessor); Conklin v. Woody (1917) 33 Cal. App. 554, 165 Pac. 973 (assistant district attorney); Jefferson County v. Waters (1902) 114 Ky. 48, 70 S. W. 40 (clerk hire); Etsell v. Knight (1903) 117 Wis. 540, 94 N. W. 290 (deputy county clerk and deputy county treasurer); see also People use of Lawrence County v. Adams (1896) 65 Ill. App. 283.

The court in Dougherty v. Austin (Cal.) supra, said that the sum allowed to any given officer being a lump sum, out of which he must pay for the services of all deputies and assistants necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of all the duties of the office, it is evident that his own compensation consists of the residue remaining after payment of such deputies and assistants; and it is equally evident that, just so far as the county assumes the payment of such deputies and assistants, such residue is enlarged and the compensation increased.

As was said by Judge Garoutte in the above case, to construe the constitutional provision against an increase of officer's salary during his term so that such officer's salary could not be increased, but that an act of legislature would be valid which provided that all of his deputies,—men whom he was bound to employ and bound to pay in the absence of such an act,—should be paid by the county, independent of and in addition to his salary, would be to allow that to be done indirectly which could not be done directly, and would be establishing a medium for the practice of the very abuses which the constitutional provision was inserted to destroy.

In all of the above cases, with the exception of the Dougherty Case, the statute authorizing the appointment of a deputy or assistant was enacted during the term of office of the principal.

In the Dougherty Case, it was held that the order of the board of supervisors, made during the term of office of the county clerk, allowing him a deputy whose salary was to be paid by the county, was void, although authorized by a statute in force prior to his election.

But in Nelson v. Troy (1895) 11 Wash. 435, 39 Pac. 974, it was held, disapproving the Dougherty Case (Cal.) supra, that the authorization of a deputy county clerk and providing for his compensation out of the public fund was not a contravention of the constitutional provision against increasing an officer's salary during his term of office, as there was a valid statute in force and effect at the time he took office, authorizing the employment of necessary help who should receive just and reasonable pay for their services. J. H. B.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

DAVE MILLER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF FLORIDA.

(— Fla. —, 77 So. 669.)

Homicide — premeditation — necessity.

Premeditation is an essential element in the crime of murder under the statutes of this state. It should be alleged in the indictment and proved beyond a reasonable doubt at the trial. The mere fact of the killing does not raise a presumption of premeditation such as makes the offense murder in the first degree and casts upon the defendant the burden of showing that it was not. Something more than mere intention to kill must be shown; it is necessary that some circumstances admissible as evidence be shown from which may be legitimately inferred the fact of premeditation. For other cases, see Homicide, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Whitfield and West, JJ., dissent.)

(January 23, 1918.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for De Soto County to review a judgment convicting defendant of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George Leltner and W. D. Bell, for plaintiff in error:

The circumstances surrounding this entire shooting at the bridge were such as would induce a reasonable man to believe that the danger was actual and the necessity real,—sufficient to meet the most rigid law ever enunciated at any time by this court.

Smith v. State, 25 Fla. 517, 6 So. 482; Pinder v. State, 27 Fla. 370, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75, 8 So. 837; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla.

Headnote by ELLIS, J.

Note. — The question whether a finding of premeditation and deliberation essential to murder in first degree may rest upon evidence that, at the time, the defendant was fleeing from the scene of another crime, is discussed in the annotation following this case, post, 566. L.R.A.1918C.

142, 17 L.R.A. 705, 11 So. 550; Alvarez v. State, 41 Fla. 532, 27 So. 40; Green v. State, 43 Fla. 556, 30 So. 656; Olds v. State, 44 Fla. 452, 33 So. 296; Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97; Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896.

The state failed to prove by any competent evidence that the alleged offense was perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or any human being.

Baker v. State, 54 Fla. 12, 44 So. 719; Chisolm v. State, — Fla. —, 76 So. 329; Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909; Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 383; Denham v. State, 22 Fla. 664; Barnhill v. State, 56 Fla. 16, 48 So. 251.

Flight of the accused, while admissible for some purposes, does not tend to prove deliberation or premeditation in the act of the killing.

21 Cyc. 900; State v. Foster, 130 N. C. 666, 89 Am. St. Rep. 876, 41 S. E. 284.

When evidence of unpremeditated design is insufficient a death sentence will be reversed.

Ward v. State, 67 Fla. 174, 64 So. 750.

Messrs. Van C. Swearingen, Attorney General, and C. O. Andrews, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The existence of a premeditated design to effect death may be proved by circumstantial evidence alone, and proof of malice may not be direct and positive, but may be adduced from all the facts attending the killing.

Thomas v. State, 58 Fla. 122, 51 So. 410; Yates v. State, 26 Fla. 484, 7 So. 880.

The circumstances in this case, as brought out by the evidence, show a previously fixed design on the part of the defendant to evade arrest, and to kill, if necessary, anyone who attempted to arrest him.

Hall v. State, 70 Fla. 48, 69 So. 692; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 8th ed. § 328; 4 Bl. Com. 200; Pinder v. State, 27 Fla. 370, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75, 8 So. 837; Seigel v. Long, 169 Ala. 79, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1070, 53 So. 753; Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. p. 602; Miller v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 609, 37

Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 S. W. 925; McPhay v. State, 87 Miss. 456, 40 So. 17; Brooks v. State, 114 Ga. 6, 39 S. E. 877, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 47; People v. Woods, 147 Cal. 265, 109 Am. St. Rep. 151, 81 Pac. 652.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was convicted of murder in the circuit court for De Soto county, and seeks a reversal of the judgment on writ of error.

The assignments of error present the question whether the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of murder in the first degree, an indispensable element of which was a "premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or any human being."

The facts briefly stated with reference to the particular point are, in substance, as follows: The deceased, Henry Wiggins, who was a deputy sheriff, and a negro named Ed Matthews, were, on the night of November 25, 1916, under instructions from the sheriff, guarding Peace river bridge east of Wauchula for the purpose of capturing a negro who had killed another at "Petteway's still," east of Wauchula, a short time before. Both men, Mr. Wiggins and Ed Matthews, were armed with shot-guns. Ed Matthews was the only witness who testified as to the details of the shooting. He said that he and Mr. Wiggins, at about 10 o'clock that night, were standing at the foot of the bridge on the Wauchula side. The witness heard some one walking on the bridge, coming from the east side, with something on his shoulder.

"About that time," the witness testified, "I said, 'That is somebody now.' I was standing just this way (indicating), and this fellow kept walking, and just as he came up and he said 'hold up' the gun fired."

Q. Who said hold up?

A. Mr. Wiggins, and the gun fired.

Q. Where did the gun fire from?

A. From the man that was coming on the bridge.

Q. How many times did he fire?

A. Once.

Q. What did Mr. Wiggins do? What was Mr. Wiggins doing the time the gun fired?

A. He fell. Just as the gun fired the man jumped over in the big ditch at the mouth of the big bridge.

Q. Could you tell who the man was?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he was black or white?

A. No, sir; I could't tell.

L.R.A.1918C.

When the man who fired at Mr. Wiggins ran, Ed Matthews fired four times. The account of his shooting is given in the following words:

Q. How long after that shot—I believe you said that you fired some shots?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?

A. I shot four times.

Q. How long after that?

A. The first shot, I guess, was about two minutes after Mr. Wiggins fell before I fired a gun.

Q. What did you fire at?

A. Just fired at the man that jumped off in the ditch.

Q. You think it was as much as two minutes before you did that?

A. I suppose so.

Q. Then you fired four times in that direction?

A. Four times, twice when he first jumped and then two more.

The defendant testified that he heard no one tell him to halt; that after he had crossed the bridge someone shot at him, and he "shot back that way;" that he was on his way to Wauchula to tell of the "shooting" which had occurred at the mill, and which, on cross-examination, he seemed to admit that he had done.

We think this evidence is insufficient to prove premeditation on the part of the defendant to kill Mr. Wiggins.

Premeditation is an essential element in the crime of murder in this state. In a long unbroken line of decisions this court has so held. At times there have been discussions as to what constitutes premeditation, but at no time has any doubt been expressed that the element of premeditation on the part of the accused to kill should be alleged and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Since the case of Dukes v. State, 14 Fla. 499, this court has held that the fact of killing, merely, does not raise a presumption of premeditation such as makes the offense murder in the first degree and casts upon the prisoner the burden of showing that it was not. See also Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909; Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 383; Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 So. 106; Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232, 9 So. 835; Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665; Keigans v. State, 52 Fla. 57, 41 So. 886; Barnhill v. State, 56 Fla. 16, 48 So. 251. The language as used in the Dukes Case has many times received the approval of this court: "If every homicide shall be presumed to be murder until the perpetrator show that the act is not murder, this emasculates the statute; for the design of the statute is to require that the degree or quality of crime shall be established by the proofs. The common law says the killing is murder; the statute says the unlawful killing is murder, manslaughter, or not criminal at all, according to the facts and circumstances. And so it is to be ascertained from all the facts and circumstances whether any crime has been committed, and it cannot, therefore, be allowed that a man shall be adjudged guilty of the highest crime upon proof of only one of the ingredients, the single act of killing being but one ingredient of the crime. The very terms of the classification of the different degrees of murder and manslaughter, and of justifiable and excusable homicide, require something more than the proof of the killing, because it cannot be determined without a consideration of all the 'facts and circumstances of each case' whether the act be murder or manslaughter, or the criminal intent be entirely wanting."

The statute referred to was the Statute of 1868 upon the subject of homicide, which, with very slight changes not in substance, is the law in this state to-day. See § 3205, Gen. Stat. 1906; Fla. Comp. Laws 1914.

In the case of Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665, the court was divided on a charge given by the trial court defining premeditated design. The charge given was the following: "No specific time is required to constitute premeditation. If the mind of the accused was in a condition to form a purpose, and there was sufficient time for the forming of that purpose, and for the mind to be conscious of that purpose to kill, it is sufficient time to constitute premeditation; and if the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant had fully formed a purpose to shoot and kill Smith, and that he was conscious of that purpose when he fired the shot, they will find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree."

Chief Justice Taylor and Justices Schackleford and Hocker thought that the charge did not afford a proper definition of premeditated design and was erroneous, while Justices Carter, Maxwell, and Cockrell thought it did. And in the case of Stokes v. State, 54 Fla. 109, 44 So. 759, this court said: "Premeditated design is more than an intent to kill."

Mr. Justice Whitfield, concurring, said: "The phrase 'a premeditated design to effect the death' means a design to effect the death that was thought upon for any length of time, however short a time, before the act which effected the death from the premeditated design. The word 'premeditated' has reference to, and is descriptive of, the design that the statute makes an essential element of the crime. A premeditated design to effect the death of a human being is a design to kill a human being, which design was thought upon before the act that unlawfully effected the death. The killer must have thought upon the design to kill during some time, however short, before the fatal act."

Mr. Justice Cockrell prepared a concurring opinion in which he said: "It is admitted that design and intent are practically synonymous."

If so, then premeditated design means premeditated intention. So that something more than intention to kill is necessary to be proven to establish against one the charge of murder in the first degree.

In this case there appears to be no evidence whatsoever of the slightest relevancy that the defendant premeditated the design to kill the deceased, nor that he had any intention an instant before the fatal shot was fired to kill the deceased. The defendant was admittedly at a place where he had a right to be, a traveler on the public road. There is no evidence that the deceased had a warrant for the defendant's arrest, nor that the defendant knew that the deceased was an officer, nor that the deceased knew that defendant was the man whom the deceased was guarding the bridge to arrest, nor that the deceased or Matthews told the defendant that they were officers of the law. The defendant approached the bridge with his shotgun on his shoulder, it was in the nighttime; he was suddenly confronted by two men, both armed with shotguns, and one of them told him to "hold up." He could not tell whether they were white men or not, according to Matthews, the witness. Instantly upon being ordered to "hold up" he fired and ran. The shot happened to kill Mr. Wiggins (if that was the shot which killed him), but from what circumstances could the inference be drawn that the defendant had for any appreciable length of time, deliberated upon or premeditated the intent to kill Mr. Wiggins, assuming that when the shot was fired the defendant intended to kill the deceased? It is contended that the defendant was a fugitive from justice in the sense that he was running away from another crime perpetrated by him that very night at the "still" only a short time before, from which circumstance it is inferred that he intended to kill anyone who attempted to stop him. A little reflection will convince one that the contention is more of an excuse than a reason. In the first place, there was no evidence that a crime had been committed. There was some evidence that a homicide had been committed at the "still" but whether it was murder, manslaughter, justifiable or excusable, does not appear. In the second place, the statement that the defendant was running away from it is purely gratuitous and made directly in the teeth of the only evidence upon the subject. But even if he was running away from crime just committed, is it permissible in law to infer therefrom that he could not, therefore, when accosted on the bridge by two unknown men armed with guns and by them told to hold up, have exercised the right to defend himself against an unlawful attack; that he might not, under circumstances, have thought the attack was an unlawful one, and that he shot to repel it, or that, in fright, he shot to make his escape? Must a man's conscience be void of offense toward God and man before he may insist upon the right of self-defense, or repel an unlawful attack upon him, or resist an attempt to hold him up upon a country road in the nighttime by unknown men armed with shotguns?

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 614, 38 L. ed. 841, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 919, expressed the view that the defendant may lawfully repel an attack upon him, although made by an officer who tries to arrest him, if the defendant did not know that the person trying to make the arrest was an officer. In that case a Cherokee Indian named Starr had been arrested for crime, had forfeited his bail, and was fleeing from arrest. The deceased, an officer of the law, undertook to arrest the Indian who, when attacked by the officer, shot and killed him. Upon the question of the defendant's right to defend himself the learned and venerable judge said: "The intrinsic rightfulness of the occupation or situation of a party, having in itself no bearing upon or connection with an assault, [does not] impose a limitation on the right to repel it;" that a "conscience void of offense toward God and men is not an indispensable prerequisite to justification of action in the face of imminent and deadly peril."

We think that the attempt to infer premeditation on the part of defendant of an intent to kill Wiggins, from the fact that the defendant was running away from a crime which he had a short time before committed, is unfounded in evidence and unauthorized in law, and to uphold a conviction of murder upon such evidence as was adduced in this case would be to tear down the barriers which the people in their sovereign power have raised against the passions of men for the protection of the innocent and the dignity of the law.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and a new trial directed.

Browne, Ch. J., and Taylor, J., concur.

Whitfield and West, JJ., dissenting:

"The unlawful killing of a human being, when perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or any human being, . . . shall be murder in the first degree, and shall be punishable with death." Gen. Stat. 1906, § 3205. Fla. Comp. Laws, 1914.

Premeditated design, in trials for murder, may be established by circumstantial evidence as contradistinguished from positive or direct evidence. Pugh v. State, 55 Fla. 150, 45 So. 1023; Hicks v. State, 25 Fla. 535, 6 So. 441; Yates v. State, 26 Fla. 484, 7 So. 880; Roberson v. State, 45 Fla. 94, 34 So. 294; Thomas v. State, 58 Fla. 122, 51 So. 410.

There is evidence that a homicide had been committed at a "still" not far away, and that the deceased had been directed by the sheriff to guard a bridge where the perpetrator of the homicide might pass. The accused testified that he did the shooting at the still "about half an hour after dark," and that he was going to Wauchula "to tell them about some trouble, shooting, was going on out to the still—tell them the matters about it," "I was intending to tell them about the trouble I had already been in," and that he "got down to the bridge between 8 and 9 o'clock, somewhere like that." The defendant did not tell anyone at Wauchula of the shooting at the still or of the subsequent shooting at the bridge. He escaped. This and other evidence in the transcript, in our opinion, clearly justified a finding by the jury that the defendant, while endeavoring to get away from the scene of his admitted shooting earlier in the evening, and while crossing the bridge, fatally shot the deceased, pursuant to a premeditated design to kill anyone who might intercept him. This would sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree.

Annotation—May finding of premeditation and deliberation essential to murder in first degree rest upon evidence that at the time defendant was fleeing from the scene of another crime.

It is not intended to include cases where the defendant killed one pursuing him in the immediate vicinity of the first crime.

It will be seen that in MILLER v. STATE, ante, 562, it is held that a finding of premeditation essential to murder in the first degree cannot rest upon an inference from the mere fact that at the time the defendant was accosted he was fleeing from the scene of another crime.

This note lies in narrow compass and but few cases have been found within its scope.

In Starr v. United States (1893) 153 U. S. 614, 38 L. ed. 841, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 919, referred to in MILLER v. STATE, Fuller, Ch. J., said of the accused: "This Cherokee, when riding across the country, was entitled to protect his life, although he may have forfeited a bail bond and been seeking to avoid arrest on that account."

It was held that a premeditated or deliberate killing was not shown where the accused, the day after committing a homicide, was walking towards the state line at night to escape from the state and, "at the time of the tragedy, she was being piloted through the dark night by one whom she supposed was her friend. She expected in a few moments to meet another friend, and with these men to go across the state line. The one with her calls out to the other friend, and someone answers. Expecting to meet this friend she is suddenly seized by the one who is with her, while someone reaches out from the intense darkness, as if to seize her, saying: 'I have got you at last.' Without knowing, without opportunity to know, who they are that assault her, or what their purpose is, she instantly jerks the pistol from her pocket, fires several times, and flees into the darkness." Howard v. State (1907) 82 Ark. 97, 100 S. W. 756.

Where, on information that a burglary had been committed the night before, a marshal and his posse, suspecting the defendant and his fellows, came upon them in a railway station and a fight ensued in which one of the posse was killed, the court said: "If the posse, even though acting in good faith and with no intention of violating the law, suddenly advanced upon the accused with loaded guns, presented in a threatening manner, thereby impressing the latter as reasonable men, with the belief that they were about to suffer great bodily harm or be placed at the mercy of an angry mob, then they had the right to resist and employ such force as was reasonably adequate to defend themselves against the attack, without regard to their guilt of the charge upon which their arrest was sought. The language, 'Hands up! Hands up! or 'Hands up! We want you!' emphasized with rifles, shotguns, and revolvers, may, of course, be used with the idea that the party thus addressed is required to subject to arrest, but it must be admitted that to the average mind it ordinarily conveys a much more uncomfortable suggestion." In the same case the court said of an instruction: "The thought here expressed, if we correctly interpret it, is that the aiming and firing of a gun with fatal effect upon the person thus assaulted is, 'of itself,' evidence of an intent to kill, and 'therefore of a wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing,' or murder in the first degree. This, we think, cannot be the law." State v. Phillips (1902) 118 Iowa, 660, 92 N. W. 876.

On the other hand, in People v. Pool (1865) 27 Cal. 577, a conviction of murder in the first degree was affirmed where, some seven hours after the robbing of a stagecoach, the deceased, a deputy sheriff, with a constable, who were in pursuit of the robbers, came upon some of them at a house "where they were together in a room, and, finding a gun standing at the door of the room, the deceased took it into his possession, and then, opening the door, addressed the defendant and his companions, saying to them: 'You are my prisoners—surrender;' and at the same time pointing toward them the gun which he held in his hands, while they, on their part, instead of surrendering, drew their pistols and opened fire on the deceased. Several of the shots took effect upon a vital part of his body, causing his death in a few minutes. After the firing had been commenced by those in the room, the deceased shot the defendant, by which he was disabled."

In Lewis v. State (1859) 3 Head (Tenn.) 127, the defendants had attempted to pass a bill supposed to be counterfeit, and the sheriff and his deputy, on being informed of the matter and of the road they had taken, set out in pursuit, all being on horseback. On coming up with the defendants, the sheriff laid his hand on the shoulder of one of them and said, "I take you as a state's prisoner;" whereupon the defendant so accosted began shooting and the sheriff and his deputy were both killed, the deputy being stabbed and the sheriff both shot and cut. It was claimed by the prisoners that the court erred in instructing the jury who had returned for further instructions, "that no time was required by the law for the deliberation and premeditation necessary to constitute murder in the first degree, so that the purpose and intent to kill accompany the act." As to which the court said, inter alia: "The distinctive characteristic of murder in the first degree is premeditation. This element is superadded by the statute to the common-law definition of murder. Premeditation involves a previously formed design or actual intention to kill. But such design or intention may be conceived and deliberately formed in an instant. It is not necessary that it should have been conceived or have pre-existed in the mind any definite period of time anterior to its execution. It is sufficient that it preceded the assault, however short the interval. The length of time is not of the essence of this constituent of the offense. The purpose to kill is no less premeditated, in the legal sense of the term, if it were deliberately formed but a moment preceding the act by which the death is produced, than if it had been formed an hour before. The mental state of the assailant at the moment, rather than the length of time the act may have been premeditated, is the material point to be considered. The mental process, in the formation of the purpose to kill, may have been instantaneous, and the question of vital importance is, Was the mind, at that moment, so far free from the influence of excitement or passion as to be capable of reflecting and acting with a sufficient degree of coolness and deliberation of purpose; and was the death of the person assaulted the object sought to be accomplished,—the end determined upon? . . . In this view of the law, that part of the charge excepted to is subject to but little criticism. All that can be said is, that the general expression 'no time' should have been qualified by adding, no definite time. But no prejudice or misapprehension could have resulted from L.R.A.1918C.

this omission, for the principle had been twice fully and correctly stated in the preceding part of the charge."

It was held that a verdict of murder in the first degree was justified, where there was evidence that six persons went to a place to commit burglary, that before they started five of the six armed themselves with loaded pistols, that, finding the place occupied and guarded, they abandoned the enterprise and started back to the city about midnight, that in their return to the city so armed, and with burglars' tools and dynamite in their possession, three of them attempted to hold up a man, that his loud outcry attracted the attention of a number of people and caused the trio to run, one of them firing a shot as he ran to intimidate any possible pursuer, that this attracted the attention of an officer in plain clothes who ran up to some of them, including the defendant, and said or did something which made them apprehensive that he would arrest or search them, and that he would discover the burglars' tools and dynamite, that this was one of the contingencies in view of which the defendants had armed themselves, and that, in order to avoid detection, they, or some of them, immediately opened fire on the officer, and that he returned the fire of the one who first fired upon him—the man with the .44-caliber pistol, the bullets of which caused his death. The court said: "It is claimed that the evidence does not warrant a verdict of murder in the first degree. We think it was clearly sufficient. It shows that the appellant made preparations to kill in connection with the projected burglary, and that when an officer approached him under circumstances indicating the probability that he would arrest him or search him he killed the officer. This is sufficient evidence of a deliberate purpose to kill, and if such purpose existed the killing was murder in the first degree." People v. Woods (1905) 147 Cal. 265, 109 Am. St. Rep. 151, 81 Pac. 652.

While without the scope of this note, reference may be had to People v. Morse (1909) 196 N. Y. 306, 89 N. E. 816, where a man who had committed robbery on the street and was being pursued shot a policeman approaching him from the opposite direction. It was claimed that the evidence was not sufficient on which to find, as a fact, that the defendant shot the policeman from a deliberate and premeditated design to effect his death. The court, in affirming a conviction of murder in the first degree, called attention to the defendant's possession of the revolver and said: "Where a person commits highway robbery or other crime in such a deliberate, intentional, and premeditated manner as shown by the circumstances in this case, and then uses a revolver carried by him with fatal effect in his effort to avoid arrest, it presents a question for the determination of a jury whether the person so killed was not killed by the deliberate and premeditated intention of the one firing the shot. . . . There are in this case, however, further facts which were proper to leave to the jury upon the question of intent, deliberation, and premeditation, and they are that the defendant was running in a public street where the approach of an officer in the opposite direction must have been seen by him for an appreciable space of time, and his firing the revolver directly at the officer, when the result would necessarily or probably be fatal, is, of itself, some evidence from which the jury might rightfully find the facts as found by them."

In this connection reference may be made to Brooks v. State (1901) 114 Ga. 6, 39 S. E. 877, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 47, where it was held that "if a policeman at a late hour of the night hear a pistol shot within two blocks of his beat, and immediately thereafter discover a man running from the direction of the shot and towards him, he has a right to arrest him without a warrant. Where, under such circumstances, the officer attempts to make the arrest and is shot and killed by the person whom he is seeking to arrest, the offense is murder and not manslaughter; especially where the slayer has, in fact, fired the shot first heard, and has thereby wounded another." The court said: "When an officer is shot and killed by one whom he is seeking legally to arrest, the offense is murder and not manslaughter. All the cases and textbooks, so far as we know, lay this down as the law. It is especially true in a case like the present, where it appears that the fugitive had actually shot another and was running away from the place of the shooting. It was, therefore, not error to fail or refuse to charge upon the subject of manslaughter in this case."

For elements of deliberation and premeditation as affected by the brevity of the period elapsing between the resolution to kill and the homicide, see the note to Com. v. Tucker, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1056. For homicide in resisting arrest, see the notes in 66 L.R.A. 353, and 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 143. For homicide in the commission of an unlawful act, see the note in 63 L.R.A. 353. B. B. B.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

M. F. EMERY, Appt.,

v.

MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(179 Ky. 76, 200 S. W. 19.)

Insurance — assignment — right to convert policy into term insurance.

One holding a life insurance policy as collateral security cannot, without foreclosure or the written assent of the insured, exercise the option to convert the policy into a paid-up term policy, and in case he attempts to do so without such consent, he can, if no further premiums are paid, recover only the paid-up value of the policy. For other cases, see Insurance, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 1, 1918.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McCracken County in her favor for less than the amount claimed, and from an order denying a new trial, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

Note. — As to right of assignee of policy of life insurance to exercise options, see annotation following this case, post, 570. L.R.A.1918C.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bradshaw, Nichols, & MacDonald for appellant.

Mr. W. A. Berry for appellee.

Settle, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was decided in the court below upon an agreed statement of facts. By agreement of the parties a jury was waived, and the law and facts submitted to the court. The appellant recovered a judgment against the appellee for $998, with interest from the date of the judgment and her costs expended in the action. Appellant's complaint of the rejection by that judgment of the larger part of the claim for which she sued, and the refusal of the circuit court to grant her a new trial, led to this appeal.

The agreed facts show that on October 1, 1891, one W. M. Clyne executed to Hobson & Company, of Paducah, his promissory note for $1,845.65, due one day after date. This note, on October 1, 1892, was sold and assigned by Hobson & Company to L. W. Emery, who later died testate, and whose will was duly admitted to probate by the McCracken county court. By his will the testator bequeathed the above note to his daughter, M. F. Emery, who by reason thereof became the owner and obtained possession of the note. When it came to her hands the note contained this indorsement:

I hereby promise that this policy No. 127025 in the Manhattan Life Insurance Company may be used by the estate of L. W. Emery to pay this debt; but any proceeds arising from said policy above the debt shall be paid to my family.

This February 9th, 1906. W. M. Clyne
Attest: Geo. F. Emery.

The above policy, which was for $2,500, was issued by the Manhattan Life Insurance Company upon the life of W. M. Clyne, March 5, 1902, and on March 12, 1902, was assigned to the appellant, M. F. Emery, by the following writing, viz.:

In consideration of debt evidenced by note for $1,800 and interest, I hereby sell and assign unto M. F. Emery, of Paducah, county of McCracken, state of Kentucky, the annexed policy No. 127025 on the life of W. M. Clyne, near Wandville, McCracken county, issued by the Manhattan Life Insurance Company of New York; and I do also, for myself, my executors and administrators, guarantee the validity and sufficiency of the foregoing assignment to the above-named assignee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and their title to the said policy will forever warrant and defend. And I hereby appoint the said assignee my true lawful attorney to collect the amount of said policy and receipt therefor as fully as she could do, if these presents were not made.

Witness my hand and seal this 12th day of March, 1902. William M. Clyne.

All the premiums on this policy were paid down to and including March 5, 1912. No part of the note owing by Clyne to M. F. Emery had been paid when the above assignment of the policy was made, and there was then due thereon $2,891.39, which thereafter increased until at the time of the institution of this action it amounted to $4,503.17.

Within thirty days after the payment of the annual premium March 5, 1912, on the policy in question, the appellant offered to surrender it to the Manhattan Life Insurance Company for a nonparticipating, paid-up term policy on the life of the insured, Clyne, for $2,500, to run for a period of five years and seven months, beginning on the date of the payment of the last premium, viz., March 5, 1912, which the insurance company was requested by appellant as assignee of the present policy to issue, but refused to issue without a written request from Clyne, the insured, in addition to the request from the assignee, which request from Clyne was never made. At the time the request for the issuance of the nonparticipating, paid-up policy for $2,500 on the life of Clyne was made, there were no notes, loans, or indebtedness against the policy due the Manhattan Life Insurance Company. After Clyne's death, which occurred April 16, 1916, appellant furnished the insurance company proper proofs thereof, and was thereupon tendered by it $998 in settlement of its indebtedness on the policy; the latter claiming that this amount was its automatic cash value as a paid policy at the date of the death of the insured. Appellant refused to accept the $998 tendered, and demanded of the insurance company $2,500 as the amount due thereon, and upon the refusal of the latter to pay same brought this action seeking to compel its payment.

By the terms of the assigned policy certain options were given the insured. Among these was one entitling him, within thirty days after the payment of the last annual premium, to make a "legal surrender" of the policy to the insurance company and demand of it a nonparticipating, paid-up term policy on his life for $2,500, to run for a period of five years and seven months beginning on the date of the payment of the last premium, provided that at the time of the demand for the issuance of the nonparticipating, paid-up policy there were no notes, loans, or indebtedness against the policy due the insurance company. So the question presented for our decision by this appeal is, Did this state of facts entitle the appellant, as the assignee of the insured, to the nonparticipating, paid-up policy demanded of the company? We think not. It is admitted that the policy on the life of the insured was received by appellant as collateral security for the note she held against him. Its assignment, therefore, did not divest him of all interest in the policy. He retained, at least, the right to obtain its restoration to him at any time during the existence of the note by paying the note; while, on the other hand, the assignee had such legal title as conferred upon her the right of foreclosure, which right she might have exercised at any time after the maturity of the note, and the exercise of which would have divested the insured of all interest in the policy. 7 Cyc. 83. But this right was never exercised by her, and when she demanded of appellee the nonparticipating pating policy for $2,500, the insured was still owing her the note for which she held the existing policy, and still had such an interest in that policy as entitled appellee to demand that he unite in its surrender and in the demand or request for the new nonparticipating policy. Appellee could not then know that the insured before his death and before the maturity of the nonparticipating policy would not pay the appellant's note, and thereby entitle himself to the return of the policy. By the terms of the existing policy it was entitled to a "legal surrender" of it, which could be effected only by the written request from the insured for the issuance of the new nonparticipating, paid-up $2,500 policy, as required by the provision of the existing policy. Therefore the failure of appellant to obtain the written request or consent of the insured in support of her demand upon appellee for the nonparticipating, paid-up $2,500 policy justified its refusal to issue such policy. So, as it is admitted that at the time of appellant's demand for the nonparticipating, paid-up policy, and also at the date of the death of the insured, the existing policy on his life had a cash surrender value of $998, to only that amount was appellant entitled. If the amount of the note had been less than the cash surrender value of the policy, the surplus, after paying the amount of the note, by the terms of the assignment under which appellant obtained the policy, must have been paid to the family of the insured. But, as such cash surrender value of the policy was far less than the amount of the note, appellant was, of course, entitled to the whole of it.

By the only policy that was in force on the life of the insured, the option of applying its cash surrender value to the purchase of the extended paid-up insurance of $2,500 that might have been given by the nonparticipating policy, which appellant complains was not issued to her by appellee, was an option that was personal to the insured, which could not have been made available by his assignee before his death, in the manner attempted, without his written consent.

Although this fact was made known to appellant by the refusal of appellee to issue to her the nonparticipating policy four years before the death of the insured, as no such written consent was ever procured of him by her, the conclusion is inevitable that its cash surrender value of $998 was all that she had a right to claim.

All that passed by the assignment of the policy from the insured to appellant was the right to collect whatever of its proceeds he might have been entitled to be paid, by way of its cash surrender value, before his death, or that the appellee was liable for at his death, in the absence of an exercise of the option with respect to the extended, paid-up, nonparticipating insurance given by the assigned policy, which was and could have been no more than the $998, for which she obtained judgment.

The case of Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 160 Ky. 538, 169 S. W. 1028, cited by counsel for appellant, does not conflict with the conclusions we have expressed. There was in that case no controversy as to the amount to which the assignee of the policy was entitled. Indeed, only the cash surrender value of the policy was claimed by the assignee, and the insurance company resisted its recovery by the assignee upon the ground that the right to receive it was confined by the terms of the policy to the insured alone. In rejecting this contention we held that, where a note is secured by the assignment to the payee by the obligor and his wife of an insurance policy on the life of the former having a cash surrender value, the insurance company issuing such policy cannot, when sued with the obligor by the payee, resist the recovery by the latter of the cash surrender value of the policy, unless such assignment of the policy is forbidden by a provision of the policy, or by its terms the privilege of surrendering the policy and receiving its cash surrender value is confined to the insured alone, which in that case the policy did not do.

We find no error in the judgment of the Circuit Court. Hence it is affirmed.

Annotation—Right of assignee of policy of life insurance to exercise options.

As to right of beneficiary to exercise option upon default in payment of premium, see notes to New York L. Ins. Co. v. Noble, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, and McDonald v. Columbian Nat. L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1916F, 1244.

Generally, as to right of creditors to reach option of insured to receive cash surrender value of policy, and their right to reach policies having a cash surrender value, see note to McCutchen v. Townsend, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 316.

As to effect of loan as working forfeiture of options under policy, see note to Algoe v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1917A, 1237.

It will be noticed that it was decided in EMERY v. MANHATTEN L. INS. CO.

ante, 568, that one to whom a life insurance policy had been assigned as collateral could not without foreclosure or the written assent of the insured, exercise the option given by the policy to convert it into a paid-up term policy, and that, where he attempted to do so without foreclosure or the insured's consent, and no further premiums were paid, he could recover only the paid-up value of the policy.

While the decision is not without support, it is not in harmony with some of the other cases subsequently dealt with in this note. Others, however, may be reconciled with it because of express authority given the assignee by the assignment to exercise the option.

In Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Twyman (1906) 122 Ky. 513, 121 Am. St. Rep. 471, 92 S. W. 335, 97 S. W. 391, where a paid-up policy was assigned to the insurer as collateral by an agreement providing that the policy was "assigned and surrendered to said company for cancellation in satisfaction of this note and in settlement of the cash surrender value of said policy, it was held that, on default in payment of the loan, the company could not, at its own option and without the consent of the insured, cancel the policy by calculating its cash surrender value as of the date of default, but that it should, like any other creditor holding a debt secured by a lien, resort to a court of equity for the enforcement of its rights, and that a court in such a case might decree a cancellation of the policy, allowing to the insured its full cash surrender value less the assignee's debt.

And in Grossman v. Lindemann (1910) 67 Misc. 437, 123 N. Y. Supp. 108, where a paid-up policy was deposited as collateral security for the payment of a note, it was held that, as the policy was an instrument for the payment of money, its deposit as collateral, in the absence of a distinct provision permitting its sale, gave the pledgee only the right to collect, and not to sell or surrender it.

It is clear that an assignment by one having no right to exercise the options given by a policy will not confer such right on the assignee. Thus, where a wife to whom a policy on her husband's life was payable in case she survived him agreed with a creditor of the husband to send the policy as collateral and to assign it, and she forwarded the policy with an agreement to collect the amount due her on it and pay it to the creditor, it was held that the latter did not acquire any right to an absolute assignment of the policy which would include the right to surrender the policy and receive its surrender value; that the husband did not join in the agreement, and that the wife had no right to surrender the policy, but had only the right to receive the insurance in case she survived her husband. Rathborne v. Hatch (1904) 90 App. Div. 161, 85 N. Y. Supp. 775, affirmed in (1905) 181 N. Y. 584, 74 N. E. 1125.

In some cases the assignments involved expressly conferred authority to exercise the options given by the policies.

Thus, in Du Brutz v. Bank of Visalia (1906) 4 Cal. App. 201, 87 Pac. 467, 469, where a husband whose life was insured in favor of his wife joined her in executing an instrument to a creditor providing that the parties assign the policy and all their rights thereunder, and all benefits accrued or to accrue under and by virtue of the terms, covenants, or conditions thereof, and authorizing the assignee to receive and collect and receipt for any money or thing of value which was or might become due by virtue of the policy or the terms, covenants, or conditions thereof, as fully and completely as the assignors or either of them could do if the assignment had not been made,—it was held that the assignee was thereby empowered to exercise the option given in the policy to take a paid-up policy.

And in Palmer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1902) 38 Misc. 318, 77 N. Y. Supp. 869, where a policy was assigned to the insurer as collateral for a loan, by an instrument authorizing the assignee on default to cancel the policy and apply the surrender value to the payment of the debt, it was held that the assignee had the right, as in the case of any pledge, upon default of the payment of the debt, to dispose of or realize upon the pledge, and its right to surrender the policy and take its cash value upon default was upheld.

And in Planters' State Bank v. Willingham (1901) 111 Ky. 64, 63 S. W. 12, where the insured, by a written assignment of policies to a creditor as collateral, authorized the assignee on default in payment of the premiums to surrender the policies, it was held that he had exercised the option claimed for him as a personal privilege, and had thereby given the assignee a right to demand at least a paid-up policy.

And the right of an assignee to exercise the options given has been upheld although the assignment, so far as appears, did not expressly confer such right.

Thus, where an insured assigned a policy as collateral to a creditor his heirs and assigns, as his interest might appear, and the assignment stated that it was made to protect and pay certain notes, it was held that on default by the insured in the payment of premiums the assignee was entitled to convert the policy into its cash surrender value or into a paid-up policy. Bush v. Block (1916) 193 Mo. App. 704, 187 S. W. 153.

And in Dungar v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. (1877) 46 Md. 469, where a policy was assigned by the insured and his wife, the beneficiary, to secure the payment of money advanced by the insurance agent to pay the premium, it was held that the agent, holding the policy as mortgagee, might surrender it for its reserve or equitable value as an advantageous mode of foreclosure, but that notice should be given to redeem before the surrender takes place, and that the insurer, accepting the surrender without such notice, acquires only the interest of the mortgagee, and holds it subject to the right of redemption, as the mortgagee held before the surrender.

It also appears in Keeble v. Jones (1914) 187 Ala. 207, 65 So. 384, that the assignee of a life insurance policy, upon the assignor's failure to keep up the payment of his annual premiums, surrendered the policy and received in lieu thereof a paid-up policy; but there was no question raised as to his right to do this and no discussion of the question.

And in Re Davison (1910) 179 Fed. 750, where certain policies having no surrender value were assigned by straight assignments as security for the payments of notes, and others were assigned by instruments assigning all money and benefits due or to become due subject to the terms and conditions of the policies, it was apparently assumed that the assignee might exercise the options for paid-up policies, etc., given by the policies. The question at issue in that case was the correctness of the finding of the referee in bankruptcy as to the valuation of the policies.

In Feliciana Bank & T. Co. v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. (1915) 137 La. 674, 69 So. 91, where a policy payable to the insured's executors, administrators, or assigns was assigned as collateral by an agreement giving the pledgee the right, in event of nonpayment, to sell the policy, and after the default it was sold at public auction and purchased by the assignee, it was held that the latter was entitled to be recognized as owner, and as such to exercise the privilege of loan and of surrender for paid-up value conferred by the policy upon the owner, and that it was not necessary that the transfer and ownership be first decreed by a judgment.

In some cases the right to exercise the options has been held a right personal with the insured which he could not assign.

Thus, where a policy payable to the insured's wife and children, and containing a provision that at the end of a certain period the insurer would pay to the person or persons designated in the application a cash surrender value, and the insured was designated in the application as the person entitled to the cash surrender value, it was held that a mere power to take the surrender value was given to the insured which he could not transfer to another, and that an assignee of the policy therefor could not exercise the option. Moser v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1909) 134 Ky. 215, 119 S. W. 792.

And in Townsend v. Townsend (McCutchen v. Townsend) (1907) 127 Ky. 230, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 316, 105 S. W. 937, it was held that one who had insured his life for the benefit of his children by a policy giving him an option after a certain period to surrender the policy for its cash surrender value could not assign the option to a creditor. And it was also held in this case that a general assignment for creditors would not carry the right of the assignor to exercise such option, given by a policy paid up while he was in affluent circumstances, which he had taken for the benefit of his children.

In Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1914) 160 Ky. 538, 169 S. W. 1028, where the insured and his wife assigned as collateral a policy payable to the wife if she survived him, otherwise to him, and providing for a cash surrender value to be paid on a surrender of the policy fully receipted, it was held that the assignee was entitled to obtain the cash surrender value. With respect to the Townsend and Moser Cases (Ky.) supra, the court said: "The difference between the Townsend and Moser Cases and the instant case can readily be seen and understood. The beneficiaries in the Townsend and Moser Cases were the wives and children of the insured, the interests of the latter being contingent upon their surviving the mother. Each of the policies by its provisions excluded the beneficiaries or others from demanding or receiving the cash value of the policy by its surrender, by confining to the insured alone the right to terminate the policy by taking in cash its surrender value, thereby making the surrender privilege one purely personal to the insured, which could not be assigned to or vested in another. Here, however, while the wife of the insured is named in the policy as a beneficiary, her right to the proceeds of the policy is made to depend upon her surviving the insured, and there is a further provision of the policy which declares that, in the event the wife does not survive the insured, the policy shall be payable to the estate of the insured. Moreover, the policy does not in words, or by implication, vest in the insured alone the right to terminate the policy and take its surrender value. The policy merely provides for a cash value to be paid by the company on a surrender of the policy fully receipted. This makes the privilege of surrendering the policy for cash one which may be exercised by a creditor who received the policy by assignment from the insured as security for his debt. Obviously, Bettie Garvin, the wife of Ed. L. Garvin, had an interest in the amount of insurance that would have been payable on the policy at the death of her husband, if she survived him, but the policy does not confer upon her a right to receive its cash surrender value any more than another to whom it might be assigned by the insured; and by joining with the insured in the assignment of the policy to the latter's creditor as security for a debt owing by the insured, she voluntarily put it in the power of the creditor to obtain its cash value by surrendering the policy for the payment of the debt secured to the appellant, which, when done, would necessarily divest her of the amount she otherwise would have been entitled to receive on the policy at the death of the insured, if she survived him."

And in Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594, where a policy provided that if, after the payment of two or more premiums, the policy should cease by reason of default in the payment of premiums, the company would grant a paid-up policy for such amount as the then present value of the policy would purchase, providing the policy should be transmitted to the insured and application made for such paid-up policy within a stated time, it was held that, although the insured was dead, the right to a paid-up policy or its value remained in his assignee where application was properly made.

The question whether the interests of persons other than the insured in the policy prevented an exercise of the options by an assignee has been involved in some cases.

Thus, in Eisenbach v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1914) 162 App. Div. 595, 147 N. Y. Supp. 962, affirmed without opinion in (1914) 212 N. Y. 593, 106 N. E. 1033, where the holder of a paid-up endowment policy, having the right to surrender it, executed an assignment transferring to his wife, "if living, if not to my child or children, all my right, title, and interest in the policy," and subsequently delivered the policy to her, together with a second assignment particularly giving her the right to surrender the policy and receive its cash value, and the insured and his wife delivered the policy to the insurer and demanded the cash value,—it was held that the wife was entitled thereto; that the children had no contingent interest by virtue of the first assignment, as their mother was living at the time the right to receive the cash value accrued; and that the assignment of the policy was not a waiver of the cash surrender provisions, and that, as the insured had a right to exercise the option to surrender, his assignee had the same right.

And in Entwistle v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1901) 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 180, where a policy on the life of a husband was payable to his wife, or in the case of her prior death to his children, but if he should survive both his wife and children to his legal representatives, and there was a provision that the policy might be converted into cash at the option of "the holder" after the expiration of a certain period and the payment of a specified number of premiums, it was held, where the insured, his wife, and children were all living at the time, and one to whom the insured and his wife had executed an assignment of the policy demanded the surrender value, that the wife was "the holder" of the policy within the meaning of its provisions, and that the insurer could not under the circumstances refuse the assignee's demand on the ground that the children had an interest in the policy and had not joined in the assignment, since their only right was to take in the event of the wife's death.

And in Blinn v. Dame (1911) 207 Mass. 159, 93 N. E. 601, 20 Ann. Cas. 1184, where a policy provided for the payment of a stated sum to the insured, his executors, administrators, or assigns, on a specified date, or if he should die before that time for the payment of a like sum to his children if they survived him, with power to the insured to surrender the policy at any time, it was held that the right to surrender the policy for its surrender value was a valuable property right to which the children's rights were subject, and that it passed under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, and that it was the insured's duty to execute any written surrender that might be necessary to enable the assignees to collect the surrender value.

In Cornell v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (1914) 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858, where a policy provided that it might be surrendered at the end of twenty years and a certain amount collected, and expressly provided that the interest of the beneficiary was subject to the right of the insured to surrender the policy for its cash value, it was held that one to whom the insured had delivered the policy as collateral security could, after the expiration of the twenty-year period, without the insured's assent, exercise the right conferred by the policy and surrender it for its cash value; but it was stated that the insured in this case did consent to such surrender.

In Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hagerman (1903) 19 Colo. App. 33, 72 Pac. 889, where a policy was payable to the insured's wife provided she survived him, if not, to her children, it was held that the wife's interest was contingent upon her surviving her husband, and that with her death her interest ceased and all rights under the policy vested in her children, and that one to whom she had assigned the policy had no right, after her death, to exercise the option for a paid-up policy.

In State Nat. Bank v. United States L. Ins. Co. (1909) 238 Ill. 148, 87 N. E. 396, where continuable term policies were assigned as collateral, and before the expiration of the term period the assignee, who had paid all but the first two annual premiums, consulted the insurer's agent, who advised him to continue the policies in the same form, and stated that after five premiums were paid the assignee might change the policies for endowment policies, and an application for continuing the term insurance was accordingly made, signed by the insured and the assignee, and policies were issued payable to the assignee, its successors or assigns, providing that the policies might be changed to any participating plan issued by the insurer,—it was held that it was not necessary that the insured acquiesce in the assignee's election to convert the policies into endowment policies, as the second term policies were rightfully made payable to the assignee, and the options to exchange them for other policies were properly vested in the assignee alone.

In Davidson v. Heath (1908) — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 891, a judgment for a lien on the proceeds of a policy to secure the payment of a debt for which the policy had been assigned as collateral was affirmed, although it did not adjudge to the assignee the right to surrender the policy at the time an option given by the policy became available, such time not having arrived, but it was stated that it was assumed that the court would, after the maturity of the option, adjudge the assignee this right. J. T. W.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 2.)

STATE OF MISSOURI

v.

MITCHELL HEDRICK, Appt.

(— Mo. —, 199 S. W. 192.)

Larceny — hog — stealing carcass — guilt.

One cannot be convicted of stealing a hog on evidence that he stole a carcass of a hog. For other cases, see Evidence, XIII. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 4, 1917.)

Note — For killing animal and carrying away part of the carcass as larceny of the animal, see note to Flowers v. State, L.R.A. 1915E, 848.
L.R.A.1918C.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Reynolds County convicting him of stealing hogs. Reversed.

Statement by Roy, C.:

Defendant was charged in Reynolds county, jointly with Ritchey and Strickland, with the theft of four black hogs, the property of Bill Grant. He was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for three years, and has appealed.

The state's evidence very clearly shows that the hogs were stolen and killed in Dent county, near the line between the two counties, and that, after they were killed, the defendant went in his wagon with the other two persons charged and hauled the hogs into Reynolds county, where they were cleaned and divided among them. There is a question on the evidence as to whether this appellant was a party to the transaction prior to the death of the hogs. At the close of the state's evidence the defendant demurred thereto, and the demurrer was overruled.

The defendant asked this instruction, which was refused: "You are instructed that the word 'hog' in law means a live animal, and not the mere carcass of an animal."

He also asked an instruction as to petit larceny in case the jury should find that he had stolen the carcasses of hogs in value less than $30. It was refused.

Messrs. C. R. Wadlow and Buford & Chitwood, for appellant:

Upon a general statement that a party stole an animal, it is to be intended that he stole it alive, except where it has the same name, whether dead or alive.

Whart. Crim. Ev. 9th ed. § 124; 2 Cyc. 304.

Instructions as to defendant's guilt were broader than the allegation in the indictment, and should not have been given.

State v. Kyle, 177 Mo. 659, 76 S. W. 1014.

The jury must find that the hogs were feloniously taken before they would be warranted in returning a verdict of guilty.

State v. Sparks, — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 346; State v. Richmond, 228 Mo. 362, 128 S. W. 744.

There was a failure to instruct on all the law as required by statute.

State v. Swain, 239 Mo. 723, 144 S. W. 427.

There was a failure of proof of the offense charged.

State v. Ballard, 104 Mo. 634, 16 S. W. 525.

Messrs. Frank W. McAllister, Attorney General, Henry B. Hunt, Assistant Attorney General, and C. P. LeMire, for the State:

The indictment is sufficient. It contains all the substantial allegations required by the statute.

State v. Sparks, — Mo. —, 195 S. W. 1031.

As there was substantial evidence of guilt and the punishment prescribed was within the limits set by the statute, objections that the verdict is against the evidence, the weight of the evidence, and against the law are groundless.

State v. Kapp, — Mo. —, 187 S. W. 1178; State v. Scott, 214 Mo. 261, 113 S. W. 1069; State v. Chenault, 212 Mo. 132, 110 S. W. 696; State v. Barton, 214 Mo. 316, 113 S. L.R.A.1918C.

W. 1111; State v. Maurer, 255 Mo. 158, 164 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 178.

Objections to instructions must be specifically and definitely set out in the motion for a new trial to entitle appellant to a review of the same in this court.

State v. Snyder, 263 Mo. 668, 173 S. W. 1078; State v. Bowen, 263 Mo. 279, 172 S. W. 367; State v. Finkelstein, 269 Mo. 612, 191 S. W. 1002; State v. Levy, 262 Mo. 181, 170 S. W. 1114; State v. McBrien, 265 Mo. 594, 178 S. W. 489; State v. Taylor, 267 Mo. 41, 183 S. W. 301; State v. Kapp, — Mo. —, 187 S. W. 1178.

Even though the hogs had been killed and appellant had had no connection with the matter until he consented to aid in hauling said hogs from where they were killed to the place where they were concealed, that act alone is sufficient to designate him as an aider and abetter in the whole scheme, and rendered him equally guilty with the other parties.

State v. Dockery, 243 Mo. 592, 147 S. W. 976; State v. Valle, 164 Mo. 550, 65 S. W. 232; State v. Miller, 263 Mo. 335, 172 S. W. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1099; State v. Sykes, 248 Mo. 708, 154 S. W. 1130; State v. Alcorn, 137 Mo. 121, 38 S. W. 548.

Roy, C., filed the following opinion:

There was a total failure of proof. Defendant was charged with stealing hogs in Reynolds county. The proof was that they were dead before they were taken into that county. It may be that defendant could be convicted of stealing the hogs in Dent county. It may be possible to convict him of stealing the carcasses of hogs in either Dent or Reynolds county. He cannot be convicted of stealing hogs in Reynolds county, because the hogs, as hogs, were never in that county. He cannot, in this case, be convicted of stealing the carcasses of hogs, because he is not charged with such an offense. The carcass of a hog, by whatever name called, is not a hog. The dictionary says that a "hog" is an animal, and that an animal is a living being. A person charged with stealing wheat in value more than $30 may be convicted of grand or petit larceny, in accordance with the proof as to value. But a person charged as in this case cannot be convicted of stealing mere carcasses of any value, great or small. The English cases on this subject are as follows:

In Rex v. Edwards, Russ, & R. C. C. 497, decided in 1823, the defendants were charged with stealing live turkeys. They were stolen alive and then killed in one county, and then carried into another county. It is there said: "In Hilary term, 1823, the case was considered by the judges, who held that the word 'live,' in the description, could not be rejected as surplusage, and that, as the prisoners had not the turkeys in a live state in Herefordshire, the charge as laid was not proved, and that the conviction was wrong. And Holroyd, J., observed that an indictment for stealing a dead animal should state that it was dead; for upon a general statement that a party stole the animal it is to be intended that he stole it alive."

In the same year there were two cases against one Halloway, decided at nisi prius and reported in 1 Car. & P. at pages 127 and 128. In the first he was charged with stealing a "brass furnace" in the county of Hereford. The proof showed that he stole the furnace in the county of Radnor, and broke it into pieces, which he carried into the county of Hereford. The report of that case states: "Hullock, B., directed an acquittal, and said: Though a prisoner may be indicted for larceny in any county into which he takes stolen property, the present indictment must fail, as he never had the 'brass furnace' in Herefordshire or within 500 yards of its boundaries; he merely had there certain pieces of brass."

In the other case Halloway was charged with stealing two turkeys. The proof showed that they were dead, and were stolen from a larder. It was held that the indictment meant live turkeys, and that the charge should have been that he stole dead turkeys.

In Rex v. Puckering, 1 Moody, C. C. 242, decided in 1829, the defendant was charged with feloniously receiving a stolen lamb knowing that it had been stolen. The lamb had been killed before he received it. It was there said: "It appeared to the learned judge that, whatever may be the case as to many animals, perhaps there might be a different rule as to animals the stealing of which is a capital offense, and it might be a question whether, at all events as to them, when an animal is mentioned it does not mean a live animal. He therefore respited the judgment, in order that the opinion of the learned judges might be taken. This case was considered at a meeting of the judges in Michaelmas term, 1829, and they all agreed that the conviction was good, it being immaterial as to the prisoner's offense whether the lamb was alive or dead, his offense and punishment for it being in both cases the same."

Com. v. Beaman, 8 Gray, 497, a Massachusetts case decided in 1857, discussed the English cases, and held that, where the stealing of an animal is charged, it means a live animal. State v. Donovan, Houst. Crim. Rep. (Del.) 43, was decided in 1858. The report of that case contains the following: "The court stopped the attorney general, and Gilpin, Ch. J., remarked that there were three decisions on the point in the English reports, the last of which had ruled that, where the animal is called by the same name, either dead or alive, it is competent under such an indictment as this to prove the stealing of them in a dead state; and shad, he believed, had but that one name, whether dead or alive."

It should be noted that none of the above cases involved a statute such as we have here. Indeed, the Puckering Case above mentioned, which is the leading one on that side, expressly bases its ruling on the ground that the offense and its punishment were the same whether the animal stolen were alive or dead.

If we concede that the Puckering Case is right, the question arises: Is the punishment in this state for stealing dead hogs the same as that for stealing live ones? In other words, does our statute make it grand larceny to steal either live or dead hogs, regardless of value? That statute (Rev. Stat. 1909, § 4535) makes it grand larceny to steal any "horse, mare, gelding, colt, filly, ass, mule, hog, or neat cattle." On its face it is not capable of being construed to cover those animals when dead. Bishop on Statutory Crimes, 3d ed. § 426, note 13, says that such statutes apply to live animals. All the decided cases we can find in any of our sister states hold the same thing. Golden v. State, 63 Miss. 466; People v. Smith, 112 Cal. 333, 44 Pac. 663; Hunt v. State, 55 Ala. 138; Thompson v. State, 30 Tex. 356; Ballow v. State (two cases), 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 261, 263, 58 S. W. 1022, 1023. In the first of the last two cases it was held that, where hogs were stolen and killed in one county and then carried into another county, there could be no conviction for stealing hogs in the latter county.

In this case the instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the state's evidence should have been given.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

White, C., concurs.

Per Curiam:

The foregoing opinion of Roy, C., is adopted as the opinion of the court.

All the Judges concur.

OKLAHOMA CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS.

D. C. CLARK, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

(— Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 170 Pac. 275.)

Larceny — impounded water.

1. Water impounded in the mains and pipes of a city's water system is the personal property of the city, and, as such, is the subject of larceny.

For other cases, see Larceny, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — avoiding meter.

2. A water consumer who, by false connections, carries water around his meter and consumes it on his property, without the consent of the owner and without having it registered, and with intention thus to deprive the owner thereof without payment therefor, is guilty of larceny.

For other cases, see Larceny, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Water — surrender of possession.

3. There is no surrender of possession of water by the owner of a water system until the water has passed through the meter, where the consumer is paying for the water used according to the amount registered by the meter.

For other cases, see Waters, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 20, 1917.)

ERROR to the Washita County Court to review a judgment convicting defendant of petit larceny. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Massingale & Duff, for plaintiff in error:

Water furnished or supplied by a municipality within the state of Oklahoma is not personal property, and therefore is not the subject of larceny.

Okla. Rev. Laws, § 2652.

The evidence adduced fails to prove the offense of larceny, if we concede that water is personal property, owned by the city of New Cordell, and had a value.

State v. Will, 49 La. Ann. 1337, 22 So. 378; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 6th ed. p. 447; Devore v. Territory, 2 Okla. 562, 37 Pac. 1092.

Messrs. S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, and R. McMillan, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The information in this case is good.

Caído v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 140,

Headnotes by MATSON, J.

Note. — For water, gas, and electricity as subjects of larceny, see annotation following this case, post, 580.
L.R.A.1918C.

122 Pac. 734; Ritchie v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 189, 122 Pac. 944; Hoyl v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 343, 123 Pac. 700; Bayless v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 29, 130 Pac. 520; 25 Cyc. 10.

Water is property and a commodity.

40 Cyc. 796; 1 Wiel, Water Rights, 658; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 514, 28 L. ed. 1105, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 101; Silkman v. Water Comrs. 71 Hun, 37, 24 N. Y. Supp. 806; Alter v. Cincinnati, 56 Ohio St. 67, 35 L.R.A. 787, 46 N. E. 69; Jones v. Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 274; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. St. Louis, 140 Mo. 419, 37 S. W. 527, 41 S. W. 911; Twitchell v. Spokane, 55 Wash. 86, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 292, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1021, 104 Pac. 150.

Water is subject to larceny.

25 Cyc. 136; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 765, 1098; Whart. Crim. Law, §§ 1152, 1320.

Matson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

D. C. Clark, one of the managers of the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company, was convicted of the crime of petit larceny in Washita county, Oklahoma, in that he caused a pipe to be attached to the water pipe in which the city of Cordell had stored, and was distributing, certain water to the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company for a certain price or rental, and by means of such attached pipe the said water was diverted so that it flowed around the meter, through which it was to be measured, to said Ice & Fuel Company and into the pipes running into said plant, by means of which trick the city of Cordell was defrauded or deprived of said water and the value of the same unlawfully.

There is no conflict as to the guilt of this defendant if the facts proved constitute the crime of larceny under our statute. There was no defense interposed. The defendant relies solely upon the insufficiency of the evidence to constitute the crime of petit larceny.

First. It is contended that, by reason of the provisions of our statute (Rev. Laws 1910, art. 4, chap. 10), that a city or town acquires no ownership in the water which it may impound in its pipes for the purpose of distribution to consumers, but that only a privilege is created which permits the city to acquire by condemnation, purchase, rental, lease, etc., certain lands or water districts from which a supply of water may be obtained for distribution to consumers under fixed rates or taxes, and that if a person taps the mains or pipes in which the city has impounded its water and diverts it to a use for which the city did not intend it, or diverts it so that it would not pass through the regular meter which the city uses for the purpose of measurement, the person so diverting such water and converting it to his own use without the knowledge and consent of said city has only deprived the city of its regular rental charge or taxes, and is not guilty of stealing its property.

With this contention we cannot agree. The fact that the state has seen fit to permit a city or town to establish a water-works system, and to serve the citizens of such city or town with water for private consumption, and to charge a fixed rate for such service, does not change the water, which the city has taken into its possession and under its control by impounding it within the confines of its mains and pipes, of its character as property. That water so confined is personal property, capable of ownership, cannot be disputed. The courts have so held practically without dissent. The rule is stated in Cyc. vol. 40, p. 552, as follows: "In the character of personal property, water, separated from its source or from the body of which it constituted a part, may be bought and sold like other commodities, as when it is supplied through artificial conduits for domestic use, or irrigation, or when it is solidified in the form of ice."

Wiel, in his work on Water Rights in the Western States, 3d ed. vol. 1, § 31, states the proposition as follows: "In the civil law it is said: 'Upon these principles, running waters are held by the Roman juris-consulti to be common to all men. But it also follows that this decision does not apply to waters, the appropriation of which (to the exclusion of the common enjoyment) is necessary for a certain purpose, as water included in a pipe or other vessel for certain uses.' Vinnius says, in commenting on the passage in the Institutes above quoted, regarding air, running water, and the sea: 'First of all, these things are in their nature suited to the common use of all; and next, in case any of these things is such that in its nature it can be taken into possession, it belongs to the possessor so far as he does not injure the general use by such occupation.' And, commenting upon the same passage in the Institutes, a Scotch case says: 'Water drawn from a river into vessels or into ponds becomes private property.' No one owns the air, but the inventor who liquefies it owns so much as is liquid in his laboratory; it is his private property while in his possession.

"Pothier illustrates it as follows: 'One may put the case, for example, where I go to dip water from a river. I acquire the ownership of the water which I have taken, and with which I have filled my pitcher, by title of occupancy; for this water, being a thing which belonged to no person, to which no person had any exclusive right whatever, I have been able, on taking it into my possession, to acquire the ownership of it by right of capture. This is why, in case, on returning from the river, I have for some purpose left my pitcher standing on the road with the intention of returning later to fetch it where I left it—if, in the meantime, a passer-by, having found my pitcher, proceeds (to save himself the trouble of going to the river) to pour into his pitcher the water that was in mine, he has committed against me an actual theft of that water, which water was a thing of which I was actually the proprietor, and of which I retained the possession through the intention I had of returning for it at the place where I left it. Note that the flow of the stream must not be confounded with the running water itself, which is designated aqua profluens.'

"The common law is stated in identical terms: 'None can have any property in the water itself, except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract from the stream, and take into his possession, and that during the time of his possession only.' In a well-known case in the House of Lords, it is said that no one can have any property in the running water of the stream 'which can only be appropriated by severance, and which may be lawfully so appropriated by everyone having a right of access to it' (the riparian proprietors). Lord Campbell declared that water in a cistern is private property, and in a very recent case in House of Lords, the Chancellor said that water in an artificial pond is 'water with somewhat of a proprietary right.' In a New York case it is laid down: 'Water, when reduced to possession, is property, and it may be bought and sold and have a market value, but it must be in actual possession, subject to control and management. . . .'

Running water has, oftentimes been compared to wild animals, birds, and fishes, which before capture and confinement belong to no one, but after capture belong to him who captures them.

Nor can it be successfully contended that water confined within the mains and pipes of the city's water system may not be the subject of larceny. It was such at common law. Ferens v. O'Brien, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 21, 15 Cox, C. C. 332, 52 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 70, 31 Week. Rep. 643, 47 J. P. 472, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 611; 25 Cyc. p. 13, note 11. Neither is there anything in the contention that because by § 2665, Revised Laws 1910, the legislature provided a special act making it a misdemeanor for any person to pipe gas so that it may be consumed without passing through a meter, so as to avoid paying therefor, that the general larceny statute does not cover an offense of this kind. A similar contention was made in the case of Firens v. O'Brien, supra, where counsel for the respondent submitted that water was not the subject of larceny when so confined because, by special Waterworks Clauses Acts (10 & 11 Vict. chap. 17, § 59, and 26 & 27 Vict. chap. 93, § 20), penalties were enacted for the abstraction of water from the company's mains or pipes without agreement with the company. But it was held that such sections of the Waterworks Clauses Acts did not take away the remedy under the larceny acts.

Also in the case of Woods v. People, 222 Ill. 293, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 520, 113 Am. St. Rep. 415, 78 N. E. 607, 6 Ann. Cas. 736, it was held: "A gas consumer who, by false connections, carries gas consumed on his premises around the meter so that it is not registered, may be prosecuted for larceny, notwithstanding a statute providing for the punishment of persons tampering or making false connections with gas pipes so that gas might be consumed without being registered by a meter."

Neither is there anything in the contention that the state failed to prove that the water so fraudulently consumed had any value. The state did prove that the rate charged at the time for water consumption was from 20 to 35 cents a thousand gallons, and the evidence shows that the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company, during the time this cut-off was in existence, consumed in the neighborhood of 50,000 gallons of water. In the absence of any contrary showing this proof was sufficient, as it will not be presumed by this court that the reasonable market value of such commodity was less than the rate charged by said city at that time, nor will it be presumed that said commodity was of no value whatever. The selling and not the cost price controls as to value. Woods v. People, supra.

Finally, it is contended that the proof was insufficient to warrant a conviction, even if it be admitted that the water was personal property owned by the city of New Cordell, and had a value. Counsel state their proposition thus:

"It is in evidence that the city had put in a meter, or meters, for measuring the value of water from the city mains into the plant of the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company, of which the defendant was an officer, and that under the directions of the defendant a by-pass was made around this meter so that the water would be conducted from the mains into the ice plant without being taken through the meter for registering, and in fact this is the whole case.

"It is a self-evident proposition that, by placing the meters at the defendant's property, the city yielded to him or the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company, of which he was manager, the possession and ownership of all water that the ice plant could use or might use, in so far as it lay within the power of the city to part with the ownership of water. The only requirement the city made was that such water as was used in the ice plant should be conducted through pipes leading through meters where the quantity of water consumed was registered, so that the city authorities might be able to determine exactly the water rent or tax which the defendant and his ice plant would be expected to pay.

"It is also self-evident that after water had passed into the ice plant from the city mains that the city had no claim of ownership in this water, and the defendant might use said water as he chose to use it.

"In the instant case there can be no question but that the city parted with both the possession and whatever ownership it had, if any, in the water. It had no right or claim of right to any water after it left its main, and if the defendant appropriated the water in the manner charged in the information, the city having yielded to him its right of possession to the water, and not having an ownership therein, and not reserving any right of ownership in the water, then the defendant could not be held for the crime of larceny."

The facts do not warrant nor support the argument aforesaid. The city of New Cordell had contracted to supply the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company with water at a certain meter rate. It had connected its water main with the place of business of the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company by a pipe which ran through a meter, and only surrendered possession of the water to the Cordell Ice & Fuel Company so long as the same was measured in accordance with the contract. The city did not part with the possession of the water until after it had passed through the meter. When the defendant, by means of the trick of placing a pipe in front of the meter to run around it and connect with the pipe behind the meter and shut off the cock in front of the meter so that water could not run through the same, he obtained possession of the city's water by fraud and stealth, and will not be heard to say in this court, under such circumstances, that the city parted with the possession and ownership of its water voluntarily.

After a careful examination of the record and due consideration of all the points urged by counsel for defendant in error as grounds for reversal of this judgment, we are convinced that the alleged errors are wholly technical, and without substantial foundation in law; that justice has been meted out to this defendant who, by trickery, would deprive his fellow citizens of property which they had acquired and were maintaining, in part, by general taxation. The punishment provided is inadequate for the offense committed. The judgment is affirmed.

Doyle, P. J., and Armstrong, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied February 9, 1918.

Annotation—Water, gas, and electricity as subjects of larceny.

This note treats the question whether water and gas in pipes, or electricity, may be the subjects of larceny. Other questions incidental or usual thereto are also considered, such as whether the offense is continuous and the effect of statutory penalties. It is well settled, as is shown by the cases cited herein, that water and gas in pipes, as well as electricity, may be subjects of larceny.

On the question of real property or things savoring of realty as the subject of larceny, see note in 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 965.

In general—gas.

The following cases support the rule that illuminating gas may be the subject of larceny: Woods v. People (1906) 222 Ill. 293, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 520, 113 Am. St. Rep. 415, 78 N. E. 607, 6 Ann. Cas. 736; Com. v. Shaw (1862) 4 Allen (Mass.) 308, 81 Am. Dec. 706; State v. Wellman (1885) 34 Minn. 221, 25 N. W. 395; Reg. v. White (1853) 3 Car. & K. (Eng.) 363, 22 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 123, 6 Cox, C. C. 213, 17 Jur. 536, 1 Week. Rep. 418, 1 C. L. R. 489, Dears. C. C. 203; Reg. v. Firth (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. (Eng.) 172, 11 Cox, C. C. 234, 19 L. T. N. S. 746, 17 Week. Rep. 327, 38 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 54; Phoenix G. L. & C. Co. v. Shillito, 19 Gas J. 848; Rapalje, Larceny, p. 47.

In Com. v. Shaw (1862) 4 Allen (Mass.) 308, 81 Am. Dec. 706, supra, the gas company, on nonpayment of the gas rates, removed the meter and shut off the gas by closing a stopcock in the service pipe on the premises of the defendant; after which she, without the consent or knowledge of the company, made a connection between the service pipe and the house, opened the stopcock, and received and consumed gas belonging to the company. It was held that if she took the gas with a felonious intent she was guilty of larceny; and that the offense was not embezzlement instead of larceny, on the theory that the gas was intrusted to her possession by the company and that at the time of the taking she was the bailee thereof, since the pipe from which the gas was taken was on her premises. The court said: "There is nothing in the nature of gas used for illuminating purposes which renders it incapable of being feloniously taken and carried away. It is a valuable article of merchandise, bought and sold like other personal property, susceptible of being severed from a mass or larger quantity and of being transported from place to place. In the present case it appears that it was the property of the Boston Gas Light Company; that it was in their possession by being confined in conduits and tubes, which belonged to them; and that the defendant severed a portion of that which was in a pipe of the company by taking it into her house and there consuming it. All this, being proved to have been done by her secretly, and with an intent to deprive the company of their property and to appropriate it to her own use, clearly constituted the crime of larceny."

In State v. Wellman (1885) 34 Minn. 221, 25 N. W. 395, supra, the person convicted of larceny of illuminating gas from the pipes of a gas company was an inmate of a boarding house in which the gas was consumed. After the meter was removed by the gas company, he purchased, it was admitted, pipe to connect the service pipe at the place where the meter had been detached. But he denied that he had placed the pipe in position or suggested to anyone to do so, claiming that he had abandoned his purpose after the purchase, and had nothing to do with making the connection or turning on the gas. And the court said that if this evidence were accepted as true he was, of course, not guilty of larceny. But the evidence showing that he purchased the pipe for the purpose for which it was used, taken in connection with all the circumstances of the case, was held sufficient to sustain the conviction. On the question as to the parties who might be guilty of the offense of larceny in such a case, the court said: "The commission of the offense included a series of successive acts, viz., procuring the connecting pipe, making the connection with it, turning the stopcock in the service pipe in the cellar, and, finally, turning on the gas at the burners and lighting it; and, of course, until this last act the commission of the larceny was not consummated. But this being a misdemeanor in which there are no accessories, anyone who sustained the relation to the offense which would, in case of a felony, have made him an accessory before the fact, would be a principal. A person who procured this lead pipe with which to make the connection, for the purpose and with the intent of effecting the larceny, would be equally guilty with his confederates or associates who made the connection or turned on or lighted the gas, although he might not in person have actually assisted in doing these latter acts."

It was held also in State v. Wellman (Minn.) supra, that the fact that the gas was taken for the use of the proprietor of the boarding house of which the defendant was an inmate would not be a defense to a prosecution for the larceny, on the theory that he had not taken it for his own use. On this point it was said: "We think it is enough to constitute larceny if the property is taken with the felonious intent to convert it to the use of a person other than the owner. But even if it were necessary that it be taken with intent to convert it to the taker's own use, this is sufficiently established in this case by the fact that it was taken with the intent to use it in the house of which defendant was an inmate, and where he would enjoy the benefit of it in common with others."

In Reg. v. White (1853) 3 Car. & K. (Eng.) 363, 22 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 123, 6 Cox, C. C. 213, 17 Jur. 536, 1 Week. Rep. 418, 1 C. L. R. 489, Dears. C. C. 203, supra, a conviction for larceny of gas was sustained, where it appeared that the defendant owned the entrance pipe by which the gas was admitted to the meter and also the exit pipe by which it passed from the meter to the burner on his premises, that he had the control of the stopcock by which the gas was admitted into the meter, and that he inserted a connecting pipe around the meter and in this way obtained and consumed gas which did not pass through the meter. It was contended that as the defendant owned the entrance pipe he was lawfully in possession of the gas by the consent of the company as soon as it was permitted to enter that pipe out of the gas main, and therefore was not guilty of larceny. But in overruling this contention the court took the position that, although the gas was in a pipe belonging to the defendant, it was still in the possession of the gas company until it passed through the meter; and that causing the gas to pass through the connecting pipe, thereby separating it from the gas in the entrance pipe, was a sufficient asportation to sustain a conviction for larceny if the taking was with fraudulent intent. In this connection, see note in 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38, as to circumstances sufficient to show asportation.

The principle that gas is the subject of larceny is assumed apparently in the case of Reg. v. Mitchell, 22 Gas J. (Eng.) 137, Greenough's Dig. of Gas Cases, 88, where the defendant, who had taken gas from the service pipe of a gas company, pleaded guilty of larceny and was sentenced to one month at hard labor.

In Reg. v. Jenkins, 5 Gas J. (Eng.) 214, Greenough's Dig. of Gas Cases, 89, the defendant was charged with having "laid or caused to be laid" a certain pipe to communicate with a pipe belonging to a gas company without their consent, and was found guilty, the statutory penalty being imposed.

In United States v. Carlos (1911) 21 Philippine, 553, the court cites decisions of the Supreme Court of Spain of January 20, 1887, and April 1, 1897, as holding that illuminating gas may be the subject of larceny, under a statute defining as guilty of larceny those who, with intent of gain, take another's personal property without his consent.

— water.

Water in pipes may be the subject of larceny. Ferens v. O'Brien (1883) L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 21, 15 Cox, C. C. 332, 52 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 70, 47 J. P. 472, 31 Week. Rep. 643, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 611 (holding that water in pipes of consumer of water company may be the subject of larceny); Rex v. Hutton (1911) 24 Can. Crim. Cas. 212, 19 West. L. R. 907 (where water in pipes of municipal corporation, which delivered it to consumer at a flat rate, was taken by a third party after consumer had refused him permission to do so); CLARK v. STATE, ante, 577.

In Rex v. Hutton (Can.) supra, the court sustained a conviction for larceny on a charge of theft of water belonging to the city, but stated that if there had been a meter and the water was taken from the consumer after it had passed through the meter, it would be the property of the consumer and not of the city.

— electricity.

It was held, in United States v. Carlos (Philippine) supra, that electric current may be a subject of larceny. The court said: "Counsel for the appellant insists that only corporeal property can be the subject of the crime of larceny, and in support of this proposition cites several authorities for the purpose of showing that the only subjects of larceny are tangible, movable chattels, something which could be taken in possession and carried away, and which had some, although trifling, intrinsic value, and also to show that electricity is an unknown force and cannot be a subject of larceny. . . . It is true that electricity is no longer, as formerly, regarded by electricians as a fluid, but its manifestations and effects, like those of gas, may be seen and felt. The true test of what is a proper subject of larceny seems to be not whether the subject is corporeal or incorporeal, but whether it is capable of appropriation by another than the owner. It is well settled that illuminating gas may be the subject of larceny, even in the absence of a statute so providing. . . . Electricity, the same as gas, is a valuable article of merchandise, bought and sold like other personal property, and is capable of appropriation by another. So, no error was committed by the trial court in holding that electricity is a subject of larceny."

It was held also in United States v. Carlos (Philippine) supra, that mere passive submission on the part of the electric light company, which was under contract to furnish the defendant with electricity, in continuing to furnish electricity for about a year after it knew that the defendant was misappropriating the current, would not be a defense to a prosecution for larceny, on the theory that the company thereby consented to the taking of the electricity within the rule that larceny is not committed when property is taken with the owner's consent.

In Rex v. Sperdakes (1911) 24 Can. Crim. Cas. 210, 40 N. B. 428, the defendant was convicted of fraudulently abstracting electricity from the wires of a railway company, contrary to a provision of the Criminal Code; but the only point considered on the appeal was as to whether the sentence imposed was erroneous.

It is said in 9 Laws of England (Halsbury) 644, that, by the Electric Lighting Act of 1882, everyone is guilty of simple larceny who maliciously or fraudulently abstracts, causes to be wasted or diverted, consumes or uses, and electricity.

Continuous transaction.

See, in this connection, note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 520, on the question as to when larceny is deemed continuous.

In Woods v. People (1906) 222 Ill. 293, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 520, 113 Am. St. Rep. 415, 78 N. E. 607, 6 Ann. Cas. 736, it was held that to determine the degree of the crime of one who, by means of false connections, conveyed gas around his meter and consumed it upon his property without having it measured, the taking during each day is not to be regarded as a separate offense, but the value of the gas wrongfully consumed during the period during which the false connection is in use at any one time will be considered.

And the fact that the "jumper" by means of which the defendant deflected the current did not remain in place continuously, but was put on and taken off at least monthly, and perhaps daily, in order to avoid detection, was held in United States v. Carlos (1911) 21 Philippine, 553, supra, not to render the defendant guilty of a series of offenses instead of a single offense as charged, especially where there was no demurrer to the complaint on this ground and it did not appear that the defendant was prejudiced by the single charge for the entire period.

And, on an indictment for larceny charging the taking on a certain day of a stated quantity of gas, it was held that a series of acts, rather than a continuous transaction constituting a single offense, was not shown by evidence that the abstraction covered a period of several years, and that the gas, which was consumed in a factory, was turned off each night at the burners, where it appeared that the gas was obtained through a connection made with the gas main so that the gas could enter the building without passing through a meter, and that the connecting pipe was always full of gas. Reg. v. Firth (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. (Eng.) 172, 11 Cox, C. C. 234, 19 L. T. N. S. 746, 17 Week. Rep. 327, 38 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 54.

Effect of statutory penalties.

See CLARK v. STATE, ante, 577.

In Woods v. People (Ill.) supra, it was held that a gas consumer who, by false connection, carries gas consumed on his premises around the meter, so that it is not registered, may be prosecuted for larceny, notwithstanding a statute providing for the punishment of persons tampering or making false connections with gas pipes so that gas may be consumed without being registered by a meter.

It was held also in Reg v. White (1853) 3 Car. & K. (Eng.) 363, 6 Cox, C. C. 213, 17 Jur. 536, 1 Week. Rep. 418, 1 C. L. R. 489, Dears. C. C. 203, cited also supra, that a statute providing a penalty for the fraudulent use of gas by laying pipes communicating with any pipe belonging to a gas company, without its consent, did not prevent an indictment for larceny of gas by means of a connecting pipe through which the gas passed around the meter.

And in Ferens v. O'Brien (1883) L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 21, 15 Cox, C. C. 332, 47 J. P. 472, 3 Week. Rep. 643, 52 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 70, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 611, the court held that water in pipes may be the subject of larceny at common law, although one of the arguments that it could not be was that the legislature had deemed it necessary to impose statutory penalties for the taking of water from pipes belonging to water companies. The point, however, was not discussed.

An indictment substantially in the words of the New York Statute of 1854 for the protection of gaslight companies, making it a misdemeanor for any person, with intent to injure or defraud any gas company, to connect any pipe with another pipe for conducting or supplying illuminating gas, in such manner as to connect with and be calculated to supply illuminating gas to any burner at which such gas is consumed without passing through the meter provided for registering the gas, was held insufficient in People v. Wilber (1857) 4 Park. Crim. Rep. (N. Y.) 19.

The note does not cover such cases as United States v. Genato (1910) 15 Philippine, 170, passing merely on the validity of an ordinance or statute enacted to protect gas, water, or electric light companies by imposing penalties for wrongful connection or interference with the companies' properties. For instance, the ordinance, the validity of which was sustained in that case, prohibited any person from using any device by means of which he might fraudulently obtain a current of electricity, and provided that the existence in any building or premises of any such device should, in the absence of satisfactory explanation, be deemed sufficient evidence of such use by the person benefited thereby.

R. E. H.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

L. H. ROGERS, Respt.,

v.

CHARLES H. LIPPY and Wife, Appts.

(— Wash. —, 169 Pac. 858.)

Contracts — employing broker — description of land.

Describing land to be sold as "my stock ranch" located in a particular section is not sufficient to satisfy a statute making void a contract employing a broker to sell real estate unless in writing signed by the party to be charged.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 5, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Ellis, Ch. J., and Morris, Main, and Holcomb, JJ., dissent.)

(January 9, 1918.)

Note. — For description of property by ownership or acreage, without other particular description, as satisfying the Statute of Frauds, see annotation following Hall v. Cotton, L.R.A.1916C, 1127. L.R.A.1918C.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff under a written contract with defendants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward R. Taylor, for appellants:

The commission agreement of March 4th is void because of defective description of the real estate.

Thompson v. English, 76 Wash. 23, 135 Pac. 664; Cushing v. Monarch Timber Co. 75 Wash. 678, 135 Pac. 660, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1239; Swartwood v. Naslin, 57 Wash. 287, 106 Pac. 770; Goodrich v. Rogers, 75 Wash. 212, 134 Pac. 947; Baylor v. Tolliver, 81 Wash. 257, 142 Pac. 678; Salin v. Roy, 81 Wash. 261, 142 Pac. 679; Reed, Stat. Fr. § 398.

It is also void because the price to be paid by a buyer and the terms on which he might buy are not given.

Keith v. Smith, 46 Wash. 131, 89 Pac. 473, 13 Ann. Cas. 975.

Mr. H. D. Allison for respondent.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff Rogers seeks recovery from the defendants Lippy and wife of compensation for services which he alleges were rendered by him under the following written contract:

Commission Agreement.

Seattle, Wash., March 4, 1916.

It is hereby understood and agreed by C. H. Lippy and L. H. Rogers: That in case said L. H. Rogers furnishes a buyer or a party who will exchange for my stock ranch located in sections 9, 17, and 21, township 3 south, range 13 east, Sweetgrass county, Mont., for properties presented by him, I hereby agree to pay the said L. H. Rogers a commission of $1,250, on the valuation of $40,000. This particularly refers to the Espanola apartments and land occupied by said apartment on the west side of Eleventh avenue between Pike and Union streets, 80x128 feet. The present owners are Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Craig. Settlement and adjustments to be made when deeds are passed to said property.

C. H. Lippy,
Mrs. C. H. Lippy.

Trial in the superior court without a jury resulted in findings and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendants have appealed to this court.

Respondent was, at the time in question, engaged in the real estate brokerage business in Seattle. Mr. Lippy made known to respondent his desire to sell or exchange his Montana stock ranch for Seattle property. Respondent, knowing that Mr. and Mrs. Craig desired to dispose of their property in Seattle, known as the "Espanola apartments," suggested to Mr. Lippy the possibility of an exchange of their ranch for the apartment property; it appearing that there was not a great difference in the respective values of the properties, which difference, it was thought, could be adjusted satisfactorily. Thereupon the commission contract above quoted providing for respondent's compensation was executed. Mr. and Mrs. Lippy were introduced to the Craigs by respondent, were shown over the apartment property, and on March 6, 1916, entered into a contract with Mr. and Mrs. Craig for an exchange of the Montana ranch for the apartment property. This contract was in writing, duly signed and acknowledged by the Craigs and Lippys. It became a binding obligation on the part of all parties to make the exchange by the execution of conveyances for the respective properties. The Craigs were able and willing to consummate the exchange according to the terms of the exchange contract, but the Lippys refused to do so. Thereupon respondent commenced this action to recover his compensation for services rendered under the commission contract, resulting in judgment in his favor as above noticed. By the provisions of section 5289, Rem. Code, contracts of this nature must be evidenced in writing to render them enforceable, that section being, in effect, a statute of frauds with reference to such contracts. We are confronted with the question of the sufficiency of the description in this commission contract, of the land owned by appellants to be so exchanged. The only words of the description are "my stock ranch located in Sections 9, 17, and 21, township 3 south, range 13 east, Sweetgrass county, Mont."

In Cushing v. Monarch Timber Co. 75 Wash. 678, 135 Pac. 660, Ann. Cas. 1914C. 1239, reviewing at some length the question of the necessity of such contracts containing a description of the property with reference to which they are made, Judge Ellis, speaking for the court, observed: "To avoid the uncertainty against which the statute is directed, it is obviously as necessary that the subject-matter of the sale be sufficiently described as that the amount of the commission be sufficiently stated. . . . The employment, the description of the real estate, and the agreement to pay the commission are all essentials to any writing meeting the terms of the statute. . . . The description being essential, it follows that it must be such a description as would meet the requirements of a sufficient description under any other phase of the Statute of Frauds, as, for instance, when invoked in actions for specific performance."

It is true the description there involved was more deficient than that here in question. We call attention to the rule thus stated by Judge Ellis, however, to show that the description is as much a necessary part of such a contract, to be evidenced in writing, as any other portion of the contract.

In Thompson v. English, 76 Wash. 23, 135 Pac. 664, holding a somewhat similar description insufficient to satisfy the statute, Judge Main, speaking for the court, said: "The description of the property as contained in the contract was 'seventy-nine acres in section 30, township 2 N., range 3 E., W. M., Clarke Co. Wn. Owner, A. E. English.' It will be observed that this description does not specify which 79 acres in section 30 was intended. To ascertain this fact, resort must be had to oral testimony. The description given cannot be applied to any definite property."

It will be noticed that the description there involved was limited to land in one named section, while this description is even more general, being limited to land in three named sections. It was accompanied by the name of the owner, as this description is.

In the late case of Gilman v. Brunton, 94 Wash. 1, 161 Pac. 835, there was involved the following description, which was challenged as not being sufficient to support specific performance: "Whereas, W. B. Brunton and Opal M. Brunton, parties of the first part, are the owners in fee simple of the following bounded and described property, situated in the county of Clarke, state of Washington; 48 acres, more or less, bounded on the north by Cedar creek and situated about one mile east of Etna, Wash., said property being the same property conveyed to the party of the first part by W. Tate and wife in 1912."

This description not only has the owners' names in connection therewith, but a reference therein to the property as being the same as that conveyed by named parties to named parties in a certain year. Yet it was held insufficient upon the authority of Thompson v. English, supra. We think the manner of mentioning the owners' names in connection with or, as we might say, as a part of the description in Thompson v. English and Gilman v. Brunton, means in substance the same as the words "my stock ranch" in the description here in question, and furnished as much aid to the descriptions in those cases as does the manner of designating the owner of the property, in connection with this description. Our decisions in Baylor v. Tolliver, 81 Wash. 257, 142 Pac. 678, and Salin v. Roy, 81 Wash. 261, 142 Pac. 679, are in harmony with Thompson v. English, and were rested principally upon the rule as therein announced, though Judge Morris in Baylor v. Tolliver makes some observations and citations of authority which may seem to indicate that the decision in Thompson v. English is not in harmony with the weight of authority elsewhere.

There are, we think, no decisions of this court dealing with the sufficiency of land descriptions in commission contracts out of harmony with the views expressed in Thompson v. English, or those decisions following the one rendered in that case. However, turning to those cases decided by this court having to do with the sufficiency of land descriptions in deeds and other contracts affecting interests in real property, there are one or two which can hardly be harmonized with the views expressed in these later commission contract cases. In Langert v. Ross, 1 Wash. 250, 24 Pac. 443, a contract of sale showing upon its face that it was executed in Tacoma was involved, wherein the description was, "Lots No. 1 and 2 in block 1806," no addition, city, or state being named in the description. This L.R.A.1918C.

description was held to be good upon its face, so that the identity of the lots could be shown by oral evidence. This holding, it must be admitted, is seemingly out of harmony with our later decisions in commission contract cases. In Hartigan v. Hoffman, 16 Wash. 34, 47 Pac. 217, there was involved a description in a deed reading, "East half northeast quarter and northwest quarter of northeast quarter of § 13, in town 35, range 8 east." This description was held insufficient to render the deed effective because no state, county, or meridian was mentioned. It appeared upon its face to have been executed in Nebraska, and it was claimed to have conveyed land in this state. This decision seems to be in harmony with our later ones. In Broadway Hospital & Sanitarium v. Decker, 47 Wash. 586, 92 Pac. 445, in a receipt for rent containing an option to purchase the property, the description read, "House No. 322 Broadway," mentioning no town, city, or state. It was held insufficient to satisfy the statute. This decision is also in harmony with our later ones. In Wetzler v. Nichols, 53 Wash. 285, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1075, 101 Pac. 867, there was involved a description in a deed reading, "Lots 7 and 8 in Cove addition to the city of Seattle, Wash." This description was held sufficient upon its face to admit parol evidence to identify the lots, it appearing by extrinsic evidence that there were blocks in the addition containing other lots of these numbers. We think this holding can be harmonized with our later ones upon the theory that the description was a perfect one upon its face. Looking to its language alone, the court would presume that there were no other lots of those numbers in the addition. Manifestly the defect was latent, and did not appear until it was shown that there were other lots of those numbers in the addition. Hence, the evidence was admissible only to identify the lots intended to be conveyed, after it appeared from extrinsic evidence that there were more than two lots to which the description could be applied. It was not a question of the sufficiency of the description upon its face. We all know that the description of a tract by lot number and addition name is supposed to have reference to something that has an official existence evidenced by record. "My stock ranch located in §§ 9, 17, and 21" fails to show certainty upon its face. It may mean any number of acres of any sort or description of land in those sections.

We are of the opinion that our early decisions having to do with descriptions in deeds or real property contracts, in so far as they may be regarded as out of harmony with our later decisions above noticed, are not of controlling force in the present controversy. It is possible that, if the problem here presented were a new one in this state, we might now reach a different conclusion from that which was reached in Thompson v. English and the decisions following the law there announced. We now, however, feel constrained to hold that the settled law of this state makes the attempted description of the land in this contract insufficient to render it enforceable.

After all it seems to us that, where land is sought to be described in a contract coming under the Statute of Frauds, which is located within an official government survey, so that it can readily be described with reference to such survey with certainty, the necessity of the former very liberal rule of construing land descriptions in such contracts, which necessity seems to have been the principal reason for its existence before the coming of our system of official government surveys, has almost wholly disappeared. The law as announced in our later decisions makes for certainty, and modern conditions render it easy to follow in the vast majority of cases.

Being of the opinion that respondent cannot recover because of the invalidity of the contract upon which he sues, we find it unnecessary to notice other questions presented.

The judgment is reversed, and the action dismissed.

Mount, Fullerton, Webster, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

Morris, J., dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the rule announced in the majority opinion, and inasmuch as this and the following case of Nance v. Valentine, — Wash. —, 169 Pac. 862, have settled adversely to my conception of the law a question upon which the court has sharply divided, I desire as briefly as possible to express my reasons for my dissent.

We are agreed, as stated in the case of Cushing v. Monarch Timber Co. 75 Wash. 678, 135 Pac. 660, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1239, that the contract here involved is enforceable if the description of the real property is sufficient to meet the requirements of the Statute of Frauds if contained in a deed or other contract relating to real estate. The question then is: If a contract relating to this real estate contained the description given in this contract, would such a description be sufficient under the requirements of the Statute of Frauds?

The majority opinion proceeds upon a wrong conception of the question here propounded. This is manifest from the quotation and reference to the Cushing Case to the effect that parol testimony is not admissible to add to the description contained in a contract relating to real property. That such is the law cannot be denied, and, so far as I know, no court of late years has ever attempted to write a contrary rule. But this is not the question here involved. Respondent is not attempting to add anything to the description contained in his contract. His position is that the description is sufficient. What he is maintaining, and in this, in my opinion, the law supports him, is that, while parol testimony is not admissible to add to the description of the property, it is admissible to identify the description with its location upon the ground, and thus apply it to a definite piece of property. That this is permissible is clearly pointed out in the Cushing Case, where it is said: "Parol evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of applying the description contained in a writing to a definite piece of property and to ascertain its location on the ground, but never for the purpose of supplying deficiencies in a description otherwise so incomplete as not to definitely describe any land. The description must be in itself capable of application to something definite before parol testimony can be admitted to identify any property as the thing described. 'Parol evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of identifying the description contained in the writing with its location upon the ground, but not for the purpose of ascertaining and locating the land about which the parties negotiated and supplying a description thereof which they have omitted from the writing.'"

The same distinction is pointed out in Baylor v. Tolliver, 81 Wash. 257, 142 Pac. 678, citing the Cushing Case, and attempting to show the distinction between those cases where it is sought to add to the description by parol and those where there is "a description capable of definite ascertainment sufficient, with the aid of parol testimony, to identify the description with its location on the ground." In the Baylor Case it is pointed out that the case falls within the first class as being an attempt to add to the description given; it being necessary, in order to support the contract, to admit parol testimony of the meaning of the words used, which comes within the inhibition stated in the Cushing Case. These two cases, in my opinion, correctly announce the rule as supported by the great weight of authority and should be adhered to.

That in real estate contracts it is permissible to show by parol the circumstances of possession, ownership, and situation of the parties and their relation to each other and to the property at the time of the negotiations is, in my opinion, a rule of such universal recognition that I shall make but little reference to authorities in its support. In Guyer v. Warren, 175 Ill. 328, 51 N. E. 580, it is said: "A deed or other written contract is not void for uncertainty in a description of the land sold or conveyed, if, from the words employed, the description can be made certain by extraneous evidence of physical conditions, measurements, or monuments referred to in the deed."

In Fish v. Hubbard, 21 Wend. 651, it is said: "A location or application of the description of parcels must always be made by evidence aliunde."

In Murray v. Mayo, 157 Mass. 250, 31 N. E. 1064, it is said: "Any description in a deed or contract of sale of real estate from which the property can be exactly located is sufficient, although parol evidence is necessary to apply the description to the land and fix the boundaries."

In Baker v. Hall, 158 Mass. 361, 33 N. E. 612, the same rule is thus stated: "For the purpose of interpreting the document, we may put ourselves in the position of the parties, and ascertain by oral evidence their relations to any property which would satisfy the terms of the memorandum."

Ryder v. Loomis, 161 Mass. 161, 36 N. E. 836, announces the same rule and says it is well settled. 2 Wharton on Evidence, 943, makes this familiar illustration in support of the rules. When an estate is granted by the designation of Blackacre, parol testimony is admissible to identify the premises known by that name.

Ranney v. Byers, 219 Pa. 332, 123 Am. St. Rep. 660, 68 Atl. 971, refers to the rule as "a well-settled doctrine supported alike by the text-writers and decided cases," and adds: "It is not proving an essential part of the declaration by parol—that cannot be done—but simply identifying or locating the subject."

In Gould v. Lee, 55 Pa. 99, the court says: "Parol evidence is not admissible to alter or contradict what is written, upon the very obvious principle that the writing is the best evidence of the intentions of the parties; but parol evidence has many times been received to explain and define the subject-matter of written agreements. Herein is no contradiction."

The distinction between these two rules is pointed out in Peart v. Brice, 152 Pa. 277, 25 Atl. 537, in this language: "A contract for the sale of land in which the description lacks the certainty necessary to locate it is, without doubt, void. Neither words which do not describe nor descriptive language which is equally applicable to any one of several tracts of land can be supplemented by parol evidence as to what tract was intended. But parol evidence to describe the land intended to be sold is one thing, and parol evidence to apply a written description to land is another and very different thing, and for that purpose is admissible."

In order to sustain the majority rule it must be held that the maxim, "That is certain which can be made certain," is not applicable to cases of this character. This maxim is pointed to in many of the authorities as a sustaining reason for the admissibility of oral testimony in cases of this character. Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545, 96 Am. Dec. 671; Hodges v. Kowing, 58 Conn. 12, 7 L.R.A. 87, 18 Atl. 979; Smith's Appeal, 69 Pa. 474; Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 413, 15 Am. Rep. 110; Robeson v. Hornbaker, 3 N. J. Eq. 60.

There is nothing new or strange about this rule. I have never known it to be questioned but that, under the rules of evidence, contracts in writing may be explained by parol evidence so far as to identify the subject-matter and apply the writing to it. 10 R. C. L. 1080, 1081; 17 Cyc. 724. Such a rule has always been recognized by this court. In Newman v. Buzard, 24 Wash. 225, 64 Pac. 139, it is said: "Parol evidence is and must of necessity be always admissible to identify the property described in and conveyed by a deed, to ascertain to what property the particulars of description in the deed apply."

The same rule is announced in Schultz v. Simmons Fur Co. 46 Wash. 555, 90 Pac. 917; Wetzler v. Nichols, 53 Wash. 285, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1075, 101 Pac. 867; Robinson v. Taylor, 68 Wash. 351, 123 Pac. 444. Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1011; Old Republic Min. Co. v. Ferry County, 69 Wash. 600, 125 Pac. 1018.

The majority opinion cites many of our own cases. Bearing in mind the rule we have attempted to point out, there is no conflict in them. In so far as an attempt has been made to add to the description by parol, it has been denied, but when it was sought to identify the property, it has been permitted; the only exception is Thompson v. English, 76 Wash. 23, 135 Pac. 664, and Gilman v. Brunton, 94 Wash. 1, 161 Pac. 835. These two cases are wrong and, in my opinion, should be overruled. Salin v. Roy, 81 Wash. 261, 142 Pac. 679, referred to by the majority, does not follow the Thompson Case, but is bottomed upon the Baylor Case, as an attempt to add to the description in the contract by explaining the meaning of the words used. If the distinction I have attempted to point out is recognized, there will be no confusion; if not, confusion must necessarily arise.

Much more might be said in support of my views, but the foregoing is sufficient to indicate my reasons for dissenting, which is all that need be said.

Ellis, Ch. J., and Main and Holcomb, JJ., concur in the opinion written by Morris, J.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. M. SMITH, Admr., etc., of Grover Cleveland Hann, Deceased,
v.

DR. CHARLES EDWIN WOODING, Appt.

(— N. C. —, 94 S. E. 404.)

Discovery — examination of defendant — killing patient by X-ray burn.

Plaintiff, in a suit against a physician for causing death by an X-ray burn, may have an order for examination of defendant to enable him to frame his complaint under a statute providing for such examination at any time before trial, where he shows that his information with respect to the matter is not specific enough for a full and accurate preparation of a complaint, and that the facts essential for that purpose are within the knowledge of defendant alone.

For other cases, see Discovery and Inspection, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 28, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court for Mecklenburg County dismissing an appeal from an order for his examination before trial of an action brought to recover damages for injuries causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant in the use of the X-ray. Affirmed.

Statement by Walker, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have resulted from the negligence of the defendant in the use and application of the X-ray in treating the intestate, which so burned the patient as to cause his death. Plaintiff moved before the clerk of the court for an order requiring the defendant to be examined before a commissioner, in order that plaintiff may obtain such knowledge and information as is necessary for him to have in order to prepare his complaint and make proper and sufficient allegations therein of his cause of action; such knowledge and information being in the possession of the defendant. An order was entered for such examination, and a commission issued to Fred M. Parrish, Esq., of Winston-Salem, North Carolina, to take the examination, and for that purpose that defendant appear before him at such time and place as he may appoint. The order was based upon an affidavit filed by the plaintiff, setting forth generally the nature of the action, and alleging that there are certain facts, stated therein, which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, and which are necessary to be known by the plaintiff in order that he may frame his complaint, and that he cannot obtain the facts from any other source. The defendant excepted to the order of the clerk, and appealed to the superior court. The judge dismissed the appeal, and defendant then appealed to this court, and assigned these errors:

"(1) That the court erred in holding that the statute was sufficient to require the examination of the defendant for the purpose of obtaining information upon which to file the complaint, and in dismissing the appeal of defendant from the order of the clerk.

"(2) In dismissing the appeal, for that the affidavit shows on its face that plaintiff had information sufficient to file his complaint."

Messrs. Manly, Hendron, & Womble, F. M. Shannonhouse, and W. S. Bean, for appellant:

The order compelling defendant to be examined was invalid.

Bailey v. Matthews, 156 N. C. 78, 72 S. E. 92; Fields v. Coleman, 160 N. C. 14, 75 S. E. 1005.

Even if it should be held that the statute gives plaintiff the right to examine defendant before trial to obtain information upon which to file his complaint, it not only appears upon the face of plaintiff's affidavit itself that he already has sufficient information to enable him to draw his complaint, but the information sought to be elicited is immaterial, unnecessary, and irrelevant.

Bailey v. Matthews, 156 N. C. 78, 72 S. E. 92; Tanenbaum v. Lindheim, 54 App. Div. 188, 66 N. Y. Supp. 376; Burnett v. Mitchell, 26 Misc. 547, 57 N. Y. Supp. 474; Hunt v. Sullivan, 79 App. Div. 119, 79 N. Y. Supp. 708.

Messrs. E. T. Cansler and Thaddeus A. Adams, for appellee:

Plaintiff had a right to examine the

Note. — The right under statute to an order for the examination of an adverse party to enable one to frame his pleadings is discussed in the annotation following this case, post, 590.
L.R.A.1918C.

defendant under §§ 865 et seq. of the Revisal, either before or after pleadings were filed.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first assignment of error, we suppose, is intended to raise the question whether a party to an action, as, for instance, the defendant in this case, may be examined under the statute (Revisal, §§ 864, 873) for the purpose of enabling the other party to file his pleading, or whether the provision of the statute is confined in its operation to evidence merely to be used or not at the trial, and to be taken after the pleadings are filed, or, at least, after the complaint has been filed, showing what is the cause of action. Section 866 of the Revisal provides that the examination "may be had at any time before the trial," and this court has held that these words, construed in connection with what precedes and follows them, authorize an examination of a party for the purpose of aiding him in filing his complaint. We refer to Holt v. Southern Finishing & Warehouse Co. 116 N. C. 486, 21 S. E. 919, where the court discusses the question quite at length. The defendants in that case, and the parties designated for the examination, raised the point that would require of them disclosures as to the act of fraud charged in the affidavit of the plaintiff, but the court rejected this objection and said: "Very cogent reasons must be shown this court before it will conclude that such a right does not belong to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has commenced a civil action in the superior court of Alamance against the defendant for the purpose of setting aside an alleged pretended 'transfer by the defendant corporation. . . . To enable him to draw his complaint with greater certainty, the plaintiff desires to examine Neil Ellington, E. T. Garset, and J. W. Lindau, stockholders and directors of the company, under §§ 580 and 581 of the Code. He has as much right to examine [them] before the trial as at the trial, and they are subject to the same rules of examination as prevail in the examination of witnesses on the trial of actions before the courts, and they are compelled to answer all pertinent and material questions put to them, except such as the Constitution and laws relieve them from answering. We know of no such exemption, except a man may not be compelled to give evidence against himself, which is found in article 1, § 2, of the Constitution, which section, by judicial construction, has been extended to witnesses in civil actions. Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 141, 17 S. E. 69. It makes no difference whether the answer will result in pecuniary injury to the witnesses or not; they must answer the questions as they would be required to do before the courts."

The court therefore affirmed the orders for the examination made by Judge Green, upon writs of certiorari, and also held that they were not appealable, citing, for this ruling, Helms v. Green, 105 N. C. 251, 18 Am. St. Rep. 893, 11 S. E. 470; Vann v. Lawrence, 111 N. C. 32, 15 S. E. 1031, and Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor, supra; to which we add Pender v. Mallett, 122 N. C. 164, 30 S. E. 324, and same case, 123 N. C. 60, 31 S. E. 351. In the last case, Pender v. Mallett, 123 N. C. 60, 31 S. E. 351, the court said that, "under the Code, § 581, the defendant may be examined before pleadings filed to procure information in framing the complaint, as was the case in Holt v. Southern Finishing & Warehouse Co. supra, where it is held that an appeal from such order [for an examination] was premature and would be dismissed; or the defendant may be examined, after answer filed to procure evidence in the cause,"—citing Helms v. Green and Vann v. Lawrence, supra.

In Bailey v. Matthews, 156 N. C. 81, 72 S. E. 92, and Fields v. Coleman, 160 N. C. 11, 75 S. E. 1005, the applications for the examinations were denied, and this court affirmed the judgments upon other grounds, and the question as to the right to examine before the pleading is filed, for the purpose of aiding in preparing it, was not directly presented. We find that in Blossom v. Ludington, 32 Wis. 212, the court, when construing a statute substantially, if not literally, the same as ours, has held that the examination may be ordered before the pleading is filed. The court then said: "The practice in regard to the examination of a party in a case like the one before us does not seem to be regulated by statute, nor by any general rule of court. It is enacted that no action to obtain discovery under oath in aid of the prosecution or defense of another action shall be allowed; but that a party to an action may be examined as a witness at the instance of the adverse party, or of any one of several adverse parties, and for that purpose may be compelled to give testimony in the action in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness. Rev. Stat. § 54, chap. 137. This provision was obviously adopted for the purpose of abolishing the bill of discovery, and to provide a substitute therefor. By § 55 it is enacted that the examination provided for in the previous section may be had either on the trial of the action or at any time before trial, at the option of the party claiming it, before a judge of the court or county judge, on a previous notice to the party to be examined and any other adverse party, of at least five days, unless for good cause shown the judge order otherwise. . . . In this case the order for the examination was made upon the affidavit and complaint, and was designed to aid the plaintiff in determining whether any amendment to the complaint was necessary."

The court held that the examination should proceed, so that plaintiff might acquire information necessary to amend his complaint, but that the right to examine was not an absolute and unrestricted one, and then said, if it were so: "It is plain this statute may become the means of the greatest abuse and oppression. For an unscrupulous party has but to commence his action, and then insist upon the examination of the adverse party for the purpose of discovery, and compel the disclosure of matters wholly impertinent to his case, and in which he has no interest, merely to gratify his malice or curiosity. And so much injustice might be done by such an unrestricted, roving examination of a party that we have earnestly endeavored to so interpret the statute as to secure the object of its enactment, and at the same time give the court in which the action is pending some power to restrict the examination within proper limits."

It was said in Simmons v. Vanderbilt, 59 How. Pr. 411, that, "where a proper case has been made for it, a party has an undoubted right to examine his adversary to enable him to prepare his pleadings."

Referring to the form and substance of the affidavit upon which the application was based, it further said: "The plaintiff's affidavit is entirely defective. It states no fact whatever, except that the defendant admitted 'the receipt of the money sued for.' The relations between the parties are undisclosed. The plaintiff gives us no insight into his real position; no clue to the averment that the moneys were received 'for his use.' Something should at least have transpired to justify the bringing of the suit and the framing of a general averment. So far the court should have been taken into the plaintiff's confidence. As it is, this affidavit is entirely blind. It seems studiously to avoid a frank disclosure of what induced the plaintiff to proceed. The order was therefore very properly vacated. It would be intolerable were parties to be subjected to inquisitorial examinations upon such papers.

We refer to these cases merely to show the clear and decided trend of judicial opinion in regard to the nature of this kind of proceeding, and not because they are directly applicable to this case, for they are not in all respects. Here the plaintiff has alleged sufficiently that, while he has general information of the matter, it is not specific enough for a full and accurate preparation of his complaint, and that the facts essential for this purpose are within the knowledge of the defendant alone. The application appears to be perfectly fair and bona fide, and not made for the purpose of vexing or harassing the defendant, or from any ulterior motive, or from any other motive than that of protecting his rights. There is reason why he has no knowledge or information of the facts, which is that the person who was treated at the defendant's hospital, or who was under his care as a surgeon, has since died, and his evidence therefore is not available. The case is more like that of Howe v. Learey, 62 Hun, 241, 16 N. Y. Supp. 736, where it was said by the court: "The rigid rule that, if a party do not actually know the facts which make the defense, no order to examine can be granted, would render the section of the case in question of little practical use. The section should have a broader scope. Where facts and circumstances are shown which justify an examination of a party so that a pleading may be framed for the trial of the issue, the order should be granted."

See also Frothingham v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304; Farmer v. National Life Asso. 73 Hun, 523, 26 N. Y. Supp. 126.

As the court dismissed the appeal from the clerk, we merely affirm that order, which results, of course, in the same way here.

Annotation—Right under statute to an order for the examination of an adverse party to enable one to frame his pleadings.

In general.

This note is confined to cases involving the right to an examination of an adverse party for the purpose of securing facts upon which to base pleadings, under statutes taking the place of the old bill or discovery in equity.

L.R.A.1918C.

For the right to discovery by a bill in equity, where the statute provides for examination of a party before trial, see Cargill v. Kountze Bros. 24 L.R.A. 183.

Most of the cases involving the question under consideration have arisen under the New York Code, which provides for the taking of the deposition of a party to an action pending in a court of record, or of a person who expects to be a party to an action, at the instance of an adverse party or of a coplaintiff or codefendant, at any time before or during the trial, but which does not specifically authorize the holding of such an examination for the purpose of enabling the party to frame his pleadings.

Under the bill for discovery in equity, a suitor could procure the precise information, if it lay in the mind of his adversary, on which he might frame his pleadings in his action for relief; could select the persons whom he should make defendants, and secure the facts which would qualify him to come to trial well prepared, and the only substantial restriction placed upon the breadth of the former practice is that the discovery must be sought in the same action in which relief is asked. Glenney v. Stedwell (1876) 64 N. Y. 120.

Where the state practice provides for the examination of a defendant to enable the plaintiff to frame his complaint, such examination may be had in the Federal court, in the absence of a Federal statute covering the subject. Anderson v. Mackay (1891) 46 Fed. 105.

In Wisconsin the statute provides that an examination may "be taken before issue joined . . . to enable the party to plead," and under this provision the term "plead" is not limited to a complaint, answer, or reply, but may extend to a claim instituted by either party in aid of an action or defense, which may be put in issue and tried; so a defendant in a proceeding for inspection of books is entitled to an examination of the plaintiff before the matter of inspection is fully determined by the court. Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1905) 125 Wis. 643, 104 N. W. 811.

Under this statute, if a plaintiff is entitled to an examination to enable him to plead, it should be allowed without reference to his ulterior motives, as the other party has ample means of protection against improper examination. Ibid.

Complaint — in general.

Under the New York statute above referred to, which, like the statute involved in SMITH v. WOODING, ante, 588, does not specifically provide for such a result, examination of a defendant will be granted when it is necessary to enable plaintiff properly to frame his complaint. Glenney v. Stedwell (1876) 64 N. Y. 120; O'Reilly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1877) 12 Hun (N. Y.) 124; Dreyfus v. Bernhard (1898) 31 App. Div. 628, 55 N. Y. Supp. 6; Re Darling (1900) 31 Misc. 543, 64 N. Y. Supp. 793; Re Sayre (1902) 70 App. Div. 329, 75 N. Y. Supp. 286; Churchill v. Loeser (1895) 89 Hun, 613, 69 N. Y. S. R. 754, 35 N. Y. Supp. 310; Thompson v. Haigh (1909) 134 App. Div. 614, 119 N. Y. Supp. 331; Re Erie Malleable Iron Co. (1895) 90 Hun, 62, 35 N. Y. Supp. 597; Re Sands (1904) 98 App. Div. 148, 90 N. Y. Supp. 749; Mendelson v. Newborg (1913) 155 App. Div. 892, 139 N. Y. Supp. 1052; Havemeyer v. Ingersoll (1871) 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 301; Frothingham v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. (1886) 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304; Heishon v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. (1879) 13 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 34. See also Holt v. Southern Finishing & Warehouse Co. (1895) 116 N. C. 486, 21 S. E. 919; SMITH v. WOODING.

And it has been specifically held that an examination of defendant would be granted because such examination was necessary to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, under the following circumstances:

—where plaintiff was an assignee for creditors, and defendant had rendered to plaintiff's assignor reports of stock transactions which all the facts adduced tended to show were false, but as to which the only statements of actual transactions were contained in defendant's books, and defendant was the only person acquainted with the precise facts, as he had acted in a confidential and discretionary relation to plaintiff's assignor, Judah v. Lane (1887) 14 Daly, 308, 12 N. Y. S. R. 130;

—where plaintiff desired to declare on a written instrument which was as much his property as defendants' and to ascertain the precise terms and wording, though he might recollect the general tenor of the instrument, Perrow v. Lindsay (1889) 52 Hun, 115, 4 N. Y. Supp. 795;

—where a suit was brought against parties as stockholders in a corporation on unpaid subscriptions and plaintiff's information as to defendant's stock ownership was based purely on hearsay, Thayer v. Humphreys (1893) 69 Hun, 343, 23 N. Y. Supp. 531;

—where plaintiff was suing for compensation for services, which was to be a percentage of the profits of the business, and was not a partner so as to be entitled to an accounting, Veiller v. Op- penheim (1894) 75 Hun, 21, 26 N. Y. Supp. 1051;

—where an action was brought to establish a will claimed to be lost, and it was necessary that the complaint set forth its provisions, which were not definitely known to plaintiff, but were known to defendant, Blatchford v. Paine (1897) 24 App. Div. 140, 48 N. Y. Supp. 783;

—where, in an action to foreclose a mortgage of which the plaintiff was the assignee, an amended complaint was necessary because of an answer alleging payment and discharge, Jerrells v. Perkins (1898) 25 App. Div. 348, 49 N. Y. Supp. 597;

—where, in an action by a temporary administrator to recover assets, it appears that defendant, a daughter of decedent, had possession of considerable of his property during his life, and that it is still in her possession, and she alleges that it belongs to her without showing the source of her title, and plaintiff has no knowledge concerning the matter nor other means of obtaining it, Butler v. Richardson (1898) 31 App. Div. 281, 52 N. Y. Supp. 756;

—where the allegations were to the effect that the lease sued upon was executed in duplicate, and that plaintiff had lost his copy, though defendants denied that they had possession of the lease, Brown v. Georgi (1899) 26 Misc. 128, 56 N. Y. Supp. 923, dismissing appeal from (1898) 56 N. Y. Supp. 851;

—where suit was brought upon a contract with plaintiff's assignors to employ them exclusively as insurance brokers, and it was alleged that defendant had failed to employ plaintiff's assignors, and had employed others, plaintiff desiring to find what other brokers were employed and such knowledge being peculiarly with defendant, Tanenbaum v. Hilborn (1899) 44 App. Div. 89, 60 N. Y. Supp. 406;

—Where representatives of a deceased partner sought to examine the surviving members to secure a disclosure of intestate's interests in order that they might frame a complaint in accounting, Kastner v. Kastner (1900) 53 App. Div. 293, 65 N. Y. Supp. 756;

—where one having an action merely for royalties on the sale of a book needed only to learn the wholesale price of the books and the number sold to enable him to frame a complaint, there being no necessity for an accounting, Karst v. Prang Educational Co. (1909) 132 App. Div. 197, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1049;

—where plaintiff's testator conveyed real estate to a corporation, and plaintiff did not know, and had been unable to learn, in what way testator was to be compensated, and therefore did not know whether to frame a complaint for specific performance, money damages, or an accounting, Oppenheim v. Abbott (1916) 160 N. Y. Supp. 438; —where the state instituted a suit to recover interest money on state funds deposited in banks by a state treasurer during his term, and it appeared that, while the state knew the aggregate amount deposited during each quarter, it did not know the banks in which it was deposited, the rates of interest, the date, duration, or term of the deposits, although it could frame some sort of complaint without the examination, but it would be entirely indefinite as to the amounts, and would have to be framed in a most general way, State v. Baetz (1893) 86 Wis. 29, 56 N. W. 329;

—where plaintiff in an action for the wrongful death of her husband while in the employ of defendant was presumptively without knowledge as to the circumstances of his death, although, upon the facts already known, a complaint might be framed which might or might not present the real merits of her case, Schmidt v. Menasha Wooden Ware Co. (1896) 92 Wis. 529, 66 N. W. 695.

And in Hill v. McKane (1906) 115 App. Div. 537, 101 N. Y. Supp. 411, it was held not to be an answer to an application for an examination of defendant to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, that he had been able to frame a complaint in an action for an accounting in another state, where such proceeding had been futile and had terminated.

And in Livingston v. Curtis (1877) 12 Hun (N. Y.) 121, 54 How. Pr. 370, where plaintiff's deceased husband, while in feeble condition, made a partnership settlement with defendant, and afterwards stated that an important credit had been overlooked, and defendant refused to permit an examination of the books to verify the matter, an application for examination of the books was granted, and an order refusing an application for the examination of the defendant was modified to permit its renewal if it should prove necessary after examination of the books.

See also SMITH v. WOODING, in which the court regarded the examination of defendant as being proper to enable plaintiff to make a full and accurate statement of his case, though he had general information of the matter forming the basis of his cause of action.

Where, however, it appears from the affidavit that plaintiff has all the information that is necessary to enable him to frame his complaint, an examination will be denied. Sanger v. Seymour (1886) 42 Hun (N. Y.) 641; Martin v. Clews (1888) 23 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 552; Dalzell v. Fahys' Watch Case Co. (1890) 26 Jones & S. 136, 9 N. Y. Supp. 713; Bloom v. Patten (1890) 26 Jones & S. 225, 10 N. Y. Supp. 228; Nathan v. Whitehill (1893) 67 Hun, 398, 22 N. Y. Supp. 63; Green v. Carey (1894) 81 Hun, 496, 31 N. Y. Supp. 8; Lewisohn Bros. v. Muller (1896) 6 App. Div. 459, 39 N. Y. Supp. 570; Kessler v. Levy & L. Co. (1896) 7 App. Div. 142, 40 N. Y. Supp. 271; Schmerber v. Reinach (1899) 38 App. Div. 622, 58 N. Y. Supp. 84; Cutting v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1900) 51 App. Div. 628, 64 N. Y. Supp. 258; Bloodgood v. Slayback (1900) 54 App. Div. 634, 66 N. Y. Supp. 610; Clark v. Ennis (1901) 65 App. Div. 164, 72 N. Y. Supp. 581; Butler v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 235, 79 N. Y. Supp. 419; Elmes v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 244, 79 N. Y. Supp. 425; Snow v. Snow-Church Surety Co. (1903) 80 App. Div. 40, 80 N. Y. Supp. 512; Fischer v. American Exchange Nat. Bank (1908) 128 App. Div. 268, 112 N. Y. Supp. 668; Re La Grave (1909) 132 App. Div. 108, 116 N. Y. Supp. 465; Thompson v. Haigh (1909) 134 App. Div. 614, 119 N. Y. Supp. 331; Hillis v. Ferguson (1915) 158 N. Y. Supp. 613; De Martini v. McCaldin (1917) 163 N. Y. Supp. 484; Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1909) 138 Wis. 390, 120 N. W. 235.

And the conclusion of the affiant that an examination is necessary to enable him to plead is not binding on the court. Badger Brass Mfg. Co. v. Daly (1909) 137 Wis. 601, 119 N. W. 328; Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1909) 138 Wis. 390, 120 N. W. 235.

Nor will an examination be allowed to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, where it appears that he has failed to exhaust the ordinary means of obtaining the desired information. Nathan v. Whitehill (1893) 67 Hun, 398, 22 N. Y. Supp. 63; Tanenbaum v. Lindheim (1900) 54 App. Div. 188, 66 N. Y. Supp. 375.

So, to secure the examination of defendants in an action by a stockholder against the directors of a corporation, it must appear that the information desired is peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants whose examination is sought, and is not accessible to plaintiff, L.R.A.1918C.

and that the desired information has been demanded and refused. Elmes v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 244, 79 N. Y. Supp. 425.

And an examination will be denied where the information could be obtained by a bill of particulars to defendant's counterclaim. Jiminez v. Ward (1897) 21 App. Div. 387, 47 N. Y. Supp. 557.

Nor will examination be allowed to enable plaintiff to frame an unnecessary allegation. Diefendorf v. Fenn (1908) 125 App. Div. 651, 110 N. Y. Supp. 68.

In Andersen v. Beston (1910) 140 App. Div. 301, 125 N. Y. Supp. 81, where plaintiff avoided a dismissal by obtaining leave to move for an amendment, of which leave he did not avail himself, he was not entitled, two years thereafter, to an order for the examination of defendant on the ground that it might develop facts showing an amendment to be unnecessary, or that it might determine the character of the pleading required upon such amendment, as he had had his day in court on the original complaint and could not now have an examination to support it.

An examination will not be allowed to enable plaintiff to plead to a counterclaim which is susceptible of a denial, in one of the forms provided in the Code, which denial, with a bill of particulars, would amply safeguard plaintiff. McNamara v. Keene (1902) 37 Misc. 864, 76 N. Y. Supp. 992.

And where it does not appear necessary that a complaint be made more definite and certain, and it was not attacked for uncertainty by defendant, an examination will not be ordered to enable plaintiff to amend. Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1881) 15 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 380.

But in Drake v. Weinman & Co. (1895) 12 Misc. 65, 33 N. Y. Supp. 177, it was held that an examination would be allowed where a fiduciary relation, or the relation of principal and agent, exists, and the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the person sought to be examined, though the affidavit shows that plaintiff is in possession of ample material to prepare a complaint.

—when party is entitled to an accounting.

An examination of defendant will be denied as being unnecessary to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, where he is entitled to an accounting. Pierce v. McLaughlin Real Estate Co. (1907) 121 App. Div. 501, 106 N. Y. Supp. 28;

Boskowitz v. Sulzbacher (1907) 121 App. Div. 878, 106 N. Y. Supp. 865; Boskowitz v. Sulzbacher (1907) 121 App. Div. 886, 106 N. Y. Supp. 872; Boskowitz v. Ulmann (1907) 121 App. Div. 887, 106 N. Y. Supp. 870; Hutchinson v. Simpson (1902) 73 App. Div. 520, 77 N. Y. Supp. 197; Re Gardner (1908) 124 App. Div. 654, 109 N. Y. Supp. 95; Rosenthal v. Jackson (1908) 125 App. Div. 895, 110 N. Y. Supp. 786; Riley v. McGee (1915) 165 App. Div. 768, 152 N. Y. Supp. 485.

But where the existence of a confidential relationship, which is the basis of the accounting, is admitted in the pleading, an application for an examination will be granted. Murphy v. Keenan (1917) 101 Misc. 443, 167 N. Y. Supp. 55.

And in Raymond v. Brooks (1879) 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 383, it was held that, where plaintiff was suing as administrator for an accounting, he was entitled to an examination of defendant as to matters within his knowledge of which the plaintiff may well be supposed to have been ignorant, such examination being necessary to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint.

—necessity for showing that cause of action exists.

In some cases the broad statement is made that a party is not entitled to an examination to enable him to ascertain whether he has a cause of action. See Rosenthal v. Jackson (1908) 125 App. Div. 895, 110 N. Y. Supp. 786; and Lathrop v. Brown (1884) 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 101.

Other cases couple such statement with a statement that mere fishing expeditions will not be permitted to enable the party to discover whether possibly a cause of action exists in his favor. Brownell v. National Bank (1880) 20 Hun (N. Y.) 517; De Leon v. De Lima (1884) 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287; Nathan v. Whitehill (1893) 67 Hun, 398, 51 N. Y. S. R. 457, 22 N. Y. Supp. 63; Dobyns v. Commercial Trust Co. (1900) 31 Misc. 829, 64 N. Y. Supp. 554.

Such general statements must be taken with some qualification inasmuch as in many of the cases in which examination is allowed it may be said that the matter sought is essential to determining whether or not the party has a cause of action. While the precise line demarking the cases in which an examination will be allowed from those in which it will be denied because of their being merely fishing expeditions is rather illusive, it may be said in general that, to entitle a party to an examination, he should be able to convince the court that prima facie he has a cause of action, or that there is a reasonable basis for a belief that a cause of action exists in his favor.

Thus, in Walsh v. Press Co. (1900) 48 App. Div. 333, 62 N. Y. Supp. 833, an application for the discovery of books and papers, the court said: "The party applying must show to the satisfaction of the court the materiality and necessity of the discovery or inspection sought, the particular information which he requires, and in the case of books and papers that there are entries therein as to the matter of which he seeks a discovery. . . . A discovery will not be ordered to enable a party to find out whether he has a cause of action, or whether there may not be some entries or papers that will be pertinent. . . . A prima facie case, or at least facts pointing directly to that result, must be shown before a discovery in aid thereof will be ordered."

And in Frowein v. Lindheim (1890) 35 N. Y. S. R. 604, 12 N. Y. Supp. 526, a petition for an inspection of plaintiff's books of account to enable defendant to set up a counterclaim, it was objected that the petition did not state facts sufficient to warrant the court in arriving at a conclusion that a cause of action was set up; the court said: "Whether the defendant has or has not a cause of action which he can maintain cannot be investigated on affidavits. . . . It is only necessary, therefore, in that respect, for it to appear that there is sufficient in the petition, assuming the facts stated to be true, to warrant the conviction that a cause of action has been stated. . . . The cases affecting the question of discovery are numerous, each one of them having some distinct feature differing from others, indeed from all of them, but none of them interfering with the general rule that, when a prima facie case is made out and a reason apparently just assigned and sufficiently established is presented in seeking to enforce the right to an inspection, it is granted without reference to the merits of the controversy; and particularly when the application is made for the purpose of enabling the party to frame his pleading."

In Churchman v. Merritt (1889) 21 N. Y. S. R. 743, 4 N. Y. Supp. 245, a suit to reform a written instrument, there was held not to be sufficient compliance with the Code to entitle the party to an examination of defendant.

where the affidavit merely stated that the purpose of the action was to reform a mortgage, without indicating the grounds upon which relief was sought with reasonable certainty; the court saying: "From the statements which have been mentioned, and others contained in the moving papers, it would seem that the plaintiff's real purpose in the examination of the defendant is not to obtain knowledge of facts which will facilitate the statement of a known and ascertained cause of action, but is rather to find out whether any cause of action whatever really exists in her behalf against these defendants or any of them."

In O'Reilly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1877) 12 Hun (N. Y.) 124, an examination of defendant was permitted to enable plaintiff to frame her complaint, where it appeared from the affidavit that plaintiff had a probable cause of action, and that the examination was necessary to enable her to obtain the requisite information to frame her complaint.

And in Glen Cove Mfg. Co. v. Sutro (1889) 53 Hun, 636, 24 N. Y. S. R. 1005, 6 N. Y. Supp. 384, where it appeared that plaintiff in a slander action was merely dealing with a rumor which, by discovery, he hoped to convert into a reality by evidence to be obtained from defendant, and thus create a cause of action, the application for an examination was held to present all the elements of a fishing expedition, and was denied.

And in Boyle v. Municipal Gas Co. (1916) 96 Misc. 578, 161 N. Y. Supp. 991, an order for the examination of two defendants, so that plaintiff could ascertain who owned the electric wires upon which an injury was received, and the exact cause of the accident, in order to enable him to allege the negligence which caused the injury, was held to be erroneous, as the application was merely an effort to learn whether the plaintiff had a cause of action, though an order for the examination of defendants as to the ownership of the equipment, if presented alone, would be valid.

In Kaufman v. Herzfeld (1885) 1 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 444, the court says that the want of knowledge on the part of plaintiff as to whether he has a cause of action is no justification for an order for an examination, but he should know before commencing his action the true cause thereof, and its substance should be set out.

In Re Anthony (1899) 42 App. Div. 66, 58 N. Y. Supp. 907, an application for the examination of the secretary of a corporation before an action was commenced to enable plaintiff to ascertain whether the corporation had succeeded to the business and assets of another corporation with which plaintiff had a contract, the court denied the application on the ground that the applicant had not stated a single fact tending to show that it had a cause of action against the succeeding corporation, but had stated only its suspicions or facts indicating a mere possibility of a cause of action, and that the examination was not to enable it to frame its complaint, but to ascertain whether it had any cause of complaint, the court saying that the proposed defendant must be definitely, and not tentatively, named in the affidavit, and it must also be made to appear that the applicant had a cause of action against such specific person.

In Sage v. Culver (1892) 65 Hun, 621, 47 N. Y. S. R. 890, 19 N. Y. Supp. 936, an examination was denied where no facts were alleged which showed that a cause of action existed.

So, where plaintiff sued on an agreement for compensation out of profits of defendant, and made no allegation of breach of the agreement or of any profits being earned during the time in question, the examination was denied. Muller v. Levy (1889) 52 Hun, 123, 5 N. Y. Supp. 118.

In Marrone v. New York Jockey Club (1891) 60 Hun, 577, 37 N. Y. S. R. 936, 14 N. Y. Supp. 199, and New York State Bkg. Co. v. Van Antwerp (1898) 23 Misc. 38, 51 N. Y. Supp. 653, application for examination was denied, it appearing that plaintiff had no cause of action.

And in Tanenbaum v. Whiffen (1899) 43 App. Div. 194, 59 N. Y. Supp. 317, an examination was denied where the facts sought, together with those known, would make grounds for no more than nominal damages.

An applicant for an order for the examination of an adverse party, to enable the applicant to frame his pleadings, should at least show something to justify the bringing of the suit and the framing of a general averment, and where he apparently studiously avoids a frank disclosure of what induced him to proceed, the order is properly vacated. Simmons v. Vanderbilt (1880) 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 411.

But while plaintiff must show the existence of an actionable grievance, the affidavit need not state the complete cause of action, but it will be sufficient if it shows that plaintiff is entitled to some relief and that he lacks the substantive matter required to be stated in the complaint. Butler v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 235, 79 N. Y. Supp. 419.

It is sufficient to state the nature of the action and the substance of the judgment demanded. Frothingham v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. (1886) 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304.

Allegations of an affidavit based upon information and belief only, are insufficient as a basis for an order for an examination of the adverse party. Jiminez v. Ward (1897) 21 App. Div. 387, 47 N. Y. Supp. 557; Tanenbaum v. Lindheim (1900) 54 App. Div. 188, 66 N. Y. Supp. 375. At least this is the case where all the allegations are on information and belief without showing grounds for the belief. Boskowitz v. Sulzbacher (1907) 121 App. Div. 878, 106 N. Y. Supp. 865; Boskowitz v. Ulmann (1907) 121 App. Div. 887, 106 N. Y. Supp. 870.

As indicated in the cases last cited, an affidavit based upon information and belief, which discloses the ground for the belief, may be sufficient as a basis for an examination. Thus, in Leach v. Haight (1898) 34 App. Div. 522, 54 N. Y. Supp. 550, where plaintiff sued brokers for misappropriation of funds deposited as margin on stock deals, and disclosed the grounds on which she based the belief that there was a misappropriation, the examination was allowed.

And in Rosenbaum v. Rice (1901) 36 Misc. 410, 53 N. Y. Supp. 714, where, in an action by a minority stockholder of a corporation to prevent officers and directors from fraudulently diverting assets into another corporation of which they were also officers and directors, the essential allegations were on information and belief, and plaintiff sought to disclose sources and grounds for such belief, and in the only particulars in which he failed to do so, his failure was because the knowledge was necessarily and peculiarly with those he sought to examine, the application was granted.

And in Re Sayre (1902) 70 App. Div. 329, 75 N. Y. Supp. 286, an examination was allowed where substantially all the allegations were made on knowledge and those made on belief were connected with them.

In Wisconsin an examination of a defendant will not be denied merely because it does not affirmatively appear that plaintiff has a cause of action, but it will be denied where it affirmatively appears from plaintiff's affidavit that he has no cause of action. Madison v. Madison Gas & E. Co. (1906) 129 Wis. 260, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 529, 116 Am. St. Rep. 944, 108 N. W. 65, 9 Ann. Cas. 819; State v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (1908) 136 Wis. 179, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 672, 116 N. W. 900.

Thus, where the affidavit showed that the matter sought to be discovered consisted of the statements of defendant made before the grand jury or district attorney in his official capacity, and was needed for the purpose of filing a complaint for slander, the examination was denied, because statements made under such circumstances would be privileged. Schultz v. Strauss (1906) 127 Wis. 325, 101 N. W. 1066, 7 Ann. Cas. 528.

But while, if it affirmatively appears from the affidavit that the plaintiff has no cause of action, an examination will be refused, it is not necessary that plaintiff know that he has a cause of action, and the examination may be had even though the affidavit shows affirmatively that plaintiff does not know that he has a cause of action, as the object of the examination is to enable him to secure information to frame his complaint, and if the necessary facts were at hand they could be as well set out in the complaint as in an affidavit. Gratz v. Parker (1908) 137 Wis. 104, 118 N. W. 637; Heckendorn v. Romadka (1909) 138 Wis. 416, 120 N. W. 237.

So, in Richards v. Allis (1892) 82 Wis. 513, 52 N. W. 593, it was held that, if a party does not know whether another owes him or has collected any money belonging to him, and therefore cannot make an affidavit to that effect in a complaint, he may bring his action by service of summons, and then proceed to examine the defendant under the statute and obtain such discovery as will enable him to plead.

And in Schmidt v. Menasha Wooden Ware Co. (1896) 92 Wis. 529, 66 N. W. 695, where plaintiff in an action for the wrongful death of her decedent while in the employ of defendant was presumptively without knowledge as to the circumstances of his death, it was held that she should be allowed the means of ascertaining whether any breach of duty or negligence on the part of defendant was the cause of his death, and if so in what it consisted, and all the material facts having relation thereto, and that it was no answer to the application that upon facts already known a complaint could be framed which might or might not present the real merits of her case.

It is sufficient to show that plaintiff may be entitled to recover against defendant, and that discovery is necessary to enable him to plead. Sullivan v. Ashland Light, P. & Street R. Co. (1913) 152 Wis. 574, 140 N. W. 316.

And where a party shows by his affidavit that he has a cause of action against defendant which may be pursued by either of several different remedies, a statement in the affidavit that "the general nature and object of the action is for the rescission" of the contract and recovery of money paid upon it does not amount to an election of remedies so as to limit him in framing his complaint, and he may adopt another remedy if the examination makes it advisable. Heckendorn v. Romadka (Wis.) supra.

—parties.

In New York the courts of different departments have adopted different rules as to whether an examination may be had to enable plaintiff to determine whom to make parties defendant, the courts generally taking the position that an examination may be had for this purpose. Glenney v. Stedwell (1876) 64 N. Y. 120; Baas v. Pain (1893) 71 Hun, 612, 54 N. Y. S. R. 80, 24 N. Y. Supp. 583; Re Nolan (1893) 70 Hun, 536, 24 N. Y. Supp. 238; Re Weil (1898) 25 App. Div. 173, 49 N. Y. Supp. 133; Re Darling (1900) 31 Misc. 543, 64 N. Y. Supp. 793; Muldoon v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1904) 98 App. Div. 169, 91 N. Y. Supp. 65; Watt v. Feltman (1906) 111 App. Div. 314, 97 N. Y. Supp. 737; Re Besch (1910) 137 App. Div. 888, 121 N. Y. Supp. 769, affirmed without opinion in (1910) 139 App. Div. 922, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1110.

And in Blossom v. Ludington (1873) 32 Wis. 212, it was held that under the statute the plaintiff was entitled to examine one of defendants to enable him to amend the complaint and to judge of the necessity for adding new parties defendant.

The courts of the first department of the appellate division, however, take the opposite view and refuse to permit examination for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to determine whom to sue. Bloom v. Patten (1890) 26 Jones & S. 225, 10 N. Y. Supp. 228; Britton v. MacDonald (1893) 3 Misc. 514, 23 N. Y. Supp. 350; Ziegler v. Lamb (1896) 5 App. Div. 47, 40 N. Y. Supp. 65; Re White (1899) 44 App. Div. 119, 60 N. Y. Supp. 702; Re Anthony (1899) 42 App. Div. 66, 58 N. Y. Supp. 907; Bloodgood v. Slayback (1900) 54 App. Div. 634, L.R.A.1918C.

66 N. Y. Supp. 610; Re Schoeller (1902) 74 App. Div. 347, 77 N. Y. Supp. 614; Re Singer (1903) 40 Misc. 561, 82 N. Y. Supp. 870; Ellett v. Young (1904) 95 App. Div. 417, 88 N. Y. Supp. 661; Re Moto Bloc Import Co. (1910) 140 App. Div. 532, 125 N. Y. Supp. 427. This rule was followed in Albany county in Boyle v. Municipal Gas Co. (1916) 96 Misc. 578, 161 N. Y. Supp. 991.

In Byrnes v. Ladew (1896) 15 Misc. 413, 25 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 194, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1048, an application for an examination of defendant made apparently after the complaint was filed, for the purpose of ascertaining whether defendant or somebody else was responsible for the injury to the plaintiff, the court refused the examination on the ground that it amounted to an effort on the part of plaintiff to ascertain whether he had a cause of action against defendant.

So, in Tenoza v. Pelham Hod-Elevating Co. (1900) 50 App. Div. 581, 64 N. Y. Supp. 99, an action for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate while working on a building, an examination of one of defendants to ascertain its relation to the building to enable plaintiff to discontinue as to such defendant, or to amend the complaint so as to recover against it, was denied as being merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether a cause of action existed.

And in Opdyke v. Marble (1864) 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 64, under an early statute providing that the court is required to prescribe rules regulating proceedings for discovery, the courts to be governed by the principles and practice of the court of chancery in compelling discovery, an examination was refused, where the facts which were the basis of the action were known to plaintiff and he sought only to discover whom he might sue.

—amount.

Ordinarily, an examination will not be allowed to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, where the only thing lacking is the amount to claim, as plaintiff may state an arbitrary amount and recover within it. Taylor v. American Ribbon Co. (1899) 38 App. Div. 144, 56 N. Y. Supp. 667; Brummer v. Cohen (1900) 47 App. Div. 470, 62 N. Y. Supp. 241; Stanton v. Friedman (1900) 47 App. Div. 621, 62 N. Y. Supp. 291; Butler v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 235, 79 N. Y. Supp. 419; Elmes v. Duke (1902) 39 Misc. 244, 79 N. Y. Supp. 425; Boeck v. Smith (1903) 85 App. Div. 575, 83 N. Y. Supp. 428; Martin v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co. (1903) 87 App. Div. 472, 84 N. Y. Supp. 711; Brick v. Shaff (1908) 128 App. Div. 264, 112 N. Y. Supp. 642; Cohn v. Hubert (1910) 140 App. Div. 507, 125 N. Y. Supp. 834; Re Rich (1916) 175 App. Div. 969, 161 N. Y. Supp. 1103.

And in Hutchinson v. Simpson (1902) 73 App. Div. 520, 77 N. Y. Supp. 197, it was held that an examination would not be allowed where the information sought related to the amount of damages only, which could be ascertained on an accounting.

But in Hofman v. Seixas (1895) 12 Misc. 3, 33 N. Y. Supp. 23, an examination was allowed to enable plaintiff to learn the amount of purchases made by defendant upon which he was entitled to sue for commissions.

Answer.

An examination of plaintiff will be allowed when it is necessary to enable the defendant to frame his answer. Hadley v. Fowler (1872) 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 244; Howe v. Learey (1891) 62 Hun, 240, 16 N. Y. Supp. 736; Lewisohn Bros. v. Muller (1896) 6 App. Div. 459, 39 N. Y. Supp. 570.

Thus, an examination to enable defendant to prepare his answer will be allowed where it appears that it is not a fishing expedition, but that his defense is founded upon the meritorious presentation of facts which, if true, form a material allegation in the defense. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. McHenry (1887) 9 N. Y. S. R. 148.

So, where the defense to an action upon a promissory note is that the plaintiff is not a bona fide holder, defendant will be entitled to an examination of plaintiff for the purpose of ascertaining the facts as to how he became possessed of the note. Haynes v. Creighton (1890) 58 Hun, 140, 11 N. Y. Supp. 490; Vernon v. Creighton (1890) 11 N. Y. Supp. 492; Koppel v. Hatch (1906) 50 Misc. 626, 98 N. Y. Supp. 619.

In an action by an assignee of a life insurance policy, an examination was granted to enable defendant to obtain information as to plaintiff's insurable interest, and as to whether there was an intention that the policy should be issued to insured and assigned to plaintiff. Farmer v. National Life Asso. (1893) 73 Hun, 522, 26 N. Y. Supp. 126.

In Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Underwood (1896) 6 App. Div. 373, 39 N. Y. Supp. 596, a suit on the note of a partnership of which defendant had been a member, but from which he had retired, the new firm taking assets and liabilities of the old, where it appeared that the note had been renewed and payment extended without defendant's knowledge, and that his codefendant was hostile, an examination of an officer of plaintiff was held necessary to enable defendant to frame his answer.

And in Fox v. Miller (1897) 20 App. Div. 333, 46 N. Y. Supp. 837, an examination of plaintiff was granted where the defense was usury, and defendant was ignorant of the details of the transaction and of the facts necessary to be pleaded, and had no other means of ascertaining them.

But an examination of plaintiff for the purpose of enabling defendant to frame his answer will be denied where it appears that the answer may be framed without such examination. Winston v. English (1873) 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 119, affirming (1873) 44 How. Pr. 398; Earle v. Beman (1896) 1 App. Div. 136, 36 N. Y. Supp. 833; Leach v. Haight (1896) 4 App. Div. 613, 38 N. Y. Supp. 886; Waitzfelder v. A. Moses Sons & Co. (1907) 120 App. Div. 144, 104 N. Y. Supp. 796; Loughlin v. Wocker (1911) 146 App. Div. 434, 131 N. Y. Supp. 176; Slattery v. Slattery (1911) 145 N. Y. Supp. 966; Sothman v. Ward (1915) 168 App. Div. 826, 154 N. Y. Supp. 449; Badger Brass Mfg. Co. v. Daly (1909) 137 Wis. 601, 119 N. W. 328.

Thus, where the matters concerning which information is sought by defendant would be put in issue by a general denial, discovery will be denied. Lathrop v. Brown (1884) 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 101; Golin v. Mooers (1889) 54 Hun, 639, 28 N. Y. S. R. 213, 8 N. Y. Supp. 12; Immig v. Hoesloop (1891) 38 N. Y. S. R. 490, 14 N. Y. Supp. 638; Rycroft v. Green (1891) 62 Hun, 622, 43 N. Y. S. R. 228, 17 N. Y. Supp. 9. So an examination will be denied where defendant avers that the alleged agreement asked to be discovered was never made by him. Watts v. Knevals (1888) 24 Jones & S. 592, 3 N. Y. Supp. 548.

And in Strakosch v. Press Pub. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 503, 6 N. Y. Supp. 246, an examination was denied to a defendant in a libel suit to enable it to frame an answer by way of justification, where it appeared that a correspondent in its employ was able to supply it with all the information necessary.

Discovery will not be allowed to enable defendant in a libel action to plead justification, as in such a plea no facts and circumstances may be employed except such as were known and believed to be true at the time of publication, and as to these there could be no necessity for an examination of plaintiff. Strakosch v. Press Pub. Co. (N. Y.) supra; Miller v. Brooks (1892) 65 Hun, 624, 48 N. Y. S. R. 146, 20 N. Y. Supp. 359; Gray v. Barker (1893) 69 Hun, 84, 23 N. Y. Supp. 387, affirmed without opinion in (1893) 140 N. Y. 636, 35 N. E. 892.

And an examination will not be allowed on behalf of defendant where it is manifest that it is sought not to enable him to frame his answer, but to give him an opportunity to ascertain whether he has any defense. Govin v. DeMiranda (1892) 63 Hun, 629, 44 N. Y. S. R. 386, 17 N. Y. Supp. 816; Lathrop v. Brown (1884) 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 101.

Nor can it be said to be necessary for defendant to have an examination of plaintiff to prepare his answer until the complaint has been served, so that he knows what the alleged cause of action is and what he will have to answer. Winston v. English (1873) 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 498.

Bill of particulars.

An examination will be allowed where it is necessary to enable a party to frame a bill of particulars which has been demanded by the adverse party. Prince v. Currie (1846) 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 119; Ball v. Evening Post Pub. Co. (1888) 48 Hun (N. Y.) 149, reversing (1886) 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 4.

Thus, in Campbell v. Brock's Commercial Agency (1899) 38 App. Div. 137, 56 N. Y. Supp. 540, an action against a commercial agency for libel, plaintiff was held to be entitled to an examination of defendant's officers to ascertain to what customers defendant sent the libelous report, though plaintiff knew of some of them, as he was entitled to show delivery to any of them and to put their names in a bill of particulars demanded by defendant.

In Chittenden v. San Domingo Improv. Co. (1909) 132 App. Div. 169, 116 N. Y. Supp. 829, a suit by an executrix against a corporation for services of her testator, in which a bill of particulars was demanded, which, because of testator's death plaintiff was unable to furnish, she was entitled to an examination of the former officers of defendant to get facts for such bill.

In Pring v. Thorp (1915) 168 App. Div. 887, 152 N. Y. Supp. 469, an action for slander, it was held that defendant was entitled to a bill of particulars as to the times and places of utterance of the slander, and if plaintiff was unable to furnish the bill of particulars asked, he was entitled to examine defendant and prove by him the time and places he used the words complained of.

And in Larrere v. Morris Dry Dock & Repair Co. (1916) 97 Misc. 388, 161 N. Y. Supp. 877, an examination was allowed to enable plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars demanded by defendant as to negligent acts, the action being for damage to his automobile by a collision in which it was struck at night from the rear by defendant's vehicle, and the particulars of defendant's negligence being peculiarly within his own knowledge.

But in Tanenbaum v. Lindheim (1900) 54 App. Div. 188, 66 N. Y. Supp. 375, where it appeared that the facts stated in the affidavit, together with other facts within the knowledge of plaintiff, were sufficient to enable him to frame his bill of particulars, the examination was denied.

Incriminating or degrading answers.

The fact that an examination may require incriminatory or degrading testimony by the party examined is not a sufficient ground for refusing to grant the order, as an objection to a particular question on that ground may be made if the situation arises, and the court may then pass upon it and properly protect the party. Campbell v. Brock's Commercial Agency (1899) 38 App. Div. 137, 56 N. Y. Supp. 540; Ryan v. Reagan (1900) 46 App. Div. 590, 62 N. Y. Supp. 39; Re Sayre Co. (1902) 70 App. Div. 329, 75 N. Y. Supp. 286.

But where, in an action for libel, the defense was justification, defendant was not entitled to an examination of plaintiff, it being apparent that any question asked would be such that plaintiff would be privileged from answering because the answer would call for incriminating or degrading matter. Miller v. Brooks (1892) 65 Hun, 624, 48 N. Y. S. R. 146, 20 N. Y. Supp. 359; Kinney v. Roberts (1882) 26 Hun (N. Y.) 166, appeal dismissed in (1882) 89 N. Y. 601.

R. L. S.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

MARY MONTAIN, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF FARGO, Respt.

(38 N. D. 432, 166 N. W. 416.)

Municipal corporation — garbage removal — independent contract.

1. One who performs services for a city in the matter of removing garbage under a written contract which contains a provision that he is to furnish teams and men or such number thereof as in the judgment of said city may be necessary, and that the entire work is to be done in a good and substantial manner, with the approval and acceptance of the city, and under the supervision and direction of the commissioner of health, and that his teams and equipment shall be acceptable and satisfactory to said health commissioner, is held to be an independent contractor, and not a servant of said city. For other cases, see Master and Servant, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — supervision — governmental duty.

2. A city health commissioner while supervising the removal of garbage, and a city commissioner while authorizing and providing for its removal, are held to have been acting in a public and governmental, and not in a private or corporate, capacity. For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Grace, J., dissents.)

(November 1, 1917.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Cass County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Bruce, Ch. J.:

This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint which, in substance, alleged that the plaintiff's intestate, one Mons Mountain, met his death by being struck by a runaway team drawing a garbage sled, which sled was being used for the purposes and under the conditions intended and detailed in a certain written agreement between the city of Fargo and one Nels Johnson for the collection and disposal of kitchen garbage and which contained the following provisions:

Headnotes by BRUCE, Ch. J.

Note. — The question as to who is an independent contractor is treated in the notes to Richmond v. Sitterding, 65 L.R.A. 445, and Knically v. West Virginia Midland R. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370, and other notes referred to in the later note. For later cases on this question see the L.R.A. Digests under the title "Master and Servant," subtitle, "Who are independent contractors."

The question whether the removal of garbage is a public and governmental function within the rule exempting a municipality L.R.A.1918C.

"Whereas, said Nels Johnson did agree in writing to furnish four teams and eight men or any number of said teams, at the rate of $147 per month for each team, and two men to haul said garbage, during the said year 1915, at the said prices set out in said bid, now, therefore, the said party of the second part covenants and agrees to furnish to said city, at his own cost and expense, not to exceed four teams, fully equipped, and eight men or any number of said teams and men at the rate of $147 per month for each team and two men to perform the work necessary under the provisions of the ordinance commonly known as the garbage ordinance, to the full satisfaction and acceptance of the said city, and to perform not less than ten hours' work each day. The entire work to be done in a good and substantial manner, with the approval and acceptance of the city, and under the supervision and direction of the commissioner of health or such agent or agents as he may appoint for that purpose. Such teams and equipment and men to be acceptable and satisfactory to said health commissioner. The said city reserving the right to cancel this agreement upon ten days' notice if the said second party fails to comply in all respects with the terms and conditions of this contract, and the provisions of the ordinance heretofore referred to."

Messrs. Pfeffer & Pfeffer, for appellant:

Nels Johnson was a servant of the city of Fargo, and not an independent contractor.

Hedge v. Williams, 131 Cal. 455, 82 Am. St. Rep. 366, 63 Pac. 721, 64 Pac. 106; Messmer v. Bell & C. Co. 133 Ky. 19, 117 S. W. 346, 19 Ann. Cas. 1; Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Owen, 147 Ky. 1, 143 S. W. 421; Mason & H. Co. v. Highland, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 320; Majors v. Connor, 162 Cal. 131, 121 Pac. 371; Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 Pac. 50; Quayle v. Sewerage & from liability is considered in the notes to Haley v. Boston, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, Pass Christian v. Fernandez, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 649, and Consolidated Apartment House Co. v. Baltimore, L.R.A.—, —, on the general subject of the liability of a municipality for injury inflicted upon an employee engaged in removing refuse.

For throwing garbage on surface as nuisance, see note to Louisville v. Hehemann, L.R.A.1915C, 747.

Water Bd. 131 La. 26, 58 So. 1021; Cunningham v. Penn Bridge Co. 131 La. 196, 59 So. 119; McCarthy v. Clark, 115 Md. 454, 81 Atl. 12; Beal v. Champion Fiber Co. 154 N. C. 147, 69 S. E. 834; Harmon v. Ferguson Contracting Co. 59 N. C. 22, 74 S. E. 632; Charles T. Derr Constr. Co. v. Gelruth, 29 Okla. 538, 120 Pac. 253; Moore v. Koplin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 1033; James v. Pearson, 64 Wash. 263, 116 Pac. 852; Nelson v. American Cement Plaster Co. 84 Kan. 797, 115 Pac. 578; Johnson v. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. 157 N. C. 382, 72 S. E. 1057; Swanson v. Schmidt-Gulack Elevator Co. 22 N. D. 563, 135 N. W. 207; Solberg v. Schlosser, 20 N. D. 307, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 127 N. W. 91; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Sacchi v. Bay-side Lumber Co. 13 Cal. App. 72, 108 Pac. 885; Atlantic Transport Co. v. Coneys, 28 C. C. A. 388, 51 U. S. App. 570, 82 Fed. 177; Campbell v. Lunsford, 83 Ala. 512, 3 So. 522, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 164; Giacomini v. Pacific Lumber Co. 5 Cal. App. 218, 89 Pac. 1059; Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287; Potter v. Seymour, 4 Bosw. 140; Hawke v. Brown, 28 App. Div. 37, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1032; Goldman v. Mason, 18 N. Y. S. R. 376, 2 N. Y. Supp. 337; Baldwin v. Abraham, 171 N. Y. 677, 64 N. E. 1118; Pickens v. Diecker, 21 Ohio St. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 55; Smith v. Humphreyville, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 104 S. W. 495; Kniceley v. West Virginia Midland R. Co. 64 W. Va. 278, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370, 61 S. E. 811; Lacour v. New York, 3 Duer, 406; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 649, 21 L. ed. 220; Jensen v. Barbour, 15 Mont. 582, 39 Pac. 906; St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, Gil. 205, 74 Am. Dec. 753; De Palma v. Weinman, 15 N. M. 68, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, 103 Pac. 782; Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Dist. Council [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 754, 62 J. P. 582, 78 L. T. N. S. 748, 14 Times L. R. 477; Cincinnati v. Stone, 5 Ohio St. 38; Scott v. Springfield, 81 Mo. App. 312.

The removal of garbage by a city in the state of North Dakota is a private or corporate function, and is not a public or governmental duty.

Denver v. Porter, 61 C. C. A. 168, 126 Fed. 288; Barney Dumping-Boat Co. v. New York, 40 Fed. 50; Denver v. Davis, 37 Colo. 370, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1013, 119 Am. St. Rep. 293, 86 Pac. 1027, 11 Ann. Cas. 1013, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 498; Quill v. New York, 36 App. Div. 476, 55 N. Y. Supp. 889, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 423; Missano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 652.

The mere running away of a team of horses implies negligence on the part of the L.R.A.1918C.

owner, and the doctrine res ipsa loquitur applies.

Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hadley, 170 Ind. 204, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 527, 82 N. E. 1025, 84 N. E. 13, 16 Ann. Cas. 1; Peck v. St. Louis Transit Co. 178 Mo. 617, 77 S. W. 736; Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co. 201 Mo. 424, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 929, 99 S. W. 1062; 34 Cyc. 1665; Kahn v. Burette, 42 Misc. 541, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1047; Griffen v. Manice, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L.R.A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630, 50 N. E. 925, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 336; Maus v. Broderick, 51 La. Ann. 1153, 25 So. 977; Gorsuch v. Swan, 109 Tenn. 36, 97 Am. St. Rep. 836, 69 S. W. 1113, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 632; Strup v. Edens, 22 Wis. 432; Gannon v. Wilson, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 422, 18 W. N. C. 7, 5 Atl. 381; Kokoll v. Brohm & B. Lumber Co. 77 N. J. L. 169, 71 Atl. 120; Francois v. Hanff, 77 N. J. L. 364, 71 Atl. 1128; Unger v. Forty-second Street & G Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497; Hummell v. Wester, Brightly (Pa.) 133; Tolhausen v. Davies, 59 L. T. N. S. 436, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 392, 52 J. P. 804; Thane v. Douglass, 102 Tenn. 307, 52 S. W. 155.

Messrs. Spalding & Shure, for respondent:

Johnson was an independent contractor and not a servant of the city.

26 Cyc. 1546; Taute v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 25 N. D. 102, 141 N. W. 134, 4 N. C. C. A. 365; Harrison v. Collins, 86 Pa. 153, 27 Am. Rep. 699; Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113; Richmond v. Sitterding, 65 L.R.A. 445, and note, 101 Va. 354, 99 Am. St. Rep. 879, 43 S. E. 562, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; Bailey v. Troy & B. R. Co. 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017; Humpton v. Unterkircher, 97 Iowa, 509, 66 N. W. 776, 14 Am. Neg. Cas. 595; Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 N. W. 58; Blake v. Farris, 3 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304; Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113; Foster v. Wadsworth-Howland Co. 168 Ill. 514, 48 N. E. 163; Barg v. Bousfield, 65 Minn. 355, 68 N. W. 45, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 188; Pickens v. Diecker, 21 Ohio St. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 55; Scammon v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755; Hughbanks v. Boston Invest. Co. 92 Iowa, 267, 60 N. W. 640; Hardy v. Shedden Co. 37 L.R.A. 33, 24 C. C. A. 261, 47 U. S. App. 362, 78 Fed. 610, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 669; Uppington v. New York, 165 N. Y. 222, 53 L.R.A. 550, 59 N. E. 91, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 115; Vosbeck v. Kellogg, 78 Minn. 176, 80 N. W. 957, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 86; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017; Harding v. Boston, 163 Mass. 14, 39 N. E. 411; Foster v. Chicago, 197 Ill. 264, 64 N. E. 322; Kelly v. New York, 11 N. Y. 432; Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 400, 55 Pac. 139; Indian Iron Co. v. Cray, 19 Ind. App. 565, 48 N. E. 803; Saunders v. Toronto, 26 Ont. App. Rep. 265, reversing 29 Ont. Rep. 273; Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642; Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 363, 74 L. T. N. S. 69, 44 Week. Rep. 323, 60 J. P. 196; Blumb v. Kansas, 84 Mo. 112, 54 Am. Rep. 87; Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263, 65 N. W. 1030; Ash v. Century Lumber Co. 153 Iowa, 523, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973, 133 N. W. 888, 2 N. C. C. A. 494; Stewart v. California Improv. Co. 131 Cal. 125, 52 L.R.A. 205, 63 Pac. 177, 724; Huff v. Ford, 126 Mass. 24, 30 Am. Rep. 645; Morris v. Trudo, 83 Vt. 44, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 33, 74 Atl. 387; Howard v. Ludwig, 171 N. Y. 507, 64 N. E. 172; Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Skeel, 182 Ind. 593, 106 N. E. 365, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 474, 7 N. C. C. A. 724.

In disposing of the garbage hauled to the dumping ground the employee of the city was exercising governmental functions.

Savannah v. Jordan, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 240, and note, 142 Ga. 409, L.R.A.1915C, 741, 83 S. E. 109; Love v. Atlanta, 95 Ga. 129, 21 Am. St. Rep. 64, 22 S. E. 29; Watson v. Atlanta, 136 Ga. 370, 71 S. E. 664; Haley v. Boston, 191 Mass. 291, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, 77 N. E. 888; State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459; Re Vandine, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263, 65 N. W. 1030; Condict v. Jersey City, 46 N. J. L. 157; Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 246, 56 L.R.A. 601, 88 N. W. 695; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 34, 16 L.R.A. 352, 52 N. W. 811; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Russell v. Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895, 35 Pac. 605; Kies v. Erie, 135 Pa. 144, 20 Am. St. Rep. 867, 19 Atl. 942; Evans v. Sheboygan, 153 Wis. 287, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 98, 141 N. W. 265; Kempster v. Milwaukee, 103 Wis. 421, 79 N. W. 411; Bruhuke v. La Crosse, 155 Wis. 485, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147, 144 N. W. 1100; Gregg v. Hatcher, 94 Ark. 54, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 138, 125 S. W. 1007, 21 Ann. Cas. 982; Bolster v. Lawrence, 225 Mass. 387, L.R.A.1917B, 1285, 114 N. E. 722; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289.

The main fact of the running away of the team, unsupported by any evidence of other facts through which negligence might be inferred, does not raise presumption of negligence on the part of the owner or driver.

Rowe v. Such, 143 Cal. 573, 66 Pac. 862, 67 Pac. 760; Creamer v. McIlvain, 89 Md. 343, 45 L.R.A. 531, 73 Am. St. Rep. 186, 43 Atl. 935, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 547; McGahie v. L.R.A.1918C.

McClennen, 86 App. Div. 263, 83 N. Y. Supp. 692; Gray v. Tompkins, 40 N. Y. S. R. 546, 15 N. Y. Supp. 953; Collier v. Knox, 222 Pa. 362, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 171, 71 Atl. 539; O'Brien v. Miller, 60 Conn. 214, 25 Am. St. Rep. 320, 22 Atl. 544; Button v. Frink, 51 Conn. 342, 50 Am. Rep. 24; Patton-Worsham Drug Co. v. Drennon, 104 Tex. 620, 133 S. W. 871, 3 N. C. C. A. 859.

Bruce, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two propositions are advanced in support of the demurrer to the complaint: (1) That the garbage collector was an independent contractor and, being such, the city was not liable for his negligence. (2) That even if the said collector was not an independent contractor, the city was acting in a public and governmental capacity and was therefore not liable.

And, first, was the said Nels Johnson an independent contractor? Is or is not the appellant correct in his contention that "one who performs services for a city in the matter of removing garbage under a written contract which contains a provision that he is 'to furnish said teams and men or such number thereof as in the judgment of said city may be necessary for the delivery and disposal of said garbage,' and which contains this further provision; viz., 'The entire work to be done in a good and substantial manner with the approval and acceptance of the city, and under the supervision and direction of the commissioner of health or such agent or agents as he may appoint for that purpose. Such teams and equipment to be acceptable and satisfactory to said health commissioner,'—is a servant of the city and not an independent contractor."

We are satisfied that the said Nels Johnson was an independent contractor and not a servant of the defendant city. According to § 6134 of the Compiled Laws of 1913: "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master."

This definition of a servant, where it is sought to distinguish between a servant and an independent contractor, affords by inference a definition of an independent contractor, an independent contractor being considered a person employed to execute work, who is not within the definition of a servant. "The question whether the employee is an independent contractor," says the supreme court of Kentucky, "may be determined by answering the following questions: Who has the general control of the work? Who has the right to direct what shall be done, who shall do it, and how it shall be done?" See Mason & H. Co. v. Highland, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 322; Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Owen, 147 Ky. 1, 5, 143 S. W. 423. "An 'independent contractor' is one who is independent of his employer in the doing of his work, and may work when and how he prefers. A 'servant' is one who is employed by another and is subject to the control of his employer." Messmer v. Bell & C. Co. 133 Ky. 19, 25, 117 S. W. 348, 19 Ann. Cas. 1. "The right to control the conduct of another implies the power to discharge him from the service or employment for disobedience: and, accordingly, the power to discharge has been regarded as the test by which to determine whether the relation of master and servant exists." 1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 579, 629. "The relation of master and servant exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the business shall be done as well as the result to be accomplished, or, in other words, 'not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done.'" Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Huffcut, Agency, 9; Taute v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 25 N. D. 102, 141 N. W. 134, 4 N. C. C. A. 365, notes in 65 L.R.A. 445, and 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 371. "The test is very much this, viz., whether the person charged is under the control and bound to obey the orders of another." Reg. v. Negus, L. R. 2 C. C. 37, 42 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 62, 28 L. T. N. S. 646, 21 Week. Rep. 687, 12 Cox, C. C. 492, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 150.

There can be no doubt that under these general tests the relation of master and servant did not exist, and the mere fact that the contract stated that the collector was "to furnish said teams and men or such number thereof as in the judgment of the health commissioner of said city may be necessary for the delivery and disposal of garbage," and that the contract further provides that the work shall be done "under the provision of the ordinance known as the garbage ordinance, to the full satisfaction and acceptance of the city . . . and under the supervision and direction of the commissioner of health . . . and that such teams and equipment and men shall be acceptable and satisfactory to said health commissioner"—does not change the situation. It is true that the men and the teams and the work were required to be satisfactory to the health commissioner but this was for the purpose of the public health, and the health commissioner would have had a voice in the matter even though the contract and ordinance under which it was let had not so provided. The health commissioner had no power to discharge men; he had no power to say how hard they should work: he had no power to say what their wages should be, nor did the contract itself dictate in these matters. His supervision was for the protection of the public health and for that purpose alone.

The city health officer or commissioner, indeed, exercises a public and not a private or municipal function. His office is provided for by the statutes, and in cities which, like Fargo, are under the commission form of government, he has all the power and authority which are conferred by the general statutes upon city boards of health. He represents the state and the city in their governmental, and not in their corporate or property owning, capacities. He would have possessed the powers given to him by the contract even if the instrument had been silent upon the subject. See §§ 3820 and 411 to 433, Compiled Laws of 1913.

We are also satisfied that in disposing of its garbage and in letting the contract in question the city of Fargo was acting in its governmental, and not in its private or corporate, capacity. There is only one purpose for our municipalities entering so largely into this work as they do to-day, and that is the preservation of the public health, and in every enlightened land this aid and protection always has been and always will be considered a primary duty which devolves upon the state in its sovereign power. Savannah v. Jordan, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 240, and note 243, 142 Ga. 409, L.R.A.1915C, 741, 83 S. E. 109; Love v. Atlanta, 95 Ga. 129, 51 Am. St. Rep. 64, 22 S. E. 29; Watson v. Atlanta, 136 Ga. 370, 71 S. E. 664; Haley v. Boston, 191 Mass. 291, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1005, 77 N. E. 888; Re Vandine, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263, 65 N. W. 1030. See also Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 246, 56 L.R.A. 601, 88 N. W. 695; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Bolster v. Lawrence, 225 Mass. 387, L.R.A. 1917B, 1285, 114 N. E. 722.

If, indeed, as has generally been held, the protection of the lives and property of its citizens from loss by fire is a governmental function, and to such an extent that the city is not liable for the negligence of its firemen either in putting out or failing to put out a fire, or for accidents while the engines and carts are going to and from fires, or of its servants in removing ashes and inflammable material, how much less should the city be held liable for acts done in seeking to protect its citizens from dangers which are much more insidious and extensive. See 28 Cyc. 1303; State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459; Re Vandine, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351; Condict v. Jersey City, 46 N. J. L. 157; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 34, 16 L.R.A. 352, 52 N. W. 811; Kies v. Eric, 135 Pa. 144, 20 Am. St. Rep. 867, 19 Atl. 942.

We realize that there are some decisions of the courts of New York and Colorado which seem to hold to a contrary view than that expressed by us, but we are not persuaded thereby.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

Grace. J., dissenting:

The appeal in this case is from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The complaint alleges in substance that Mons Montain came to his death by being struck by a garbage sled which, at the time, was drawn by a runaway team. Mons Montain, at the time he met his death, was in the employ of the city of Fargo, he being superintendent of the garbage or dumping ground.

It appears that the city of Fargo had entered into an agreement with one Nels Johnson, in writing, whereby the said Johnson was to furnish four teams and eight men, or any number of teams at the rate of $147 a month for each team and two men, to haul said garbage from the city of Fargo during the year 1915. According to the agreement the work was to be done under the provisions of the ordinance of such city known as the garbage ordinance, and was to be performed to the full satisfaction and acceptance of said city, and to be done in a good and substantial manner, and in such manner as to meet the approval and acceptance of the city, and all such work to be done under the supervision and direction of the commissioner of health, or such agent or agents as he might appoint for that purpose. Such agreement also provided that the teams, equipment, and men should be acceptable and satisfactory to the health commissioner. The city reserved the right to cancel the agreement upon ten days' notice, upon Johnson's failure to comply in all respects with the terms and conditions of the contract and the provisions of the ordinance.

The city of Fargo, the defendant, seeks to escape liability for its negligence upon two theories: First, that Johnson was an independent contractor and, being such, the city was not liable for his negligence. Second, that even if Johnson was not an independent contractor, and even if he was the agent of the city, so that the city would be liable for his negligent acts in and about performing the work for the city for which he was employed, the city would not be liable, notwithstanding such facts, for the reason that in disposing of such garbage it claimed to be acting in a governmental capacity, and L.R.A.1918C.

claimed for this reason to be immune from liability.

Upon investigation and analysis of the first legal proposition it is perfectly clear that Johnson was not an independent contractor, but merely a servant of the city of Fargo. The relation between the city of Fargo and Johnson was one of master and servant, and not the relation of independent contractor. Under the very terms of the written agreement which Johnson had with the city of Fargo, when such contract is examined in the light of the law of master and servant, there remains no doubt of the fact that Johnson was a servant of the city. The term "independent contractor" is one difficult of definition. It is difficult to distinguish the line of demarcation by which independent contractors may be separated from servants. It appears to us there may be such a person as an independent contractor. A contract may be made in which one of the contracting parties would and could be an independent contractor. The great difficulty appears to be in the efforts so often resorted to by endeavoring to make a relationship which is purely one of master and servant fit into the relationship of that of independent contractor for the purpose of avoiding liability which, in case of injury or damage, would naturally flow from the relationship of master and servant, thus seeking security under the protecting principle upon which the relationship of independent contractor is founded. Where the law of master and servant is for our consideration there is no difficulty in applying the law. The relationship of the master to his servant is well understood, and his duties and liabilities are easily discernible. If the master is negligent in the execution of his duties, and his servant is injured through the negligence of such master in the performance of his plain duties towards the servant, liability of the master towards the servant naturally follows. It is different with the law of independent contractor. It seems that the relationship or principle of independent contractor and the law relating thereto are somewhat shadowy and uncertain. The relationship is not a common one, except that it has been made more common in recent years in an effort to shift or avoid liability. When an independent contract is made, it is made by a person who contracts to have a certain job of work done, who is called a contractor, with a person who contracts to do the job of work, who is called an independent contractor. Why the invention of this comparatively new term "independent contractor?" The answer is, It is a means by which, in a proper case, a person for whom the work is to be done, or, in other words, the contractor, may avoid his liability for any damages to any person who may be engaged in assisting in the performance of the work to be done. As before indicated, there are conditions and certain quantities of work to be done to which the principle is applicable. To the application of the principle in a proper case there can be no objection. The abuse of the principle is in seeking to apply it in cases and to conditions to which it is not germane.

Without following any particular set definition which we have found and examined in different authorities concerning the relationship of independent contractor, but taking such definitions into consideration, and applying also other language which we think may throw some light upon the relationship of independent contractor, we find the meaning of "independent contractor" to be as follows: An independent contractor may be defined as one exercising an independent employment in which he is skilled, who, having entered into a contract to do certain work, does his work according to his own way and method, independent of any methods submitted by another, and who is not subject to the control of any person in the execution of his work, being responsible only for the result of his work, doing all the work at his own risk and cost in the first instance, and furnishing all means and power by which such work is done, and who contracts to do a complete quantity or job of work at a stated price for the whole of such work, which is to be considered as the price for which the whole work is to be done, and not as wages, and who cannot be discharged at the will of the person with whom the contract is made, or because the person with whom the independent contractor has made the agreement is dissatisfied with the work. Measured by this definition, and by the terms of the written contract between Johnson and the city of Fargo, Johnson was merely a servant of such city. It will be noticed from a consideration of such written contract that all work performed by Johnson for the city was to be supervised and controlled by the city. The city reserved certain power in such contract whereby it could supervise and direct the means and the method of doing such work, for the contract specifically says, "such teams, equipment and men to be acceptable and satisfactory to the health commissioner." And again, the entire work was to be done in a good and substantial manner, and this means they could determine the quality of the work and the manner in which it was performed. The contract further says that the work shall be done in such a manner as to meet the "approval and acceptance of the city." We can easily understand that if the city did not approve of L.R.A.1918C.

any work done, the so-called independent contractor would have to do the work in a different manner so as to merit the approval of the city, and thus we see the city really directed the doing of the work. The city could enforce all these demands, directions, and requirements in what way? The answer is in the contract itself—by discharging the independent contractor upon ten days' notice. Or, in other words, by canceling the contract upon ten days' notice, which is, in fact, a discharge of the independent contractor. These are not the rights and remedies of one who contracts with an independent contractor. Where one contracts with an independent contractor for a complete job of work at a certain price, he permits such independent contractor to do such work according to his own manner and method of performing such work, but if the work is not satisfactory to the person with whom the independent contractor has made the agreement, such person cannot discharge the independent contractor; but, if the work which the independent contractor agreed to do is not done in such a manner as to bring about the result which was contracted to be brought about, the one who made the contract with the independent contractor has a complete remedy in refusing to pay the price stated in the contract by reason of the failure of the independent contractor to bring about the result he contracted to bring about. In the case of Schular v. Hudson River R. Co. 38 Barb. 653, the court said: "Perhaps the most usual test by which to determine whether the person doing the injury was a servant or an independent contractor is to consider whether he was working by the job or at stated wages—so much per day, week, or month. . . . A person who works for wages, whose labor is directed and controlled by the employer, either in person or by an intermediate agent, is a servant, and the master must answer for the wrong done by him in the course of his employment. A person who, for a stated sum, engages to perform a stated piece of labor in which he is skilled, the proprietor of the work leaving him to his own methods, is an independent contractor. The proprietor does not stand in the relation of superior to him, and is not answerable for the wrongs done by him or his servants in the prosecution of the work, unless special circumstances exist making him so. . . . The fact that the employee was hired not for a definite time, but to perform a particular job, does not, however, of itself negative the relation of master and servant, for under such a contract the employer may well retain full control over him; and it must be constantly borne in mind that the power to control on the part of the employer is the essential fact establishing the relation."

See Jensen v. Barbour, 15 Mont. 582, 39 Pac. 906; Bibb v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163; Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co. 82 Mo. 276, 52 Am. Rep. 376; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 631, 46 L.R.A. 367, 34 S. E. 525; Waters v. Pioneer Fuel Co. 52 Minn. 474, 38 Am. St. Rep. 564, 55 N. W. 52; Indiana Iron Co. v. Cray, 19 Ind. App. 565, 48 N. E. 803; Majors v. Connor, 162 Cal. 131, 121 Pac. 371; Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 Pac. 50; Nelson v. American Cement Plaster Co. 84 Kan. 797, 115 Pac. 578; Johnson v. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. 157 N. C. 382, 72 S. E. 1057; Swanson v. Schmidt-Gulack Elevator Co. 22 N. D. 563, 135 N. W. 207; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Sacchi v. Bayside Lumber Co. 13 Cal. App. 72, 108 Pac. 885; Atlantic Transport Co. v. Coneys, 28 C. C. A. 388, 51 U. S. App. 570, 82 Fed. 177; Campbell v. Lunsford, 83 Ala. 512, 3 So. 522; Giacomini v. Pacific Lumber Co. 5 Cal. App. 218, 89 Pac. 1059; Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287; De Palma v. Weinman, 15 N. M. 68, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420, 103 Pac. 782; Potter v. Seymour, 4 Bosw. 140; Goldman v. Mason, 18 N. Y. S. R. 376, 2 N. Y. Supp. 337; Hawke v. Brown, 28 App. Div. 37, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1032; Baldwin v. Abraham, 171 N. Y. 677, 64 N. E. 1118; Pickens v. Diecker, 21 Ohio St. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 55; Smith v. Humphreyville, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 104 S. W. 495; Kniceley v. West Virginia Midland Co. 64 W. Va. 278, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370, 61 S. E. 811; Lacour v. New York, 3 Duer, 406; New Orleans, M. & C. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 649, 21 L. ed. 220.

In the light of the language of the written contract, the authorities cited by the majority opinion sustained our contention that in this case Johnson was a servant of the city of Fargo and not an independent contractor. The majority opinion contains the following, citing 1 Thompson on Negligence, §§ 579, 629: "The right to control the conduct of another implies the power to discharge him from the service or employment for disobedience, and accordingly, the power to discharge has been regarded as the test by which to determine whether the relation of master and servant exists."

Keeping in mind that the written contract in question between Johnson and the city of Fargo provides that the city may, upon ten days' notice, cancel the contract, if the second party fails to comply with the terms and provisions thereof and the provisions of the ordinance, it simply means that the city can, for such causes, discharge Johnson upon ten days' notice by cancellation of L.R.A.1918C.

his contract; his relation to the city of Fargo is that of servant and not an independent contractor, when measured even by the authorities relied upon by the majority. The majority opinion further says: "The relation of master and servant exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the business shall be done as well as the result to be accomplished."

Then follows in the majority opinion numerous authorities in support of this point. We accept the law contained in the quotation, and believe, when the language of the contract is carefully examined, our interpretation thereof is sustained by all of the law cited by the majority in relation to defining master and servant. The city in this case had the right to decide the manner in which the work was done, for it had to be done in a manner which suited them and which met with their approval. And the city also not only had the authority by the contract to decide the manner in which the work was to be done by refusing to accept it until it was done to suit them, but thus they determined the result to be accomplished. When we add to this the right to discharge Johnson by giving him ten days' notice and canceling his contract, all the elements by which we determine when one is a master are supplied.

The second question to be considered in this case is, Was the city acting in a governmental capacity in causing the removal and disposition of the garbage? We are clear, so far as the facts of this case are ascertained from the pleadings, that the city, when removing and disposing of such garbage, was not acting in a governmental capacity, but was merely engaged in the performance of a ministerial duty. It is a well-settled rule that where it is the duty of a municipal corporation, by statute or implication of law, to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, such duty cannot be delegated to another so as to relieve the municipal corporation from liability for injury sustained by another on account of the neglect or failure of the municipal corporation to observe its duty. This principle is established in a long line of authorities. Sterling v. Schiffmacher, 47 Ill. App. 141; Springfield v. Scheevers, 21 Ill. App. 203; Anna v. Boren, 77 Ill. App. 408; Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 8 Bush, 415; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Jacksonville v. Drew, 19 Fla. 106, 45 Am. Rep. 5; Betz v. Limingi, 46 La. Ann. 1113, 49 Am. St. Rep. 344, 15 So. 385; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447, 69 N. W. 740, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 90; Blake v. St. Louis, 40 Mo. 569; Welsh v. St. Louis, 73 Mo. 71; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859; Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770; Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Neb. 68, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. W. 833; Scanlon v. Watertown, 14 App. Div. 1, 43 N. Y. Supp. 618; Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447; Watson v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 98, 23 Am. Rep. 420; Nashville v. Brown, 9 Heisk. 1, 24 Am. Rep. 289; Patterson v. Austin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 1139; Morris v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 474, 101 Pac. 373; McCoull v. Manchester, 85 Va. 379, 2 L.R.A. 691, 8 S. E. 379; Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 Pac. 231.

The duty of a city to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, and to keep them in repair and in proper condition, is mostly for the benefit of the city itself, and such duty extends to and includes keeping the streets cleaned and the removal of garbage. The removal of garbage, ashes, rags and papers, and other debris which may accumulate upon the streets is to be classified and comes under the duties incumbent upon the city to keep its streets and alleys in a safe and good condition of repair, and the removal of the garbage and debris from the streets is part of the duty of repair and care of streets and alleys. Missano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 652.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations says that such corporations are possessed of dual power—the one governmental, legislative, or public, and the other proprietary or private. That the care of the streets is within the latter classification. See Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 980 and § 66. This principle is also sustained in Conrad v. Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 158.

The liability of municipalities as to the care of streets has been recognized in a great number of cases, among which are found Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440, and Barney Dumping-Boat v. New York (C. C.) 40 Fed. 50. In the latter case Judge Wallace, referring to the commissioner of street cleaning, says: "His duties, unlike those of the officers of the departments of health, charities, fire and police, although performed incidentally in the interest of public health, are more immediately performed in the interest of the corporation itself, which is charged with the obligation of maintaining its streets in fit and suitable condition for the use of those who resort to them."

So, in the case at bar, Johnson, even though under the contract he was to work under the direction of the health commissioner, nevertheless the work he did do was performed more particularly in the interest of the city itself than that of the public. While the removal of the garbage and debris of all kinds from the streets may incidentally be for the public health, the greater benefit is to the city, and the removal thereof is a part of the duty of such city of keeping the streets in repair, and the duty is purely ministerial and principally for the benefit of the city. There is a distinction between the liability of municipal corporations who have accepted a city charter, and such corporations as counties and townships. The former—the municipal corporations—are always under greater liability.

In the case of Circleville v. Sohn, 59 Ohio St. 285, 69 Am. St. Rep. 777, 52 N. E. 788, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 704, we find the following in the syllabus: "The duty, enjoined by statute on municipal corporations, to keep their public ways open and in repair, and free from nuisance, is ministerial and mandatory, and requires the removal from such ways of all dangerous defects and obstructions, from whatever cause arising."

We are of the opinion that it is the ministerial duty also of the city to keep its streets clean, to remove garbage therefrom, and to keep them in a sanitary condition, and the removal of such garbage is a ministerial duty principally in the interest of the city itself, and the duty to so keep its streets clean is a ministerial and not a governmental function. The test which has generally been applied is: "If the duty in respect to which there has been a wrongful act or omission is one resting primarily upon municipalities, and is not a mere governmental duty, the performance of which has been delegated to the municipality by competent legislative authority, then the liability of the municipality is substantially that of a private corporation. We are convinced that the duty of cleaning the streets, removing garbage and debris therefrom in the city, is a duty connected with the care and repair of such streets, and is a duty resting primarily upon the municipality for its own convenience and benefit principally, although the general public may be benefited to some extent incidentally."

Up to this point we have been discussing more particularly the duties of a municipality with reference to the care and repair of its streets and alleys, and also its liability when negligent in performing such duties. The removal of garbage and other accumulations, such as ashes, etc., from its streets and alleys, so as to keep them in a safe and clean condition, is without question a municipal ministerial duty. The garbage contract in question relates more particularly to the removal of garbage from private property, such as the removal of scraps of meat, and other refuse which is thrown away after meals, also papers, rags, and other waste material which a private owner discards. It is plain to us that the disposition of all of such material and refuse in a proper manner is a duty which primarily belongs to the owner of the private property. It is the duty of every owner of private property, whether the same is in use or not, to keep it in a clean, sanitary condition, and in such a condition that no nuisance will be maintained thereon which would be offensive to other persons within said municipality, or which would endanger the comfort and health of the community, or result in the interference to others with the full enjoyment and pleasure of their rights and property. The municipality, therefore, could require every owner of private property to so maintain his premises and keep it in a clean and sanitary condition.

The defendant in this case is under the commission form of government, and has the right, power, and authority by the law under which it is organized, which fully sets forth all its powers and duties, to inspect all private premises and cause to be removed therefrom and abated any condition thereon maintained in the nature of a nuisance, and which would tend to interfere with the comfort of the inhabitants of the municipality, or which could in any manner be offensive to the inhabitants of such municipality. This would include the power, therefore, to cause to be removed all refuse of every kind and description found upon said private premises by the inspector or overseer who may be appointed by the municipality. Such refuse accumulated upon private property is usually, but not always, placed in receptacles with proper covers thereto, which receptacles are placed in a convenient manner near the alley or other convenient place for removal.

We have seen that it is the primary duty of the private owner of such property to remove all such refuse. If the municipality, therefore, undertakes to perform this private duty for the convenience, comfort, protection, and health of the municipality, and considers it can do it in a better way and manner than the private property owner could do, in the removal of such refuse the municipality is acting and doing such work mostly in behalf and for the convenience and comfort of the inhabitants of such city, and the public at large can receive only very slight individual benefit, and hence the performance of such service by the city is not a governmental but a ministerial duty. If the city in the performance of such ministerial duty does the same in a negligent manner so as to cause an injury to some person, it cannot escape liability any more than the private owner of the property from which such refuse is removed could escape liability if he had removed the refuse and, in the course of such removal, acted so negligently as to cause injury to another.

Our court, in the case of Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506, said in the syllabus of such case: "Cities which have been organized or reorganized under the general law of this state . . . are charged with full power and responsibility in the matter of the streets, sidewalks, and crossings within their limits, and the duty of establishing streets and removing obstructions therefrom is a duty expressly enjoined by the statute. In performing such duties, cities are liable in a civil action to persons who, in the exercise of due care, receive injuries caused by negligent acts done either by the city officials or others who are acting for the city and under its authority. The cities so organized and governed are impliedly liable for damages caused by their wrongful or negligent acts, and no express statute making them liable is necessary. Accordingly held, that the following instruction, given by the trial court to the jury, is not error: 'The general rule is that, in the case of a highway, a municipal corporation is answerable in damages for the lack of ordinary and reasonable care, and is held to the same rule of negligence which is expected of private persons in the conduct of their business, involving a like danger to others.'"

We see, therefore, in this case the city assumed the duty of removing the garbage for private persons, and even in the absence of a statute they are impliedly liable for their negligent acts just the same as the private owner would have been.

Another case of importance is Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 19 N. D. 293, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1158, 123 N. W. 878. This was a case in which the city was held liable in the United States district court for the district of North Dakota. The waterworks of said city were owned by it. They became out of repair. They were repaired by a licensed plumber in the employ of the city of Grand Forks, under the direction of the superintendent of the waterworks. In making such repairs an obstruction was placed upon the street by reason of which Paulsness was injured, and the city was held liable for its negligence, and plaintiff recovered a verdict against it. While in this case the recovery was had by reason of the negligence of the city in keeping its streets in an unsafe condition, nevertheless, if water had escaped through the negligence of the city in the management of its waterworks, and overflowed and destroyed property, there is no doubt in our mind but what it can be held liable for such damage.

Where a municipality undertakes to maintain a waterworks system and to supply its citizens with water for pay, it is liable to individuals whose property is injured by the negligence of its employees placed in charge of the plant, failing to maintain it in a safe condition. Piper v. Madison, 140 Wis. 311, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 239, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1078, 122 N. W. 730. And where the municipal corporation uses its waterworks system for protection against fire, it is not relieved from liability to private property through the negligence of its employees in maintaining the plant in an unsafe condition, except for such acts as are performed in the actual work incident to extinguishing fires. In such case the city is performing an act for a private party for which it gets pay. However, in the case in question, in the removal of the garbage the act of the city is also the performance of an act for a private party, and the city reimburses itself through taxation. The fact that the city receives no pay, and that such work is paid for through the channel of taxation, does not detract from the fact that the disposal of the garbage is a duty incumbent upon the private owner of the premises, and, where the municipality undertakes to perform such a duty in place of the owner of the premises, such work is to be considered rather in the nature of a private act on the part of the city than a public duty, for the reason that the benefits derived from such performance accrue to the owners of private property and the inhabitants of the city. Where the city is organized and receives its charter from the state, either under a special grant or under the general law, it is, as a general rule, its ministerial duty under either of such grants to keep its streets in a safe condition, and to keep the city as a whole in a clean, healthful, and sanitary condition. We believe this is a part of the ministerial duty which the city obligates itself to perform, and if in the execution of such duty it acts negligently, like other corporations, it is liable for such negligence.

In Denver v. Davis, 37 Colo. 370, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013, 119 Am. St. Rep. 293, 86 Pac. 1027, 11 Ann. Cas. 187, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 498, we find the following in the syllabus: "The maintenance of a dump for the reception of waste materials gathered from the streets, alleys, and private premises of a city is for its private and corporate convenience, so that the city will be liable in case it is so negligently managed that fire spreads from it and destroys property in the vicinity, although the supervision of the dump is in the health department."

L.R.A.1918C.

The principle in question in the Denver Case is, we believe, applicable to the case at bar. After a sewage system has once been completed and placed in operation, the maintenance, conduct, and operation thereof becomes merely a ministerial duty. If the municipality should be negligent in the performance of such ministerial duty, and should leave the manholes uncovered so that a person should fall therein and be injured, or if the pipe should break and private property should be injured thereby—should become flooded and not usable—it can hardly be said that the city would not be liable for its negligence on the ground that it was engaged in the execution of a governmental power. Garbage in a large sense is sewage. It is the coarser material that cannot be safely put through the sewer for fear of blocking the sewer pipe, and hence must be hauled rather than put through the sewer pipe. But, properly speaking, it may be classed under the head of sewage, and if the municipality is negligent in its removal, having undertaken to remove the same, and having undertaken to perform the duties which really belong to the owner of the premises from which such garbage is taken, it must use ordinary care in performing its duty, and if it fails to do so, and is negligent, it is liable for damages by reason of such negligence.

The question whether or not Johnson was an independent contractor was not exclusively a question of law for the court. It was a mixed question of law and fact, and thus became exclusively a question for the jury. The plaintiff was not a party to the written contract, and contended that the contract did not express the true relations of the parties thereto. 14 R. C. L. 78. For this reason Johnson's relations to the city of Fargo—whether he was an independent contractor or a mere servant—was a mixed question of law and fact. The demurrer should have been overruled, and such question submitted to the jury.

We are clear that the city of Fargo in removing or causing to be removed the garbage from private premises or from its streets and alleys, and keeping them in a clean condition, was acting in a purely ministerial and not a governmental capacity, for the benefit of itself and its citizens principally, and that in employing Johnson to remove such garbage the relation was established between the city and Johnson of master and servant. We are clear the demurrer should be overruled.

Petition for rehearing denied November 27, 1917.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITIZENS & PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF PENSACOLA.

(— Fla. —, 77 So. 104.)

Pleading — conversion — demand.

1. In an action of trover against a drawee bank for the conversion of a check upon the bank, where the declaration shows a conversion of the check by the bank, it is unnecessary to allege a demand by the plaintiff for a return of the check and a refusal by the defendant.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trover — bank check — unauthorized payment.

2. The payee of a bank check may maintain an action of trover against a bank upon whom the check is drawn, which pays the check to an unauthorized person, who falsely represents himself to be the agent of the payee to indorse the check and receive the proceeds of the same.

For other cases, see Banks, IV. a, 3, b, (3), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 28, 1917.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Escambia County to review an order sustaining a demurrer to the declaration in a suit for the conversion of a check. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Blount & Blount & Carter, for plaintiff in error:

The payment of the check by the defendant upon the forged or unauthorized indorsement of plaintiff's agent was a wrongful act, and created a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant either in case or trover for its value.

Chism v. First Nat. Bank, 96 Tenn. 641, 32 L.R.A. 778, 54 Am. St. Rep. 863, 36 S. W. 387; Tolman v. American Nat. Bank, 22 R. I. 462, 52 L.R.A. 877, 84 Am. St. Rep. 850, 48 Atl. 480; Survey v. Wells, F. & Co. 5 Cal. 125; Cranch v. White, 6 Car. & P. 767, 1 Bing. N. C. 414, 131 Eng. Reprint. 1176, 4 L. J. C. P. N. S. 113; Wood v. McKean, 64 Iowa, 16, 19 N. W. 817; Kleinwort v. Comptoir Nationale d'Escompte [1894] 2 Q. B. 157, 63 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 674, 10 Reports, 259; Siegel v. Kovinsky, 93 Misc. 541, 157 N. Y. Supp. 340; 39 Cyc. 2070; Headnotes by ELLIS, J.

Note. — As to liability of drawee to true owner of a check which it has paid on a forged indorsement, see annotation following this case, post, 613, and references therein to annotation on collateral points. L.R.A.1918C.

21 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 902; Thomas v. First Nat. Bank, 101 Miss. 500, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 355, 58 So. 478; Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 657, 136 N. W. 506; Bobbett v. Pinkett, L. R. 1 Exch. Div. 368, 45 L. J. Exch. N. S. 555, 34 L. T. N. S. 851, 24 Week. Rep. 711; First Nat. Bank v. Pease, 168 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 160; Robinson v. Bank of Winslow, 42 Ind. App. 350, 85 N. E. 793; Hamilton Nat. Bank v. Nye, 37 Ind. App. 464, 117 Am. St. Rep. 333, 77 N. E. 295; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Burns, 61 Neb. 793, 86 N. W. 483; Henderson Trust Co. v. Ragan, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 601, 52 S. W. 848; Vanbibber & Co. v. Bank of Louisiana, 14 La. Ann. 486, 74 Am. Dec. 442.

A bank is presumed to know whether an indorsement is or is not genuine.

Jackson v. National Bank, 92 Tenn. 154, 18 L.R.A. 663, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81, 20 S. W. 802; Russell v. First Nat. Bank, 2 Ala. App. 342, 56 So. 868.

And is bound at its peril to determine that the indorsement is authorized.

McFadden v. Follrath, 114 Minn. 85, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201, 130 N. W. 542; Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 63 Minn. 305, 30 L.R.A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 481, 65 N. W. 635.

Messrs. Watson & Pasco, for defendant in error:

There was no assignment of the funds of Virgin & Carter by the check, and the bank by its act is not liable as an acceptor.

First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. ed. 229; Howard H. Clark & Co. v. Warren Sav. Bank, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 647; J. M. Houston Grocer Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 71 Mo. App. 132; Lonier v. State Sav. Bank, 149 Mich. 483, 112 N. W. 1119; Rauch v. Bankers' Nat. Bank, 143 Ill. App. 625; 5 R. C. L. 489, 530, 531, 545; Brady, Bank Checks, ¶ 4, 136, 230; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Va. 753, 47 S. E. 837; Elyria Sav. & Bkg. Co. v. Walker Bin Co. 92 Ohio St. 406, L.R.A.1916D, 433, 111 N. E. 147, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1055; Hanna v. McCrory, 19 N. M. 183, 141 Pac. 996; Ballen v. Bank of Kremlin, 37 Okla. 112, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 621, 130 Pac. 539; Van Buskirk v. State Bank, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182, 83 Pac. 778; 5 R. C. L. 518.

The bank did not take from plaintiff's agent by negotiation.

National Bank v. Farmers & M. Nat. Bank, 87 Neb. 841, 128 N. W. 522; State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 87 Neb. 351, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 100, 127 N. W. 244; Farmers & M. Bank v. Bank of Rutherford, 115 Tenn. 64, 112 Am. St. Rep. 817, 88 S. W. 939; Byles, Bills, 11th ed. p. 334; Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 391, p. 688; Osborn v. Gheen, 5

Mackey, 189, affirmed in 136 U. S. 646, 34 L. ed. 552, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1072.

The bank is not liable in trover for the amount of the check or any amount.

First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. ed. 229; King v. McConnell, 57 Fla. 77, 49 So. 530; Frome v. Dennis, 45 N. J. L. 515; 2 Cooley, Torts, p. 877; Burditt v. Hunt, 25 Me. 419, 43 Am. Dec. 289; Nanson v. Jacob, 93 Mo. 331, 3 Am. St. Rep. 531, 6 S. W. 246; Gurley v. Armstead, 148 Mass. 267, 2 L.R.A. 80, 12 Am. St. Rep. 555, 19 N. E. 389; Davis v. Hurt, 114 Ala. 146, 21 So. 469; Hill v. Hayes, 38 Conn. 532; 5 Cyc. 211; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Va. 753, 47 S. E. 837; Lonier v. State Sav. Bank, 149 Mich. 483, 112 N. W. 1119; Elyria Sav. & Bkg. Co. v. Walker Bin Co. 92 Ohio St. 406, L.R.A.1916D, 433, 111 N. E. 147, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1055; Hanna v. McCrory, 19 N. M. 183, 141 Pac. 996; Sims v. American Nat. Bank, 98 Ark. 1, 135 S. W. 359; National Bank v. Millard, 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897; Brennan v. Merchants & Mfrs.' Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343, 28 N. W. 881.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error sued the defendant in error in the circuit court for Escambia county.

The declaration contained two counts. The first count alleged in substance that a freight agent of the plaintiff at Pensacola, named W. W. Weekly, received from the agent of the Atlantic Compress Company a check on the defendant's bank for the sum of $905, payable to the order of the plaintiff, which check had been drawn by Virgin & Carter to pay a debt due to the plaintiff by them; that Weekly, now deceased, indorsed the check by writing the initials of the plaintiff and his own name as agent upon the check and presented the same to the defendant bank for payment; that the bank paid the amount of the check to Weekly, and charged the same to the account of Virgin & Carter, and returned the check to them; that Weekly was not authorized by the plaintiff to indorse or collect the check, and did not pay over to plaintiff the money so collected, nor has the plaintiff received the same from any other source.

The second count was for money had and received.

The bank demurred to the declaration upon the following grounds:

"(1) That the said declaration states no cause of action against this defendant.

"(2) That the said declaration sets up no sufficient facts to show any liability upon the part of the defendant.

L.R.A.1918C.

"(3) That the said declaration does not allege that the said W. W. Weekly had no authority to collect the said money.

"(4) That the said first count of the declaration does not allege that the said W. W. Weekly had no authority to indorse and/or collect the said checks.

"(5) That the said declaration does not allege that the said W. W. Weekly had no authority to receive money owing to the plaintiff.

"(6) That the said count of the declaration alleges nothing more than that the said Weekly received the money and embezzled the same, without denying the authority of Weekly to receive.

"(7) There is nothing alleged in the declaration sufficient to show that the transaction in the said first count of the declaration referred to created any privity between the plaintiff and this defendant, or created any liability on the part of this defendant to the plaintiff, not does it show any such contractual relation between the plaintiff and the defendant as to authorize the plaintiff to maintain an action against the defendant for or on account of the several matters and things in the said first count of the declaration set up.

"(8) That it does not appear from the allegations of the said first count of the declaration but that the said Weekly expended the alleged money for the benefit of the plaintiff.

"(9) That the fact, if it be a fact, that the said Weekly did not pay over to the plaintiff the said money in the said first count of the declaration mentioned, does not create any liability on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff."

The demurrer was sustained: and, the plaintiff withdrawing the second count and electing to stand on the first count, a judgment for the defendant was entered, and the plaintiff took a writ of error. The errors assigned are that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer and in entering judgment for the defendant.

The first count of the declaration may be considered as one in trover for the conversion of a check. The check was the property of the plaintiff; it was in the plaintiff's possession, for Weekly's possession was the plaintiff's possession; it was taken by the defendant, upon whom it was drawn, and the proceeds paid to a person who had no authority from the plaintiff to receive it; the account of the drawer was charged with the amount paid, and the check was returned to the drawer. It was unnecessary to allege a demand by the plaintiff and a refusal by the defendant to return the check, because the allegations of the declaration show a conversion. 1 Archbold, Nisi Prius, 549-553; Robinson v. Hartridge, 13 Fla. 501; Anderson v. Agnew, 38 Fla. 30, 20 So. 766.

The transaction as set forth in the declaration would support a count for money had and received. The check was the bank's authority for paying to the plaintiff from the account of Virgin & Carter the amount of money named in the check. The drawer of the check had the necessary funds on deposit, and the bank was solvent. Therefore, when the bank took from the funds on hand, or from the funds of Virgin & Carter on deposit, the amount stated in the check, it had in its possession for that instant of time money which it should have paid to the plaintiff; but the bank took the responsibility of saying that a payment to Weekly was a payment to the plaintiff. To hold that the drawer of the check is charged with the responsibility of seeing that the bank pays the check to an authorized agent of the payee after the drawer has delivered the check to the payee is to unsettle all transactions in which checks are used to pay debts, and introduce confusion worse confounded into the mercantile and business world.

Virgin & Carter, according to the allegations of the declaration, paid their debt to the plaintiff. They gave a check to the plaintiff on a solvent bank in which they had ample funds. That the bank was willing to honor the check when presented is shown by the fact that it did pay when presented. Under these circumstances the debt of Virgin & Carter was paid. If, shortly after the bank paid the check, it had failed, would the loss fall upon Virgin & Carter?

The declaration, considered from a common-law standpoint, is somewhat incomplete or informal, and, although it does not contain the words of the statutory form, it contains the substance without prolixity. The defendant took up the check and returned it to the drawer without authority from the owner to do so. This was an interference with plaintiff's property and constitutes a conversion, because, when the bank undertook to return the check to the maker, it exercised ownership over it. The returned check was used as a voucher or receipt or acquittance of the defendant's obligation to the drawer. This unauthorized act of ownership deprived the plaintiff of the use and possession of the check.

Lord Ellenborough, Ch. J., said: It might be a hardship upon the defendant, but that by law "a person is guilty of a conversion who intermeddles with my property and disposes of it; and it is no answer that he acted under authority of another who had himself no authority to dispose of it." L.R.A.1918C.

Stephens v. Elwall, 4 Maule & S. 259, 105 Eng. Reprint, 830.

Trover lies for all personal chattels, bank notes, bills of exchange, and other negotiable instruments. 1 Archbold, Nisi Prius, p. 551.

The question presented by the declaration seems to us to be similar in all respects to that presented in Bristol Knife Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 41 Conn. 421, 19 Am. Rep. 517, and would even answer the objections raised by the dissenting opinion in that case. The facts were as follows: The Bristol Knife Company was a corporation; one of its customers, named Myers sent to the company a check drawn by Hopper on the Security Bank in payment of a debt. The Bristol Knife Company indorsed the check to the First National Bank, and sent it by a messenger, the brother of the president of the Knife Company, to the First National Bank at Hartford for deposit. The messenger destroyed the deposit slip, presented the check at the bank, and stated that he wanted currency for it, as the "company wanted to pay off its hands." The currency was paid to the messenger, who absconded. The court held the bank liable in assumpsit. Two judges dissented, upon the grounds that the plaintiffs were the primary cause of the fraud, because the messenger was their special agent for the purpose of delivering the check to the defendant as a deposit.

The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Loomis, said: "The principles that control this case are not to be found in any distinction between special and restrictive indorsements of negotiable paper, nor in any view of the rights of bona fide holders or purchasers of such paper. The record shows that the defendants put no faith in any title which the holder of the check had or assumed to have; hence their position is not like that of a bona fide purchaser of negotiable paper from a holder clothed with the apparent legal title. The holder in this case not only made no pretense of title, but openly professed to act only in behalf of the plaintiffs. The defendants well knew that the check was the property of the plaintiffs, that the transaction was wholly with them, and that they must account to them for the avails. It is found that the defendants have collected the full amount of the check; but have they ever accounted to the plaintiffs for the same? It is conceded that they paid the amount of the check to the messenger who brought it to the bank, and the question is whether such payment, in legal effect, is a payment to the plaintiffs? The whole case resolves itself into a mere question of agency."

In the case at bar it cannot be assumed that Weekly had authority to take the check to the bank for deposit to the credit of the plaintiff. Certainly he had no authority to indorse the check for the plaintiff and receive the proceeds, for that is admitted by the demurrer. Therefore the bank, and no one else, assumed the responsibility of dealing with Weekly as the plaintiff's agent. The drawers of the check were not at fault, because they made it payable to the plaintiff's order; the plaintiff was not at fault, for it had given Weekly no such commission as he undertook. His authority as the plaintiff's agent ceased when, as freight agent, he received the check from the makers, as we construe the declaration. Under the circumstances of this case, as shown by the declaration, the liability of Virgin & Carter upon the account which they owed to the plaintiff, and to pay which they sent the check, would seem to be discharged. There would seem to be no sufficient reason for holding Virgin & Carter responsible for the dishonesty of the plaintiff's agent, whom it had designated to receive the check. As between the plaintiff and the makers of the check, the loss, if any, should fall upon the party more directly responsible for, and having control of, the agent whose dishonesty occasioned it. See McFadden v. Follrath, 114 Minn. 85, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201, 130 N. W. 542; Burstein v. Sullivan, 134 App. Div. 623, 119 N. Y. Supp. 317. The case is somewhat analogous to those in which a check payable to one person is presented for payment by another person of the same name. As between the payee and the bank paying the check, the loss falls upon the latter. Thomas v. First Nat. Bank, 101 Miss. 500, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 355, 58 So. 478; Indiana Nat. Bank v. Holtsclaw, 98 Ind. 85; 7 C. J. 693, note, 1.

In the Indiana case the court held that the unauthorized indorsement of the check conferred no title, and in contemplation of law the check remained untransferred, and in this condition was subject to plaintiff's acceptance, for whom it was intended, but was sent to the wrong address. So the unauthorized indorsement of the check in this case conferred no title, neither did its delivery; but the defendant nevertheless has undertaken to dispose of it as its own by charging it to the drawers' account and returning it to them.

The rule is well established that a banker on whom a check is drawn must ascertain at his peril the identity of the person named in it as payee; but it does not apply in this case. There was no question as to the identity of the payee, nor was payment made upon a forged instrument. The bank simply assumed the sole responsibility of treating Weekly as the agent of the plaintiff, with authority to indorse its name upon checks and collect the proceeds. It was guilty of negligence for which no one other than itself was responsible. It committed a wrong for which it is answerable in damages,—a wrong to which it cannot be said that either the drawers or payee were parties.

The section in the Negotiable Instruments Law providing that a check of itself does not operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank, and that the bank is not liable to the holder unless and until it accepts or certifies the check (Gen. Stat. § 3098), does not apply. The plaintiff is not suing the bank for breach of a contract in not paying the check. It is suing the bank because the latter has undertaken to exercise ownership over a check which belonged to the plaintiff without its authority,—because the bank had in its possession funds, the proceeds of the check, which it should have paid to the plaintiff, but negligently failed to do so.

We think there is nothing in the point that the damages in this case would be merely nominal; and, if nominal damages only were claimed, the case would not be within the jurisdiction of the court.

The order sustaining the demurrer to the declaration was error, for which the judgment is reversed.

Browne, Ch. J., and Whitfield, Taylor, and West, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Liability of drawee to true owner of a check which it has paid on a forged indorsement.

In general.

On payment of check to unauthorized person by drawee as barring action against drawer by payee on claim for which check was given, see 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201.

Various questions between the drawer and drawee, arising out of the payment by the latter of a check upon a forged or unauthorized indorsement, are treated L.R.A.1918C.

in notes cited in L.R.A. Indexes under the title "Banks."

When the payee or holder of a check sues the drawee bank upon the check, he generally finds great difficulty in getting away from the principle that there is no privity of contract between the parties. The rule that he cannot recover upon the check, since the extensive adoption of the Negotiable Instrument Act, has to Ballard v. Home Nat. Bank, L.R.A. 1916C, 161, covering this question. In order that there may be a recovery, where the drawee has paid the check on an unauthorized indorsement, there must be something arising out of the facts or the form of action that will enable the payee to avoid the force of this general rule. When his action is against an intermediary bank,—a bank that has cashed the check on a forged indorsement and collected it,—he does not meet this difficulty for the reason that he must sue for the check or for the proceeds rather than upon the check. See cases cited in note to United States Portland Cement Co. v. United States Nat. Bank, L.R.A.1917A, 148.

When the drawee bank has cashed a check on a forged indorsement and charged the amount against the drawer's account, some courts have permitted a recovery by the injured holder on the theory that such action by the bank constitutes an acceptance, which, of course, creates privity of contract and takes the case out of the rule already stated; while others deny that such acts amount to an acceptance, and refuse to permit a recovery. See cases cited in L.R.A.1916C, pages 181, 182.

The theory of acceptance.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. CITIZENS & PEOPLE'S NAT. BANK, ante, 610, was not argued or decided upon the theory of acceptance. Counsel for the plaintiff freely admitted that paying the check on an unauthorized indorsement did not constitute an acceptance of the check, in view of the Negotiable Instrument Act, which provides that an acceptance must be in writing. Practically all of the cases in which the decision turned upon this theory have been cited in the L.R.A. note last above cited. Hence only a few such cases are here cited for the purpose of comparison.

The court, in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. CITIZENS & PEOPLE'S NAT. BANK, apparently makes a distinction between a check paid upon a forged indorsement and one paid upon an unauthorized indorsement. Of course, in the latter case the bank knows that it is not paying the money to the payee in person, and in that respect it may be more blamable; but it is difficult to see how that fact alone either helps or hinders the holder to maintain an action without privity of contract. Some of the cases cited in the notes already referred to, notably First Nat. Bank v. Whitman (1877) 94 U. S. L.R.A.1918C.

343, 24 L. ed. 229, involved unauthorized indorsements, but they were tried and decided upon the theory that payment of the check and charging it against the drawer did or did not constitute an acceptance.

Both J. M. Houston Grocer Co. v. Farmers' Bank (1897) 71 Mo. App. 132, and Jackson v. National Bank (1893) 92 Tenn. 154, 18 L.R.A. 663, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81, 20 S. W. 802, are cases of this kind, the one holding that payment with settlement of drawer's account is not sufficient to constitute an acceptance where the indorsement was not authorized, and the other holding that it is sufficient. And see other cases cited in the earlier note.

In Illinois, under the rule which once prevailed there, that the payee of a check can maintain an action against the drawee bank for the amount thereof, provided that the drawer has, at the time of presentation, sufficient funds on deposit to pay the check (see cases cited in L.R.A.1916C, p. 169), the payment of a check upon an unauthorized indorsement did not relieve the bank of liability to the true holder thereof. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Lincoln Fuel Co. (1896) 67 Ill. App. 166; T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. Goodell (1901) 93 Ill. App. 592. But the plaintiff was obliged to prove that the bank had sufficient of the drawer's funds to pay the checks at the time they were presented by the true holder, and the fact that the bank paid the checks to a stranger is not sufficient proof that it had, even at that time, funds belonging to the drawer. Rauch v. Banker' Nat. Bank (1908) 143 Ill. App. 625. It appears by the opinion in this case that the Negotiable Instrument Act was adopted in Illinois before the decision, but did not influence the decision for the reason that all the transactions took place before its enactment.

Money had and received.

It has been held that an action for money had and received cannot be maintained by the true payee of a check against the drawee bank that has paid the check upon an unauthorized indorsement and charged the same to the drawer's account. Freeman v. Savannah Bank & T. Co. (1891) 88 Ga. 252, 14 S. E. 577 (the court in this case merely followed the Whitman Case (U. S.) supra, so that it perhaps turned upon the acceptance theory, without regard to the form of the action); Lonier v. State

Sav. Bank (1907) 149 Mich. 483, 112 N. W. 1119.

Action for conversion.

The drawee bank that cashes a check upon an unauthorized indorsement is liable in an action for conversion to the true payee who has received no benefit from the proceeds. Burstein v. People's Trust Co. (1911) 143 App. Div. 165, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1092; Schnabel v. Hanover Nat. Bank (1912) 78 Misc. 35, 137 N. Y. Supp. 727; LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. CITIZENS & PEOPLE'S NAT. BANK, ante, 610. And see cases cited under the following heading.

In New York Brick & Paving Co. v. Bronx Borough Bank (1903) 42 Misc. 31, 85 N. Y. Supp. 557, affirmed in (1905) 105 App. Div. 623, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1157, which is affirmed in (1906) 186 N. Y. 559, 79 N. E. 1112, an action by the payee of the check against the drawee bank for conversion was dismissed where the defendant had paid on an unauthorized indorsement, but it appeared that the payee had received full benefit of the proceeds. It was held that under such circumstances the mere irregularity would not make the bank liable, since no one was injured thereby.

Form of action not considered.

In several cases, the courts, without indicating the theory or discussing the form of action, have held that the drawee bank is liable to the true payee where it pays the check on an unauthorized or forged indorsement. Whether these cases were decided upon the theory of conversion or not, safe practice would appear to require some form of action that will permit a decision on that theory. Also see cases cited in note to

A. Blum, Jr.'s Sons v. Whipple, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, in this connection.

An action can be maintained by the true payee of a check against the drawee bank that has paid it upon an unauthorized indorsement. Robinson v. Bank of Winslow (1908) 42 Ind. App. 350, 85 N. E. 793; Vanbibber v. Bank of Louisiana (1859) 14 La. Ann. 486, 74 Am. Dec. 442; William Deering & Co. v. Kelso (1898) 74 Minn. 41, 73 Am. St. Rep. 324, 76 N. W. 792; Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank (1910) 109 Minn. 440, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 74, 124 N. W. 236 (the point assumed); McFadden v. Foll-rath (1911) 114 Minn. 85, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 130 N. W. 542. See also note to United States Portland Cement Co. v. United States Nat. Bank, L.R.A. 1917A, 145, citing some cases where the action was against an intermediary bank.

Bristol Knife Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1874) 41 Conn. 421, 19 Am. Rep. 517, discussed by the court in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. CITIZENS & PEOPLE'S NAT. BANK, ante, 610, may be distinguished from cases that come more directly within the scope of this annotation by the fact that there was no unauthorized indorsement of the check. The check was properly indorsed by one having the authority to indorse it, placed in an envelop with a deposit slip, and sent by messenger to the bank for deposit. The messenger presented only the check and called for the cash. The only question was whether his possession of the check, properly indorsed, was sufficient evidence of his authority to receive the cash, which the bank knew belonged to the payee.

J. W. M.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

EMMA LUSCHER et al., Appts.,

v.

SECURITY TRUST COMPANY et al.

(— Ky. —, 199 S. W. 613.)

Limitation of actions — claim against heir — right of estate.

An heir cannot, in the settlement of a decedent's estate, be charged with a claim against him for money advanced by the ancestor as surety to pay a note of the heir, if the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, IV. c, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 10, 1918.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the Circuit Court for Fayette County sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a Note. — As to duty of debtor to account for statute-barred debt before participating in estate of creditor, see annotation following this case, post, 619.

As to the right to deduct an indebtedness owing to remote ancestor by predeceased immediate ancestors, see note to Adams v. Yancey, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1026. L.R.A.1918C.

As to whether the indebtedness of an heir to the estate may be treated as a counter-claim or set-off against his distributive share in proceeds of realty, see note to Marvin v. Bowlby, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 189.

petition filed to settle the estate of plaintiff's decedent, and to set off an indebtedness of one of the defendant heirs against his distributive share in the estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. S. Luscher, for appellant:

An indebtedness barred by the Statute of Limitations, which is due the estate by a distributee, may be offset by the administrator by the application of the interest of the distributee to the liquidation of the indebtedness.

Bougere Succession, 28 La. Ann. 743; Re Bogart, 28 Hun, 466; Rogers v. Murdock, 45 Hun, 30.

The personal representative has an equitable lien upon the assets of the decedent.

Rogers v. Murdock, supra; Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533; Brown v. Mattingly, 91 Ky. 275, 15 S. W. 353; Waterman. Set-Off, p. 234.

The English rule is that an indebtedness due the estate by the distributee, although the collection thereof is barred by the Statute of Limitations, may be used to offset the distributee's interest in the estate.

2 Williams, Exrs. p. 619; Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539, 67 Eng. Reprint, 494, 13 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461, 8 Jur. 844; Rose v. Gould, 15 Beav. 189, 51 Eng. Reprint, 509, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 360; Coates v. Coates, 33 Beav. 249, 55 Eng. Reprint, 363, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 448, 10 Jur. N. S. 532, 9 L. T. N. S. 795, 12 Week. Rep. 634; Campbell v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 453, 39 Eng. Reprint, 175, 9 L. J. Ch. 234.

In Williams v. Gilchrist, 3 Bibb. 49, and in Gilchrist v. Williams, 3 A. K. Marsh. 235, it was held that a set-off, if barred, would not be asserted in defense to a cause of action, but the court seems to have departed from that ruling in the cases of Nall v. Farmers' Bank, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 122, abstract; Rudd v. Anderson, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 489, 14 S. W. 340; Edwards v. McKinsey, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 925, abstract; Grover v. Tingle, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 885, 53 S. W. 281; Aultman & T. Co. v. Mead, 121 Ky. 241, 123 Am. St. Rep. 193, 89 S. W. 137.

Mr. J. Pelham Johnston, for appellee George C. Stahel:

An administrator cannot set off an indebtedness owing by a distributee to the intestate, which was barred by the Statute of Limitations in the lifetime of the intestate, against the distributee's share of the estate.

Allen v. Edwards, 136 Mass. 138; Holt v. Libby, 80 Me. 329, 14 Atl. 201; Reed v. Marshall, 90 Pa. 345; Milne's Appeal, 99 Pa. 483; Light's Estate, 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537; Richardson v. Keel, 7 Lea, 74; Boden v. Mier, 71 Neb. 701, 98 N. W. 701; Kimball v. Scribner, 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511; Williams v. Gilchrist, 3 L.R.A.1918C.

Bibb, 49; Gilchrist v. Williams, 3 A. K. Marsh. 235.

The English doctrine, being based on a rule of English chancery, does not apply where the distributee may maintain an action at law to recover his distributive share, as in Kentucky.

Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539, 67 Eng. Reprint, 494, 13 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461, 8 Jur. 844.

A distributee's claim to his share of an estate is a legal, not an equitable, right, and the relation between him and the administrator being that of creditor and debtor, the Statute of Limitations can be pleaded as a bar to the effort of the administrator to retain in his hands the distributee's share in satisfaction of an indebtedness of the distributee to the intestate.

Allen v. Edwards, 136 Mass. 138; Holt v. Libby, 80 Me. 329, 14 Atl. 201; Reed v. Marshall, 90 Pa. 345; Milne's Appeal, 99 Pa. 483; Light's Estate, 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537; Richardson v. Keel, 7 Lea, 74; Boden v. Mier, 71 Neb. 701, 98 N. W. 701; Rogers v. Murdock, 45 Hun, 30; Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533; Kimball v. Scribner, 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511.

Messrs. Hunt & Bush for other appellees.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is one question of law presented by this record, and it is this: In the settlement of the estate of a decedent, can one of the heirs be charged with a debt due by him to the decedent that is barred by limitation? It comes up on this state of facts: Charlotte Stahel, in April, 1893, was compelled to and did pay a note for $1,000 on which she was the surety of her son, George C. Stahel. In 1916 Mrs. Stahel died intestate, and after her death one of her children brought a suit to settle her estate. In this suit it was charged, and stands admitted, that Mrs. Stahel paid, under the circumstances stated, the $1,000 note, and it was sought to set off this sum, with interest from the date of its payment, against the distributive share of George C. Stahel in the estate of his mother. George C. Stahel for defense relied alone on the Statute of Limitation in such cases made and provided, and the lower court held that the plea of the statute presented a good defense, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted by Emma Luscher, a daughter of Mrs. Stahel, who was plaintiff in the suit below.

It is admitted by counsel for Emma Luscher, the appellant, that as Mrs. Stahel paid this $1,000 note in the ordinary course of her liability as a surety, an action by her, if she were living, to recover the amount so paid from George C. Stahel, would be barred if it had been brought when this suit was begun. But it is said that in a suit to settle the estate of a person who dies intestate, or in the settlement of an estate without a suit, the Statute of Limitation does not run against a debt or demand due by one of the heirs or distributees to the intestate, and that there may be deducted at any time from the share of the estate to which the heir would be entitled to the amount of the debt or demand due by him to the intestate at the time of her death. So far as our investigation, which has been much aided by that of counsel in this case, goes, this question is a new one in this state, and, curiously enough, there are not many decisions of other courts directly in point.

If the sum paid by Mrs. Stahel for her son could be treated as an advancement, there could be no question that the son should be charged with it in the distribution of his mother's estate, because § 1407 of the Kentucky Statutes provides, in part, that, "any real or personal property or money, given or devised by a parent or grandparent to a descendant, shall be charged to the descendant or those claiming through him in the division and distribution of the undivided estate of the parent or grand parent: and such party shall receive nothing further therefrom until the other descendants are made proportionately equal with him, according to his descendable and distributable share of the whole estate, real and personal, devised and undivided."

There is, however, no contention that this indebtedness should be treated as an advancement within the meaning of the statute. On the contrary, it is affirmatively admitted that when Mrs. Stahel became liable as surety on the note of her son, and afterwards was obliged to and did pay the note, the ordinary relation of creditor and debtor was thereby established between her and her son, and that she simply had a claim against him for the amount paid as his surety, the collection of which she might have enforced in the same manner that she could have enforced the collection of any other indebtedness. There being then no attempt to treat the matter as an advancement, and no evidence in the record on this subject, as the case went off on demurrer, the question recurs: Should the amount paid by the mother as surety, with interest thereon from date of payment, be deducted from the distributable share of George Stahel in the estate of his mother, although it was admittedly barred by the Statute of Limitation applicable to such demands, at the time of her death? Of course, if this indebtedness had not been barred by the statute there would be no difficulty in the way of setting it off against his distributable share.

Section 2514 of the Kentucky Statutes, fixing the period in which certain actions must be brought at fifteen years from the date of their accrual, and § 2515, fixing five years as the time when certain actions must be brought after their accrual, are substantially the same in so far as the nature of the bar interposed by the statute is concerned, although a different period of time is fixed and the sections apply to different states of cases. Joyce v. Joyce, 1 Bush, 474. It is therefore not material which one should be applied here; and as the cause of action in Mrs. Stahel to recover the amount paid as surety accrued when she paid the debt, which was more than fifteen years before her death, we may, for the purposes of the case, look to § 2514, which provides, in part, that, "civil actions, other than those for the recovery of real property, shall be commenced within the following periods after the cause of action has accrued, and not after: . . . Upon a bond or obligation for the payment of money or property, or for the performance of any undertaking, shall be commenced within fifteen years after the cause of action first accrued."

But the argument is made that this statute merely precludes the maintenance of an action for affirmative relief if it is not brought within the prescribed time, but does not operate to defeat the assertion of a claim by the estate of an intestate against a distributee for the purpose of defeating or reducing the right of the distributee to participate in the estate, because, as said by counsel for the estate, this character of relief is negative in its nature and not embraced by the statute, which does not put an obstacle in the way of the estate's retaining at any time out of the share of a distributee a debt due by him to the estate.

We do not, however, find ourselves able to agree with the counsel in the soundness of the distinction attempted to be made. If the estate of Mrs. Stahel had sought to collect by action from George Stahel the amount paid by his mother as surety, there could be no question about his right to plead and rely on the statute in bar of the action, and as he could defeat the collection of the demand by interposing the Statute of Limitation, there seems to be no good reason why he should not also be permitted to plead and rely on the statute when the attempt is made to collect the demand by deducting it from his share of the estate.

So far as the rights of the estate and the rights of George Stahel are concerned, the collection of the demand by an independent action, or the collection of it by deducting the amount from his portion of the estate, would have precisely the same effect, as in either event the estate would get the money. It is, therefore, plain that if the distinction sought to be made applicable is controlling, the statute must be ignored, because it makes no distinction between the right to collect a demand due an estate by an independent action and the right to collect it by deducting the amount from the share of the estate going to the debtor.

It is said, however, that in Aultman & T. Co. v. Meade, 121 Ky. 241, 123 Am. St. Rep. 193, 89 S. W. 137; Weakley v. Meriwether, 156 Ky. 304, 160 S. W. 1054, and in other cases therein cited, this court has held that the Statute of Limitation can be successfully pleaded only to an action asserting affirmative relief, and is not available as a mere defensive plea. But the cases in which this rule was announced presented states of fact in which it was sought to defeat by plea of limitation the right of the defendant to assert by way of counterclaim transactions connected with and growing out of the matter that was the basis of the suit, and the rule that in such cases the Statute of Limitation will not operate to bar the defense is well illustrated in the Meade Case. There the Aultman & Taylor Company had sold Meade a sawmill, and in a suit by the company to collect its debt, Meade set up as a defense the value of the sawmill that he alleged the company had taken possession of and converted to its own use. The company interposed a plea of limitation to this defense, but the court held that the statute was not available, saying: "If such mortgagee, by virtue of his mortgage contract, and not as a tort-feasor, takes the mortgaged property to be applied upon the mortgage debt, is it not his agreement, as part of the mortgage contract, to so apply it? And if he fails to do so, is not that a matter purely of defense in a suit to recover the balance of the mortgage debt, as much as would be a plea of payment? We think it is. Having reached this conclusion, the disposal of the plea of limitation becomes simple."

But here there is no connection whatever between the claim of George Stahel to his distributive part of the estate and the demand asserted by the estate against him on account of the payment of the surety debt. These two matters are separate and distinct, not arising out of the same contract or transaction. In other words, the indebtedness sought to be deducted by the estate was in the nature of a set-off, and it has been held in Williams v. Gilchrist, 3 Bibb, 49, and Hawthorn v. Roberts, Hardin (Ky.) 70, that, "a debt, to be pleadable as a set-off, must be a mutually subsisting debt at the time of bringing the suit. But a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations is not a subsisting debt, and so cannot be pleaded as a set-off or given in evidence."

We are also referred to Brown v. Mattingly, 91 Ky. 275, 15 S. W. 353, as sustaining the right of the estate to deduct this indebtedness, but this case, while it recognizes the right of an administrator to plead as a set-off a distributee's indebtedness to the estate against the distributee's interest therein, does not hold or even intimate that the right to plead the indebtedness as a set-off would be available if the debt due by the distributee were barred by limitation. Of course where the claim of the estate against the distributee is not barred by limitation, and is a valid and subsisting debt against the distributee, there can be no doubt about the right of the estate to rely on the claim as a set-off against the distributee's interest. It should, however, be said that the contention of counsel for the estate that the statute does not bar the right to deduct from the share of a distributee or legatee a debt due by him to the estate is supported by Williams on Executors, vol. 2, p. 619, where it is said: "An executor may retain so much of the legacy as is sufficient to satisfy a debt due from the legatee to the testator, although the remedy for such debt was, at the time of the death of the testator, barred by the Statute of Limitation."

But this text finds its principal support in English cases, although, as said by Woerner on Am. Law of Administration, 2d ed. vol. 2, § 564, the same doctrine is held by some American courts, and he refers to the cases of Wilson v. Kelly, 16 S. C. 216; Holmes v. McPheeters, 149 Ind. 587, 49 N. E. 452; and Tinkham v. Smith, 56 Vt. 187. It should, however, be observed that in some of these states the subject is regulated by statute, and in others the courts treated the indebtedness of the heir or legatee as an advancement. But opposed to the English rule referred to by Williams on Executors is Allen v. Edwards, 136 Mass. 138, where the court held that a debt due from a legatee to the testator, which was, at the time of the testator's death, barred by the Statute of Limitation, could not be deducted from the legacy, unless the language of the will clearly showed that the testator intended that such deduction should be made.

In Holt v. Libby, 80 Me. 329, 14 Atl. 201, the question was clearly presented to the court, and it was held that the executor could not deduct from a legacy a debt due by a legatee to the estate which was barred by limitation, the court saying: "The estate is just as much of a debtor to the indebted legatee as the legatee is to the estate. Each has a legal right and remedy, and a statute-barred debt is not more recoverable by an estate than by any other creditor. To our minds, this is the better doctrine."

In the case of Light's Estate, 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537, the same rule was announced, the court saying: "If the statute can be pleaded with effect when the decedent's estate is a debtor, we can see no good reason why it may not be pleaded also with like effect when the estate is a creditor; if the running of the statute should be stopped by the death in one case, why not in the other? There is no necessity arising out of the administration of the law, or the practice in equity, which calls for any such distinction; the legatees were as much entitled to the protection of the statute as any other creditor. Admitting the right of an executor, or of the heirs, in the distribution of a decedent's estate, to set off the debts of the legatees against their legacies, the debts, to constitute a valid set-off should be valid, subsisting debts, not barred by the statute."

In Richardson v. Keel, 9 Lea, 74, the court said: "We do not perceive the principle upon which it can be held that while suit upon the claim is barred by the statute, so that there can be no judgment or recovery upon it, yet the administrator may appropriate the effects of the defendant, which he holds in trust for him, to the payment of the barred debt."

To the same effect are Boden v. Mier, 71 Neb. 191, 98 N. W. 701; Kimball v. Scribner, 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511.

Having no statute in this state making any exception referable to claims asserted by an estate against a distributee, we are disposed to the view that the general Statute of Limitation is as applicable in this class of cases as it is in others. It may be true, as urged by counsel for the estate, that to allow George Stahel to get his full distributive share of the estate, while denying the estate the right to deduct his indebtedness, would be unjust to the other heirs and distributees; but if so the injustice was not worked by the law, but by the failure of Mrs. Stahel to collect or attempt to collect her debt before it was barred by the statute, or to put it, as we may assume she might easily have done, in such form as that its life would have been extended. But at least there is no more injustice in allowing the statute to defeat a meritorious claim like this than there is in allowing it to defeat the collection of other just demands, as is often done.

The judgment is affirmed.

Annotation—Duty of debtor to account for statute-barred debt before participating in estate of creditor.

It is a generally accepted rule, both in England and the United States, which in some jurisdictions is embodied in statutory form, but which exists in the absence of statute, that where the legatee of a general legacy or share of residue, or the distributee of an intestate's estate, is a debtor to the estate, he is not entitled to receive his legacy without bringing his debt into account. The right of the executor or administrator to retain so much of the legacy or distributive share as will satisfy the debt is based upon two theories,—one, which may be termed the legal theory, being that the legatee or distributee has assets of the estate in his hands which are applicable to the satisfaction of his claim; the other, which may be termed the equity theory, being that he should not be permitted to receive his legacy or distributive share while retaining in his hands a part of the fund out of which his own and other legacies or distributive shares are to be paid.

There is, however, a difference of opinion as to whether this rule is applicable in the case of debts which have become barred by the Statute of Limitations.

In England, and in many of the United States, it is held that the amount of the statute-barred debt owing to the estate by a legatee may be applied by the executor in satisfaction of the legacy.<sup>1</sup>

And the same rule has been held to ap-

<sup>1</sup>Courtenay v. Williams (1844) 3 Hare, 539, 67 Eng. Reprint, 494, 13 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461, affirmed in (1845) 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 204, 8 Jur. 844; Coates v. Coates (1864) 10 Jur. N. S. 532, 33 Beav. 249, 55 Eng. Reprint, 363, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 448, 9 L. T. N. S. 795, 12 Week. Rep. 634; Gee v. Liddell (1866) 35 Beav. 629, 55 Eng. Reply in the distribution of an intestate's estate.<sup>2</sup> In reply to the contention that a different rule should apply in the case of a distributee who owes to the estate a debt which has become barred, in that, while a legatee takes by the bounty of the testator, the next of kin takes by operation of law, it has been said: "The duty of an administrator is to administer the estate of the intestate. In this instance part of the estate consists of this debt, which is due to the estate, though the remedy for recovering part of it may have become barred by statute. Until the debtor discharges his duty to the estate by paying the debt which he owes to it, he can have no right or title to any part of it under the statute. A legacy, no doubt, is a gift arising from the bounty of the testator, but a legacy can only be paid in the course of administration; that is to say, after all the claims of creditors of the estate and all the liabilities of debtors to the estate have been satisfied."<sup>3</sup>
L.R.A.1918C.

print, 1041; Noble v. Tait (1903) 140 Ala. 469, 37 So. 278; Rawlins v. Rawlins (1885) 75 Ga. 632 [dictum]; Re Esmond [1910] 154 Ill. App. 357 [but compare Hesley v. Shaw (1905) 120 Ill. App. 92, set forth infra]; Re Lietman (1899) 149 Mo. 112, 73 Am. St. Rep. 374, 50 S. W. 307 [dictum]; Re Bogart (1882) 28 Hun (N. Y.) 466;

The theory of these cases is that the Statute of Limitations bars only the right of action, and not the debt itself, and therefore that where property of the debtor comes into the hands of the creditor the statute does not preclude his appropriating such property to the payment of the debt.<sup>4</sup>

In the leading English case on this

Rogers v. Murdock (1887) 45 Hun. 30, 9 N. Y. S. R. 660; Re Foster (1895) 15 Misc. 175, 37 N. Y. Supp. 36; Leask v. Hoagland (1909) 64 Misc. 156, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1035 (reversed on another ground in (1910) 136 App. Div. 658, 121 N. Y. Supp. 197); [but see Kimball v. Scribner (1916) 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511, infra]; Re Covin (1883) 20 S. C. 471.

<sup>2</sup> Re Cordwell (1875) L. R. 20 Eq. (Eng.) 644, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 746; Re Wheeler [1904] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 66, 73 L. J. Ch. N. S. 576, 52 Week. Rep. 586; 91 L. T. N. S. 227; Holmes v. McPheeters (1898) 149 Ind. 587, 49 N. E. 452; Garrett v. Pierson (1870) 29 Iowa, 304 [dictum]; Holden v. Spier (1902) 65 Kan. 412, 70 Pac. 348; Rogers v. Murdock (1887) 45 Hun. 30, 9 N. Y. S. R. 660; Re Smith (1895) 14 Misc. 169, 35 N. Y. Supp. 701 [dictum]; Re Timerson (1903) 39 Misc. 675, 80 N. Y. Supp. 639; Sartor v. Beaty (1886) 25 S. C. 293; Ex parte Wilson (1909) 84 S. C. 444, 66 S. E. 675; Tinkham v. Smith (1883) 56 Vt. 187.

In Louisiana, it is held that the heir cannot plead against collation that the debt which he owes is prescribed. Bougère's Succession (1876) 28 La. Ann. 743.

And an heir cannot be relieved from collating by prescription after the succession has been opened. Skipworth's Succession (1860) 15 La. Ann. 209.

<sup>3</sup> Re Cordwell (1875) L. R. 20 Eq. (Eng.) 644.

<sup>4</sup> In Rogers v. Murdock (1887) 45 Hun. 30, 9 N. Y. S. R. 660, it is said that the doctrine that where there is a legal and also an equitable remedy in respect to the same subject-matter, the latter is under the control of the same statute bar with the former, is inapplicable to a case where the executor or administrator claims the right to retain the whole or a part of a legacy or distributive share in discharge or satisfaction of a statute-barred debt due from a legatee or distributee to the estate, as such doctrine relates to an action, or a proceeding in the nature of an action, brought to enforce an equitable remedy, in which the statute bar is set up as a defense. The court said: "If, in the present case, the executor were suing to recover the claims above mentioned, the rule would apply. But that is not the case. The only object of the proceeding instituted by the executor is to settle his accounts and distribute the assets of the estate. As the claims against the appellant have not been paid in fact, and no presumption of payment arises from the lapse of time, they are assets in the hands of the executor, for which he must account. And as no affirmative action has been instituted, or is necessary on his part, to make his lien and right of detention available, the Statute of Limitations does not stand in his way."

In Tinkham v. Smith (1883) 56 Vt. 187, it is said: "As such assertion, by way of plea in bar, or satisfaction of the decree of distribution, is not in form an action to enforce the payment of such indebtedness, a replication of the Statute of Limitations is not applicable thereto. The Statute of Limitations applies only to actions (Rev. Stat. chap. 55), and not to pleas in bar, by payment or satisfaction; and probably not to pleas, as such, unless in the nature of an action, like declarations in set-off. Although many of the cases cited by the defendant's counsel are suits in equity, they all sustain his contention, that an administrator has the right to apply the indebtedness from an heir to the estate, in part or whole satisfaction of the share of such heir in the estate; and that the Statute of Limitations does not bar nor apply to such application, as it bars and applies to actions only."

In Holden v. Spier (1902) 65 Kan. 412, 70 Pac. 348, the court said: "Is the statute applicable when the question is whether the indebtedness of an heir to an estate shall be retained out of his distributive share? We think the bar of the statute cannot be interposed in such cases. The theory of the law, and it is an equitable one, is that the indebtedness of an heir of the estate should be regarded as assets of the estate already in his hands, and that his legacy or share is to that extent satisfied. It would be grossly inequitable to allow an heir to obtain his full share of an estate while he was withholding a por-question<sup>5</sup> Vice Chancellor Wigram reasoned as follows: "The Statute of Limitations that governs the present case is the 21 Jac. 1, chap. 16, which takes away the remedy against the debtor, unless the action be brought within six years after the cause of action arose; but it leaves the right untouched, differing in this respect from a more recent Statute of Limitations, by which the right as well as the remedy is barred. In accordance with this construction of the act it has been repeatedly decided, and is settled law, that if a creditor, by means of a lien or other lawful means, can pay himself without resorting to an action against the person of the debtor, he may lawfully do so. In Spears v. Hartly (1800) 3 Esp. (Eng.) 81, 6 Revised Rep. 814, which was a case of trover, the defendant, a wharfinger, claimed a lien upon merchandise in his hands for the balance of a general account, which, it was held, he was entitled to; and the only question then was whether, as the balance which the defendant claimed was due to him nine or ten years before the action was brought, the debt was not discharged by the operation of the Statute of Limitations, and the lien, therefore, gone. Lord Eldon said it was true that, if the debt was discharged by the statute, there could be no lien by reason of it; but the debt was not discharged, it was the remedy only. He says, 'I am of opinion that, though the Statute of Limitations has run against a demand, if the creditor obtains possession of goods in which he has a lien for a general balance, he may hold them for that demand by virtue of the lien. In this case the defendant had a subsisting demand when the goods came to his possession, and I am of opinion he may enforce it by the lien which the law has given him for general balance.' Higgins v. Scott (1831) 2 Barn. & Ad. 413, 109 Eng. Reprint, 1196, 9 L. J. K. B. 262, is an authority also in point. If a debtor pays money to a creditor, without directing the appropriation, the creditor, having acquired a right to apply it, may apply it in payment of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations. Mills v. Fowkes (1839) 5 Bing. N. C. 455, 132 Eng. Reprint, 1174, 7 Scott, 444, 2 Arnold, 62, 8 L. J. C. P. N. S. 276, 3 Jur. 406, is also an authority upon the subject, and I may refer also to Coppin v. Coppin (1725) 2 P. Wms. 291, 24 Eng. Reprint, 735, and Williamson v. Naylor (1838) 3 Younge & C. Exch. (Eng.) 208. I shall assume, for the purpose of the argument in this case, as being favorable to the plaintiff, that the right which the law gives to the creditor having a lien on the goods or other property of the debtor does not enable a debtor effectually to plead, by way of set-off, a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations; that is, I shall assume that the plaintiff might reply the Statute of Limitations in answer to such a plea, as in Chapple v. Durston (1830) 1 Crompt. & J. 1, 148 Eng. Reprint, 1311, and Field v. Besant (1833) 5 Barn. & Ad. 357, 110 Eng. Reprint, 822, 2 Nev. & M. 207. The question, then, is whether the present case is to be governed by the principle of the former or of the latter cases. If the executor had made himself personally liable to the payment of the legacy, or if the object of the suit had been to charge the executor personally, the principle of the latter cases might possibly tion of the same that was already in his hands. It has been said that 'it is against conscience that he should receive anything out of the fund without deducting therefrom the amount of that fund which is already in his hands, as a debtor to the estate.' This is not a mere question of set-off, but of equitable lien and right of retainer. Smith v. Kearney (1848) 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 548. Our Statute of Limitations is one of repose, and does not raise a presumption of payment, as in some of the states. The lapse of time does not extinguish an obligation nor satisfy a debt, but the statute simply bars the remedy and prevents the use of the obligation or debt as a cause of action or affirmative defense."

In Re Covin (1883) 20 S. C. 471, it is said: "The most of the positions taken by appellant's counsel . . . are no doubt correct; to wit, that J. L. Covin is not liable to account to a legatee, nor to creditors of the estate, nor could the executors sue him in the probate court on his note. But neither of these principles are involved here. There is no attempt to enforce payment of his note by either legatee, creditor, or the executors. The question, on the contrary, is whether the executors shall be required to pay over to him certain interests which, under the will of his father, he seems to be entitled to. He is a devisee and legatee under this will, and the estate cannot be settled without determining his interests, as well as that of all the other parties, and in defining and adjudging his interests all the facts connected therewith must be considered. The executors are seeking no judgment on the note against him, but they are seeking a decree as to the conditions upon which they shall pay over to him such interest as he may have in their hands."

<sup>5</sup> Courtenay v. Williams (1844) 3 Hare, 539, 67 Eng. Reprint, 494, affirmed in (1845) 15 L. J. Ch. N. S. 204, 8 Jur. 844.

have governed this case. But this is not a suit for that purpose; it is a suit to recover a legacy out of assets, that is, claiming a portion of the assets in the hands of the executor; and the claim is not made in any other way. The case is the same as if the assets were in the hands of the accountant general. Now, to say that the right remains, and that the remedy only is barred, is, in a case like this, the same thing as saying that the legatee has already in his hands, to the amount of his debt, those assets of the testator which he seeks by his suit. Several ways of putting the case may be suggested in support of the argument on the part of the executors. They may say to the legatee, 'We admit your right to the legacy; you have assets of the testator in your hands; pay your legacy pro tanto out of those assets,' as in Jeffs v. Wood (1723) 2 P. Wms. 128, 24 Eng. Reprint, 668, and Campbell v. Graham (1830) 1 Russ. & M. 453, 39 Eng. Reprint, 175, 9 L. J. Ch. 234. Again, the executor might say, 'You ask for a portion of the assets of the testator; but you are yourself a debtor to the testator's estate, and his assets are diminished pro tanto by your default; it is against conscience that you should take anything out of the estate until you have made good what you owe to it;' and the equity of a trustee to impound the interest of a cestui que trust in the trust fund, under such circumstances, is clear. Priddy v. Rose (1817) 3 Meriv. 86, 36 Eng. Reprint, 33, 17 Revised Rep. 24; Smith v. Smith (1835) 1 Younge & C. Exch. (Eng.) 338; Ex parte Turbin (1832) Montague, Bankr. Cas. (Eng.) 443, 1 Deacon & C. Bankr. Cas. 120, 1 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 46. To such a case the rule that he who would have equity must do equity would apply by way of a rebutter to the plaintiff's demand. A third argument may, perhaps, be suggested, though I do not place any reliance upon it. If the testator had been living, and the statute had been pleaded to an action by himself, he might have enforced his claims to the amount of the legacy by canceling the legacy in his will. Now, if the will was made on the supposition that the debt existed, it was, in contemplation of law, made on the supposition that the debt would be paid; and if the circumstances under which, and with reference to which, the will was made, became altered by the act of the legatee, is it not possible that a court of justice, in this case as well as in many others, might hold the altered circumstances to operate as a revocation? I L.R.A.1918C.

do not, however, as I have said, rely upon the last point; I think the first and second points are decisive of the case."

And in an Indiana case,<sup>6</sup> the court, in speaking of the right of an administrator to retain sufficient of a distributive share to discharge a statute-barred debt owed to the estate by the distributee, said: "This right is not one of set-off, but is founded on the principal that the administrator or executor has an equitable lien on the share of the distributee or legatee, until the latter has discharged the obligation which he owes to the estate. The heir or legatee, as the authorities affirm, is not, in accordance with justice or good conscience, entitled to be awarded and receive his share as long as he is a debtor to the estate, and thereby has in his own hands a part of the fund upon which the payment of his own share and the shares of others depend. To allow a distributee to receive his share of the fund in the hands of the administrator for distribution, while the former is in default in the payment and discharge of his own obligations to the estate, would serve to diminish the fund, and result, perhaps, to the prejudice of others. By permitting the distributee to receive his share, while he retains a part of the fund in his own hands, out of which his share ought to be paid, might and frequently would result in awarding to him a portion of the fund greater than that received by other equally entitled distributees. These principles, in reason, do and must apply when the recovery of the debt which the distributee owes to the estate is barred by the Statute of Limitation. The Statute of Limitation is one of repose, and is only a bar to the remedy, and not to the debt itself, simply leaving it unpaid without any legal remedy on the part of the creditor to enforce its payment by suit, in the event the debtor relies on the statute as a defense. Measured, however, by a moral standard, and one in accord with good conscience, the debtor is still under an obligation to pay his debt, although a recovery thereon under the law may be barred by the lapse of time."

The rule applies where the indebtedness has become barred subsequently to the testator's death, as well as where it became barred in his lifetime,<sup>7</sup> but where the courts deny the right to deduct from a legacy or distributive share a debt which has become barred in the lifetime of the decedent, they also deny the right in case of a debt upon which the Statute of Limitations had not fully run at the time of decedent's death, but which subsequently became barred.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Holmes v. McPheeters (1898) 149 Ind. 587, 49 N. E. 452.

<sup>7</sup> Re Bogart (1882) 28 Hun (N. Y.) 466.

The debt must have been one for which, but for the Statute of Limitations, the legatee or distributee could have been sued; and so, where a distributee is not legally bound, by reason of being a married woman with no separate estate, the executor has no right of retainer.<sup>9</sup>

So, a right of retainer cannot be claimed in respect of a debt of over twenty years' standing, where the lapse of twenty years raises a presumption of payment.<sup>10</sup>

The executor may not claim to retain a legacy on the ground that the testator had signed as security the legatee's promissory note, where the note became barred by the Statute of Limitations as against both the promisors before the death of the testator; and the situation is not changed by the fact that the note is held by the executor, since he has no right to waive in his own favor the bar of the Statute of Limitations, and to bind the estate of his testator by a new promise to himself to pay the debt which, at the date of his testator's death, could not have been legally enforced.<sup>11</sup>

The doctrine that, where a legatee of a general legacy or share of residue is a debtor to the estate, he is not entitled to receive his legacy without bringing the debt into account, does not require the sole residuary legatee of the debtor to bring a statute-barred debt into account before participating in the estate of the creditor.<sup>12</sup>

The contrary doctrine.

In several of the United States it is held that where a debt is barred by the Statute of Limitations, it cannot be brought into account, either as against a legatee,<sup>13</sup> or a distributee.<sup>14</sup> These cases reject the English doctrine on one or the other of two grounds,—one of which is that the local Statute of Limitations operates not simply to bar the remedy, but to extinguish the debt, and that the legatee or distributee is as much entitled to the benefit of the statute as any other creditor;<sup>15</sup> the other being that as in local jurisdiction the legatee or devisee is not obliged to resort to a court of equity to enforce his claim, but may bring an action at law, it is not within the power of the courts to compel him to do equity.<sup>16</sup> The grounds on which they were decided are stated in the subjoined footnote.<sup>17</sup>

Where will directs deduction of debts.

Irrespective of the attitude of the courts in any particular jurisdiction on the question whether a legacy may be retained in satisfaction of a statute-barred

<sup>8</sup> Light's Estate (1890) 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537, overruling Thompson's Appeal (1862) 42 Pa. 345, which had theretofore been followed in Re Murray (1870) 2 Pearson (Pa.) 473, and Re Lang (1885) 16 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. (Pa.) 9.

<sup>9</sup> Re Wheeler [1904] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 66, 73 L. J. Ch. N. S. 576, 52 Week. Rep. 586, 91 L. T. N. S. 227.

<sup>10</sup> Sartor v. Beaty (1886) 25 S. C. 293.

<sup>11</sup> Wadleigh v. Jordan (1883) 74 Me. 483.

<sup>12</sup> Re Bruce [1908] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 682, 4 B. R. C. 713, 78 L. J. Ch. N. S. 56, 99 L. T. N. S. 704.

<sup>13</sup> Holt v. Libby (1888) 80 Me. 329, 14 Atl. 201; Allen v. Edwards (1883) 136 Mass. 138; Kimball v. Scribner (1916) 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511; Reed v. Marshall (1879) 90 Pa. 345; Light's Estate (1890) 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537; Sherer's Estate (1900) 17 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 382).

<sup>14</sup> Boden v. Mier (1904) 71 Neb. 191, 98 N. W. 701; Harrod v. Carder (1888) 3 Ohio C. C. 479, 2 Ohio C. D. 274; Drysdale's Appeal (1850) 14 Pa. 531; Milne's Appeal (1882) 99 Pa. 483; Re Murray (1870) 2 Pearson (Pa.) 473; Richardson v. Keel (1882) 9 Lea (Tenn.) 74.

<sup>15</sup> See Light's Estate (1890) 136 Pa. 211, 20 Atl. 536, 537.
L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>16</sup> See Allen v. Edwards (1883) 136 Mass. 138.

<sup>17</sup> In Holt v. Libby (1888) 80 Me. 329, 14 Atl. 201, the court, after referring to the doctrine of the English courts that a legacy may be retained in satisfaction of the legatee's debt to the estate though such debt has become barred, and remarking that a legacy was recoverable in England, at the time when such doctrine was established, only in chancery, said: "This doctrine cannot be applicable in this state, and in most of the states, where a legacy is made by statute, if not by ancient practice, a legal claim. With us it is a distinct and independent legal claim. The estate is just as much of a debtor to the indebted legatee as the legatee is to the estate.

Each has a legal right and remedy. And a statute-barred debt is no more recoverable by an estate than by any other creditor. To our minds, this is the better doctrine. Observation leads us to believe that a testator is more likely to intend to remit than to collect such debts, when nothing is declared of them by him in his will, especially debts against his children and relatives. In many instances such claims are covered by the dust of time and forgotten, though found by executors after the death of the testators. In many other instances debt owed to the testator, it is uniformly held that where a testator directs that any debts due or owing to him from legatees shall be brought into the division of the estate, or deducted from the share of the one so indebted, the debt must be deducted though barred by the Statute of Limitations.<sup>18</sup>

In such a case the legatee is a mere the advances are intended as benefactions and gifts, conditioned upon some unforeseen circumstances arising to make it expedient to regard them as debts."

In Richardson v. Keel (1872) 9 Lea (Tenn.) 74, it is said: "One species of property can no more be taken than another to pay a debt which the law does not recognize as valid security. The defendant's distributive share in his father's estate is as much his property as any other he may own."

In Helsey v. Shaw (1905) 120 Ill. App. 92, it was held that an administrator could not obtain an order in the court of probate authorizing the setting off of notes barred by the Statute of Limitations against the distributive share of the maker, the court saying: "We are of opinion, however, that whether the strict rules of law, or equitable principles, are applied in the determination of the question, the notes are, in either case, barred by the Statute of Limitations. It is well settled that when courts of law and equity have concurrent jurisdiction, a claim barred at law will be barred in equity, and that even when the jurisdiction in equity is exclusive, the limitation applies if the remedy sought is analogous to a remedy at law. Hancock v. Harper (1877) 86 Ill. 445. The purpose of the petition was, and the effect of granting the same would be, to enforce the payment of the notes in question. The proceeding was, therefore, clearly analogous to an action at law for the same purpose. There is no claim that any new promise to pay the notes existed, nor that any mutual claims existed between the deceased and the makers of the notes. The trial court properly held that the Statute of Limitations, which is a statute of repose, based upon the presumption that the debt has been paid, barred not only the remedy of appellant, as the representative of his intestate, but the right which it was intended to vindicate, as well." But compare Re Esmond (1910) 154 Ill. App. 357, in which a different view seems to have been taken; also Rogers v. Murdock (1887) 45 Hun, 30, 9 N. Y. S. R. 660, above set forth, in which it is said that the doctrine that where there is a legal and also an equitable remedy in respect to the same subject-matter, the latter is subject to the same statute bar as the former, does not apply to a situation of this kind.

In Kimball v. Scribner (1916) 174 App. Div. 845, 161 N. Y. Supp. 511, it was held that an executor cannot set up as a defense, in an action brought by a legatee volunteer, and must take the bounty of the testator upon the terms upon which it is bestowed.<sup>19</sup>

Though the contention has been made in cases of this type that where the testator directs such indebtedness as, at the time of his decease, may be due from a legatee to be deducted from his share, it must be assumed that only the indebted-to recover his legacy, the existence of unpaid promissory notes forming part of the assets of the estate, but which are barred by the Statute of Limitations. The court said: "I do not find any authority in this state where this question has been decided in an action at law to recover the amount of a legacy. There are numerous authorities, originating mostly in the surrogates' courts, arising upon accounting proceedings for a judicial settlement of an estate, where it has been held, following the English chancery rule, that an executor has the right to retain, as against a legatee, sufficient moneys to discharge an obligation of the legatee to the decedent, even though such obligation was subject to the bar of the Statute of Limitations. Rogers v. Murdock (1887) 45 Hun (N. Y.) 30, 9 N. Y. S. R. 660; Re Foster (1895) 15 Misc. 175, 37 N. Y. Supp. 36; Re Timerson (1903) 39 Misc. 675, 80 N. Y. Supp. 639; Leask v. Hoagland (1909) 64 Misc. 156, 118 N. Y. 1035, reversed in (1910) 136 App. Div. 658, 121 N. Y. Supp. 197; Re Leslie (1878) 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 280. These cases all proceed upon the theory that the Statute of Limitations is one of repose only, and does not discharge the debt (Hulbert v. Clark (1891) 128 N. Y. 295, 14 L.R.A. 59, 28 N. E. 638); that the debt is a part of the assets of the estate and that the debtor cannot, in good conscience, demand the payment of his legacy from the estate without contributing to the assets thereof the amount of his indebtedness. There are, however, authorities in other jurisdictions which hold that in an action to recover a legacy it is not a good defense that the legatee was indebted to the decedent on an obligation as to which the bar of the Statute of Limitations has run." And, after reviewing Allen v. Edwards (Mass.) supra, and referring to other similar decisions, the court continued: "I think that the reasoning in Allen v. Edwards, is distinctly applicable to the case at bar. It would seem that there can be no longer any sound distinction in legal principle whether this question arises in a surrogate's court in a proceeding to distribute an estate, or in an action at law to recover a legacy. Certainly, in this action at law, the principle has been applied according to the weight of authority and with regard to the substantial weight of reason."

<sup>18</sup> Rose v. Gould (1852) 15 Beav. 189, 51 Eng. Reprint, 509, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 360; Gray v. Hayhurst (1910) 157 Ill. App. 488; Holt v. Libby (Me.) supra; Baker v. Safe Deposit & T. Co. (1901) 93 Md. 368, 48 Atl.

ness that is demandable and collectable by process of law can be deducted, the courts have declined to recognize its validity.<sup>19</sup>

920, 49 Atl. 623; Cummings v. Bramhall (1876) 120 Mass. 552; Allen v. Edwards (1883) 136 Mass. 138; Gillingham's Estate (1908) 220 Pa. 353, 69 Atl. 809; Bird's Estate (1851) 2 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 168.
<sup>19</sup> Gillingham's Estate (1908) 220 Pa. 353, 69 Atl. 809. E. S. O.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

NORMAN MILLER, Plff. in Err.,
 v.
 MRS. BLANCHE HORTON.

(— Okla. —, 170 Pac. 509.)

Bills and notes — pledge — title.

1. The pledging of commercial paper as collateral security for the payment of a debt does not vest the pledgee with complete title: he has only a special interest therein to secure the debt; the general ownership remains in the pledgor.

For other cases, see Pledge and Collateral Security, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — right to sell.

2. The pledge of commercial paper as collateral security for payment of debts does not, in the absence of special power for that purpose, authorize the pledgee to sell the securities so pledged, upon default of payment of the debt, either at private or public sale. He must hold and collect the same as it becomes due and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt secured.

For other cases, see Pledge and Collateral Security, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 6, 1917.)

ERROR to the District Court for Bryan County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a balance alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. J. M. Crook, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant having become the holder of the note after maturity in his own right, the same was duly and legally discharged, and a peremptory verdict in his favor should have been given by the lower court instead of for plaintiff.

3 R. C. L. § 497, p. 1269; Long v. Bank of Cynthiana, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 290, 13 Am. Dec. 234; Harmer v. Steele, 4 Exch. 1, 154 Eng. Reprint, 1100, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 34, 4 Eng. Rul. Cas. 515; Freakley v. Fox, 9

Headnotes by PRYOR, C.

Note. — As to right of pledgee of commercial paper to sell the same, see annotation following this case, post, 628; and references therein to annotation on collateral points.

L.R.A.1918C.

Barn. & C. 130, 109 Eng. Reprint, 49, 4 Mann. & R. 18, 7 L. J. K. B. 148.

It was error to hold that there had been no fraud shown or proven in the case, because plaintiff's husband, at the time of making the trade transferring the property, made false and fraudulent representations to the defendant which were material.

Watkins v. West Wythesville Land & Improv. Co. 92 Va. 1, 22 S. E. 554; Nairn v. Ewalt, 51 Kan. 355, 32 Pac. 1110; Blydenburgh v. Welsh, Baldw. 331, Fed. Cas. No. 1,583; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 627; Wise v. Fuller, 29 N. J. Eq. 257.

Messrs. McPherrren & Cochran and Charles A. Phillips, for defendant in error:

The delivery of the note as collateral security was simply a pledge of the note.

Averill Machinery Co. v. Bain, 50 Mont. 512, 148 Pac. 334.

A pledge of personal property does not vest the ownership of the property in the pledgee, but only a special ownership.

Ibid.; Joliet Iron & Steel Co. v. Scioto Fire Brick Co. 82 Ill. 548, 25 Am. Rep. 341; Garlick v. James, 12 Johns. 146, 7 Am. Dec. 294; Halliday v. Bank of Stewart County, 112 Ga. 461, 37 S. E. 721.

A pledgee cannot sell any evidence of debt pledged to him, except the obligations of governments, states, or corporations, but may collect the same when due.

Joliet Iron & Steel Co. v. Scioto Fire Brick Co. 82 Ill. 548, 25 Am. Rep. 341; Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392; Richardson v. Ashby, 132 Mo. 238, 33 S. W. 806.

The attempted sale by the bank did not divest the title of Horton to this note.

Halliday v. Bank of Stewart County, 112 Ga. 461, 37 S. E. 721; Powell v. Ong, 92 Ill. App. 95; Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, 93 Ill. 458; Garlick v. James, 12 Johns. 146, 7 Am. Dec. 294.

There was no testimony introduced by defendant to sustain his allegation of fraud.

20 Cyc. 13; Hutchinson v. Gorman, 71 Ark. 305, 73 S. W. 793; Elwell v. Russell, 71 Conn. 462, 42 Atl. 862; Cooley v. King, 113 Ga. 1163, 39 S. E. 486; McFarland v. Carlsbad Sanatorium Co. 68 Or. 530, 137 Pac. 209, Ann Cas 1915C, 555; Raser v. Moomaw, 78 Wash. 653, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 707, 139 Pac. 622; Hutchason v. Spinks, 3

Cal. App. 291, 85 Pac. 132; American Nat. Bank v. Hammond, 25 Colo. 367, 55 Pac. 1090; King v. Howeth, 42 Okla. 178, 140 Pac. 1182; Connell v. El Paso Gold Min. & Mill. Co. 33 Colo. 30, 78 Pac. 677.

Pryor, C., filed the following opinion:

On the 8th day of October, 1914, the defendant in error, Blanche Horton, commenced an action in the district court of Bryan county against Norman Miller, plaintiff in error, to recover the sum of $190, alleged to be the balance due on a promissory note made by the plaintiff in error to the defendant in error. The parties will be referred to as they appeared in the court below.

The petition of the plaintiff in the court below alleged, in substance: That on the 20th day of September, 1912, the plaintiff and her husband, L. D. Horton, sold to the defendant, Norman Miller, lot 7 in block 134 in the city of Durant, Oklahoma, for the sum of $1,600, and in addition thereto the defendant was to assume a real estate mortgage on the lot at the time. The defendant paid the plaintiff and L. D. Horton $600 in cash and for the deferred payment made and delivered to the plaintiff and L. D. Horton his two promissory notes in the sum of $500 each; one due on the 20th day of September, 1913, and the other due on the 20th day of September, 1914. That the plaintiff retained a vendor's lien on the said lot as security for the payment of the said notes. That the first note was paid by the defendant when the same became due. That during the year 1913 the plaintiff and her husband delivered to the First National Bank of Idabel, Oklahoma, the last note as collateral security for the payment of a certain note in the sum of $435, given to said bank by Warren Phillips and L. D. Horton, and assigned the vendor's lien on said lot to said bank. That the sum of $50 had been paid on said note of Warren Phillips and L. D. Horton which the said First National Bank held. That on the 20th day of September, 1914, there was due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said note given to the plaintiff and L. D. Horton the sum of $380, and while the said bank held said note as collateral security, the defendant went to the First National Bank of Idabel, and paid the note of the said Warren Phillips and L. D. Horton, the sum due thereon at that time being $434.37, and secured from the said First National Bank the said note of Warren Phillips and L. D. Horton, and the note pledged with the said bank as collateral security, the same being the $500 note sued on, and the release of the vendor's lien which the plaintiff and L. D. Horton had delivered to the bank at the L.R.A.1918C.

time of negotiating the $435 loan. But at the time of taking up the said note and security by the defendant there was still due on the said $500 note the sum of $160.19 after giving the defendant credit for the $434.37 which he paid to the said First National Bank. That L. D. Horton, prior to this suit, assigned his interest in said note to plaintiff. The plaintiff asks in her petition judgment for the said $160.19, for the cancelation of the release of the vendor's lien delivered to the First National Bank by said plaintiff, and for a foreclosure of the vendor's lien.

The answer of the defendant alleges in substance that by reason of his transaction with the First National Bank of Idabel in taking up the said note of one Phillips and L. D. Horton in the sum of $434.37, and the bank delivering the said $500 note of the defendant to the plaintiff, and the release of the vendor's lien, that the defendant became the absolute owner of the note sued on in this action. He sets up a further defense, and asks damages in the sum of $104 against the plaintiff by reason of certain alleged fraud which he alleges to have been committed by the plaintiff against him in the original transaction, wherein he alleges the plaintiff represented to him that the lot had a mortgage against it in the sum of $750, bearing a low rate of interest, 6 per cent, which made said purchase a desirable proposition. It further alleges that it did not run the length of time represented by the defendant, and that he was compelled to pay said mortgage off in the year of 1912, and had to borrow the money for that purpose at a higher rate of interest.

When this cause came on for hearing there was a jury duly impaneled, but, after hearing the evidence and argument of counsel, the court directed a verdict for plaintiff and rendered judgment thereon, to which the defendant excepted, and prosecutes his appeal to this court for review.

The defendant urges two assignments of error, which may be briefly stated: First, that the court erred in overruling a motion of the defendant to quash depositions of the plaintiff; second, that the court erred in directing the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, which said verdict was contrary to the law and evidence.

The motion of the defendant to quash the depositions of H. C. Morris and Warren Phillips is as follows: "Comes now the defendant and moves the court to quash the depositions of Warren Phillips and H. C. Morris, taken on October 1, 1915, for the reason that they were not taken upon such notice and under procedure as was in such cases provided by law."

The specific complaint made on the hearing of said motion against the deposition was that the notice of taking said depositions did not give the defendant sufficient time to make preparation and attend the taking of the same. The records show that the notice was served on the defendant on the 25th day of September, 1915, by leaving a copy thereof at the residence of the defendant in the city of Durant, with the wife of defendant, and by mailing a copy thereof to J. M. Crook, the attorney of record, of the defendant. The records show that the said attorney received this notice on the 25th day of September, 1915, at Oklahoma City. The date fixed in said notice for the taking of said depositions was the 1st day of October, 1915, and the place, the town of Idabel, Oklahoma.

The statute prescribing the notice for the taking of depositions and the manner of service thereof is as follows: "5079. Prior to the taking of any deposition, unless taken under a special commission, a written notice, specifying the action or proceeding, the name of the court or tribunal in which it is to be used, and the time and place of taking the same, shall be served upon the adverse party, his agent or attorney of record, or left at his usual place of business or residence. The notice shall be served so as to allow the adverse party sufficient time, by the usual route of travel, to attend, and one day for preparation, exclusive of Sunday and the day of service; and the examination may, if so stated in the notice, be adjourned from day to day."

The evidence further shows that the attorneys for the plaintiff offered to agree with the attorney for the defendant that the depositions might be taken any time between the 1st and the 4th day of October, or any time that would not delay the trial of said cause, which was set for the 6th day of October, 1915. There seems to be no legal objection whatever to this notice; in fact, it appears that the notice is more liberal than the statute. Therefore the court committed no reversible error in refusing to quash the same upon motion of the defendant.

In regard to the second error urged by the plaintiff, that the court erred in directing the verdict, and that the verdict and judgment were contrary to the law and evidence, the defendant urges in his brief two propositions: the alleged fraud of the plaintiff in the purchase of said lot, and that he had discharged said note by the transaction he had with the bank. Upon careful examination of the evidence in the record it appears plainly that there is no evidence to support whatever allegations of fraud the answer contains. The evidence of the defendant in this regard simply shows that the representative of the plaintiff stated to the defendant that there was a mortgage on said lot bearing a low rate of interest, which made the purchase a desirable proposition. As to there being a mortgage on the place bearing a low rate of interest, this was true, and as to whether or not it was a desirable proposition is a mere matter of opinion, which does not constitute fraud. Further, the representative of the plaintiff, when negotiating with the defendant to sell him the lots, delivered to him a statement of the mortgage which showed the principal amount, interest paid, and the interest due and the interest to fall due, and the date when the mortgage would become due. This statement is entirely consistent with the representations complained of by defendant, and alone completely refutes the allegations of the answer as to fraudulent representations as to said mortgage. The defendant himself introduced this statement as his own evidence. It therefore conclusively appears from the record that no fraud whatever was established by the evidence of the defendant. The counterclaim of the defendant failed.

The next contention made by the defendant is that, when the defendant took up the note for $434.37 of Warren Phillips and L. D. Horton and the $500 note sued on in this action and the vendor's lien, the defendant became the absolute owner of said $500 note, and that there was no further liability of the defendant to plaintiff on said note; that said transaction was a complete discharge of said note. This question depends on whether or not, when any evidence of indebtedness, such as a promissory note, is pledged as collateral to secure the payment of the debt, the title passes from the owner of such evidence of indebtedness to the pledgee. The question seems to have been well settled that the mere pledging of a promissory note or other evidence of indebtedness as collateral security for the payment of a debt does not divest the pledgor of title and vest title in the pledgee. Averill Machinery Co. v. Bain, 50 Mont. 512, 148 Pac. 334; Garlick v. James, 12 Johns. 146, 7 Am. Dec. 294; Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, 93 Ill. 458; Halliday v. Bank of Stewart County, 112 Ga. 461, 37 S. E. 721. In the case of Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, supra, the supreme court of Illinois held: "On a pledge or pawn of personalty, the legal property does not pass as in the case of a mortgage with a condition of defeasance, but the general ownership remains with the pledgor, and only a special property passes to the pledgee."

In the case of Averill Machinery Co. v. Bain, supra, the court held: "The legal title to property pledged remains in the pledgeor. Legatt v. Palmer, 39 Mont. 302, 102 Pac. 327. The pledgee has a special property interest in the thing pledged; that is, he has a lien upon it which depends for its validity upon possession. Rairden v. Hedrick, 46 Mont. 510, 129 Pac. 498. When the principal debt is paid, the pledge is discharged (31 Cyc. 851), and the pledgeor is entitled to a return of the pledge."

As the pledgee does not hold the title to the thing pledged, it follows as a matter of course, unless he has a contract giving him authority to sell the same, he cannot do so.

When a person or corporation is holding a promissory note, commercial paper, or other evidence of debt as collateral security for the payment of a debt to him, he has only the authority to collect the same and apply it on the debt due him, and he cannot sell said collaterals and pass title thereto to the pretended purchaser. Joliet Iron & Steel Co. v. Scioto Fire Brick Co. 82 Ill. 548, 25 Am. Rep. 341; Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392; Powell v. Ong, 92 Ill. App. 95; Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, 93 Ill. 458. In the case of Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, supra, the supreme court of Illinois held: "There is a distinction between a pledge of ordinary chattels and a pledge of commercial paper. A pledge of the latter as collateral security for the payment of a debt does not, in the absence of a special power for that purpose, authorize the pledgee to sell the securities so pledged, upon default of payment, either at public or private sale. He is bound to hold and collect the same as they become due, and apply the net proceeds to the payment of the debt so secured."

In the case of Joliet Iron & Steel Co. v. Scioto Fire Brick Co. supra, the court said: "The pledge of commercial paper as collateral security for the payment of a debt does not, in the absence of a special power for that purpose, authorize the party to whom such paper is so pledged to sell the securities so pledged, upon default of payment, either at public or private sale. He is bound to hold and collect the same as it becomes due, and apply the net proceeds to the payment of the debt so secured. A person holding property or securities in pledge occupies the relation of trustee for the owner, and as such, in the absence of special power to do otherwise, is bound to proceed as a prudent owner would with his own. From the very nature of the case, property can only be applied as security through the process of sale. Not so with bonds, mortgages, or promissory notes."

Further, the statute (Revised Laws 1910, § 4519) forbids the sale of evidence of debts by the pledgee; said section being as follows: "A pledgee cannot sell any evidence of debts pledged to him, except the obligations of governments, states, or corporations; but he may collect the same when due."

The evidence of defendant shows that he had knowledge of the nature of the bank's interest in said note. As title to said note did not pass to the First National Bank when the plaintiff deposited the same with it as collateral security, and as the bank, under the law, had no authority to sell the same, title did not pass to the defendant when he took the same up and procured the possession thereof. He was liable to the plaintiff for the amount due thereon at the time of the commencement of the suit, and as the counterclaim of the defendant in the way of damages failed as above shown, all of the defenses of the defendant have failed. The court committed no prejudicial or reversible error in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Therefore the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied February 12, 1918.

Annotation—Right of pledgee of commercial paper to sell the same.

This note is supplemental to part of the note to Moses v. Grainger, 53 L.R.A. 857, 858. It will be observed that neither note is concerned with the right to transfer the collateral as an incident to a transfer of the principal obligation.

For pledgee's conversion of pledged property by invalid sale, see the note in 43 L.R.A. 737.

The ruling in MILLER v. HORTON, ante, 625, that, in the absence of special contract, the holder of commercial paper as collateral cannot separate it from the L.R.A.1918C.

debt by sale, is sustained by the authorities, as appears from the earlier note in 53 L.R.A. 858.

It will be observed that in MILLER v. HORTON, the action was by the pledgeor against the maker of the pledged note. In Powell v. Ong (1900) 92 Ill. App. 95, the facts were similar to those in the MILLER CASE, except that in the Powell Case the action was by the pledgeor against the pledgee. In the Powell Case the plaintiff gave the defendant his promissory note, and as collateral security a larger note of C, due at the same time, and after the notes came due the defendant turned them over to C on receipt of the amount due on the plaintiff's note. It was held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the value of C's note, less the amount of A's note. The court said: "The law is well settled in this state that 'a pledgee who holds commercial paper as collateral security for the payment of his debt has no authority, in the absence of a special power for that purpose, to sell securities upon default of payment, at public or private sale. He is bound to hold and collect the same as they become due, and apply the net proceeds to the payment of the debt so secured.'" The court quoted Story on Bailments, § 321, as follows: "The person holding commercial paper as collateral security for a debt due him has no right, unless, perhaps, in a very extreme case, to compromise with the parties to the security for a less sum than the sum due on the security, and if he does he will be compelled to account to the pledgeor for the full value;" and after referring to the case of the Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon (1879) 93 Ill. 458, discussed in the earlier note, said further: "In Colebrook on Collateral Securities, § 96, the rule is stated as follows: 'The pledgee of negotiable securities as collateral security is not permitted, in the absence of special agreement, in his dealings with the securities, to accept anything less in discharge or satisfaction of them from the parties bound than the face value of such paper. Any trade or compromise or rebate made by the pledgee with the maker or other parties to such collaterals, whereby the same are surrendered for less than the face value thereof, is a breach of the duty of the pledgee and is not sustained. Any arrangement whereby the securities are transferred for less than is due thereon to a party already bound for the full amount is a compromise, notwithstanding a power of sale has been given by the contract of pledge.' It is therefore apparent from the above authorities that appellant, by disposing of the collateral note to the maker thereof, rendered himself liable to appellee for any damages sustained by the latter, and it was immaterial whether there was any actual fraud or collusion on the part of appellant in the transaction. The measure of damages was prima facie the amount due on the collateral note, less the debt it was given to secure; and the burden of proving the amount to be less was upon the appellant."

L.R.A.1918C.

It may be doubted whether it was necessary, in order to sustain the decision in MILLER v. HORTON, to invoke the principle that the holder of commercial paper as collateral cannot sell the same (in the absence of a special power).

In State v. Castleton (1913) 255 Mo. 201, 164 S. W. 492, the court agrees with the rule announced in Richardson v. Ashby (1895) 132 Mo. 238, 33 S. W. 806, referred to in the earlier note, to the effect that the holder of commercial paper "as collateral for the payment of a debt cannot, in the absence of a special power for that purpose, sell the security so pledged upon default of payment of the debt, at public or private sale, with or without notice, as in the case of ordinary property, on timely notice, nor by order of court dispose of same." If he sells the same, he will be liable for a conversion.

In Le Banque D'Hochelaga v. Larue (1910) 3 Alberta L. R. 42, where a bank sued the defendant on his promissory note, and he counterclaimed on notes of a third party, amounting to the same sum, which he had pledged as collateral to the note sued on, and which the bank had turned over to the third party, it was held that the bank's claim was equaled by the counterclaim.

In Jenckes v. Rice (1903) 119 Iowa, 451, 93 N. W. 384, where a contract of indemnity deposited as collateral security with a bank was sold, the court said: "We are of the opinion that the sale of the collateral security by the bank did not vest the absolute title therein in the plaintiff. It is undoubtedly the rule that the pledgee of personal property in the shape of goods or merchandise or tangible chattels of any kind may sell the same, after default, upon proper notice to the pledgeor; but this rule has been quite generally held not to apply to choses in action or commercial paper, other than stocks and bonds, unless the contract so provides; and the reason for this exception is that such securities, not being usually marketable at their fair value, would generally be sold at a sacrifice, and an injustice would thus be done the debtor; and it cannot be presumed that it was the intention of the parties thus to deal with the securities."

In Peacock v. Phillips (1910) 247 Ill. 467, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 42, 93 N. E. 415, it was held that one who, with knowledge of the facts, purchases a note and mortgage held by a bank as collateral for a note of less amount, executed by one of the makers of the mortgage, at a sale by the bank in accordance with the contract, upon default in payment of its note at maturity, can enforce the collateral note and mortgage securing it only to the extent of the amount due on the obligation for which it stood as collateral. See also note to this case in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 42.

The following quotations are of interest in connection with the subject:

"It is elementary that, when a collateral note has been indorsed and delivered, the pledgee is the legal owner of it to the extent of the debt, and the pledgeors are owners of the remainder, and that the pledgee is entitled to collect the note, and must use diligence to do so." Baldwin v. Jordan (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 171 S. W. 1016.

"Where a note has been transferred as collateral security for a debt less than the amount of said note, the payee is still the equitable owner of said note to the amount of the excess over the debt for which the note had been transferred as collateral." Thomson v. Findlater Hardware Co. (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 301.

"It is too well settled to require citation of authority that the holder of a note, given as collateral security for a debt due him, can sue the maker and recover upon such collateral security, and that a judgment against the principal debtor and against the maker of the note assigned as collateral security can be recovered in the same action, even though such collateral security exceeded in amount the debt it was assigned to secure, the excess, after the payment of the principal indebtedness, inuring to the benefit of him who assigned the note as collateral." Forty-Acre Spring Live Stock Co. v. West Texas Bank & T. Co. (1908) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 111 S. W. 417.

But a pledgeor, after acquiescing in the delivery by the pledgee to the maker of notes pledged as collateral, may not tender the amount of his debt to the pledgee and demand the collateral. First Nat. Bank v. Seaward (1916) 78 Or. 567, 152 Pac. 883.

While the statute of California forbids a pledgee from selling any evidence of debt pledged to him, and limits his right to collect the same when due, and he has no right to sell a note transferred to him as collateral, and an unauthorized sale would be a conversion as to the pledgeor, this statute is for the benefit of the pledgeor, and the maker of the note, when he is not prejudiced by its sale, cannot be heard to complain. Woolf v. Clarke (1911) 17 Cal. App. 696, 121 Pac. 407.

B. B. B.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

JULIUS BLUM, Respt.,
v.

W. H. ROWE, Impleaded, etc., Appt.,

(— Wash. —, 168 Pac. 781.)

Receivers — right of simple contract creditor.

A simple contract creditor without lien on any specific property of his debtor is not entitled to the appointment of a receiver for an individual debtor's property on the ground that the debtor is insolvent and will dissipate and squander his property.

For other cases, see Receivers, l. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 12, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendant Rowe from an order of the Superior Court for King County appointing a receiver as to him individually in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due from defendants for work and labor performed and money expended at their request and for their benefit. Reversed.

Note. — As to right of a simple contract creditor to the appointment of a receiver of the property of his individual or firm debtor, see annotation following this case, post, 632, and references therein to annotation on collateral points.
L.R.A.1918C.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. P. Whiting, for appellant:

The affidavit alleges no sufficient ground upon which to rest the appointment of a receiver as against any of the defendants.

Henderson v. Reynolds, 168 Ind. 522, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 960, 81 N. E. 494, 11 Ann. Cas. 977; Thompson v. Adams, 60 W. Va. 463, 55 S. E. 668; Uhl v. Dillon, 10 Md. 500, 69 Am. Dec. 172; Walker v. Zorn, 50 Ga. 371; Spokane v. Amsterdamsch Trustees Kantoor, 18 Wash. 81, 50 Pac. 1088; Norfor v. Busby, 19 Wash. 450, 36 Pac. 715; Balfour-Guthrie Invest. Co. v. Geiger, 20 Wash. 579, 56 Pac. 370; 34 Cyc. 37.

Messrs. Jay C. Allen and Philip Tindall, for respondent:

Plaintiff's case calls for the exercise by the court of the discretion conferred upon it by the statute relative to the appointment of receivers, which authorizes the appointment of a receiver "when, in the discretion of the court, it may be necessary to secure ample justice to the parties."

Spute v. Spute, 74 Wash. 665, 134 Pac. 175; Davis v. Edwards, 41 Wash. 483, 84 Pac. 22; Euphrat v. Morrison, 39 Wash. 311, 81 Pac. 695.

Webster, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $310, alleged to be due him from the defendants and each of them for work and labor performed and money expended at their special instance and request and for their benefit. In addition, it is alleged that the defendants are insolvent, and unless a receiver is appointed to take charge of their property, certain mining claims which they hold under a lease will be lost by failure of the defendants to keep the leases in force, and other assets belonging to them will be dissipated and squandered. The prayer is for a money judgment for the amount mentioned, and that a receiver pendente lite be appointed to take charge of and manage the property and assets of the defendants, subject to the direction of the court. The application for a receiver was denied as to the defendant corporations, but granted as to the individual defendant, W. H. Rowe, and a receiver was ordered to take charge of the mining claims and certain personal property used in connection with them until the further order of the court. The defendant Rowe appeals.

The question for determination is, can a simple contract creditor whose claim has not been reduced to judgment, and who is not asserting a lien against any specific property, maintain an action for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of and manage the property of an individual debtor, upon an allegation of insolvency and that the debtor is about to lose or squander his property? In the recent case of Grays Harbor Commercial Co. v. Fifer, 97 Wash. 380, 166 Pac. 770, this court held that, "in an application for the appointment of a receiver, the plaintiff must show (1) Either that he has a clear right to the property itself, that he has some lien upon it, or that the property constitutes a special fund to which he has a right to resort for the satisfaction of his claim; and (2) that the possession of the property by defendant was obtained by fraud, or that the property itself, or the income arising from it, is in danger of loss from neglect, waste, misconduct, or insolvency. . . . Until a creditor has obtained a judgment at law for his demand against the debtor, and the return of an execution unsatisfied, an action in equity will not lie to reach assets and apply them to the payment of a moneyed demand arising upon a contract, express or implied. Allegations of insolvency do not change this rule."

In that case, as in this, the defendant, for whose property the receiver was appointed, was an individual, and not a corporation, and consequently the rule announced in Oleson v. Bank of Tacoma, 15 Wash. 148, 45 Pac. 734; New York Nat. Exch. Bank v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 28 Wash. 553, 68 Pac. 905; and Davis v. Edwards, 41 Wash. 480, 84 Pac. 22, has no application. In those cases it was held that subdivision 5 of § 741, Rem. & Bal. Code, in express terms and in language capable of but one interpretation, provides that a creditor has only to establish the fact that he is such, and that the corporation of which he is a creditor is insolvent, to make it the duty of the proper court to appoint a receiver to take possession of the property of the corporation and close up its affairs. With respect to corporations the statute provides: "A receiver may be appointed by the court in the following cases: . . . (5) when a corporation has been dissolved or is insolvent, or is in imminent danger of insolvency, or has forfeited its corporate rights."

It seems plain under this language, and the court so held, that the right to the appointment of a receiver in such cases is made to depend solely upon the character of the defendant and the status of its affairs, and not upon the nature of the plaintiff's claim. We have no similar statute relating to appointment of receivers for individual, as distinguished from corporate, debtors, and must therefore look to the general law upon the subject.

In High on Receivers, 4th ed. § 406, the rule as to the right to maintain an action for the purpose of putting a receiver upon the property of a debtor is in conformity with our holding in the Fifer Case, supra, and is in this language: "Having already shown that the aid of a receiver is extended only in behalf of creditors who have fully exhausted their remedy at law, it follows necessarily that the jurisdiction will not be exercised in favor of mere general creditors, whose rights rest only in contract, and are not yet reduced to judgment, and who have acquired no lien upon the property of the debtor. Courts of equity will not permit any interference with the right of a debtor to control his own property, at the suit of creditors who have acquired no lien thereon, and whatever embarrassment the creditor may experience by reason of the slow procedure of the courts of law must be remedied by legislative, and not by judicial, authority. And while there are a few instances where the courts have maintained a contrary doctrine, the great weight of authority supports the rule that, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, a general contract creditor, before judgment, is not entitled either to an injunction or a receiver against his debtor, upon whose property he has acquired no lien. Any interference with the debtor's property, or with his right of disposing of it before judgment, is beyond the judicial power, and courts of equity will not extend their extraordinary jurisdiction beyond the limits fixed by the authorities."

"The reason of the rule seems to be that, until the creditor has established his title, he has no right to interfere, and it would lead to an unnecessary, and perhaps a fruitless and oppressive, interruption of the exercise of the debtor's rights. Unless he has a certain claim upon the debtor, he has no concern with his frauds." Chancellor Kent in Wiggins v. Armstrong, 2 Johns. Ch. 144.

We conclude that the action of the court in appointing the receiver was erroneous, and the order is reversed.

Ellis, Ch. J., and Main, Morris, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Right of simple contract creditor to the appointment of a receiver of the property of his individual or firm debtor.

Scope.

The principles underlying many of the decisions cited in the present note are fully discussed in the note to Ziska v. Ziska, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1, on the question of conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors.

In BLUM v. ROWE, ante, 630, the court makes a distinction, as regards the right of a creditor to a receiver of the property of the debtor, between cases where the debtor is an individual and where it is a corporation. In other cases, for example, Coquard v. National Linseed Oil Co. (1898) 171 Ill. 480, 49 N. E. 563, it is stated that courts of chancery have no general power to appoint receivers of corporations, and can appoint them only where expressly authorized by statute. And in High on Receivers, § 289, it is said that, "when the jurisdiction of courts of equity has been extended by legislation to the appointment of receivers over incorporated companies, the power thus conferred is treated by the courts as a delegated authority, the exercise of which requires the most careful consideration. The effect of appointing a receiver being to take the property of the corporation out of the control of its own officers, to whom it has been intrusted by its stockholders, the courts proceed with extreme caution in the exercise of so summary a power. And in construing such statutes, they are inclined to give them a strict construction, and require the prescribed method of obtaining jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter to be strictly followed."

It has seemed best, therefore, to confine the note to the question of the right of a simple contract creditor of an individual or a partnership to the appointment of a receiver for the property of the debtor, and to exclude, in general, L.R.A.1918C.

cases where the debtor was a corporation, even though some cases of the latter class are apparently decided on grounds not peculiar to that class of cases. This is true, for instance, of such cases as Nesbit v. North Georgia Electric Co. (1907) 156 Fed. 979; Dodge v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co. (1882) 69 Ga. 665 (the court stating the rule broadly that creditors without lien or title or some interest in the debtor's property who have not reduced their claims to judgment, have, as a general rule, no right to invoke interference by an injunction and the appointment of a receiver; the debtor being, however, in this instance, a corporation); Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. (1906) 126 Ga. 50, 54 S. E. 929 (the general rule being laid down that ordinarily a creditor by note, without judgment or lien, is not entitled to an interlocutory injunction and the appointment of a receiver for the debtor's property; the debtor in this instance also being apparently a corporation); Adee v. Bigler (1880) 81 N. Y. 349; Wiedemann Brewing Co. v. Herman (1913) 20 Ohio C. C. N. S. 187.

Consultation of the notes to Exchange Bank v. Bailey, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1032, and Feess v. Mechanics' State Bank, L.R.A.1915A, 606, on the question of the inherent jurisdiction of equity independently of statute, at the instance of stockholders to appoint a receiver or wind up a corporation because of mismanagement or fraud of its officers, will be found helpful on the general question as to the power of equity to appoint a receiver for a corporation.

As to the question whether a judgment creditor must exhaust his remedies at law as a condition of the right to a receiver, see note to Minkler v. United States Sheep Co. 33 L.R.A. 546.

Rule in general.

BLUM v. ROWE, ante, 630, is in accord with the general rule laid down in many cases, that a simple contract creditor of an individual or a partnership, with no lien on the debtor's property, is not ordinarily, in the absence of statute, entitled to the appointment of a receiver therefor, although the grounds for such appointment might otherwise be sufficient, such as insolvency, waste, or threatened removal or concealment of the property. The following cases apply, or at least recognize this rule:

Fed.—Cates v. Allen (1892) 149 U. S. 451, 37 L. ed. 804, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 977; Viquesney v. Allen (1904) 65 C. C. A. 259, 131 Fed. 21; Maxwell v. McDaniels (1910) 106 C. C. A. 453, 184 Fed. 311.

Cal.—Ibbetson v. Peairson (1907) 7 Cal. App. 261, 94 Pac. 252 (holding a lessor who had no lien on the crop, but rented for cash payable in instalments, not entitled to a receiver, on failure to pay rent, to care for growing crops of the tenant, who was alleged to be insolvent).

Ga.—Walker v. Zorn (1873) 50 Ga. 370; Johnson v. Farnum (1876) 56 Ga. 144; Collins v. Myers (1882) 68 Ga. 530.

Ill.—Bigelow v. Andress (1863) 31 Ill. 322 (applying the broad doctrine that the complainant must first establish his claim at law before a court of equity will lend its aid, the reason being that such a court does not assume jurisdiction to settle and establish purely legal rights).

Ind.—May v. Greenhill (1881) 80 Ind. 124; Steele v. Aspy (1891) 128 Ind. 367, 27 N. E. 739; State v. Union Nat. Bank (1896) 145 Ind. 537, 57 Am. St. Rep. 209, 44 N. E. 585 (holding that the appointment of a receiver of an individual debtor at the instance of one holding a chattel mortgage on part of the debtor's property, but having no judgment or other general lien against the debtor, could be only for the property covered by the lien of the mortgage).

Iowa.—Clark v. Raymond (1892) 84 Iowa, 251, 50 N. W. 1068 (holding that a creditor without lien or judgment, who attached, as the property of the debtor, land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by him, and garnished the grantees and lessees of the land, could not by petition in the nature of a creditors' bill, on the ground of the insolvency of the debtor and garnishees, obtain the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the land and lease it L.R.A.1918C.

pending the litigation. A later appeal in this case is reported in (1892) 86 Iowa, 661, 53 N. W. 354, where, after recovery of judgment in the action at law, it was held that a receiver should not be appointed, the insolvency of the fraudulent grantees not being established).

Md.—Uhl v. Dillon (1857) 10 Md. 500, 69 Am. Dec. 172; Blondheim v. Moore (1857) 11 Md. 365; Hubbard v. Hubbard (1859) 14 Md. 356; Rich v. Levy (1860) 16 Md. 74; Morton v. Graffin (1888) 68 Md. 545, 13 Atl. 341, 15 Atl. 298.

Mo.—Batchelder v. Altheimer (1881) 10 Mo. App. 181 (recognizing the general rule that a simple contract creditor has no right to an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, but holding that the rule did not apply to creditors of an insolvent limited partnership; see this case under "Limited partnerships," infra).

N. J.—Young v. Frier (1853) 9 N. J. Eq. 465 (holding that creditors at large of a firm could not maintain a suit against the members of the firm, and judgment and execution creditors thereof, to declare void the judgments as fraudulent, and enjoin a sale under the executions, and to obtain appointment of a receiver).

N. Y.—O'Mahoney v. Belmont (1875) 62 N. Y. 133; Greenwood v. Brodhead (1850) 8 Barb. 593; Mitchell v. Bettman (1857) 25 Barb. 408 (recognizing common-law rule); Bayaud v. Fellows (1858) 28 Barb. 451; Hardt v. Levy (1893) 72 Hun, 225, 25 N. Y. Supp. 248; Veit v. Collins (1902) 39 Misc. 39, 78 N. Y. Supp. 763.

N. D.—Golden Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Johnstone (1910) 21 N. D. 101, 128 N. W. 691, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 631.

Ohio.—Hulse v. Wright (1832) Wright, 61 (holding that an injunction and a receiver of an individual debtor would not be granted at the instance of a general creditor who had sold him goods on time not yet expired, on the ground that the debtor was in failing circumstances, and was conducting his business in a ruinous manner, and was threatening an assignment of his property to pay or secure certain confidential creditors); Bell v. Miller (1891) 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 163.

Philippine.—Molina y Salvador v. De La Riva (1907) 7 Philippine, 302; Strong v. Van Buskirk-Crook Co. (1908) 10 Philippine, 190.

S. C.—Pelzer v. Hughes (1887) 27 S. C. 409, 3 S. E. 781; Whilden v. Chap-

man (1908) 80 S. C. 84, 61 S. E. 249 (intimations in accord with above rule).

Tex.—Carter Bros. v. Hightower (1890) 79 Tex. 135, 15 S. W. 223; Waples-Platter Co. v. Mitchell (1895) 12 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 35 S. W. 200; Cahn v. Johnson (1896) 12 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 33 S. W. 1000; Boone v. First Nat. Bank (1897) 17 Tex. Civ. App. 365, 43 S. W. 594; Holloway v. Shuttles (1899) 21 Tex. Civ. App. 188, 51 S. W. 293.

Wash.—Grays Harbor Commercial Co. v. Fifer (1917) 97 Wash. 380, 166 Pac. 770 (see quotation from this case in BLUM v. ROWE, ante, 630).

W. Va.—Thompson v. Adams (1906) 60 W. Va. 463, 55 S. E. 668 (holding that a simple contract creditor is not entitled to appointment of a receiver to take charge of debtor's property on the ground of waste or misappropriation thereof).

The courts, in assigning reasons for the above rule, have for the most part followed the general principles considered in the note to Ziska v. Ziska, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1, on the question of conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors. Consideration of that note will be helpful in this connection. The following quotation concisely indicates the reasons frequently given for the rule: "As a general rule, in the absence of special circumstances showing the necessity for placing the property in the custody of the court, a court of equity will not appoint a receiver when the party seeking relief has an adequate and complete remedy at law. . . . The power to appoint a receiver is never exercised if any other safe and expedient remedy can be used. . . . A receiver will not be appointed if garnishment, execution, and attachment will enable the creditor to reach the property sought." Grays Harbor Commercial Co. v. Fifer (1917) 97 Wash. 380, 166 Pac. 770.

The rule applies to debts not due as well as to those past due. Johnson v. Farnum (1876) 56 Ga. 144.

And it was said in Batchelder v. Altheimer (1881) 10 Mo. App. 181, that whether the debt was due or not was immaterial as regards the well-established general rule that a simple contract creditor is not entitled to an injunction and the appointment of a receiver.

The application of the rule under various circumstances in a number of the cases cited above is here shown.

A plaintiff in ejectment was held, in Walker v. Zorn (1873) 50 Ga. 370, not entitled to the appointment of a receiver to take charge of certain crops on L.R.A.1918C.

the premises, to secure the recovery of mesne profits, pending the trial, on the ground of the insolvency of the defendant, since he had no lien on the crop and stood in no better position than any other creditor.

So in Golden Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Johnstone (1910) 21 N. D. 101, 128 N. W. 691, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 631, it was held that a vendor under an executory contract for the sale of land, who had no lien on the crop raised by the vendee in possession, was not entitled to a receiver to take possession of the crop so raised after its severance, for the purpose of subjecting it to his claim for the value of the use and occupation of the premises after forfeiture by the vendee of his contract of purchase, although the vendee was insolvent.

And it was held erroneous in Uhl v. Dillon (1857) 10 Md. 500, 69 Am. Dec. 172, to grant an injunction and appoint a receiver on a bill alleging that the defendant had purchased a large amount of stock from the complainants, payments for which were due and unpaid; that he was engaged in disposing of the stock, had already sold his real estate and received the money therefor, and was collecting the debts due him and secreting the same, with intent to defraud the complainant and other creditors; that the complainants were informed and believed that, as soon as he was able to complete the sales and collect said debts, he intended to abscond for the purpose of injuring, delaying, and defrauding creditors; and praying for the appointment of a receiver and an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling or disposing of his property or collecting the debts due him. The court said: "Whatever may be the supposed defects of the existing laws of the state in leaving to the debtor the absolute power of disposing of his property, and leaving the creditor to the slow and very inadequate legal remedies now provided, if such defects exist it is solely in the power of the legislature to correct them. It is not within the province of the chancery courts to stretch their power beyond the limits of the authorities of the law, for the purpose of remedying such defects. Such a course would be productive of great mischief, and make the rights of the citizen depend upon the vague and uncertain discretion of the judges, instead of the safe and well-defined rules of law."

To a similar effect is Hubbard v. Hubbard (1859) 14 Md. 356, holding that the granting of an injunction to restrain an individual debtor from collecting or assigning any debt due him, and from disposing of his property, and the appointing of a receiver, were not warranted on allegations that the defendant was indebted to the complainant in a certain sum, payment of which was refused; that the complainant was informed and believed that the defendant was collecting the debts due him with a view to removal for the purpose of defrauding creditors; and that he feared and believed that it was the purpose of the defendant to perpetrate a fraud on him by placing the property beyond his reach before he could obtain a judgment.

A similar conclusion was reached also in Rich v. Levy (1860) 16 Md. 74, in which it was held that the granting of an injunction and the appointing of a receiver were not warranted on a bill filed by a simple contract creditor alleging that the debtor was insolvent, was selling her goods and applying the proceeds to her own use and the use of others without consideration, and thus, and in other ways, was wasting her resources; that she was sending large quantities of her goods beyond the reach of creditors; and that the complainant had begun suit against her, but would be unable to obtain judgment and execution before she had wholly wasted her assets.

In Steele v. Aspy (1891) 128 Ind. 367, 27 N. E. 739, it was held that allegations in a complaint by an unpaid seller of a stock of goods, that the purchaser was insolvent and was selling the goods and applying the proceeds to his own use in violation of the contract of sale, were insufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver for the property of the debtor, where the title to the property sold had passed; the court saying that to authorize the interposition of the court by the appointment of a receiver, it was essential that the complainant should show either that he had a clear legal right to the property, or that he had some lien upon or right in it, or that it constituted a special fund out of which he was entitled to satisfaction of his demand.

A creditor is not entitled to have money due to his debtor collected and disposed of by a receiver merely because judgment creditors of the debtor might claim the money if brought into court by a garnishment proceeding; for such creditors would have an equal right to intervene in the equity case and claim the money in the hands of the receiver, L.R.A.1918C.

if one should be appointed. Bush v. Mattox (1900) 110 Ga. 472, 35 S. E. 640.

And the fact that one of the partners of an insolvent firm sold his interest in the partnership to a third party to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and that the purchaser was aware of the fraud, and formed a partnership with the remaining partner, was held, in Waples-Platter Co. v. Mitchell (1895) 12 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 35 S. W. 200, not to entitle a general creditor who had no lien on the partnership assets to the appointment of a receiver therefor.

In Whilden v. Chapman (1908) 80 S. C. 84, 61 S. E. 249, the court said: "We think the appellants are right in the position that a creditor of a copartnership, in order to maintain an action for the appointment of a receiver of partnership assets, must show he has no adequate remedy at law; that is, that he cannot enforce payment of his debt by judgment and execution. It is therefore necessary for him to allege and prove not only the insolvency of the partnership as such, but the insolvency of the copartners as individuals. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether creditors who have no liens, and have not obtained a return of nulla bona on their executions, are entitled to the appointment of a receiver of partnership assets, even on proof of insolvency of the partnership and the individuals composing it, except where the assignment act applies."

The complaint of the creditors in this case does not allege the insolvency of the members of the firm, and for that reason, if no other, the injunction and the appointment of a receiver could not be sustained on the complaint alone."

Such cases as Rhodes v. Cousins (1828) 6 Rand. (Va.) 188, 18 Am. Dec. 715, lay down a rule apparently broad enough to prevent a simple contract creditor from obtaining the appointment of a receiver, although the prayer was for an injunction or other equitable relief, and it is not clear that a receivership was sought. In this case the court said: "It is well-settled law that none but a judgment creditor can have the assistance of equity to control, prevent, or interfere with, in any way, the disposition which a debtor may choose to make of his property. He may destroy it, give it away, convey it fraudulently, or sell it and waste the money, and no creditor at law can stop him by injunction. A creditor must have proceeded as far as he can at law. If he means to affect the land, he must have a judgment, and take his elegit. If the personalty, there must be judgment and execution issued; and he must show in his bill that he has done this, or it may be demurred to." And to the general effect that a creditor who has no lien and has not reduced his claim to judgment has ordinarily no standing in equity to interfere with the property, see Crippen v. Hudson (1855) 13 N. Y. 161; Reubens v. Joel (1856) 13 N. Y. 488, disapproving Mott v. Dunn (1854) 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 225, contra; Holdrege v. Gwynne (1866) 18 N. J. Eq. 26; and Wiggins v. Armstrong (1816) 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 144. In the latter case the court, in holding that a simple contract creditor was not entitled to an injunction to control disposition of the debtor's property on the ground of fraud, stated that "the reason of the rule seems to be that, until the creditor has established his title, he has no right to interfere, and it would lead to an unnecessary and, perhaps, a fruitless and oppressive interruption of the exercise of the debtor's rights. Unless he has a certain claim upon the debtor, he has no concern with his frauds."

Exceptions.

Although, as shown above, the general rule is opposed to the appointment of a receiver of the debtor's property at the instance of a simple contract creditor, there are a few cases in which, under exceptional circumstances, the rule has not been applied. It will be observed that the court in the majority of these cases apparently considered that the property under the particular circumstances was a trust, or quasi trust, fund for creditors, or that, on account of fraud, it never in equity passed from the complainant, who had sold it to the debtor.

Thus, in Cohen v. Meyers (1871) 42 Ga. 46, it was held not erroneous to appoint a receiver for a stock of goods purchased from complainants and alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by the debtor to a third party, who was selling them as his own, where the insolvency of the debtor was admitted and it was alleged that the transfer was made for the purpose, on the part of both the debtor and the third party, of defrauding the complainants and other creditors. The court recognized the general rule that a general creditor cannot ask the preventive aid of a court of equity before he obtains a judgment; but stated that there were facts alleged which if true gave the creditors in this instance a peculiar equity; that it was charged that the debtor purchased the goods with intent to defraud the complainants, that he never intended to pay for them, and that the third party knew thereof and acted accordingly with the avowed purpose of making money out of the transaction; and that if the debtor was in complicity with the third party before the goods were purchased, or if the latter knew when he obtained the goods that the debtor had this intent, the case would be entirely out of the rule referred to; that in that case the goods, in equity, never belonged to the debtor, and a court of equity had jurisdiction. To a somewhat similar effect are Wachtel v. Wilde (1877) 58 Ga. 50, and Cohen v. Morris (1883) 70 Ga. 313.

And Cohen v. Meyers (Ga.) supra, was followed in Wolfe v. Clafin (1888) 81 Ga. 64, 6 S. E. 599, in which the court said: "As a general rule, a party must pursue his legal remedies to their available extent before he can apply to a court of equity for relief; but this rule is subject to some exceptions. Where a party shows that his rights are imperiled and he is in danger of losing them; that he had sold goods to the defendant upon the faith of the latter's representations, which were false and fraudulent, and afterward rescinded the contract and claimed the goods as his own; and that the defendant had given certain mortgages on the goods to persons residing in another state,—we think this makes out such a case as falls within the ruling in the case of Cohen v. Meyers (Ga.) supra. In that case this court held that a creditor, although not a judgment creditor, might under certain circumstances resort to equity." And it was held in the Wolfe Case that it was not erroneous to appoint a receiver under the circumstances indicated, especially where, in view of the fact that the complainants were required to give bond for all damages that might be sustained in consequence of the proceedings, it did not appear that the defendants would be prejudiced by the appointment of a receiver.

And where a creditor who held notes of the debtor firm containing waiver of homestead and exemption rights had no remedy at law because of proceedings of the firm in bankruptcy, in which personal property, partly of a perishable nature, was set aside to one of the partners, it was held that the creditor's remedy was in equity for a judgment in rem against the exempted property, and that the court was authorized to appoint a receiver therefor pending recovery of the judgment, under a statute providing that a court of equity may appoint a receiver to take possession of and hold, subject to the direction of the court, any assets charged with the payment of debts, where there is manifest danger of loss or destruction or material injury to those interested. Bell v. Dawson Grocery Co. (1904) 120 Ga. 628, 48 S. E. 150.

It was held in Sanford v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1902) 116 Ga. 689, 43 S. E. 61, that a cause for equitable relief was shown by a petition filed by the surety of a tax collector, alleging that the principal had committed a breach of his bond by a failure to pay over to the state and county large sums of money which he had collected; that he was insolvent and was disposing of his personal property so as to avoid the liens created by the statute thereon; and praying for an injunction against the principal to prevent his disposing of his property and for the appointment of a receiver therefor.

—death of debtor.

In this connection, see V. g, of note to Ziska v. Ziska, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) p. 92.

The fact that the creditor's claim was not a lien on the debtor's property, and had not been reduced to judgment, has been held in several cases not to prevent his obtaining the appointment of a receiver after the debtor's death.

Thus, in a proceeding in the nature of a creditors' bill instituted by an executor for the settlement of the estate, praying that the creditors of the estate should be called in and enjoined from suing him at law as executor, it was held, in Harmon v. Wagener (1890) 33 S. C. 487, 12 S. E. 98, that a receiver of the personal property of the testatrix might be appointed at the instance of a creditor, on the ground of the insolvency of the executor and his misapplication and waste of the assets, without recovery by the creditor of a judgment and a return on execution of nulla bona. The court said: "It was urged that the judge had no jurisdiction to grant equitable relief, including the appointment of a receiver, for the reason that the creditors had not first exhausted their legal remedies, which could only be shown by proof of an execution obtained on the law side of the court, with a return upon it of nulla bona, which was not shown. There is such a doctrine as applicable to cases inter vivos, but, as we understand it, the rule of evidence has no application to a 'creditors' bill,' to marshal the assets of the estate of a deceased debtor. It is quite clear that a creditor may file what is known as a 'creditors' bill' against the executor of his dead debtor, to make him account for the estate in his hands, without having first obtained a judgment upon the law side of the court, and procured upon it a return of nulla bona."

And in Byrne v. First Nat. Bank (1899) 20 Tex. Civ. App. 194, 49 S. W. 706, it was contended that a receiver should not have been appointed to take possession of the assets of a partnership on the ground that the surviving partner was colluding with a third party to defraud the creditors and was wasting the property, since the plaintiffs were merely simple contract creditors without lien on the property. But the court said: "It is, as contended by appellants, generally true that receivers are appointed only at the suit of the judgment creditors or creditors who have an express lien on the property of their debtor; but this, as will be seen from cases cited further on, is not universally so. While courts of equity rarely take from the possession and control of the owner his property at the suit of a creditor who neither has an express lien upon the property nor whose debt is not evidenced by a judgment against the debtor, it is believed that where the debt is due from a partnership, and the partnership has been dissolved by the death of one of the partners, and the partnership property is in the possession and control of the surviving partner or partners, courts of equity treat the property as a trust fund in which the creditors have an equitable or quasi lien, and for misconduct of the surviving partner, who is a trustee, the creditors may have the property placed in the hands of a receiver and the business of the dissolved partnership wound up under the supervision of the court. In this case the defendant . . . was charged with colluding with . . . [a third party] to defraud the creditors of himself and his deceased partner. He was also charged with wasting the assets of the firm. These allegations, it would seem, if true, are ample to authorize the appointment of a receiver."

—limited partnerships; distinction as to general partnerships.

It is held in New York that general creditors of an insolvent limited partnership may sue in equity, on behalf of themselves and all other creditors of the firm, for the appointment of a receiver and the ratable distribution of the assets of the partnership, the decisions being based apparently on the ground that under the statute the assets are, after insolvency, a trust fund for the benefit of all the creditors. Innes v. Lansing (1839) 7 Paige (N. Y.) 583; Hardt v. Levy (1893) 72 Hun, 225, 25 N. Y. Supp. 248; Gray v. Levy (1894) 75 Hun, 96, 26 N. Y. Supp. 861; Whitcomb v. Fowle (1879) 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 295; La Cliaise v. Lord (1855) 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 461; Levy v. Ely (1858) 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 395; Jackson v. Sheldon (1859) 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 127; White-wright v. Stimpson (1848) 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 379.

So a simple contract creditor of an insolvent limited partnership was held, in Batchelder v. Altheimer (1881) 10 Mo. App. 181, entitled to maintain a suit for the appointment of a receiver of the firm to collect, protect, and distribute the assets as a trust fund for all the creditors, on the ground that the partners were secreting its effects and giving preferences, under a statute providing that, if the partnership became insolvent, no special partner should be paid as a creditor of the firm or receive the benefit of any lien in his favor as such, until the other creditors of the firm were satisfied, and that no sale or change of the effects of the firm or any member thereof, made for the purpose of giving a preference or priority to a creditor, should be valid against creditors, if made when the firm was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency. The court relied largely upon the reasoning in the New York cases to the effect that, under the somewhat similar statute of the latter state, the assets of a limited partnership constitute a trust fund from the time of insolvency of the firm, or at least from the time the aid of a court of chancery is invoked.

The doctrine of the above New York cases was applied in Dillon v. Horn (1850) 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35, to the case of a general partnership where the indebtedness was conceded, the court taking the view that the doctrine of a trust fund of the assets for the benefit of creditors, after insolvency of the firm, applied both to limited and general partnerships.

And in Mott v. Dunn (1854) 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 225, it was held that a simple contract creditor of an insolvent partnership might maintain a suit to set aside an assignment of the assets on the ground of fraud, and to obtain a receiver, where the insolvency of the partnership and of the individual partners and the debt were admitted. But this case seems to be overruled by Reubens v. Joel (1856) 13 N. Y. 488.

And in Hardt v. Levy (1893) 72 Hun, L.R.A.1918C.

225, 25 N. Y. Supp. 248, it was held that a suit in equity by general creditors against the members of a general partnership, on behalf of all the creditors, for the appointment of a receiver and the ratable distribution of the assets, could not be maintained, although it might be if the firm was a limited partnership and insolvent. And to the same effect is Gray v. Levy (1894) 75 Hun, 96, 26 N. Y. Supp. 861.

And it was held in La Cliaise v. Lord (1855) 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 461, that the doctrine that a general creditor of a limited partnership which was insolvent might obtain a receiver therefor did not apply where the receiver was not sought for the benefit of all the creditors, but solely for the benefit of the complainant, and the indebtedness was not admitted and could be determined only after protracted litigation.

—insolvency of assignee.

Where the assignee to whom debtors in failing circumstances had made an assignment to pay debts and secure him as their indorser was insolvent, it was held that a receiver should be appointed on a bill filed by creditors on their own behalf and on behalf of all others in the same situation. Haggarty v. Pittman (1828) 1 Paige (N. Y.) 298, 19 Am. Dec. 434. The court said: "This court will never for a moment sanction the idea that debtors in failing circumstances shall be permitted to put their creditors in the power of an insolvent assignee by a voluntary assignment of their property to him, although it is expressed to be for the payment of their debts, or for his indemnity against prior responsibilities. They may lawfully prefer one creditor to another, and indemnify their sureties in preference to either; but they have no equitable right to jeopardize the honest claims of any by assigning their property to trustees who are irresponsible. And the proper course for this court, in such cases, is to appoint a receiver on the application of the parties for whose benefit the fund is assigned."

Statutes.

A statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver when, in the discretion of the court, it might be necessary to secure ample justice to the parties, was held, in Grays Harbor Commercial Co. v. Fifer (1917) 97 Wash. 380, 166 Pac. 770, not to authorize the appointment of a receiver of a firm at the instance of a simple contract creditor, since it did not appear that the creditor did not have an adequate remedy at law.

And a statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver in an action "by a creditor to subject any property or fund to his claim," when it is shown that the property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, was held, in Carter Bros. v. Hightower (1890) 79 Tex. 135, 15 S. W. 223, to refer to creditors having a lien on the debtor's property, and not to entitle a creditor in an action merely on an account to obtain a receiver of the debtor's property. It was said: "We think this statute, notwithstanding the broad terms in which it is couched, is not to be construed as applying to every case in which a creditor seeks to secure the satisfaction of a debt, and in which there is danger that the funds or property belonging to the debtor will be lost or destroyed. Such a construction would allow the appointment of a receiver in an ordinary action at law for the recovery of a debt. We cannot think that the legislature intended such a radical departure from the old established principles of the common law and from the long-settled practice of the courts in our state. Was it intended that whenever a debtor failed to meet his obligation he should be liable to have his property and credits put into the hands of a receiver merely because there might exist danger of its being lost, removed, or physically impaired? We think not. The act must be construed as applying only to the funds and property upon which the creditor has a lien for the satisfaction of his debt. The words, 'by a creditor to subject any property or fund to his claim,' are to be limited to some particular fund or property belonging to a debtor upon which the creditor has a specific lien. It is true that in a general sense a creditor who brings an action at law to recover a debt seeks to subject all the defendant's property to the payment of his claim. But he cannot obtain relief as against any particular article or class of property, unless a lien be declared upon it by the levy of an attachment or the service of a writ of garnishment."

But in some states the general rule against the appointment of a receiver of the debtor's property at the instance of a simple contract creditor has been changed by statute.

Thus, under a statute providing that a creditor with a lien may file a bill in chancery to subject to the payment of his debts any property which his debtor has fraudulently transferred or attempted to transfer, it was held, in Weis v. L.R.A.1918C.

Goetter (1882) 72 Ala. 259, that a simple contract creditor could maintain a suit to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a sale of the entire stock of goods of his individual debtor, and obtain a receiver to take charge of the property. The court said that the general rule was that, to entitle a complainant to a receiver, he must show some title or claim, lien upon, or interest in the specific thing which was the subject of the litigation, and that a mere creditor at large had no right to this extraordinary remedy; but that the statute gave to a creditor without a lien the same right to pursue property fraudulently transferred as a creditor with a judgment previously had, and when a bill was filed under the statute and process served on the defendant, a lien was acquired on the property conveyed.

And under a statute providing that it should not be necessary, in a proceeding in equity to vacate "any conveyance or contract or other act" as fraudulent as against creditors, for any creditor to recover judgment on his demand in order to obtain the relief sought, it was held, in Sanderson v. Stockdale (1857) 11 Md. 563, that simple contract creditors of a firm were entitled to an injunction to prevent disposition and wasting of the firm assets, and, if necessary for their security, to the appointment of a receiver for the firm, on a bill alleging the insolvency of the partnership, the dissolution or pretended dissolution thereof, the transfer of the partnership effects to defeat the claims of creditors, and the misapplication of the firm assets to the private purposes of the partners.

The Georgia statute provided that, in case any corporation not municipal, or any trader or firm of traders, should fail to pay, at maturity, any one or more matured debts, payment of which had been properly demanded of such debtor, and by him refused, and should be insolvent, it should be in the power of a court of equity, under a creditors' petition, to proceed to collect the assets and appropriate the same to the creditors. This statute it appears is construed as permitting any creditor, although he has not reduced his claim to judgment, to obtain a receiver if the statutory conditions are fulfilled. See, for example, as construing the statute, Fechheimer v. Baum (1889) 2 L.R.A. 153, 37 Fed. 167; Collins v. Myers (1882) 68 Ga. 530 (holding that a creditor must show that a debtor is a trader and is insolvent, and that an allegation of insolvency resting alone on the debtor's failure to pay at maturity is insufficient); Blanchard v. Vansyckle (1883) 70 Ga. 278 (holding that a general creditor of a firm was not entitled to a receiver after the firm had sold its entire interest and ceased to do business); Barnwell v. Wofford (1881) 67 Ga. 50 (holding that a receiver would not be appointed at the instance of simple contract creditors, if the assets were not more than sufficient to pay the lien creditors, since to do so would be merely to interfere with the liens at the instance of those who could realize nothing in any event; and to the same effect, see Collins v. Myers (Ga.) supra); Willcox v. Dunlap (1889) 83 Ga. 417, 9 S. E. 1046 (considering the question as to what circumstances operate to deprive one of the character of trader).

And under the Virginia Code an injunction may be granted and a receiver appointed of the property of an insolvent firm which is wasting the assets, in a suit in the nature of a creditors' bill by simple contract creditors, where the debt is admitted. Fink v. Patterson (1884) 21 Fed. 602.

The South Carolina statute providing that "whenever any debtor shall assign his . . . property for the benefit of . . . creditors, it shall . . . be lawful for any creditor, . . . either by simple contract, specialty, or in any other manner, to institute proceedings against the said debtor or the assignee, . . . either to attack and set aside the said deed of assignment, or to enforce the provisions thereof, or for any other purpose whatever, without first obtaining and entering up judgment against the said debtor" (Regenstein v. Pearlstein (1888) 30 S. C. 192, 8 S. E. 850), has been construed as permitting a simple contract creditor to maintain a suit to set aside an assignment of his debtor and procure the appointment of a receiver. Pelzer v. Hughes (1887) 27 S. C. 409, 3 S. E. 781; Meinhard Bros. v. Strickland (1888) 29 S. C. 491, 7 S. E. 838; Austin v. Morris (1885) 23 S. C. 393.

And the privilege conferred by this statute is not affected by the ground on which the assignment is assailed. Regenstein v. Pearlstein (S. C.) supra.

Consent of debtor.

It has been held that consent by an individual debtor to the appointment of a receiver of his property at the instance of a simple contract creditor does not confer jurisdiction on the court to appoint the receiver on the ground of insolvency, the court making a distinction in this respect between cases where the debtor was an individual and where it was a corporation. Maxwell v. McDaniels (1910) 106 C. C. A. 453, 184 Fed. 311.

And where a partner of an insolvent firm sold his interest in the partnership to a third party, who was aware of the fact that the sale was made to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and who formed a partnership with the remaining partner, it was held that the consent of the latter to the appointment of a receiver would not authorize such appointment at the instance of a simple partnership creditor who had no specific lien on its assets. The court stated that the allegation of consent by the remaining partner to the proceeding did not change its nature, as the creditor's right through him ceased by reason of the partner's agreeing to the sale and entering into a copartnership with the purchaser; and the principle was applied that equity would not afford relief where the legal remedy was adequate and complete. Waples-Platter Co. v. Mitchell (1895) 12 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 35 S. W. 200.

R. E. H.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

WOODWARD IRON COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

H. A. HUBBARD.

(— Ala. —, 77 So. 400.)

Master and servant — employers' liability — tramway — part of railway.

Rails laid 12 or 15 feet apart for a distance of 300 or 400 feet in front of coke ovens for the purpose of carrying a structure designed for manipulating the coke in the ovens are not a railway or any part of L.R.A.1918C.

the track of a railway, within the meaning of those terms as used in the Employers' Liability Act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. e, 4, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Gardner, Somerville, and Thomas, JJ., dissent.)

(December 20, 1917.)

Note. — As to the applicability to private railroads of statutes abrogating or modifying the fellow-servant rule as to railroads, see annotation to Ed H. Cunningham & Co. v. Neal, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, and supple-

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the City Court of Bessemer in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought under the Employers' Liability Act to recover damages for injuries sustained by him while in defendant's employ. Reversed.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the dissenting opinion.

Count "A," mentioned in the dissenting opinion, is as follows:

"Plaintiff claims of the defendant the sum of $25,000 as damages, for that, heretofore, to wit: on the 6th day of February, 1916, defendant was operating a by-product plant at or near Woodward in Jefferson county, Alabama, and used in connection therewith in the operation of said plant a certain machine or appliance known as and called a coke-pusher machine, which was operated by an electric motor and ran along on a track composed of 100-pound rails in front of the coke ovens, to which coke-pusher machine was attached as a part thereof an appliance known as a leveling bar. And plaintiff avers that on the day and date aforesaid, he was in the service or employment of the defendant at said by-product plant as a machinist and as such was engaged in the performance and discharge of his duties in and about making certain repairs on said leveling bar or adjusting same, and while plaintiff was standing upon a platform or scaffold upon said coke-pusher machine provided by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff in making said repairs, said coke pusher was suddenly started, and plaintiff avers that he was caused to stumble and fall from off said platform or scaffold to the concrete floor below, a distance of, to wit: 30 feet, and as a proximate consequence thereof the bones of his right ankle and right foot were crushed and broken and his left ankle and back were badly sprained, and he was permanently injured in his right ankle and he was caused to suffer great mental and physical pain and anguish and to lose much valuable time in consequence of his said injuries.

"Plaintiff avers that his said injuries were proximately caused by reason of the negligence of a person in the service or employment of the defendant by the name of H. Costner, who had the charge or control of an electric motor upon a railway or the part of the track of a railway in this: that the said Costner suddenly started said electric coke-pusher machine without any signal or warning to the plaintiff, causing him to stumble and fall as aforesaid."

Messrs. Cabaniss & Bowie, for appellant:

The railway in this case was not such a railway as is meant and intended by the 5th subdivision of § 3910 of the Code.

Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, 171 Ala. 245, 54 So. 566; Appel v. Selma Street & Suburban R. Co. 177 Ala. 457, 59 So. 164; Dresser, Employers' Liability, § 80; Perry v. Old Colony R. Co. 164 Mass. 296, 41 N. E. 289.

Messrs. Charles A. Calhoun and John T. Glover, for appellee:

The railway upon which this electric motor coke-pusher machine was run was a railroad or railway within the purview of the 5th subdivision of § 3910 of the Code, and was clearly within the beneficent and remedial intent of the legislature.

Jarvis v. Hitch, — Ind. App. —, 65 N. E. 608; 5 Labatt, Mast. & S. 2d ed. §§ 5142, 5259; Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, 171 Ala. 233, 54 So. 566; Birmingham R., Light & P. Co. v. Mosely, 164 Ala. 111, 51 So. 424; Boggs v. Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. 167 Ala. 251, 140 Am. St. Rep. 28, 52 So. 878; Woodward Iron Co. v. Sheehan, 166 Ala. 431, 52 So. 24; Hunter v. Ingram-Day Lumber Co. 110 Miss. 744, 70 So. 901; McKnight v. Iowa & M. R. Constr. Co. 43 Iowa, 406; Stebbins v. Crooked Creek R. & Coal Co. 116 Iowa, 513, 90 N. W. 355; Hairston v. United States Leather Co. 143 N. C. 512, 55 S. E. 847, 10 Ann. Cas. 698; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Webb, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 498, 72 S. W. 1044; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 128, 99 S. W. 743; Kline v. Minnesota Iron Co. 93 Minn. 63, 100 N. W. 681; Glimes v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. 108 Minn. 278, 122 N. W. 161; Big Five Tunnel, Ore-Reduction & Transp. Co. v. Johnson, 44 Colo. 236, 99 Pac. 63; Cook v. Modern Brotherhood, 114 Minn. 299, 131 N. W. 334; Cox v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 106, 30 Week. Rep. 816, 47 J. P. 116; Doughty v. Firbank, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div.

mental annotation to Schoen v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 841.

As to whether street or interurban roads are within the meaning of statutes of this character, see note to Norfolk & P. Traction Co. v. Ellington, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 117.

As to what are "railroad hazards" within the meaning of statutes abolishing or restricting fellow-servant doctrine, see notes to Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478, and Hanson v. Northern P. R. Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 969.

L.R.A.1918C.

Generally, as to employees or employments within the purview of statutes abrogating or modifying the fellow-servant rule, see note to Missouri P. R. Co. v. Smith, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113.

As to the constitutionality of statutes modifying or abrogating the fellow-servant rule, see notes to Bradford Constr. Co. v. Heflin, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1640, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84.

358, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 480, 48 L. T. N. S. 530, 48 J. P. 55; Coughlan v. Cambridge, 166 Mass. 208, 44 N. E. 218.

Per Curiam:

A full statement of the facts necessary to an understanding of the question here treated is found in the dissenting opinion of Justice Gardner, and such statement of facts is here adopted by reference thereto, without being here repeated.

The majority are of the opinion that the track upon which the "coke-pusher machine" in question was operated is not a "railway," nor "any part of the track of a railway," within the meaning of subdivision 5 of the Employers' Liability Act (Code 1907, § 3910 [5]). The question was discussed at some length, and many decisions and textbooks were reviewed and cited, in the case of Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, 171 Ala. 233, 54 So. 566. It was there held that a tram track, used for the purpose of transporting ore which was being mined, was a "railway" within the meaning of this subdivision. We did not decide in that case, nor did we mean to say as dicta, that every track or tramway used by a master in his business, upon or over which any machine is moved by means of a steam locomotive or electric motor, would be a railway, within the meaning of the statute in question. In fact, several cases were cited approvingly in which it was intimated, if not decided, that all tracks or ways on which machinery is operated by the master, even by means of steam engines and electric motors, are not "railways," or "any part of the track of a railway," within the meaning of the statute. See Woodward Iron Co. v. Curl, 153 Ala. 205, 44 So. 974, Id. 153 Ala. 215, 44 So. 969; Sloss-Sheffield Steel and I. Co. v. Mobley, 139 Ala. 425, 36 So. 181; Freeman v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & I. Co. 137 Ala. 481, 34 So. 612. It is true that these cases did not expressly decide that the tracks there in question, or a track like the one in question, is not a railway or a part thereof, within the meaning of the subdivision in question; but they do show that this class of tracks was not by the court or by the parties considered to be such in those cases. Mr. Dresser, in his work on Employers' Liability (vol. 1, § 80, p. 349), says, in defining the phrase "upon a railway:" "The courts have confined all the words of this section, as well as those under discussion, to the kind of railroad the legislature must have had in mind."

Each term used in this subdivision, such as "signal," "point," "engine," "car," and "electric motor," must be considered in connection with the context, and not as an isolated term. As is said by the text-writer L.R.A.1918C.

ers on the subject of the English Employers' Act, "upon a railway" is the keynote to the subsection, because it applies to and qualifies each of the terms. This court has taken the same view of our act, which is merely a copy of the English statute. The track or way used by the master in his business, to come within the meaning of this subdivision, must be used or intended for the purpose of transporting or moving products, freight, or passengers, in connection with his business. It was never intended to include all tracks, ways, or rails, upon which any of his machinery is moved merely in its operation or transportation, as in the instant case. The track in question was not intended to transport any products, freight, or passengers, to or from the master's plant or place of business, but merely and exclusively for moving the "coke-pushing machine" from one coke oven to another. If it had been used for transporting coal to the coke ovens or for transporting the coke from the ovens by means of tram-cars propelled by steam engines or by electric motors, then the case of Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, supra, would be an authority for holding the track in question to be "a railway," within the meaning of the 5th subdivision of the Employers' Act. The track in this case was used and intended to be used as a part of the carriageway of one particular machine from one coke oven to another.

A tram track, on which logs are hauled to a sawmill and the lumber is hauled therefrom, by means of cars propelled or moved thereon by steam locomotive engines or electric motors, might be a railway within the meaning of the statute; but the mere track or rails upon which the carriage moves the logs while they are being sawed are not a "railway," nor "a part of the track of a railway," within the meaning of the statute in question. Surely the track or way on which a steam shovel is moved while being operated is not a railway within the meaning of the statute; and if it is not, then neither is the track here in question. It results that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Anderson, Ch. J., and McClellan, Mayfield, and Sayre, JJ., concur.

Gardner, J., dissenting:

This cause was assigned to the writer, and the following opinion was prepared, but upon consultation of the whole court a majority did not concur, and their views are expressed in a separate opinion. I therefore adopt the following as expressive of my dissenting views:

Appellee (plaintiff in the court below)

brought this suit against the appellee for the recovery of damages for injuries sustained while in the employ of defendant as a machinist and repair man at its by-product plant. The case was submitted to the jury on three counts, designated A, D, and E; but the question here involved only concerns count A, which will appear in the report of the case. Under said count recovery was sought under subdivision 5 of the Employers' Liability Act, which we, for convenience, here quote: "When such injury is caused by reason of the negligence of any person in the service or employment of the master or employer, who has charge or control of any signal, points, locomotive, engine, electric motor, switch, car, or train upon a railway, or of any part of the track of a railway."

Counsel for appellee insists that the affirmative charge was due the defendant under count A of the complaint, for the reason that the railway or track of the railway disclosed by the evidence in this case was not such a railway as is meant and intended by subdivision 5 of the Employers' Liability Act. This is the sole question presented by this appeal, and requires a brief review of the evidence.

Plaintiff was a machinist and a repair man. One Costner operated what is called the "coke-pushing machine," which was moved by electricity on rails like a large railroad track. Costner gave the signal for the repair man, and plaintiff in response went upon the pusher machine to repair the defective part, and while standing upon a platform on the machine, consisting of a board (as testified by the plaintiff) 6 inches wide, Costner, who operated the machine from the cab, gave the machine a sudden start (according to the evidence of the plaintiff) and without warning, thereby causing plaintiff to lose his balance and fall to the concrete pavement some 20 feet below, resulting in the injuries here complained of. The evidence in regard to the question of negligence on the part of Costner was in dispute, and submitted to the jury for determination.

The coke-pusher machine is structural iron work between 25 and 30 feet high, about 12 or 15 feet in width, and about 35 feet in length, was on wheels about the size of ordinary railroad car wheels, except that each wheel had two flanges instead of one. This machine was operated by electric motive power on rails, like a large railroad track; they were steel rails and built like railroad rails. The length of the track is estimated to be about 300 to 400 feet, and the track runs along in front of the ovens, and between the rails is a concrete pavement. The pusher machine moved up and down this track, pushing the coke and leveling the ovens. The machine was operated in front of the ovens, being run from one of them to another on this railroad track. It had what is called a "rammer" and also a leveling bar, the latter being used for leveling the coke in the ovens, and the rammer for pushing it out on the other side. The machine was also used for taking the doors off the ovens, and then moving the coke from the ovens. The leveling bar ran over rollers on the machine and would be run through the oven and pulled back over these rollers. There was an electric motor on the machine, used, of course, for the purpose of operating the same, and this motor was situated close to the front of the machine. Plaintiff received his injuries at the time Costner was in the cab of the machine operating the same by means of this electric motive power. This machine could be operated at a speed, variously estimated by the witnesses, from 2½ to 5 miles per hour. The record contains photographs of the machine, five in number, affording much information as to its size, the track upon which it was operated, as well as its manner of use.

That the pusher machine here involved comes within the provision of said subdivision 5 of the Employers' Liability Act is not questioned, but it is insisted that the track upon which the same is operated is not a railway within the meaning of said subdivision. As recognized by this court in Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, 171 Ala. 233, 54 So. 566, it is impracticable to lay down any abstract rule as to what is and what is not a railway. A definition of a "railroad" or "railway" in Rapalje and Lawrence, Law Dictionary, vol. 2, is as follows: "A road specially laid out and graded, having parallel rails of iron or steel for the wheels of carriages or cars, drawn by steam or other motive power, to run upon."

One of the definitions of "railway" found in Webster's New International Dictionary is, "A line of rails or track providing a runway for wheels." There are, however, numerous definitions varying with the different connections with which the term is used in statutes, contracts, or conveyances, which are found noted in 33 Cyc. 33-36, inclusive; also 1406. That the track upon which was operated the pusher machine here referred to was a railway, or a part of the track of a railway, within some of the definitions of that term, we think is very clear. We are concerned however, with its meaning under a proper construction of subdivision 5 only.

The Employers' Liability Act of this state, copied from the English statute, was passed for the benefit of the servant, and is remedial, and should be construed so as to advance the remedy. Boggs v. Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. 167 Ala. 251, 140 Am. St. Rep. 28, 52 So. 878. Speaking of the statute, and as to whether or not the same should be given a strict or liberal construction, the appellate court of Indiana used the following language, which we think here appropriate: "With respect to the English act of 1880, the rule of construction has been stated by Brett, M. R., in Gibbs v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 208, 211: 'This act of Parliament having been passed for the benefit of workmen, I think it to be the duty of the court not to construe it strictly as against the workmen, but in furtherance of the benefit which it was intended by Parliament should be given to them, and therefore as largely as reason enables one to construe it in their favor, and for the furtherance of the act.' The purpose of the legislature in enacting the law was to remove what was regarded as an evil. The purpose was to protect employees from the negligent movement of engines along the tracks of railways. Prior to its passage the injured parties were without legal remedy, because those in charge of the engines were fellow servants. The legislature will be presumed to have had in mind not details in the construction of the engine, but a machine of the same general character, effecting practically the same results, used in the same way, and subjecting the employees to the same dangers." Jarvis v. Hitch, — Ind. App. —, 65 N. E. 608.

See also 5 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1666. And the following English authorities are also of interest in connection with the question here involved: Cox v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 106, 30 Week. Rep. 816, 47 J. P. 116; Doughty v. Firbank, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 358; 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 480, 48 L. T. N. S. 530, 48 J. P. 55; Gibbs v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 208, 53 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 543, 50 L. T. N. S. 7, 32 Week. Rep. 329, 48 J. P. 230; Walsh v. Whiteley, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 371, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 586, 36 Week. Rep. 876, 53 J. P. 38.

This state, in its later decisions construing said subdivision, has shown decided inclination to the liberal construction of the statute, as evidenced by the following cases: Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis; and Boggs v. Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. supra; Woodward Iron Co. v. Sheehan, 166 Ala. 429, 52 So. 24; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Howington, — Ala. —, 73 So. 550. In the latter case it was held that the 5th subdivision protected employees when the master, as a mere licensee, was in the use of the track of a railroad upon business in no way connected with that of the owner or operator of the said railroad. Several of our cases are there reviewed. In Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, supra, it was held that a tramway used in an ore mine was a railroad within the meaning of said subdivision. In our opinion, the reasoning in that case is decisive of this. The tramway in that case was laid in the slope of the mine, upon which tramcars were run for the purpose of transporting ore from the bottom of the slope to the top, or to the tipple where the cars were dumped. The cars were operated by means of an electric motor. In determining the question as to whether or not the tramway was a "railway," within the meaning of this subdivision, the court said: "The object and purpose of the Employers' Act, and that of this particular subdivision, must be looked to and heeded. The act was for the benefit of the servant. . . . It must also be borne in mind that this act, unlike statutes requiring trains to stop at crossings, and to ring the bell or blow the whistle on approaching crossings, stations, etc., is not dealing with the rights of or duties to the public, but only with the private rights and duties of the master and of his servants. Neither the plant nor the railway need be a public one, to be within the statute. A private railway is as much within the statute as a public one. It extends to side tracks and switches, as well as to the main line. Under our statute it is now immaterial whether the motive force is steam or electricity. It is immaterial whether the engine is a dummy, or is a mogul, passenger, or a freight engine, or a switch engine, if it is 'upon a railway.' . . . The gage of the railway is immaterial; it may be narrow, standard, or broad—each is within the statute if the way is a railway. Nor does the length of the way, if it is a railway, have anything to do with the bearing of the statute. . . . Looking at the subject-matter and the parties with which the act deals—that is, with the master and the servant, inter se—and the fact that the enactment is remedial, we are inclined to hold that a no more restricted meaning should be placed upon this statute than is consistent with the natural and popular sense of the word. And considering other questions, to do which we have authority, such as: That the track or way need not be public; that, though private, it is within the statute; that it need not be permanent, but may, if merely temporary, be sufficient; that the questions of width and length have no bearing; and that the motive power for the propulsion of the cars, provided they are on a railway, has no determinative effect—we hold that the tramway in question is a railway within the meaning of the statute, and that the court did not err in refusing the general affirmative charge to the defendant as to the third count." Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, supra.

In the instant case, the track upon which the pusher machine was operated was composed of heavy rails laid parallel, with concrete pavement between them. The pusher machine was operated up and down this track on wheels similar to those of railroad car wheels, with the single exception that they had flanges on each side, instead of a flange only on one side. The fact that the rails were as much as 20 or 25 feet apart, or that the track was not more than 400 feet in length, can, under the decision of the Lewis Case, supra, have no material effect upon the question here to be determined. The question of width and length is without bearing, and it is, of course, no objection that it was a private track; nor can it be objected that the pusher machine did not haul freight or pull cars. In Woodward Iron Co. v. Sheehan, 166 Ala. 429, 52 So. 24, count 1 of the complaint (held by this court to be sufficient) showed that a mass of iron or slag was being moved by means of a cable or rope and a locomotive engine. Here coke in the ovens was leveled by means of this pusher machine, and was also extracted from the ovens by the same machine pushing the coke out by means of what is called the rammer; the machine, however, first removing the doors from the ovens.

As previously stated, the Employers' Liability Act was passed for the benefit of workmen, and this particular subdivision was for the protection of employees from the negligent moving of engines along the tracks of railroads; and, as said by the Indiana court in Jarvis v. Hitch, supra: "The legislature will be presumed to have had in mind, not details in the construction of the engine, but a machine of the same general character, effecting practically the same results, used in the same way, and subjecting the employees to the same dangers."

So, in the instant case, the same character of danger being present to which the employee is subjected, and for whose benefit the statute is enacted, the legislature will not be presumed to have had in mind the mere details as to construction of the track, its breadth or length, or as to whether or not it shall be of permanent or temporary use. Here the employee is subjected to the same danger from the negligent operation of this machine upon this track, less in degree perhaps, somewhat, than upon a commercial railroad, but still of the same general character. The holding of the majority, in my opinion, practically repudiates the reasoning and logic of the Lewis Case, and passes without notice the Sheehan Case, supra.

I am of the opinion that the construction insisted upon by counsel for appellant, and here adopted by the court, is out of harmony with the rule of construction established for this statute by the authorities from this state above cited, and therefore conclude that the track here in question was a railway within the meaning of subdivision 5, and that the court below committed no error in refusing the affirmative charge as to count A. I think the judgment should be affirmed, and respectfully dissent.

Somerville and Thomas, JJ., concur in the foregoing opinion.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

JACKSON

v.

FERGUSON, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 165 N. W. 326.)

Libel — charging making dates.

It is not slanderous per se to state that a married woman had been making dates with men unless the statement intended to charge immorality, or was so understood.

For other cases, see Libel and Slander, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 11, 1917.)

Note. — As to slander and libel in charging woman with unchastity, see notes to Battles v. Tyson, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 577, and Sturdivant v. Duke, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 615. L.R.A. 1918C.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Woodbury County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged slander. Reversed.

Statement by Weaver, J.:

Action at law to recover damages for alleged slander. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $150, and defendant appeals.

Messrs. Jepson & Stecker and Henderson & Fribourg for appellant.

Messrs. J. A. Prichard and Schmidt & Pike for appellee.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff and her husband and the defendant Ferguson and wife are comparatively young people, having their homes in the same neighborhood. On one occasion the two husbands had been from home overnight, and on their return or soon thereafter information came to them that on the night of their absence their wives stayed together at the home of one of them, and that two young men visited them, staying with them until nearly morning. This caused some ill feeling, and defendant made the story the subject of certain statements respecting plaintiff which she alleges to be slanderous. The petition alleges that defendant said of and concerning plaintiff and his (defendant's) wife: "They have been making dates with men for immoral purposes." "They have been making dates with men all winter, and have been found out."

The defendant denied the alleged slander and pleaded certain matters in mitigation.

The proof tended to show that defendant did say that they (plaintiff and defendant's wife) "had made dates with some other men," that he and Jackson had found out by the boys "that they had made dates and been there," and that "they have been making dates with other men and doing things while we were gone that were simply awful;" "they have been making dates with other men and stayed up nights or one night with them." There is no evidence that he said that the "dates" to which he referred were made for immoral purposes. No special damages were alleged and no evidence of special damage offered.

At the close of the testimony on the part of plaintiff defendant moved for a directed verdict in his favor on the ground, among other things, that the words shown to have been spoken by the defendant were not slanderous per se, and no special damages had been alleged or proved. The motion was denied. At the close of all the evidence the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury, among other things, "that the words shown to have been spoken are not slanderous per se, and the burden is on plaintiff to show they were spoken maliciously, and that to recover she must allege and prove special damages."

The instruction was refused.

In our judgment the court's ruling in these respects was erroneous. There is nothing in the expression, "making dates with men," which necessarily or as a matter of law can be said to mean that plaintiff is a lewd woman or that the dates said to have been made with men were for lewd purposes. It is true that the petition alleges that the words were used by defendant with that slanderous meaning, and were so understood by those who heard him, and had there been any evidence to support these allegations, then it would doubtless have been proper for the trial court to have instructed the jury that, if they found the words were used in that defamatory sense, and that the hearers so understood their meaning, then the statement would be slanderous per se, and malice and injury would be presumed. But there is no such evidence in the record. It is not an unheard-of thing in these days for a married woman to make one of a theater party or card party or joy-riding party or other social gatherings in which her husband has no part, and whatever may be said of her wisdom or prudence in so doing, it would be a most unjustifiable thing to say that the acceptance of an appointment or date for such diversion is an act of immorality, or to say that a statement based on such acts to the effect that a woman has made dates with men (no covert defamatory sense being intended) is, as a matter of law, slander per se. "Making a date" is perhaps an inelegant expression, but giving the words no more than their ordinary and natural effect, they mean nothing more than the making of an appointment, or the fixing of a time or date for some specified purpose. If, without more, they be made use of to indicate an appointment for some unlawful or immoral purpose, it is a perversion of their natural meaning, and will not be so construed in the absence of proof that such was the intention of him who so used it, or that it was so understood by those who heard it. McLaughlin v. Bascom, 38 Iowa, 660; Barton v. Holmes, 16 Iowa, 254; Wimer v. Allbaugh, 78 Iowa, 79, 16 Am. St. Rep. 422, 42 N. W. 587. The instructions given to the jury are inconsistent with this view of the law and constitute reversible error.

L.R.A.1918C.

Our conclusions above stated are sufficient to require a new trial and other points suggested in argument become immaterial.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause will be remanded for a new trial.

Gaynor, Ch. J., and Preston and Stevens, JJ., concurring.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

FARMERS' BANK & TRUST COMPANY,
Admr., etc., of William Winston, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF HENDERSON.

(— Ky. —, 200 S. W. 330.)

Evidence — injury on highway — intoxication of plaintiff.

1. Evidence that one injured by the overturning of an automobile through an alleged defect in a highway was intoxicated at the time may be considered by the jury in an action to hold the municipality liable for the injury, as bearing upon the question of his exercise of care.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Highway — defect — assumption of risk — joy ride.

2. Persons voluntarily driving or riding in an automobile upon a public highway at a dangerous rate of speed, merely to enjoy the exhilarating and pleasurable sensation, assume the risk of injury from inability of the driver to avoid defects in the street.

For other cases, see Highways, IV. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Automobile — riding with drunken driver — negligence.

3. One who, for the purpose of taking a pleasure drive, enters an automobile driven by one known to be intoxicated, is guilty of negligence which will prevent his holding the municipality liable for injury due to a defect in the street which the driver could not avoid because of his condition.

For other cases, see Highways, IV. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — broken steering gear — operation of car.

4. It is negligence to put on power to drive an automobile out of a ditch at the side of a highway after the steering gear is broken.

For other cases, see Highways, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 8, 1918.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Henderson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused through a defect in the highway. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Woodward & Dixon for appellant.

Messrs. B. S. Morris and Vance & Heilbronner, for appellee:

When the evidence tends to show that the occupants of an automobile, including the chauffeur, are drunk and on a joy ride and run an automobile into a ditch, and one of the occupants seeks to recover damages from the city for maintenance of the ditch, and the city pleads contributory negligence, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury on contributory negligence.

29 Cyc. 534; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cummins, 111 Ky. 333, 63 S. W. 594; Louisville v. Bott, 151 Ky. 578, 152 S. W. 532.

A city may determine when and in what manner its streets can be improved, and is not liable merely for failing to improve a street or suffering it to remain in the condition it found it when annexed.

Harney v. Lexington, 130 Ky. 251, 113 S. W. 115.

A city is not bound to anticipate and provide against so extraordinary a danger as a runaway horse or a runaway automobile.

Harrodsburg v. Abram, 138 Ky. 157, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 199, 127 S. W. 758.

In a suit to recover damages for improper maintenance of a ditch by a city, evidence of former accidents caused in the same way is not competent, unless it is shown that the city had knowledge of former accidents in time to have repaired the ditch so as to prevent similar accidents.

Green v. Richmond, 7 Ky. Ops. 434.

Sampson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Can one who is injured through a defect in a street while riding as a guest in an automobile recover of the city, where the negligence of the driver contributed to the injury, if the guest, before entering the car, knew the driver was unskilled, incompetent, or intoxicated to such an extent as to be unable to exercise that degree of care required of a person engaged in operating automobiles under like circumstances? That is the principal question presented by the facts in this case.

About midnight of June 18, 1916, William Winston and a companion named Nunnely, two colored men, obtained from a garage in Henderson, Kentucky, a Ford automobile for the purpose of taking a pleasure drive in company with two colored women. While driving out South Green street in that city, the car ran into a ditch at the side of the street, overturning and inflicting injuries upon Winston from which he shortly thereafter died.

It is alleged in the petition that it was the duty of the city to keep and maintain

Note.—The subject of imputed or contributory negligence of a passenger riding in an automobile driven by another, precluding recovery against a third person for injury, is treated in the note to Rebillard v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. L.R.A.1915B, 953, and see references therein to notes on related questions. Later cases in this series on the subject indicated are: Lynn v. Goodwin, L.R.A.1915E, 588; An- L.R.A.1918C.

thony v. Kiefner, L.R.A.1915F, 876; Knoxville R. & Light Co. v. Vangilder, L.R.A.1916A, 1111; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, L.R.A.1917A, 543; Jacobs v. Jacobs, L.R.A.1917F, 253; and Hardie v. Barrett, L.R.A.1917F, 444.

As to intoxication of person operating automobile, see annotation following Powell v. Berry, L.R.A.1917A, 313.

its streets in a reasonably safe condition for the travel of the public, and that it had failed to perform this duty, allowing South Green street, at the point of the accident, to fall into bad repair in that a small wash or drain, about 4 or 5 feet long and several inches deep, had been allowed to remain in the edge of the street, near a large ditch carrying a stream, for several weeks next before the accident, and that the city and its officers knew of this defective condition of the street in time to have repaired it before the injury. The allegations of the petition upon this subject were traversed by the answer, and it was affirmatively alleged by the city that Winston and his companions were drunk on the occasion of the accident, "and while the deceased, Winston, and the other occupants of said car were in a drunken condition as aforesaid, the said automobile or car was so negligently and carelessly driven that it ran into a ditch on the east side of said Green street, at the point where said accident occurred, and the said car or automobile was overturned, and the said deceased, William Winston, and the other occupants of said car or automobile, were thrown from out of same and into said ditch, resulting in the injuries complained of in the petition. . . . And Winston was not exercising ordinary care for his own safety, but at said time was acting in utter disregard thereof." It is further charged in the answer that the sole and only cause of decedent's injury and death "was the carelessness and negligence and want of care on the part of said decedent, William Winston, for his own safety as above set forth;" and "William Winston was himself guilty of negligence which contributed to cause and bring about all of the injuries of which plaintiff complains." Evidence was introduced to show a defect in the street, and that this defective condition had continued for many weeks before the accident; and further, that at least some of the officials of the city, including one councilman, knew of the defect. The city denied knowledge of the defect in the street, or that it was defective, and called witnesses to prove that Winston and his companions were engaged in taking what is commonly called a joy ride, and were driving at a dangerously high rate of speed, holloing and laughing; that the driver Nunnelly knew of the ditch and its location and condition; that in approaching it, going downhill, he speeded up the car, and instead of keeping to the right, as the law of the road requires, negligently drove to the left onto the bank of the ditch; that both Winston and Nunnelly were drunk or drinking and unable to properly guide and control an automobile, L.R.A.1918C.

and that as a consequence of the drunkenness and inability the accident happened.

A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendant city. Upon this appeal the administrator of William Winston complains: First, that the verdict is not supported by sufficient evidence; second, the court erred in instructing upon contributory negligence, and in other instructions to the jury; third, the court erred in admitting incompetent evidence and in rejecting competent evidence offered by the administrator. In appellant's brief it is asserted to be reversible error for the court to admit evidence showing Winston's intoxicated condition. It is urged that whether drunk or sober Winston, being a passenger on the rear seat of the automobile, would have received the same injuries, he having no control over the car or its driver. The city contends that Winston was guilty of contributory negligence, while appellant insists there was a total failure of evidence to establish negligence on the part of Winston which contributed to his injury.

While the status of the parties is not affected by the drunkenness of one of them in a case of this character, unless by reason of such intoxication the one injured failed to exercise such care for his own safety as might be ordinarily expected of a sober person of ordinary prudence under similar circumstances, and but for such failure on his part the injury would not have happened, yet the jury may consider the fact of intoxication as a circumstance along with other evidence. One is not relieved of the duty of exercising ordinary care for his own safety by voluntary intoxication. And while appellant insists it was prejudicial error to admit evidence showing the insobriety of decedent, we are constrained to the view that the jury was entitled to all the facts, especially those showing or tending to show contributory negligence on his part.

In a case where a plaintiff was run down by a buggy occupied and driven by two intoxicated persons on a public highway, this court in allowing evidence of the intoxicated condition of the driver held: "The admission of evidence tending to show that the appellants were more or less intoxicated at the time the injury was inflicted is not, therefore, open to question. If it were, however, it was unquestionably competent. The issue was whether the appellants were guilty of neglect. Intoxication ordinarily deprives one of the same power to exercise caution as when sober." Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 569, 6 S. W. 453.

In Berry on Automobiles, 2d ed. p. 188, it is said: "It has been held that the act of intoxication on the part of the operator of an automobile which causes injury to another is not, in and of itself, such negligence as will authorize recovery. It may be pleaded and proved by way of inducement, for the purpose of illustrating the negligent conduct alleged against the defendant; but if one, although intoxicated, drives his machine in a proper manner and observes the law in every respect, he cannot be held liable for an injury inflicted by his machine merely because he was intoxicated at the time."

When two or more persons voluntarily drive or ride an automobile upon a public highway at a dangerously high rate of speed, merely for the purpose of enjoying the exhilarating and pleasurable sensations incident to the swirl and dash of rapid transit, they may properly be said to be engaged in joy riding. Such joy riders not only assume the risks of danger attendant upon the sudden and violent movements of the car, but also such as arise from the inability of the driver, when traveling at a high rate of speed, to make short quick stops to avoid collisions or defects in the street, or direct the car at bends or curves in the road so as to keep in the traveled way.

It is said that there is no evidence showing contributory negligence on the part of Winston, since he was not in charge of the car and had no control over it. We cannot assent to this proposition, because the evidence shows that Winston and Nunnelly were associated together for some hours on the evening before the accident, and had been in and about restaurants and saloons together, and had just walked, talking the while, from a restaurant to the garage before entering the car. Winston was fully acquainted with Nunnelly's intoxicated condition, if he was intoxicated; he knew all the facts or had the opportunity of knowing them before he entered the car, and is therefore charged with that knowledge. If, as the evidence conduces to show, Nunnelly the driver was intoxicated, and with this knowledge Winston voluntarily entered the car to take a pleasure drive, he was guilty of negligence which directly contributed to his injury. One who voluntarily permits himself to be driven about the streets in a motor car operated by a drunken chauffeur does not exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and he assumes the danger incident to such drive when he voluntarily places himself in a car which is managed and controlled by an intoxicated driver. This is not because of the imputed negligence rule, but because of the personal negligence of the passenger. This doctrine has been recognized in many instances.

In the case of Titus v. New Scotland, 90 Hun, 468, 35 N. Y. Supp. 971, it was held: The negligence of a driver under the influence of liquor, driving a private wagon at L.R.A.1918C.

night along a defective highway, is imputed to his companion riding with him and too intoxicated to keep his seat in the wagon, in case of the latter's death by the overturning of the wagon upon him at an unrailed bridge over a creek crossing the highway, and prevents his administrator from recovering for his death from the municipality on account of the defective highway.

See also Donnelly v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 109 N. Y. 16, 15 N. E. 733; Payne v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 523.

Undoubtedly it is sound doctrine to hold: "A passenger, the guest in an automobile operated by another, is bound to exercise reasonable care for his own safety, and that a failure to do so constitutes contributory negligence and bars recovery against a third person for injury resulting, in part, from the operator's negligence."

And, with greater reason, one about to enter a car should exercise reasonable care to see that the driver in charge is an experienced, reasonably safe, and sober person, and if he fails to do this and injury results to him from a defect in the street to which the negligence, want of skill or care on the part of the driver contributed, such negligence is chargeable to him.

The evidence further shows that after the car struck the wash or drain in the street of which complaint is made, Nunnelly the driver, in attempting to guide the car out of the gully, broke the radius rod, thereby crippling the steering gear and losing control of the car; nevertheless, he put on extra power in order to drive the car out of the gully, and in doing so ran it along the edge of the main ditch for several feet before the car overturned, causing the injury. There is no contradiction of this evidence. Obviously, it was negligence on the part of the driver, assumed under the facts in this case by decedent, to undertake to drive the car out of the gully by putting increased power to it after the steering gear was broken and he was unable to guide it. A prudent person would have stopped the car instead of attempting to speed it up.

It has been held by this court that drunkenness of the injured party does not excuse the negligence of a city in leaving an open pit in a street into which a pedestrian falls while using the street at night, but if the intoxicated condition of the injured man was such that he was rendered unable to and therefore did not exercise that degree of care usually employed by reasonably prudent persons under like circumstances, then voluntary drunkenness amounts to contributory negligence. Covington v. Lee, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 492, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 28 S. W. 493. With more reason may it be held that, while the negligence of the driver of an automobile is not imputable to a passenger riding in the rear seat of a car, who had no control over the car, but who is not relieved of the duty of exercising ordinary care for his own safety, he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover, if injured by the car being overturned when driven over an embankment through the negligence or recklessness of a drunken or incompetent driver; the passenger previously informed of such drunkenness or incompetency is charged with negligence in intrusting himself to such driver and exposing himself to the dangers of such a drive.

It may be stated generally that drunkenness of the injured party does not change the status of the litigants in a suit for damages on account of negligence, but if it be shown that the injured party was so incapacitated by voluntarily drinking intoxicants that he lost use of his limbs, or was reckless, or careless, and this want of care, no matter how occasioned, contributed to bring about the injury, and but for which the injury would not have happened, the drunkenness at once becomes an important consideration, and may be shown in evidence to the jury.

Even while prosecuting a journey, if the driver becomes intoxicated so as to lose control of the vehicle, or is reckless, and this is known to the passenger, ordinary care requires the passenger to call upon the driver to stop and allow him to alight, or turn the management of the vehicle over to another capable of properly directing it, and if the passenger fails to exercise such care and is injured as a result of the negligence or recklessness of the driver and a third person, he may not have recourse of such third person, this being denied him because of his own negligence rather than upon the ground that the negligence of the driver is imputed to him. All recognize the rule that a passenger in any conveyance, public or private, related or unrelated to his driver, must, in order to recover for injuries sustained through the negligence of a third party, be himself wholly free from contributory fault. The supreme court of California held that if the driver is a careless or reckless one, and the injured person knew it, proof of these facts is competent and relevant upon the showing of the passenger's own contributory negligence in going on a ride with such a driver. Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co. 149 Cal. 131, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1059, 85 Pac. 152.

It is held by the courts of Texas that if a passenger in a hired automobile urge the chauffeur to run the machine at an excessive rate, or if the passenger acquiesce in the demands of his companions for a higher rate of speed, and is injured as a result of a defective street and the negligence of the driver, the passenger's negligence so contributed to his injury as to defeat a recovery.

The Indiana courts have held that where the vehicle is in charge of an intoxicated driver, the passenger is not sufficiently free from negligence on his part to warrant a recovery where the injury results from reckless driving. Brannen v. Kokomo, G. & J. Gravel Road Co. 115 Ind. 115, 7 Am. St. Rep. 411, 17 N. E. 202. The same court in Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315, held that it was as much the duty of the guest to use reasonable care and judgment to learn of and avoid danger as it is the duty of the driver, and that when an injury results to a traveler on the highway negligently obstructed by a municipality, under such circumstances that the municipal corporation would have been liable for the injury had the traveler himself been free from negligence, the city will not be held liable where the guest was riding in a buggy driven at a high and reckless speed by one more or less intoxicated, on a dark night, and with knowledge of obstacles in the street, his contributory negligence being plain. Nor can a passenger assume that the driver is exercising ordinary care when the acts and conduct of the driver in the presence of the passenger are such as to impress a reasonably prudent person that the driver is reckless or is intoxicated to such an extent as to be unable to properly manage and control the vehicle. Undoubtedly if the guest is cognizant of danger resulting in injury, and fails to call the driver's attention to it, but permits him to drive recklessly into it without protest on his part, no recovery can be had. Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763. 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 106.

The Missouri courts held that an occupant of a vehicle may not intrust his safety absolutely to a driver, regardless of the imminence of danger, or the visible lack of ordinary caution on the driver's part to avoid harm. If a passenger is aware of the danger, and that the driver is remiss in guarding against it, and takes no care of himself to avoid injury, he cannot recover for the injury sustained. This is not because the driver's negligence is imputable to the passenger, but because the person's own negligence contributes to his damage. Fechley v. Springfield Traction Co. 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421.

In New York it was held that one invited to ride in a vehicle, and who is thrown out by running on a pile of rubbish on the highway, negligently left there, cannot recover for his injuries of him who placed it there. if it is shown that the driver was intoxicated and was driving rapidly and recklessly, and the injured man fails to remonstrate, or do anything to discover and avoid danger. Meenagh v. Buckmaster, 26 App. Div. 451, 30 N. Y. Supp. 85.

Pennsylvania has adopted the rule that a traveler by night in a wagon driven by a drunken driver, known to him to be intoxicated, cannot recover for injuries suffered by the overturning of the vehicle at the side of the road in consequence of driving over a high bank which was without a fence, since the acts constitute negligence as a matter of law. Hershey v. Mill Creek Twp. 6 Sadler (Pa.) 459, 9 Atl. 452. In Foley v. East Flamborough Twp. 26 Ont. App. Rep. 43, it is held that a person riding in a private conveyance and injured or killed by the upsetting of the vehicle over an obstruction in the highway run upon by a horse is chargeable with negligence if he intrusts himself to a drunken driver, or to a driver incompetent from intoxication to control the team, and cannot recover damages from the party responsible for the condition of the highway. For other cases holding to the same effect, see note II. in 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601.

Undoubtedly, evidence tending to show the intoxicated condition of Winston was competent upon the trial to prove that Winston was not exercising that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person, under the circumstances, would usually exercise for his own safety. And while we do not hold that the negligence of Nunnelly the driver is imputable to Winston, nevertheless Winston was guilty of negligence in intrusting himself to such driver; he, at the time, being in possession of all the facts and knowing of the intoxicated condition of Nunnelly. This of itself was negligence which so contributed to the injury and death of Winston that but for which Winston would not have been injured. The trial court properly submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury.

The other instructions are rather long and involved. We are not prepared to say that they do not properly submit to the jury the questions to be decided. We are of opinion the jury was justified by the evidence in returning a verdict for defendant.

There appearing no prejudicial error, the judgment is affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

E. A. WELCH, Appt.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(— Ky. —, 200 S. W. 371.)

Gaming — slot machine — effect of indicating coming play.

That a gum-vending machine which always delivers gum by deposit of the coin, and sometimes delivers checks good in trade in addition thereto, always indicates before the coin is placed in the slot what will be delivered by the next play, does not take it out of the operation of a statute forbidding the use of gambling machines.

For other cases, see Gaming, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 5, 1918.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County convicting him of keeping a gambling machine, and from an order denying motion for new trial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — For operation of slot machine as gambling, see the notes to Territory v. Jones, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 239; Mueller v. William F. Stoecker Cigar Co. 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573; and Ferguson v. State, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 720.

L.R.A.1918C.

Mr. Edwin N. Casey, for appellant:

Before a game can be called a gambling game or a game of chance there must be some element of chance in the game.

2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1465.

The machine in question was not a gambling device.

Rex v. Stubbs, 9 Alberta L. R. 26, 25 D. L. R. 424.

Messrs. Charles H. Morris, Attorney General, and Henry F. Turner, Assistant Attorney General, for the Commonwealth:

The slot machine in question is a gambling device, the use of which is prohibited by § 1960 of the Kentucky Statutes.

Allen v. Com. 178 Ky. 250, 198 S. W. 896; State v. McTeer, 129 Tenn. 535, 167 S. W. 121; People ex rel. Verchereau v. Jenkins, 153 App. Div. 512, 138 N. Y. Supp. 449; Moberly v. Deskin, 169 Mo. App. 672, 155 S. W. 842; Ferguson v. State, 178 Ind. 568, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 720, 99 N. E. 806, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 172.

Settle, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The grand jury of Fayette county returned against the appellant E. A. Welch the following indictment (formal parts omitted): "The grand jury of Fayette county . . . accuses E. A. Welch of the offense of permitting gambling on premises of which he has control; . . . that said E.

A. Welch on the 28th day of April, 1917, in the county aforesaid and within twelve months next before the finding of this indictment, he then and there being the occupant of and in control of a certain house and premises located at No. 227 North Limestone street in the city of Lexington, Kentucky, did knowingly, wilfully, and unlawfully suffer and permit a machine and contrivance, such as is ordinarily used for gambling for money and property of value, to wit, a slot machine used in betting, whereby money and other things of value may be bet, won, and lost, to be set up, conducted, kept, and operated and exhibited in said house and premises, and on said slot machine so set up, conducted, kept, operated and exhibited as aforesaid, money and property of value was then and there bet, won, and lost, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Kentucky. . . ."

When the case was called for trial the defendant waived the right of trial by jury, and by agreement made with the commonwealth submitted it to the court upon the law and the following agreed statement of facts: "It is agreed that the machine in question is about 2 feet wide and about 3½ feet in height, and is known as a gum-vending machine; that the machine is operated by dropping a nickel in the slot which is in front of the machine and pulling down a lever. The machine is loaded with packages of chewing gum and metal checks, each of which is good for five cents in trade at the defendant's café. There is a dial about 3 inches in diameter on the front of the machine which works automatically and plainly indicates to the player before each play what he will receive for his nickel. After he plays the indicator points to another number showing what the next play will get. That is, when the hand points to 'gum' the player drops a nickel in the slot and knows he will receive only chewing gum. If the dial points to 'two' the player knows when he drops in his nickel that he will receive a package of chewing gum and two chips [checks]; if it points to 'four,' a package of chewing gum and four chips; if to 'twelve,' a package of chewing gum and twelve chips; if to 'sixteen,' a package of chewing gum and sixteen chips; if to 'twenty,' a package of chewing gum and twenty chips. With each play the machine gives a package of chewing gum of a standard brand. The machine always gives the results as above mentioned, and the player always knows before he plays just what he will receive for his nickel. The dropping of a nickel in the slot causes the machine to drop to the player the gum or gum and chips indicated on the dial and automatically sets the machinery so that the dial indicates what will be the result of the next play. The chips or checks are good for 5 cents each in trade at the defendant's place of business. At various times, in the café run by the defendant, divers persons were permitted, within twelve months prior to the finding of the indictment, to play the said machine by dropping nickels therein, and to receive from the machine in addition to the gum the number of checks entitled by each play on the dial of the machine; and divers persons were permitted to and did play said machine in the said manner and did receive checks in addition to the gum, and exchanged the said checks for merchandise in the defendant's place of business."

The trial court held that the appellant was guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, and by the judgment entered so declared and fixed his punishment at a fine of $200. He filed a motion and grounds for a new trial, which the court overruled. And from that judgment he prosecutes this appeal.

The grounds urged by appellant for the new trial and now relied upon for the reversal asked of the judgment were and are that the judgment is contrary to law and unsupported by the evidence. So the question presented by the appeal for our decision is, Is a slot machine, such as the appellant admittedly operated in his café, a gambling machine or device the use of which is prohibited by §§ 1960-1967, Kentucky Statutes, under which the indictment was found? It is appellant's contention that it is not, because, when the operator plays the machine he gets a package of gum, and by looking at the indicator knows in advance of dropping in another nickel whether or not he will get any checks, and, if so, how many. This fact, it is further claimed, deprives the playing of the machine of any element of chance. It is also argued by appellant's counsel that whether this slot machine is a gambling device must be determined by the single play, and that in determining the question the court cannot extend the consideration to the possibility of any future play. In other words, that a machine to be a gambling device must be so constructed, manipulated, and used in each play and at each time that each play in itself will be an act of gambling. This contention ignores the fact that there might be in the mind of the player a hope or expectation that on some future play he would receive more than the indicator shows he will receive on the one he is making. There is nothing in the case of Allen v. Com. 178 Ky. 250, 198 S. W. 806, cited by appellant's counsel, that sustains their theory of this case. The difference between the machine in the Allen Case and the one we here have is that in the Allen Case, while the deposit of a nickel would always procure a package of chewing gum, the chance of the chewing gum being accompanied by checks was a mere hazard; the player might or might not get the checks in addition to the chewing gum. This introduced an element of chance in the playing of the machine which the opinion declares would appeal to the player's propensity for gambling, whereas in the case of the present machine, while the same element of chance obtains, instead of its resulting from the dropping of one nickel in the slot, it comes from the dropping therein of two nickels or a dime; that is, in beginning to play the machine the player would know that his first nickel could only get him a package of chewing gum, yet by paying his second nickel or 10 cents he might receive two packages of chewing gum and as much as $1 worth of checks; and it is this which constitutes the element of chance. The question whether the identical machine here involved is a gambling device seems to have been well settled in other jurisdictions. Thus in State v. McTeer, 120 Tenn. 535, 167 S. W. 121, the court said: "The question raised is whether the slot machine described is a gambling device. We are of the opinion it is."

The contention was made in that case, as here, that it was not a gambling device, because the indicator always showed what the player was to get before he deposited his nickel, and for that reason that there could have been no element of uncertainty or chance in playing the machine. In rejecting this contention the court declared that while upon depositing the first nickel the player might know exactly what he was to receive from the machine in return, yet the indicator at the end of that play might show that the next nickel deposited, instead of drawing only a package of chewing gum, might draw in addition to a package of chewing gum $1 worth of checks. In this connection it is in the opinion said: "The lure is the opportunity of winning from 10 to 100 cents by the deposit and expenditure of 5 cents. There must be at least one play before any of the numbers mentioned is shown on the indicator, and there may be many, and it is not known which number will appear, nor at what time, nor after how many plays. . . . However, there is always a chance that any single player, by the expenditure of 10 cents, through making two plays of 5 cents each, may obtain, not only a package of gum worth 5 cents, but checks worth from 10 cents to 100 cents, and so in proportion for many plays, and a corresponding loss to the owner of the machine on such individual deals. The player is induced to continue by the fact that he is getting 5 cents' worth of gum for each play L.R.A.1918C.

with always the chance just ahead that the next presentation of the indicator will give him the opportunity of making a profit of from 100 to many times that per cent. We think this shows the machine is a gambling device."

In People ex rel. Verchereau v. Jenkins, 153 App. Div. 512, 138 N. Y. Supp. 449, the same conclusion was reached, the slot machine being the same that we have in the instant case. In the opinion the court said: "Thus, in addition to the gum and trade checks indicated as the certain receipts upon the dropping of the nickel is given an option to obtain a package of gum and an uncertain number of trade checks upon the dropping of the second nickel. That this uncertain option has in it such an element of chance as constitutes gambling can hardly be questioned; in fact, this element of chance only gives to the machine its value, and that" this, to us, "is within the direct prohibition of the penal law . . . seems clear."

The case of Moberly v. Deskin, 169 Mo. App. 672, 155 S. W. 842, brings out even more clearly the element of chance that necessarily results from the use of a machine like the one in question. In that case the court said: "The only important difference between the device in that case and the one under consideration is that the latter indicated in advance the result of the next play. But that is found on analysis to be a distinction without a substantial difference. It was possible for a player to put a nickel in the slot and obtain from the machine a package of gum worth 2 or 3 cents and checks good for merchandise of the value of $1. One cannot imagine that a player would stop when the indicator pointed at trade checks, i. e., at a certainty of gain. Consequently, the inventor of the device knew that when each new player began, the indicator . . . would point to gum only, i. e., to no reward for the next play; but he also knew that in the vast majority of instances the dealings between the player and the machine would consist of more than a single play, and we hold as unsound the view of defendant that each play constituted a separate and distinct transaction in the sense of ending the relation of the player to the machine, which was designed and intended to include a number of plays. The contrivance was intended to allure the player into continuing to play in the hope that the next time the finger would point to trade checks and thus bring him something for nothing. Clearly the machine was a gambling device."

In Re Cullinan (Sup.) 114 App. Div. 654, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1097, the court said of a machine like this: "The inventor of the present machine has attempted to obviate the criticism to which other slot machines have been subjected by cunningly returning to the operator of "the machine a check or ticket which secures to him in cigars or liquor the amount of his stake. Like most endeavors to adhere to the letter of the law while violating its spirit, he cannot succeed. The present device attractively administers to the gambling humor the same as other slot machines of substantially similar design. Unless it did this it would not entice the customer. If in every instance it actually returned 5 cents in coin to the player, no one would pretend that the device would attract anyone. So, if on every cast a ticket was run out calling for 5 cents in trade, no person would take the trouble to drop a nickel in the slot. It is the hazard, the chance of winning more than the sum ventured, which draws people to the machine, and that element was the conspicuous one retained in its mechanism, and it is that which brings it within the condemnation of the statute forbidding gambling in a place where liquor is sold."

Appellant's counsel admit they have not been able to find any authority in support of their contention emanating from any court of last resort in the United States. They, however, cite the case of Rex v. Stubbs, 9 Alberta L. R. 26, 25 D. L. R. 424, decided June 15, 1915, by the supreme court of Alberta, Canada. The excerpt from the opinion of which, quoted in their brief, does seem to support their contention, but the opinion is so out of harmony with the authorities in this country and also with our own views of this case that we are unwilling to adopt its reasoning or conclusions.

We are unable to see that the machine operated by appellant in his café is any less a gambling contrivance than that condemned as such in Allen v. Com 178 Ky. 250, 198 S. W. 896. It undoubtedly appeals to the player's propensity to gamble. The thing growing out of its use that attracts the player is the chance that, ultimately, he will receive something for nothing. It therefore contains the vice at which the statute is directed, and though the inventor of the machine has endeavored to adhere to the letter of the law, the fact remains that he has violated its spirit.

We find no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and it is therefore affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

EDWIN A. KECK, Admr., etc., of Gustave Nelson Keck, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

LOUISVILLE GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY et al.

(179 Ky. 314, 200 S. W. 452.)

Master and servant — dangerous instrument — motor cycle.

1. A master is not liable for injury done by his servant with a motor cycle furnished for his use, on the mere theory that it is a dangerous instrument.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, III. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — scope of employment — riding home.

2. A trouble man of an electric company who is furnished by his employer with a motor cycle for use in his work is not acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render the master liable for the negligent operation of the machine, while riding to his home after the expiration of his working hours, although the master permits him to use the machine for that purpose.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, III. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1918.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, Fourth Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, in favor of defendants, in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's decedent, alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of a motor cycle. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hubbard & Hubbard, for appellant:

The defendant company having knowingly permitted the defendant Roach to use its motor cycle for the purpose of conveying him from his work to his residence, and from his residence to his work, must respond in damages for the death of a person, caused by the negligent operation of the machine by him while using it as a means of transit from his work to his residence.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Walker, 162 Ky. 209, 172 S. W. 517; Burger v. Taxicab Motor Co. 66 Wash. 676, 120 Pac. 519; Fletcher v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 168 U. S. 135, 42 L.

Note. — As to responsibility of owner of motor cycle for its negligent operation by another, see annotation following this case, post, 656; and references therein for annotation on related questions.

L.R.A.1918C.

ed. 411, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Reames, 173 Ill. 582, 51 N. E. 68, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 471; Reynolds v. Denholm, 213 Mass. 576, 100 N. E. 1006; Ionnone v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 21 R. I. 452, 46 L.R.A. 730, 79 Am. St. Rep. 812, 44 Atl. 592, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 163; Vick v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 267, 47 Am. Rep. 36; Ryan v. Cumberland Valley R. Co. 23 Pa. 384; 1 Bailey, Personal Injuries, 65; Reilly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 94 Mo. 600, 7 S. W. 407.

A motor cycle is a dangerous instrumentality, and the master is bound to exercise a proper degree of care to guard and control and protect dangerous instrumentalities owned or operated by him, and to respond in damages for an injury incurred by reason of the improper use of such instrumentality by a servant, though not then engaged in the performance of his duties.

Tyler v. Stephan, 168 Ky. 770, 174 S. W. 790; Re Wickstrum, 92 Neb. 523, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1068, 138 N. W. 733.

When the defendant company, for a period of four or five years or more, knew that its motor cycle men were riding its machines to go from their work to their homes, and from their homes to their work, and made no objection to same, it thereby consented to same, and placed its stamp of authority and approval upon their acts.

Mauck v. Southern R. Co. 148 Ky. 122, 146 S. W. 28.

Messrs. Matt O'Doherty and J. W. Fowler, Jr., for appellees.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

On January 26, 1916, Gustave Nelson Keck, an infant seven years of age, was struck and killed by a motor cycle belonging to the Louisville Gas & Electric Company, and ridden by Walter Roach, one of its employees. This suit was brought by the administrator of the decedent to recover damages for his death. The Louisville Gas & Electric Company defended on the ground that, at the time of the accident, its codefendant Walter Roach was operating the motor cycle solely for his own purposes, and not in the service or the performance of any duty owing to it. At the conclusion of the evidence, the trial court directed a verdict in favor of the Louisville Gas & Electric Company, and thereupon the action was dismissed as to Roach. Plaintiff appeals.

The facts are as follows: Since the month of May, 1912, Roach had been in appellee's employ as "an incandescent trouble man." The company employed both night and day men for this service. It was their duty to answer calls that might come from its patrons about trouble with the wires or lights in their residences. The company's headquarters were at Seventh and Ormsby avenue. Roach was a day man. His hours of service were from 7 o'clock A. M. to 8 o'clock P. M. In order that they might properly attend to their duties, the incandescent trouble men were furnished by the company with motor cycles. The company had a garage at Seventh and Ormsby avenue where its motor cycles and autos were kept when not in use. On the evening of the accident Roach quit work at 8 o'clock P. M. A few minutes later he left the company's shop at Seventh and Ormsby avenue and started on his way home, riding one of the company's motor cycles. He lived on Eighteenth street near Hill street about a mile from Seventh and Ormsby avenue. When Roach reached a point on Eighteenth street, some distance south of Dumesnil street, decedent and other children were playing a game called "I spy." The decedent was "it," and by the rules of the game he was required to stand at the "base," which was on the west side of Eighteenth street, with his eyes covered until his playmates found their hiding places. Just before Roach came along on the motor cycle, the decedent had crossed to the east side of Eighteenth street. While standing there, one of the boys holloed "free" on the west side and started for the base. Thereupon decedent started to the west side and came in contact with the motor cycle. He was thrown some distance, and received injuries from which he died.

There was no competent evidence tending to show that the incandescent trouble men were authorized by the company to ride the machines home in order that they might answer calls while off duty. There was evidence, however, that Roach and the other trouble men occasionally rode the machines home with the knowledge and acquiescence of the company's employees superior in authority to them. It will thus be seen that the question for decision is whether the company is liable for the negligence of an employee while using one of its motor cycles, with its knowledge and acquiescence, solely for his own convenience, while he was at liberty from the service and was not in the performance of any duty which he owed to the company.

We perceive no reason for applying the rule regulating the care and protection of dangerous instrumentalities. Under that rule, railroad companies cannot intrust their engines, cars, or other dangerous instrumentalities to their employees, even for the purpose of going to and from their homes, without being responsible for injuries caused by the negligent use of such instrumentalities. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Walker, 162 Ky. 209, 172 S. W. 517; Fletcher v. Baltimore

& P. R. Co. 168 U. S. 135, 42 L. ed. 411, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Reames, 173 Ill. 582, 51 N. E. 68, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 471. We are not prepared to say that a motor cycle is a "dangerous instrumentality" within the meaning of that rule. In our opinion it is in the same category with automobiles, in that it is not inherently dangerous, but becomes dangerous only when negligently operated. Hence, we conclude that the company cannot be held liable on the sole ground that Roach used the machine with its knowledge and acquiescence. Tyler v. Stephan, 163 Ky. 770, 174 S. W. 790.

There being no liability on the ground that the company intrusted Roach with a dangerous instrumentality, it follows that the company's liability depends on whether the relation of master and servant existed at the time of the accident. The liability of the master for the negligence of the servant proceeds from the maxim, "Qui facit per alium facit per se." In other words, where the servant is acting for the master and in his stead, the effect is the same as if the act had been performed by the master in person. The test in every case is: Was the servant acting for his master, or for himself? If he acts in the furtherance of his master's business, he acts for the master. If he acts in the furtherance of his own business or pleasure, he acts for himself. Applying these principles to the case under consideration, we find that Roach's working hours ended at 8 o'clock P. M., and the accident happened after that time. He was then at liberty from the service. In riding the motor cycle home, he used it solely for his own convenience, and not for the purpose of performing any duty which he owed to the company. Under these circumstances, he was acting for himself and not for the company, and the company cannot be held liable for his negligence. Nor does the fact that he was then using the company's machine with its knowledge and acquiescence affect the question. Under the best-considered authorities, the liability of the master does not turn on the fact that the servant was then using the master's property, but on whether he was using it in the furtherance of the master's business. Tyler v. Stephan, supra; Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 115 Ky. 447, 103 Am. St. Rep. 380, 74 S. W. 171; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81, 130 N. W. 336, 1 N. C. C. A. 126; Reilly v. Connable, 214 N. Y. 586, L.R.A.1916A, 954, 108 N. E. 853, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 656; Douglass v. Hewson, 142 App. Div. 166, 127 N. Y. Supp. 220; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133. The case of Reynolds v. Denholm, 213 Mass. 576, 100 N. E. 1006, does not conflict with the above rule. There the chauffeur lived in the defendant's house. He had no particular hours of service, but was subject to orders at all times. He took his meals at one place and his laundry at another, each place being about half a mile distant. Both his meals and laundry were paid for by defendant as a part of his wages. He often used the auto for the purpose of going to his meals and getting his laundry. On the evening of the accident, he had ridden to his supper in the automobile, and after supper was on his way to get his laundry, when the accident occurred. After getting his laundry, it was his duty to return to the house to await orders. These facts were held sufficient to make it a question for the jury whether the chauffeur was acting in the scope of his employment at the time of the accident.

Judgment affirmed.

Annotation—Responsibility of owner of motor cycle for its negligent operation by another.

As to regulations affecting motor cycles, see note to Re Wickstrum, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1068.

For motor cycle as a motor vehicle within statutes regulating the latter and other similar vehicles, see note to People v. Smith, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41.

It will be noticed that it was sought to hold the defendant company liable in KECK v. LOUISVILLE GAS & E. Co. ante, 654, for an injury inflicted while its motor cycle was being used by one of its employees, on the theory that it was a dangerous instrumentality, and also on the theory that the employee was using it within the scope of his em- L.R.A.1918C.

ployment; but that a recovery was denied on the first theory, the court holding that there was no reason for applying the rule regulating the care and protection of dangerous instrumentalities, and also on the second theory, where it appeared that the employee was using the machine to go to his home after working hours, although such use was with the defendant's permission. The decision in this case is in accord with cases involving the liability of an owner of an automobile for injuries inflicted by his machine while it is being used by another for his own purposes.

Generally, as to liability of owner for injuries by automobile while being used by a servant or a third person for his own business or pleasure, see annotation to Reilly v. Connable, L.R.A.1916A, 957, and earlier annotations there referred to.

And as to liability of owner, upon the ground of dangerous agency or of negligence in intrusting car to incompetent or negligent person, for injuries inflicted while the latter is operating the car for his own purpose, see notes to Neubrand v. Kraft, L.R.A.1915D, 691; Walker v. Klopp, L.R.A.1916E, 1295; and Gardiner v. Solomon, L.R.A.1917F, 384.

Generally, as to liability of master for injury done by servant to third person in use of dangerous agency, see note to Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Currie, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 367.

And as liability where automobile is being used by a member of owner's family, see annotation to McNeal v. McKain, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775; Birch v. Abercrombie, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59; Griffin v. Russell, L.R.A.1916F, 223; and Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, L.R.A.1917F, 363; and later case, Blair v. Broadwater, L.R.A.1918A, 1011.

There are, as yet, few cases in which a recovery has been sought against the owner of a motor cycle for an injury resulting from the operation of his machine by another.

The decision in KECK v. LOUISVILLE GAS & E. CO. is in accord with that reached in Babbitt v. Seattle School Dist. (1918) — Wash. —, 176 Pac. 1020. A prima facie case was established in that case by proof of an injury to the plaintiff by a motor cycle, and the defendant's ownership thereof, and its use at the time by an employee, but, it having been subsequently shown by undisputed evidence that at the time of the injury the employee had ceased his day's work and was using the motor cycle for his own convenience, without permission from the defendant and against one of its rules, it was held that the defendant was not liable for the injury. The court said: "The owner of a motor vehicle who was not present at the infliction of the injury cannot be held liable except it be shown that the person in charge was not only agent of the owner, but was at the time engaged in the business of his master. While authority to use a motor vehicle in exceptional ways might be implied by circumstances which would warrant the inference that the employer knew of such uses, the commitment of such a vehicle to the custody and control of an employee for the special purpose of delivering merchandise would not alone authorize the conclusion that the employee was at liberty to use the motor vehicle for other purposes. . . . It is well settled by all authorities that the act complained of must have been done while the servant was engaged in doing some act under authority from his master; not that while engaged in the act he is employed in the master's business, but the act must have been in the furtherance of the master's business, and such as may be fairly said to have been so expressly or impliedly authorized by the master. . . .

By the uncontradicted evidence Brown had ceased his day's work, and was not in the employ or under the control of appellant until he resumed work the next day at 8 o'clock. He was not, then, in the service of appellant at the time of the accident. . . . The presumption, growing out of a prima facie case established by proof of the injury and the ownership of the motor cycle and the use thereof by an employee of the owner of the motor cycle, subsisted only so long as there was no substantial evidence to the contrary. When that was offered the presumption disappeared, unless met by further proof. Here the presumption arising from the fact of ownership was entirely destroyed by the other evidence."

In Maskell v. Alexander (1916) 91 Wash. 363, 157 Pac. 872, the only other case which has apparently considered the question under annotation, a recovery was sought against the owner of a motor cycle for an injury inflicted while its rider was practising on a race track for races. There was evidence tending to show not only the defendant's ownership, but also that he exercised control and supervision over the motor cycle and its rider; that he joined with owners of other motor cycles entered for the races in arranging for rules and judges; that he entered several motor cycles in the races and expended a considerable amount in preparing the machines and fixing for the races, and expected to get benefit from the races by way of advertising. It was held in this case that the evidence was sufficient to make it a question for the jury whether the rider was a mere gratuitous bailee of the motor cycle, or was an agent or servant of the defendant, and that it was sufficient to support the jury's finding that the rider was acting as the defendant's employee.

And an instruction that if the defendant permitted the rider to use the motor cycle at the preliminary practice races and that that arrangement was in contemplation of some benefit to be derived, or which reasonably might be expected would be derived, from the use of the machine in the races to the defendant's business, then he would be liable for the rider's acts, was held, when taken in connection with other instructions, not erroneous on the ground that it led the jury to believe that if any benefit, without qualifications, was contemplated or could reasonably be expected, the defendant would be liable for the rider's acts.

A further instruction that the owner of a motor cycle has a legal right to loan his machine, and if he does so, and the borrower uses it in and about his own business, and the owner has no management or control over it, or the borrower while the latter is using it, the owner cannot be held liable to one injured while the borrower is so using it, was approved.

J. T. W.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MERCHANTS TRANSFER COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.

HULDAH H. KISER.

(179 Ky. 324, 200 S. W. 454.)

Carrier — loss through defect in goods — care.

A transfer company is liable for loss of the goods of a customer by fire originating in the explosion of a firearm packed in the goods if, by the exercise of ordinary care after discovering the fire, it might have extinguished it and saved the goods.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. o, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1918.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, in an action brought to recover the value of property lost by fire while in defendant's possession for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. D. Berry for appellant.

Messrs. Allen & Duncan, for appellee:

Defendant, as a common carrier, was an insurer of the safe delivery of the goods, unless the loss by fire was caused by the inherent quality of the goods, and even if the fire was caused by the discharge of a loaded pistol packed in the goods, yet, if the negligence of the defendant contributed to the loss in whole or in part, it is liable for the loss.

10 C. J. 121; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Williams, 156 Ky. 114, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 347, 160 S. W. 769; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Rankin, 153 Ky. 730, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 529, 156 S. W. 400.

The burden of proof is on the carrier to show that the loss was due to an excepted cause.

10 C. J. 215; Slater v. South Carolina R. Co. 29 S. C. 96, 6 S. E. 936.

It was a question of fact for the jury to determine as to how the fire was started.

Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 125 Ky. 656, 102 S. W. 232.

Hurt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee Huldah Kiser brought this action in the Fayette circuit court against the Merchants Transfer Company, which is a corporation doing business as a common carrier. By her petition, she averred that on the 20th day of April, 1916, she delivered to the appellant a lot of household goods, furniture, and articles of household use, under a contract with it that it would transport them from Lexington, Kentucky, and deliver them to her at Danville, Kentucky, and which it agreed and undertook to do for a compensation agreed upon between them, but violated its contract and failed to deliver the goods, or any part thereof, to her at Danville, Kentucky; that the goods were of the value of $1,250, and prayed a judgment against it in that sum. The appellant

Note.—The duty of a carrier to take precautions to prevent loss threatened without any antecedent fault on its part is discussed in the note to Pine Bros. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 640; and see notes of collateral interest therein cited. See also the case of Kime v. Southern R. Co. 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 617, with note on "Liability of carrier for suffocation of live stock;" and the case of George B. Higgins & Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. L.R.A. 1917C, 507. L.R.A. 1918C.

The effect of the shipper's negligence in loading car, or as to condition of car, upon the carrier's common-law liability, is treated in the notes to Duncan v. Great Northern R. Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 952, and Illinois C. R. Co. v. Rogers, L.R.A. 1915C, 1220.

The liability of a carrier in respect of property which it accepts improperly packed or crated is treated in the notes to Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Rice, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1214, and Northwestern Marble & Tile Co. v. Williams, L.R.A. 1915D, 1077.

by its answer admitted the delivery of the articles to it for transportation to Danville, Kentucky, but averred that the appellee had "fraudulently, negligently, and wrongfully," and without its knowledge, placed among the goods, which she had represented to it to be household goods and furniture, a loaded revolver which, on the road between Lexington and Danville, was discharged without fault upon the part of the appellant, and which set fire to the goods, and they were consumed by the fire, including a portion of its wagon. It made its answer a counterclaim against the appellee, and prayed that the petition be dismissed, and that it recover of her the value of its wagon. The averments of the answer and counterclaim were denied by a reply, and in addition the appellee alleged that, although it might be true that the goods were set on fire by the discharge of the revolver, as alleged, the servants of appellant in charge of the wagon and goods could have, by ordinary care, discovered the fire in time to have saved her goods from burning, as well as have saved its wagon, but that they had negligently failed to do so. The affirmative averments of the reply were denied by a rejoinder. Upon the issues thus presented by the pleadings, the case went to trial before a jury, and the result of it was a verdict in favor of appellee against appellant for a sum of $815, and a judgment was rendered in favor of her against it for that sum.

The appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, it has appealed from the judgment to this court, and assigns as error: (1) The refusal of the court to give two instructions asked for by it; and (2) the giving of two other instructions by the court, over its objection, wherein it contends that the court misinstructed the jury as to the law which pertains to the facts as presented by the evidence in the case. The court instructed the jury substantially as follows: That it should find a verdict for the plaintiff, unless it believed from the evidence that the fire which destroyed the goods was caused by the explosion of a cartridge in the pistol, which was packed with the goods, in which event it should find for the defendant, unless it further believed from the evidence that, by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servants in charge of the wagon, the fire could have been discovered by them in time to have saved the goods from destruction, and in that event it should find for the plaintiff, although it might believe from the evidence that the fire was caused by the discharge of the revolver. Another instruction defined the measure of damages to which the appellee was entitled, in the event the jury should find a verdict for her. A fourth instruction directed the jury that if it believed from the evidence that the appellee was negligent in placing the revolver among the goods, or it was packed therein in a negligent manner, and that the fire which destroyed the goods was caused by the explosion of a cartridge in the revolver, to find for the appellant upon its counterclaim, unless it should further believe from the evidence that the servants in charge of the wagon at the time it was destroyed could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have prevented its destruction. The measure of damages which it should find on account of the destruction of the wagon, in the event the jury found a verdict for the appellant on its counterclaim, was properly defined by the instructions. The words "ordinary care" and "negligence," as used in the instructions, were also defined.

The objection made to the instructions is that the court permitted the jury to find a verdict against the appellant, although the fire was caused by the explosion of a cartridge in the pistol, if the servants of appellant in charge of the wagon could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered the fire in time to have saved the goods, and could then by the exercise of ordinary care have done so. The rejected instruction offered by the appellant presented its view of the case by directing the jury to find for the plaintiff, unless it believed from the evidence that the fire which destroyed the goods was caused by the explosion of a cartridge in the pistol, and if it believed that it was so caused to find for the defendant, thus absolving the appellant from any liability on account of the negligence of its servants in discovering the fire, or thereafter taking steps to save the goods from burning. The other instruction offered by appellant, which was rejected, was similar to the one given by the court upon the subject of its counterclaim, except that the one offered by appellant did not provide that a recovery could not be had for the loss of the wagon, if the servants of the appellant could have, by the exercise of ordinary care, saved the wagon from destruction, and negligently failed to do so.

It is conceded that the duty which was incumbent upon the appellant in the transportation and delivery of the goods was that of a common carrier. In other words, its obligation was that of an insurer of the safe transportation to and delivery of the goods at Danville. The carrier is liable for all loss of or injury to goods which he is engaged in transporting, unless the loss or injury is caused by the act of God, or of the public enemy, or of the public authority, or by the inherent nature or quality of the goods, or the act or fault of the shipper. Where the carrier relies upon the act of God, the public enemy, or the public authority, or the inherent nature or quality of the goods, or the fault of the shipper, as the reason for the loss or injury suffered by the goods, and as a defense to a recovery of him for the loss or injury, he must take the burden of so showing from the fact that he is in possession of the goods and in a position to be able to account for loss of them or injury to them. He cannot, however, be excused unless the loss or injury was the entire cause, for if his negligence contributed to the cause of the loss, and except for his negligence the loss would not have occurred, the carrier is not excused. 10 C. J. 21, 215; 6 Cyc. 376; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Rankin, 153 Ky. 730, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 529, 156 S. W. 400; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Williams, 156 Ky. 114, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 347, 160 S. W. 769; Stiles v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 129 Ky. 175, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1112, 130 Am. St. Rep. 465, 110 S. W. 820; Hall v. Renfro, 3 Met. 51; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 118 Ky. 115, 80 S. W. 488; Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 125 Ky. 656, 102 S. W. 232. Hence, if the facts of the case as presented by the evidence were such as to justify the giving of the instructions, and to make issues in the evidence of such as were submitted to the jury, it is apparent that the court properly instructed the jury as to the law.

The rule is, however, invoked that, although the issue was made in the pleadings as to the alleged negligence of the servants of the appellant who were in charge of the wagon in failing to exercise ordinary care in discovering that the goods were on fire and in saving them after the discovery, it is insisted that there was no evidence tending to prove any negligence upon the part of the servants, and hence the court should not have submitted the issue to the jury. Doubtless this contention should be upheld, if all the facts proven by the evidence, and the inference deducible therefrom, would show that the servants of appellant in charge of the wagon had not failed to exercise ordinary care for the safety and preservation of the goods; but, if the facts were such that reasonable men might well differ as to whether there was a failure to exercise ordinary care, it then became a question for the jury, and was properly submitted to it for its determination.

There were two servants of appellant with the wagon, to which was attached two horses. If the theory of the appellant is correct as to the origin of the fire, it had burned for  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a mile, a large part of which was traveled in a slow walk, with both servants riding upon the front of the wagon and within 3 or 4 feet of the fire, before they discovered it, and then only when a witness who lived beside the road, and who had seen smoke arising from the wagon before it arrived at her house, by vehement cries attracted their attention and told them of it. Neither servant made any effort to save the goods, but both proceeded to unhitch the team; but the owner of the house insisted that they remove the wagon from such close proximity to his house, when they hitched the team, drove 300 feet further, and then again unhitched the team and carried the horses away 50 or 60 feet, and then returned to the wagon. Neither up to this time had made any effort to save any of the contents, and not a single article was saved, but all were consumed. The facts and circumstances were all in evidence, as detailed by the servants of the appellant and other witnesses, and they are not such as to prove, without any contradiction or differences of opinion among reasonable men, that ordinary care was used by the servants in taking care of the goods, to discover the fact that they were on fire, or to save either them or the wagon after they became aware of the fire. There is a failure to satisfy that, if such efforts had been made to save the goods as might and could have been made, they would not have been saved. A jury is peculiarly a competent tribunal to determine such an issue, and it is not our province to say whether, in our opinion, they arrived at the proper verdict. The evidence was such as to require its submission to the jury, and is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

The court, therefore, properly rejected the instructions asked by appellant, and properly gave the ones which it gave in lieu of them.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES B. SWING, Trustee, etc., of the Union Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Respt.,

v.

CLOQUET LUMBER COMPANY, Appt.

(121 Minn. 221, 141 N. W. 117.)

Evidence — admission — contents of document.

1. The contents of a policy of insurance and of a premium note may be proved Headnotes by HALLAM, J.

Note. — As to proof of contents of writing by admissions, see annotation following this case, post, 664.

against a party by his admissions in writing, without production of the original documents themselves, or accounting for their nonproduction.

For other cases, see Evidence, IX. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — assessing policyholders.

2. A decree that an "assessment shall be made" against all policyholders, which determines the unpaid liabilities according to their accrual by quarterly periods, and fixes the percentage of assessment against every policy in force during the respective periods, is an assessment, and not an order for an assessment.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Insurance — notice of assessment — validity.

3. Defendant was liable to assessment on only one policy. The notice stated separately and correctly the amount for which he was liable on this policy, except that it did not give him credit for payments made. It erroneously stated that he was liable to assessment on other policies, and demanded payment for an aggregate sum which was largely excessive. There was nothing to indicate that defendant was prejudiced or misled, and the notice was not for this reason void.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — notice — variance from decree.

4. A notice which requires payment in a shorter time than the decree provides is not for that reason void, where a copy of the decree accompanies the notice.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — by registered mail — sufficiency.

5. The notice of assessment was given by registered mail. This complied with the provision of the decree requiring "due notice." It also complied with the by-laws of the company. There was no proof of any statute of Ohio bearing on this question. The manner of giving notice was sufficient.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — deposit note — credits.

6. The by-laws of the company provide that no member shall be liable, except to the extent of his deposit note. Defendant's note was $687.50. It had paid $302.50 before the assessment by the court. The court made an assessment of 86.0003 per cent of the face of the note. If no credit is given for payments made defendant's assessment will far exceed its liability. Held, defendant is entitled to credit on the assessment for the amount paid.

For other cases, see Insurance, III. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 25, 1913.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for St. Louis County in plaintiff's favor in an action L.R.A.1918C.

brought to recover an amount alleged to be due for an assessment upon certain insurance policies claimed to have been issued by the insurance company to defendant. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William B. Phelps, for appellant:

There was no evidence of an assessment having been made.

Swing v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. 62 Minn. 169, 64 N. W. 97; Swing v. Humbird, 94 Minn. 1, 101 N. W. 938.

The notice given was not such as the defendant was entitled to receive.

Benedict v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 48 Minn. 471, 51 N. W. 371; National Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Miller, 85 Ky. 92, 2 S. W. 909; Northwestern Traveling Men's Asso. v. Schauss, 148 Ill. 304, 310, 35 N. E. 747; 2 Bacon, Ben. Soc. §§ 381, 382; Miner v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Asso. 63 Mich. 338, 29 N. W. 852; Swing v. Barnard-Cope Mfg. Co. 115 Minn. 47, 131 N. W. 855; Swing v. Wurst, 76 Minn. 198, 79 N. W. 94.

Messrs. P. A. Reece, and E. J. Kenny, for respondent:

Where the name of an individual appears on the stock book of a corporation as a stockholder, the presumption is that he is the owner of the stock, and in an action against him as a stockholder the burden of rebutting that presumption is cast upon defendant.

Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 24 L. ed. 437; Finn v. Brown, 142 U. S. 56, 72, 35 L. ed. 936, 941, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Longdale Iron Co. v. Pomeroy Iron Co. 34 Fed. 450; Bank of Commerce's Appeal, 73 Pa. 59; Glenn v. McAllister, 46 Fed. 887; Vanderwerken v. Glenn, 85 Va. 9, 6 S. E. 806.

The making of the decree of assessment by the court, and the computing of the amount due from each member and giving notice thereof by the trustee, completed the making of the assessment.

Langworthy v. Garding, 74 Minn. 325, 77 N. W. 207; Swing v. Rose, 75 Ohio St. 355, 79 N. E. 757; Swing v. Karges Furniture Co. 123 Mo. App. 367, 100 S. W. 662; Swing v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. 62 Minn. 169, 64 N. W. 97.

The notice given to defendant was sufficient.

Thibert v. Supreme Lodge K. H. 78 Minn. 448, 47 L.R.A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412; Benedict v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 48 Minn. 471, 51 N. W. 371; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Hamlin, 139 U. S. 301, 35 L. ed. 169, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614; Thropp v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. 125 Pa. 427, 11 Am. St. Rep. 909, 17 Atl. 473.

Hallam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Union Mutual Fire Insurance Company was a mutual insurance corporation incorporated under the laws of Ohio in June, 1888. It had a short career. In two years it was insolvent, and on December 18, 1890, judgment was entered in the supreme court of Ohio that it be ousted and excluded from being a corporation, and plaintiff James B. Swing was appointed trustee to wind up its affairs. The trusteeship has had a much longer career. It is now in its twenty-third year.

The by-laws of this corporation provided that any person wishing to become a member of said company should deposit with the secretary an application, together with a premium note of such amount as might be required by the board of directors, and should pay 20 per cent of said note in cash previous to the issuance of a policy; that such deposit note should continue in force during the life of the policy for which it was issued, and should be subject to assessment for losses and expenses. It was further provided that "no member shall be liable for losses or expenses, or for any indebtedness of the company, in any amount, except to the extent of the premium notes given by him." It is further alleged, and the court found, that on the 1st day of July, 1889, defendant applied to said insurance company for insurance on its mill property, and executed and delivered its premium note in the sum of $687.50, and soon thereafter made the first payment of $137.50; that said company on said day issued to defendant its policy of insurance No. 2652 in the sum of $5,000. The court further found that on November 14, 1889, defendant paid an assessment of $27.50, and on November 3, 1890, an assessment of $137.50.

On June 11, 1901, the supreme court of Ohio made a decree "that the following assessments shall be made against all persons who hold policies of insurance in said company." The decree then determined the amount of unpaid liabilities according to their accrual by quarterly periods, and fixed the per cent of assessment against every policy in force during these respective periods. It provided that all persons who without being sued for them paid their assessments in accordance with the decree should have rebated to them one third thereof, and the trustee was given full power and was ordered to sue for and collect the full assessments, without rebate, when thirty days had elapsed after due notice thereof.

On March 25, 1902, the trustee sent by registered mail to each policyholder a notice of this assessment, which notice stated in detail the amount such policyholder was obliged to pay on every policy he had in force, and also the amount that every other policyholder was obliged to pay, and contained the words: "You are required by law to pay within thirty days from this date, viz., March 22, 1902."

The amount of this assessment for the period during which defendant's policy was in force was 86.0003 per cent of the face of its premium note. The trial court held that defendant was liable for such percentage, amounting to $591.25, and judgment was entered accordingly. Defendant appeals.

1. Defendant contends that there is no competent proof as to the contents of the premium note given by it or of the policy issued by plaintiff. It is true neither document was offered in evidence. It does appear that a premium note was given and that a policy was issued. It was necessary for plaintiff to further prove, by competent evidence, the amount of the note and the amount and duration of the policy.

Plaintiff offered for this purpose the policy register of the company. This contains entries showing the issuance of policy No. 2652, the date thereof, the original amount thereof, the amount of the premium note, the amount that it was reduced by fire, and the amount of insurance remaining in force. Plaintiff contends that the policy register is competent evidence of these facts. He invokes the rule applied to stock corporations that, where the name of an individual appears on the stock book of a corporation as a stockholder, that fact establishes prima facie his relation as a stockholder in an action against him to enforce a stockholder's liability. Holland v. Duluth Iron Min. & Development Co. 65 Minn. 324, 60 Am. St. Rep. 480, 68 N. W. 50; Turnbull v. Payson. 95 U. S. 418, 24 L. ed. 437. It is unnecessary to determine whether this rule is to be so extended as to make a policy register of a company such as this evidence in an action of this sort to establish the relation of policyholder, the amount of the policy, and the existence and amount of the premium note. It does appear in this case, from competent evidence, that the two assessments above mentioned were paid on a policy bearing the number 2652. It appears that defendant sustained a loss by fire; that there was paid by the insurance company to defendant, by reason thereof and on account of this policy, the sum of $33.26; that defendant receipted therefor, and in said receipt recited that this policy No. 2652 was reduced in the amount of this loss, leaving the sum of $4,966.74 still in force. It further appears that on December 30, 1890, defendant returned to the company this policy with a letter containing the following:

Herewith return as requested.

Prem. Expires
2652 Gen'l Form $5,000 $137.50 July 1, 1894

Kindly give us proper credit for return premium and forward note to us at once and oblige.

This testimony constitutes an admission in writing of the essential parts of the policy and of the premium note. Some controversy has existed in the past as to whether the contents of a written instrument may be proved against a party by his own admissions, and the question has not heretofore been decided in this state. Webster v. Ferguson, 94 Minn. 86, 91, 102 N. W. 213. The weight of authority is to the effect that such proof is competent. Slatterie v. Poolley, 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Harr. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202; 2 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 1255 et seq. This rule is sound in principle, at least when the admissions are in writing as they are in this case. We hold that a written admission of the contents of a written document may be established against the party making the admission, without production of the document or accounting for its nonproduction. This evidence is in this case ample and conclusive without resort to the policy register at all.

2. Defendant further contends that no assessment was ever in fact made by the Ohio supreme court; that the decree above mentioned was only an order for an assessment to be made by the trustee, which assessment the trustee never made. We do not concur in this contention. The material language of the decree is above stated. This language manifests a clear intent that the decree itself shall constitute the assessment, and it contains all the necessary elements thereof. It is true the decree did not compute the amount to be paid by each policyholder. But it fixed the per cent which each must pay. The amount of the assessment could be ascertained in any case by mere mathematical calculation. This is the view that this court has heretofore taken of this same decree. It was before the court in Swing v. Barnard-Cope Mfg. Co. 115 Minn. 47, 131 N. W. 855. In that case the court said: "In effect that decree levied assessments on the policyholders to pay the debts of the company. . . . The decree made the liability of the policyholders absolute. It gave a cause of action to the receiver against each policyholder for the amount of his assessment."

Defendant contends that the notice of assessment was invalid.

3. The notice stated that defendant's as-essment amounted to $1,106.88. This was far in excess of the amount for which defendant was liable. This fact did not render the notice void. The notice incorporated the decree in full, and it indicated the precise amount assessed on account of the policy and premium note on which defendant was held liable by the trial court. The total amount claimed was excessive, partly because policies were included that were not subject to assessment, and partly because of the failure to give the credit hereinafter mentioned. Defendant could not have been misled or prejudiced by the claim of an excessive amount, and the notice was not invalidated thereby.

4. It is urged that the notice was incorrect in stating the time within which the assessment should be paid. The decree required payment of the assessment within thirty days after due notice thereof, and gave the option to discharge the assessment within such thirty days by paying two thirds of the amount. The notice read: "You are required by law to pay within thirty days from this date, viz., March 22, 1902." This notice was not mailed until March 25th. But the notice gave verbatim the contents of the decree. We are of the opinion that the defendant could not have been misled or prejudiced by the defect in the notice mentioned. The case is entirely different from those cases where the giving of a notice is made the basis of a forfeiture.

5. It is contended that the notice of this assessment was not properly served. As above stated, the notice was sent by registered mail to all persons assessed. Defendant received its notice. The decree merely provides for "due notice thereof." The notice given was "due notice." Alworth v. Gordon, 81 Minn. 445, 84 N. W. 454. The by-laws of the corporation provide that "notice of assessments . . . shall be given personally to the parties liable, or printed or written notice requesting payment shall be mailed to them at their last postoffice address known to the officers of the company. The notice in this case complied with the by-laws.

It is contended, however, that notice by mail was not a compliance with the statutes of Ohio. Sections 3650 and 3651 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, as amended by Act April 14, 1888 (85 Ohio Laws, p. 273), are in evidence. Section 3650, as so amended, provides in respect to assessments: "The directors shall, as often as they deem necessary, settle and determine the sum to be paid by the several members thereof, and publish the same in such manner as they may choose, or as the by-laws prescribe. . . ." Section 3651, as so amended, provides that "if a member neglect or refuse for the space of thirty days after the publication of such notice and after demand for payment to pay the sum assessed upon him. . . . the directors may sue for and recover the whole amount of contingent liability." It was held in Swing v. Wurst, 76 Minn. 108, 79 N. W. 94, that these sections applied to an assessment made by a receiver, and that they contemplated a "publication" in some manner of the notice of assessment. It is contended that the mailing of the notice was not a publication." It is unnecessary to determine whether it was or not, for it appears from the evidence in this case that the amended §§ 3650 and 3651 have no application to this proceeding. Section 2 of the act of April 24, 1888, by which these sections were amended, is decisive of this. This section was not in evidence in Swing v. Wurst, supra. This section provides that "this act shall not affect companies now doing business on the premium note plan, unless they elect to dispense with said notes and embody the contingent liability in the policy as herein provided and said original sections [3650 and 3651] are hereby repealed: Provided, that said sections shall remain in force as to all mutual companies now doing business, which do not elect to reorganize under said sections as amended by this act." This company did not so reorganize. Swing v. Humbird, 94 Minn. 1, 101 N. W. 938; Swing v. Red River Lumber Co. 105 Minn. 336, 117 N. W. 442. The original and not the amended sections accordingly apply to this company and to this proceeding. But the original sections are not in evidence. We can assume nothing as to their contents. There is, accordingly, no statute of Ohio in evidence which in any way prescribes the manner of giving the notice that was given in this proceeding.

6. The amount of the premium note involved in this case was $687.50. Defendant had paid $302.50 prior to this assessment. The trial court found that under the decree of assessment plaintiff should recover 86.0003 per cent of the face of its premium note, or the sum of $591.25 without deduction for the amounts already paid. Defendant contends that it should receive credit for the amounts previously paid on this premium note. Defendant's contention is correct. If the judgment of the trial court stands, plaintiff will be obliged to pay, including what he has paid, the sum of $893.75. But the by-laws of the company provide that "no member shall be liable for losses or expenses, or for any indebtedness of the company, in any amount, except to the extent of the premium notes given by him." The decree does not, in terms, give credit for payments previously made to the company on premium notes, but it is not to be presumed that the supreme court of Ohio intended to make an assessment against this defendant for more than $200 in excess of the amount for which he was liable under the by-laws of the company. We accordingly hold that defendant is entitled to credit against the amount found by the trial court, in the amount of payment previously made, and that its liability is $288.75 and interest, and no more. Judgment of the trial court will be modified to that extent. As so modified, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Annotation—Proof of contents of writing by admissions.

- I. Introductory, 664.*
- II. View favoring admissions, 665.*
- III. View excluding admissions, 668.*
- IV. Miscellaneous, 671.*

I. Introductory.

This note excludes cases where ground has been laid for the introduction of secondary evidence. It is not intended, in general, to include cases of admissions merely of title, or merely that a writing has been executed, or admissions of partnership, or cases where the admission was a subsequent instrument executed by the parties, or cases relating to the competency or credibility of witnesses.

The courts are not agreed upon the interesting and important question whether there may be proof of contents of written instruments by admissions, where no ground has been laid for the admission of secondary evidence. L.R.A.1918C.

The courts that admit the evidence do so on the theory that the admission or declaration is admitted as primary evidence of itself, and not as secondary evidence of the instrument in question. In some cases a distinction is made, or sought to be made, between instruments "collateral to the issue" and those directly in issue, holding that evidence of admissions as to collateral instruments may be received as an exception to the rule of exclusion. This is hardly a satisfactory solution of the problem. It may at least be said that in cases where the party seeking to introduce his opponent's admission has possession of the instrument in question, there is no good reason why he should not be required to produce it.

Prof. Wigmore (2 Ev. § 1255) makes the following suggestion: "The proper solution of the dilemma would be this:

When an admission of the contents is testified to, let production be dispensed with; but if the fact of the admission is bona fide disputed by the opponent, and some testimony to that effect is put in by him, then let production be required or the document's absence be accounted for."

Before the decision in Slatterie v. Pooley (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Harr. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202, the question in England seems to have been in doubt. In Sussex v. Temple (1698) 1 Ld. Raym. 310, 91 Eng. Reprint, 1102, it was held that an answer in chancery admitting a deed might be shown against the heir of such answerer. But in Call v. Dunning (1803) 4 East, 54, 102 Eng. Reprint, 750, it was held that an answer in chancery admitting a bond was not evidence of its execution. In Bloxam v. Elsee (1825) 1 Car. & P. (Eng.) 558, Abbott, Ch. J., said "that you cannot ask a witness what a plaintiff has said as to the contents of deeds executed by such plaintiff, without giving such plaintiff notice to produce the deeds, or accounting for their nonproduction." On the other hand, in Sewell v. Stubbs (1824) 1 Car. & P. (Eng.) 73, where the defendants asked a witness whether one of the plaintiffs had not told him that he held a note of a certain firm for a certain amount, to which it was objected that the witness could not be asked the contents of the note, Gifford, Ch. J., said: "They may certainly ask anything that either of the plaintiffs said." And in Earle v. Pickin (1833) 5 Car. & P. (Eng.) 542, a case not clearly reported, Park, J., said: "What a party says is evidence against himself, as an admission, whether it relates to the contents of a written paper or to anything else."

The best known case on the subject is Slatterie v. Pooley (Eng.) supra, where it was held that the defendant's own declarations were admissible in evidence to prove the identity of the debts sued for with those mentioned in a certain schedule, although such admissions involved the contents of a written instrument not produced. Parke, B., said: "The reason why such parol statements are admissible, without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. The weight and value of such testimony is quite another question. That will vary according to the circumstances, and it may be, in some cases, quite unsatisfactory to a jury. But it is enough for the present purpose to say that the evidence is admissible." Lord Abinger, C. B., who was not present at the argument, stated: "That he had always considered it as clear law that a party's own statements were in all cases admissible against himself, whether they corroborate the contents of a written instrument or not."

This case has been followed in England but dissented from in Ireland. In the United States there is much difference of opinion on the subject. It will be seen that SWING v. CLOQUET LUMBER Co. ante, 660, follows the rule of Slatterie v. Pooley.

II. View favoring admissions.

The doctrine that the contents of writings may be proved by admissions is held in numerous cases. Slatterie v. Pooley (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Harr. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202; Howard v. Smith (1841) 3 Mann. & G. 254, 133 Eng. Reprint, 1138, 3 Scott, N. R. 574, 10 L. J. C. P. N. S. 245; Reg. v. Welch (1846) 2 Car. & K. (Eng.) 296, 1 Den. C. C. 199, 2 Cox, C. C. 85; Boulter v. Peplow (1850) 9 C. B. 493, 137 Eng. Reprint, 984, 19 L. J. C. P. N. S. 190, 14 Jur. 248; Murray v. Gregory (1850) 5 Exch. 468, 155 Eng. Reprint, 205, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 355, 14 Jur. 555, infra; Reg. v. Basingstoke (1871) 14 Q. B. 611, 117 Eng. Reprint, 237, infra; Pritchard v. Bagshawe (1871) 11 C. B. 459, 138 Eng. Reprint, 551, 2 Loundes, M. & P. 323, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 161, 15 Jur. 730; Rogers v. Card (1858) 7 U. C. C. P. 89; Paige v. Loring (1873) Holmes, 275, Fed. Cas. No. 10,672, infra; Morey v. Hoyt (1893) 62 Conn. 542, 19 L.R.A. 611, 26 Atl. 127, infra; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Wilson (1894) 4 Colo. App. 355, 36 Pac. 67, infra (obiter); Coombs v. Union Trust Co. (1897) 146 Ind. 688, 46 N. E. 16, infra; Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. International Filter Co. (1916) 62 Ind. App. 421, 113 N. E. 17 (as stating the rule); Gay v. Lloyd (1847) 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 78, 46 Am. Dec. 78, infra; Blackington v. Rockland (1877) 66 Me. 332, infra; Purinton v. Purinton (1906) 101

Me. 250, 115 Am. St. Rep. 309, 63 Atl. 925, 8 Ann. Cas. 205, infra; Crichton v. Smith (1870) 34 Md. 42, infra; Maurice v. Worden (1880) 54 Md. 233, 39 Am. Rep. 384, infra; Smith v. Palmer (1850) 6 Cush. (Mass.) 513, infra; Loomis v. Wadhams (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 557, infra; Clarke v. Warwick Cycle Mfg. Co. (1899) 174 Mass. 434, 54 N. E. 887, infra; Hutchinson v. Plant (1914) 218 Mass. 148, 105 N. E. 1017, infra; SWING v. CLOQUET LUMBER CO.; Edgar v. Richardson (1878) 33 Ohio St. 591, 31 Am. Rep. 571, infra; Curtis v. Ingham (1829) 2 Vt. 287, infra; Taylor v. Peck (1871) 21 Gratt. (Va.) 11, infra.

Thus, admissions have been received of reference of a claim to an arbitrator and his adverse award (Murray v. Gregory (1850) 5 Exch. 468, 155 Eng. Reprint, 205, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 355, 14 Jur. 555); that the defendant was treasurer (by his admission in a bond) (Reg. v. Welch (1846) 2 Car. & K. (Eng.) 296, 1 Den. C. C. 199, 2 Cox, C. C. 85); of the existence and contents of a deed (Rogers v. Card (1858) 7 U. C. C. P. 89); of what the defendant had stated as to the contents of a letter (Paige v. Loring (1873) Holmes, 275, Fed. Cas. No. 10,673; Loomis v. Wadhams (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 557; Purinton v. Purinton (1906) 101 Me. 250, 115 Am. St. Rep. 309, 63 Atl. 925, 8 Ann. Cas. 205); of what a party's agent had stated partly reading from a letter (Brown v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (1902) 14 Haw. 80); in answer to interrogatories as to attachment proceedings in another state (Combs v. Union Trust Co. (1897) 146 Ind. 688, 46 N. E. 16); of a city's receipt of a notice (Blackington v. Rockland (1877) 66 Me. 332); of using the words complained of as libelous (Maurice v. Worden (1880) 54 Md. 233, 39 Am. Rep. 384); of the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant corporation (Clarke v. Warwick Cycle Mfg. Co. (1899) 174 Mass. 434, 54 N. E. 887); of a woman that she had been divorced, admitted against one claiming under a deed from her (Edgar v. Richardson (1878) 33 Ohio St. 591, 31 Am. Rep. 571).

In Gay v. Lloyd (1857) 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 78, 46 Am. Dec. 78, on the plea of no such record, it was held that a transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace, not authenticated so as to be evidence, was properly received in evidence, when the defendant was shown to have stated that such a judgment was rendered against him by such justice, J. R. A. 1918C.

although he did not admit that it was the correct copy and said it was unjust.

In Crichton v. Smith (1870) 34 Md. 42, it was held that a paper put in evidence in a suit by the defendant as being a charter party was evidence against him in another suit as being such charter party. It seems that the parties were the same in both suits, but an objection was made that it did not appear that they were the same, to which the court replied that it was immaterial whether they were the same or not.

In Hutchinson v. Plant (1914) 218 Mass. 148, 105 N. E. 1017, the plaintiff's counsel, in examining the defendant as a witness, asked him if he had dictated to anyone what took place at a certain interview, and he said that he had done so to his attorney, and the plaintiff's counsel then continued to ask him, reading from a paper, whether he had said so-and-so, to which he practically assented. The court said the evidence was not put in by the plaintiff to show the contents of the statement dictated by the witness, but as proof of his declarations material to the issues on trial. The testimony was primary evidence of his oral admission, rather than secondary evidence of the contents of the paper written from what he said.

In Taylor v. Peck (1871) 21 Gratt. (Va.) 11, where the defendant, in order to prove that he held the premises as the tenant of the plaintiff, offered receipts for rent from the plaintiff, it was held to be error to exclude the receipts on the ground that he held under a written lease.

Judicial statements and explanations of the rule.

(See also the quotations from Slatterie v. Pooley (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202, supra, I.)

"The written admissions of a party to a suit are receivable in evidence against him to prove facts directly in issue, although such facts are established by a writing not produced, and its absence not accounted for." Blackington v. Rockland (1877) 66 Me. 332.

A party's declaration is primary proof of the agency of his agent, and he cannot make it secondary by stating that there was a power of attorney. Curtis v. Ingham (1829) 2 Vt. 287.

"It is clear that an admission, either verbal or in writing, by 'the defendant,' of the contents of a deed, would be sufficient proof as against him of those contents." Alderson, B., in King v. Cole (1848) 2 Exch. 628, 154 Eng. Reprint, 642, 17 L. J. Exch. N. S. 283.

"The admissions of a party, freely and voluntarily made, are always evidence which may be introduced by the opposite party." Maurice v. Worden (1880) 54 Md. 233, 39 Am. Rep. 384.

In Reg. v. Basingstoke (1871) 14 Q. B. 611, 117 Eng. Reprint, 237, where it was held that evidence was properly received to the effect that the overseer of a parish had acted in a way inconsistent with the nongranteeing of a certificate, and that that was equivalent to evidence of the granting of a certificate, upon the authority of Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Har. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202. Patteson, J., said: "Such an admission is like an estoppel, and, as is well put in a note (2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 437) to Duchess of Kingston's Case (1776) 20 How. St. Tr. 355, in Mr. Smith's Leading Cases, it is used 'not to supply the absence of the ordinary instruments of evidence, but to supersede the necessity of any evidence by shewing that the fact is already admitted.'"

In a case where the court said it was not necessary to invoke the rule it was said: "Even where a written instrument is a necessary part of the case, and its contents are directly in issue, parol admissions by a party to the suit, relating to its contents, may be introduced not as secondary, but as primary evidence." Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Wilson (1894) 4 Colo. App. 355, 36 Pac. 67. It would seem, however, that the matter is, at least to some extent, governed by statute in Colorado.

"Answers to interrogatories are admissions of the party under oath, and the rule that parol evidence is not admissible to prove the contents of documents and other writings, or other facts shown by the decree of a court or other public record, does not apply in all its strictness to the admissions of a party. Such admissions are received as primary evidence." Combs v. Union Trust Co. (1897) 146 Ind. 688, 46 N. E. 16.

Smith v. Palmer (1850) 6 Cush. (Mass.) 513, was an action on breach of a contract to discontinue another action, and the plaintiff, to show that the other action had not been discontinued, offered an execution upon the judgment therein and also the declarations and admissions of the defendant, to show that the action had not been discontinued and that judgment had been entered.

therein, and it was held that the admissions were proper to that end. The court said: "The admissions of a party are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources. A party's own statements and admissions are, in all cases, admissible in evidence against him, though such statements and admissions may involve what must necessarily be contained in some writing, deed, or record. Thus, the statements of a party that certain land had been conveyed might be admitted, though the conveyance must be by deed recorded. The general principle as to the production of written evidence as the best evidence does not apply to the admissions of parties, as what a party admits against himself may reasonably be taken to be true.

. . . In the present case, the principal fact was that the defendant had not performed his contract in regard to which there could be no doubt that his admission would be important evidence; and the execution reciting the judgment assigned by the defendant himself was produced, in connection with the admissions and statements of the defendant."

The evidence is primary not secondary. Morey v. Hoyt (1893) 62 Conn. 542, 19 L.R.A. 611, 26 Atl. 127; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Wilson (1894) 4 Colo. App. 355, 36 Pac. 67 (obiter); Combs v. Union Trust Co. (1897) 146 Ind. 688, 46 N. E. 16; Purinton v. Purinton (1906) 101 Me. 250; Maurice v. Worden (1880) 54 Md. 233, 39 Am. Rep. 384; Hutchinson v. Plant (1914) 218 Mass. 148, 105 N. E. 1017; Curtis v. Ingham (1829) 2 Vt. 287.

In Morey v. Hoyt (Conn.) supra, where it was held permissible to show as primary evidence what the defendant had admitted as to the contents of a letter written by him, without showing that the letter could not be produced, the court said: "The evidence was claimed as an admission of the contents of a writing by one whose admissions were relevant. It was claimed as primary and not secondary evidence. If it was primary evidence, the objection taken is not tenable. The rule that the oral admissions of a party against himself and those claiming under him, although relating to the contents of a writing, are primary evidence, seems to be well established, whatever we may think of its wisdom. So far as we are aware this court has never had occasion to consider this rule, but elsewhere the weight of authority is in its favor. It is established in England, as shown by the authorities cited. 'Primary evidence means the document itself, produced for the inspection of the court, . . . or an admission of its contents proved to have been made by a party whose admissions are relevant.' Stephen's Dig. art. 64. . . . The wisdom of this rule is questioned by Judge Taylor in his work on Evidence, and . . . it would seem that the courts in Ireland dissent from it, as do also the New York courts. The weight of authority, however, as before stated, seems to be in its favor, and we see no reason why it should not be applied in a case like the one at bar."

Doubtful cases.

There are two cases in Michigan, where admissions were held to be evidence, which leave the general question in doubt.

In New York C. Ins. Co. v. Watson (1871) 23 Mich. 488, it was held that the deliberate statement that there was subsequent insurance in the proofs of a policy of insurance dispensed with any other proof of such subsequent insurance. It operated as an admission. The effect of this case may be doubtful in view of the decision in Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Giltinan (1886) 48 N. J. L. 495, 57 Am. Rep. 586, 7 Atl. 424, infra, holding such evidence admissible as an exception to the rule that admissions cannot be used to show the contents of a writing.

In holding that it was error to exclude a copy of a letter written by one of the parties who admitted on the stand that it was a correct copy, the court said that this evidence converted the contents of the paper into admissions by him and made them original evidence. It was of no consequence that the paper was a copy of a letter he had written. When he made its contents identical with his declaration, the paper became an original for the purpose of showing his declaration. Kelly v. McKenna (1869) 18 Mich. 381.

For other cases on copies admitted to be correct, see infra, IV.

III. View excluding admissions.

Other cases hold that the contents of writings may not be proved by admissions. Lawless v. Queale (1845) 8 Ir. L. Rep. 382, infra; Security Trust Co. v. Robb (1906) 73 C. C. A. 302, 142 Fed. 78; Morgan v. Patrick (1844) 7 Ala. 185, infra; Ware v. Roberson (1850) 18 Ala. 105, infra; Fralick v. Presley (1856) 29 Ala. 457, 65 Am. Dec. 413 (obiter); Halliburton v. Fletcher (1861) 22 Ark. 453, L.R.A.1918C.

infra; Bellamy v. Hawkins (1880) 17 Fla. 750, infra; Flournoy v. Newton (1850) 8 Ga. 306; Bryan v. Smith (1839) 3 Ill. 47 (defendants' admission that they were tenants in common with plaintiffs); Jameson v. Conway (1848) 10 Ill. 227, infra (obiter); Prussing v. Jackson (1901) 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771, infra; Rees v. Lawless (1823) 4 Litt. (Ky.) 218, infra; Griffith v. Huston (1832) 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 385, infra; Clark v. Slidell (1843) 5 Rob. (La.) 330, infra; Hope Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Chapman (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 75, infra; Williams v. Brickell (1859) 37 Miss. 682, 75 Am. Dec. 88, infra; Bank of North America v. Crandall (1885) 87 Mo. 208, infra; (as indicating such an opinion); Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Giltinan (1886) 48 N. J. L. 495, 57 Am. Rep. 586, 7 Atl. 424, infra (admitting a certain admission as an exception to the rule); Jenner v. Joliffe (1910) 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 9, infra; Hasbrouck v. Baker (1813) 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 248, infra; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway (1833) 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 480, 24 Am. Dec. 51, infra; Sherman v. People (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 575; Threadgill v. White (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 591, infra; Buchanan v. Moore (1823) 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 275, infra; Com. ex rel. McDowell v. Keeper of County Prison (1882) 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 341, infra; Moore v. Dickinson (1893) 39 S. O. 441, 17 S. E. 998, infra (not necessary to decision).

Thus, it was held not competent to show by admission that the defendant sold the plaintiff land in another state, nor that a judgment had been secured against him there, nor that it bound the land (Morgan v. Patrick (1844) 7 Ala. 185); nor to show admissions, in a petition, of the contents of a judgment of a justice of the peace (Ware v. Roberson (1850) 18 Ala. 105); nor to show guardianship by the admissions of the supposed guardian (Halliburton v. Fletcher (1861) 22 Ark. 453); nor to show by admissions the amount or effect of a judgment or decree (Bellamy v. Hawkins (1880) 17 Fla. 750); nor the execution and contents of a deed where the presumption is that the deed is in the possession of a party to the action (Griffith v. Huston (1832) 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 385); nor admissions of an attachment (Jenner v. Joliffe (1910) 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 9); nor that there was a mortgage on the defendant's house (Sherman v. People (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 575; see also Williams v. Durst (1860) 25 Tex. 667, 78 Am. Dec. 548, infra, "Texas"); nor a sale by bill of sale in a certain place, the execution terms and legal effect of the bill being directly in issue (Threadgill v. White (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 591).

An admission in an answer in chancery of the execution of a deed will not permit a copy of it to be introduced in evidence, without proof of the loss of the original. Rees v. Lawless (1823) 4 Litt. (Ky.) 218.

"The contents of a written instrument cannot be proved by parol in the absence of proof accounting for the nonproduction of the writing." Prussing v. Jackson (1901) 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771, where it was sought to show the publication of a libel by the defendant by admissions that he had written something on which the libel was based, and his writing was not produced.

In Williams v. Brickell (1859) 37 Miss. 682, 75 Am. Dec. 88, the court stated that it was error to admit secondary evidence of a telegram without requiring the production of the original, or accounting for its absence, but that, as there was proof in the record that the defendant admitted the contents of the despatch, as well as that he had sent it, he could not have been prejudiced by its admission.

Where the action was against the defendant for failing to attend as a witness on a subpoena, and evidence was received of a declaration by the defendant that he had been served with a subpoena, it was held that this was error, as the plaintiff had admitted that he had the original subpoena in his possession, and did not produce it. Hasbrouck v. Baker (1813) 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 248.

In Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway (1833) 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 480, 24 Am. Dec. 51, it was held that a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, signed by the defendant, could not be taken as evidence that the plaintiff was a properly constituted foreign corporation; it was incompetent evidence for that purpose, and was not the best evidence; the charter should have been produced. The court stated that at best the contract was but an admission, and he did not think it amounted to that.

In Buchanan v. Moore (1823) 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 275, it was held to be error to permit a witness to testify that the defendant called on him "with a small paper containing a description of his lands advertised for sale, in which the sawmill tract was described as containing upwards of 300 acres," without notice having been given to the defendant to produce the paper.

L.R.A.1918C.

In a case where the question was whether the petitioner was a married woman, the court declined to receive admissions by her to the effect that she had been divorced, on the ground that the record was the only competent evidence on that point. Com. ex rel. McDowell v. Keeper of County Prison (1882) 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 341.

Compare Edgar v. Richardson (1878) 33 Ohio St. 591, 31 Am. Rep. 571, supra, II.

Where the agent of the defendant had made a certain admission, his information being derived from letters from the defendant, and the letters were not produced, it was held that evidence of the contents of the letters was incompetent (but it was also held that it did not appear that the declarations were within the scope of the agency). Moore v. Dickinson (1893) 39 S. C. 441, 17 S. E. 998.

It may be noted that in Spence v. Spence (1811) 2 Brev. (S. C.) 466, where the plaintiff proved a grant to his father-in-law Mark, and a conveyance by deed from Mark to himself, it was held that the defendant could not show that Mark had declared to the plaintiff, before he gave him the deed, that he had already sold the land to a third party and made a conveyance to him.

The Massachusetts rule of admissibility seems to have been departed from in Hope Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Chapman (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 75, where the plaintiff sued on a promissory note, and the defendant claimed that the note was given as premium upon an insurance policy issued by the plaintiff, and that it could not recover, as it had not complied with the requirements of the state law. He endeavored to prove the contents of the policy of insurance in his possession by answers to interrogatories of plaintiff's officer showing the above facts. It was held that this could not be done until a foundation for secondary evidence had been laid.

Judicial statements.

In Lawless v. Queale (1845) 8 Ir. L. R. 382, in excluding an admission by the defendant, where the plaintiff had a written agreement as to the premises in question which he had not produced, Pennyfather, Ch. J., said, referring to Slatterie v. Pooley (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Harr. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202: "I cannot subscribe to what was said by Parke, B. in that case. . . . The doctrine there laid down is a most dangerous proposition. By it a man might be deprived of an estate of £10,000 per annum, derived from his ancestors by regular family deeds and conveyances, by producing a witness, or by one or two conspirators, who might be got to swear they heard the defendant say he had conveyed away his interest therein by deed, had mortgaged or otherwise encumbered it; and thus, by this facility so given, the most open door would be given to fraud, and a man might be stripped of his estate through this invitation to fraud and dishonesty. It is said, it is evidence against the person himself who made the admission and that there is no danger of untruth in what a man admits against himself. Supposing the admission to be proved, is there no danger of mistake or misconception of the contents of a written instrument? It may be long and difficult; one part or clause may explain or qualify another; an unprofessional or ignorant man may be led to believe it may be so-and-so, whereas the real and true meaning may be the very reverse or something very different. But, produce the deed or writing, littera scripta manet. On which side is the security, and why depart from the rule that, if you want to give evidence of the contents of a writing, the writing itself must be produced? Is there no danger of untruth or misrepresentation, when used against the party making the admission? That is the ground put by Parke, B., and in which I cannot agree, when I know by experience how easy it is to fabricate admissions, and how impossible to come prepared to detect the falsehood. Why are writings prepared at all but to prevent mistakes and misrepresentations? And why, having taken that precaution, with such writing at hand and capable of being produced, is the same to be laid aside and inferior and less satisfactory evidence resorted to?"

In Jameson v. Conway (1848) 10 Ill. 227, the court said: "The true rule on this subject undoubtedly is that the declarations of a party are not competent evidence to prove a matter directly in issue, unless parol evidence would be admissible to establish it, or unless there is no higher or better evidence of the same fact in existence, which can be produced."

In a case where the only evidence of the existence of an attachment was the confession of the plaintiff, the court stated that the confessions of a party had never been considered competent evidence of the execution of a specialty, and much less ought they to be admitted as proof of matters of record. Jenner v. Joliffe (1810) 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 9.

"Loose admissions or conversations of parties cannot supply the absence of documentary evidence, when it exists; the documents themselves should be produced, unless their loss is satisfactorily proved, or their absence clearly accounted for, and then their contents should be established." Clark v. Slidell (1843) 5 Rob. (La.) 330.

In Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Giltinan (1886) 48 N. J. L. 495, 57 Am. Rep. 586, 7 Atl. 424, it was held that an admission, in the proof of loss, of other insurance, was evidence of the existence of the policies stated, judgment, however, being still for the plaintiff because it did not appear that these policies had run for ten days, as the defendant was bound to maintain the issue that the unauthorized policies had run for ten days. The court considered, however, that this was an exception to the general rule and was authorized on account of the exceedingly formal character of the admission and the purpose for which it was made, and said: "The broad ground was taken that the admissions of the contents of a written document, its nonproduction being unexplained, are receivable as primary evidence of its contents. For this doctrine, the case of Slattey v. Pooley (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Reprint, 579, 1 Harr. & W. 18, 10 L. J. Exch. N. S. 8, 4 Jur. 1038, 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 202, and the series of decisions to which it gave rise, were relied upon as the leading authorities in its favor. This class of adjudications, it is clear, goes far in the direction of sustaining the rule as claimed. But these decisions are all of modern date, originating in the year 1840, and have not received anything like universal approval by the courts of this country; and it is certain that they are opposed to the immemorial administration of the law in this state. That a written instrument whose existence is put in issue by the pleadings need not be produced at the trial, its absence being unexcused, is a doctrine that, as part of our own law and as a general rule of evidence, has, it is safe to say, never heretofore been advanced in any of our courts. With us the ancient, and, it is deemed, the safe, principle has prevailed, that the document is the primary evidence and the admission of its contents secondary evidence, and that the latter cannot be resorted to as long as the former is available."

In holding that it was error to refuse the plaintiff leave to introduce in evidence a record of a decree, and holding that the plaintiff was not bound to accept admissions of the defendant in lieu thereof, the court stated that the admission was not broad enough to embrace the facts that the record disclosed, and stated further: "And if it had been sufficiently comprehensive in this particular, it would not preclude the plaintiff of his strict legal right to have the record read; for it is the rule that the parol admission of a party made in pais is competent evidence only of those facts which may lawfully be established by parol evidence; it cannot be received . . . to supply the place of existing evidence by matter of record." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 203." Bank of North America v. Crandall (1885) 87 Mo. 208.

Texas.

In Texas the cases are probably to be taken as favoring a general rule of exclusion where the contents of the instrument in question are directly in issue.

In Williams v. Durst (1860) 25 Tex. 667, it was held that a declaration of the defendant's testator that he had told the witness that he had mortgaged a lot to the plaintiff's intestate was not competent proof of the execution and contents of the mortgage.

In Dooley v. McEwing (1852) 8 Tex. 306, it was held that the oral declaration or admission of a party having sold a slave, when that sale was evidenced by writing, was admissible as primary evidence of the fact, the sale of the slave not requiring a deed in writing. The court observed that where the terms of a written contract were in controversy, the writing must be produced, but that was not the case in this instance. The writing was collateral to the principal fact that it was a sale, and this it was competent to prove by the oral admission of the party as primary evidence of the fact.

Upon an issue as to whether there was other insurance, it was held to be error to exclude evidence of oral admissions by the plaintiff of such other insurance, and to exclude questions in regard to the same when he was on the witness stand, as it was not the contents but the fact of other insurance that was important, and that was only collaterally involved and might have been proven by parol. It was original evidence. Philadelphia Underwriters L.R.A.1918C.

Agency v. Brown (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 899.

Perhaps, in view of these cases, the decision in Hoeftling v. Hambleton (1892) 84 Tex. 517, 19 S. W. 689, is to be construed as considering the instrument to be collateral. There, in a suit for commissions on the sale of land, the defendant stated, on cross-examination, that he had sold the land to the person alleged by the plaintiff, and it was held that this was sufficient without producing the deed. The court said that it was a proper case for the application of the doctrine that admissions by a party of the contents of a written instrument may be received in evidence, without production of the writing, or accounting for its absence.

IV. Miscellaneous.

A copy of a lease signed by the defendant in his own handwriting and sent by him to the plaintiff was admitted in Carroll v. Peake (1828) 1 Pet. (U. S.) 18, 7 L. ed. 34.

So, in Ansell v. Baker (1850) 3 Car. & K. (Eng.) 145, it was held that a copy of a deed sent by the plaintiff to the defendant in a letter may be admitted in evidence against the plaintiff without the deed.

See also Kelly v. McKenna (1869) 18 Mich. 381, supra, II.

In the following cases copies admitted to be correct by the other party were held admissible as an exception to the rule of the incompetency of admissions.

Thus, where a defendant on the witness stand, on being asked whether he had written a certain letter, produced a copy of it, it was held that this copy was evidence, although no notice has been given to produce the original. Barnett v. Wilson (1901) 132 Ala. 375, 31 So. 521.

In Haas v. Storer (1897) 21 Misc. 661, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1100, where the defendant on the stand admitted that a certain paper was a letter-press copy of a paper signed by her, it was held that this bound the defendant as an admission against interest, and made the evidence primary in its nature.

Cases of accounts stated are excluded.

Where it was claimed by the plaintiff that an alteration had been made in a certain document, an admission on the part of the defendant as to the nature of the document,—that is, a copy declared to be accurate made public by the defendant's attorney,—was held to be properly received in evidence for whatever bearing it might have on the issue as to the alteration. Mullarky v. Manker (1918) 102 Kan. 92, 170 Pac. 31.

In Poole v. Gerrard (1858) 9 Cal. 593, the court, in holding testimony to the effect that a party had shown the witness a contract was admissible without notice to produce, said: "The Code provides that 'there shall be no evidence of the contents of a writing other than the writing itself, except in' the cases mentioned. The second exception stated is, where 'the original is in possession of the party against whom the evidence is offered, and he fails to produce it, after reasonable notice.' Where parol testimony is offered simply to prove the fact that writing was made in reference to the matter in controversy, without stating the contents of the same, it is admissible, if relevant under the circumstances of the particular case. But when it is sought to prove the stipulations contained in the writing, the parol evidence is not admissible without first taking the proper preliminary steps. The Code is very explicit that you shall not prove the contents of the writing other than by the writing itself, except in the cases mentioned." B. B. B.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

MAXWELL OPERATING COMPANY

v.

C. W. HARPER.

(138 Tenn. 640, 200 S. W. 515.)

Innkeeper — liability for loss from check room.

An innkeeper maintaining a check room for the convenience of his guests is liable for the loss of articles therefrom, notwithstanding he states on the checks that articles are at owner's risk, and maintains a baggage room and safe in which valuables are stored at the risk of the innkeeper.

For other cases, see Innkeeper, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 9, 1918.)

PETITION for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover the value of an overcoat alleged to have been misdelivered or stolen from defendant's check room. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. M. Estes and M. P. Estes, for defendant:

A hotel by a special contract can limit its liability for the loss of effects of a guest.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 538, 540; 2 Kent, Com. 594; Schouler, Bailm. § 309; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657; Van Wyck v. Howard, 12 How. Pr. 147; Fuller v. Coats, 18 Ohio St. 343; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; Marshall v. Nashville R. & Light Co. 118 Tenn. 254, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Note. — As to liability of innkeeper for loss of goods from check room, see annotation following this case, post, 674, and references therein for annotation on related questions.
L.R.A.1918C.

1246, 101 S. W. 419, 12 Ann. Cas. 675; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 2 Head. 515.

Where a guest is notified that his baggage must be deposited in a particular place for safe-keeping, and he neglects to do so, the innkeeper is not liable.

Wilson v. Halpin, 1 Daly, 496; Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Ky.) 442; Marshall v. Nashville R. & Light Co. 118 Tenn. 254, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1246, 101 S. W. 419, 12 Ann. Cas. 675.

The burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show that the overcoat was lost through gross or wilful negligence, and the mere inference to be drawn from the fact that the overcoat could not be found is not sufficient.

Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 2 Head. 517.

Messrs. J. D. B. De Bow and J. D. C. Atkins for plaintiff.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner operates the Maxwell House, one of the leading hotels of Nashville, and as a part of its equipment has a check room near the lobby, in which room the overcoats and small baggage of its guests are kept. Harper, at the time a guest of the house, deposited his overcoat in this room for safe-keeping and received from the attendant a check, in the form of those there customarily in use, as follows:

Accommodation Check.

Left at owner's risk. The management will not be responsible for loss or damage. No. 4554.

. [Signed] Maxwell Operating Co.

Harper had been a patron of the hotel for two or three years and on numerous occasions; and on previous visits he had been directed by the clerk and employees of the house to the check room as the place in which to deposit such articles. His overcoat in question here was in some way mis-delivered or stolen, and he brought this suit to recover its value. Both of the lower courts have given judgment in his favor.

The defenses of the hotel company are that it maintained a baggage room in the basement where storage was at its risk; also a place behind the clerk's desk where articles might be left, the company assuming responsibility; and further, that the check received by Harper operated as a contractual limitation upon its common-law liability.

It is conceded, as it must be, that from an early day the rule in this state has been that an innkeeper is excused from liability for the loss of a guest's baggage or goods only when the loss or injury results from the act of God, or is caused by the public enemy, or by the fault, direct or implied, of the guest himself. Minning v. Wells, 9 Humph. 746, 51 Am. Dec. 688, and cases in accord.

We hold, on the facts of this case, that the attempt to work an abrogation or release of this common-law liability by the handing out of the check was unreasonable.

The storage room in the basement was for heavy baggage, and it does not appear that the equipment behind the desk was other than a safe for the keeping of valuables. By custom and previous dealings with Harper himself, he was, by the hotel company, directed to the check room as a fit and the proper repository for his overcoat.

Obviously, the overcoat was not a thing to be kept as a valuable in a hotel safe. 22 Cyc. 1083, and cases cited.

A hotel which operates a check room in effect invites such use by its guests as Harper made of it; and the hotel company could not validly negative its common-law duty or liability by any such regulation or stipulation. The stipulation in the check was void for unreasonableness, unsupported as it was by a consideration.

The exact legal question involved is, perhaps, one of first impression; but the decisions from early times have fairly indicated its true solution by way of an analogy that has been resorted to not infrequently by the judges in argumentation. In cases which have concerned attempts of carriers, by notice or stipulation, to limit or abrogate their obligations in respect of goods intrusted, the closely parallel relation of a public innkeeper have been referred to, and the obligations imposed by the earlier decisions upon innkeepers have been laid upon common carriers. It is interesting to notice that, in the development of jurisprudence, the law governing innkeepers was first declared; and that later, when the courts had to deal with the more modern relation of a common carrier to his patron, the judges made application of many of the rules already in force in respect to the duties and obligations of the ancient innkeeper.

In this case we have the converse proposition, where resort is to be had to analogous decisions on the carrier's obligation.

Touching the analogy: In Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 481, 88 Eng. Reprint, 1463, Chief Justice Holt, in giving the reason for the obligation of quasi insurer being imposed alike upon carriers and innkeepers, said: "For what is the reason that a carrier or innkeeper is bound to keep such goods as he receives at his peril? It is grounded upon great equity and justice," etc.

In Richmond v. Smith, 8 Barn. & C. 9, 108 Eng. Reprint, 946, 2 Mann. & R. 235, 6 L. J. K. B. 279, Bayley, J., said, "It appears to me that an innkeeper's liability very closely resembles that of a carrier;" and Lord Kenyon in Kirkman v. Shawcross, 6 T. R. 14, 101 Eng. Reprint, 410, 3 Revised Rep. 103, made a like observation.

An instructive and apposite case is that of Cole v. Goodwin, 19 Wend. 251, 32 Am. Dec. 470, where there was brought in question the validity of a regulatory stipulation posted up by a common carrier (and known to the passenger before he took passage) to this effect: "All baggage at the risk of the owner." Mr. Justice Cowen, after making ample use of the analogy referred to, said of the carrier's effort: "There are no principles in the law better settled than that whatever has an obvious tendency to encourage guilty negligence, fraud, or crime is contrary to public policy. Such, in the very nature of things, is the consequence of allowing the common carrier to throw off or in any way restrict his legal liability. . . . My conclusion is that he shall not be allowed in any form to higggle with his customer and extort one exception and another, not even by express promise or special acceptance any more than by notice. He shall not be privileged to make himself a common carrier for his own benefit, and a mandatary, or less, to his employer. He is a public servant with certain duties defined by law and he is bound to perform those duties. As Ashurst, J., said of the duties of innkeepers in Kirkman v. Shawcross, they are indelible. . . . Admitting that the plaintiff acceded in the clearest manner to the proposition in the notice that his baggage should be carried on the terms mentioned, I think the contract thus made was void on his part as contrary to the plainest principles of public policy."

See also Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 64 N. C. 235.

Carrying forward the parallel: The validity of a stipulation undertaking to limit or release a carrier's liability is to be determined by its reasonableness, and its conformity to the policy of the law in relation to the obligations of the carrier to the public. If it be unreasonable or oppressive it is deemed void. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 88 Tenn. 430, 7 L.R.A. 162, 12 S. W. 1018, and cases cited. The same principle applies in cases dealing with baggage deposited with a carrier, where the analogy becomes even stronger. Grout v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 131 Tenn. 667, L.R.A.1915E, 281, 176 S. W. 1027. An unreasonable notice, regulation, or stipulation that baggage is held at the owner's risk will not release the carrier from liability. 10 C. J. 1207, and cases cited.

What was said in Cole v. Goodwin, supra, should not, at this day, be construed to deny to the bailee of either sort the power to make reasonable regulations governing the exercise of the rights of a guest or passenger. 14 R. C. L. 527. Cases cited and relied upon by petitioner go no further than to declare the existence of such power.

Thus, in Fuller v. Coats, 18 Ohio St. 343, so cited, the rule requiring reasonableness is recognized. In speaking of an innkeeper it was there said: "It may, in instances, become absolutely necessary for him to provide special means, and to make necessary regulations and requirements to be observed by the guest, to secure the safety of his property. When such means and requirements are reasonable and proper for that purpose, and they are brought to the knowledge of the guest with the information that if not observed by him the innkeeper will not be responsible," etc.

In the pending case no place was undertaken to be pointed out by the hotel company as safer than the check room; the guest was not denied or even cautioned as to its use, but invited to store his overcoat there. The manifest purpose of the stipulation was to evade the responsibility imposed by the policy of the law on the hotel company.

A correct result was reached when the Court of Civil Appeals adjudged liability. Writ of certiorari denied.

Annotation—Liability of innkeeper for loss of goods from check room.

As to liability of carrier for loss of property in check room, see note to Terry v. Southern R. Co. 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 295, and Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834.

As to duty of innkeeper as to effects of one who has left without intention of returning as guest, see notes to Oxford Hotel Co. v. Lind, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 495, and Carol v. Kenney, L.R.A.1916F, 234.

The decision in MAXWELL OPERATING Co. v. HARPER, ante, 672, is in accord with the common-law liability of an innkeeper for loss of guest's baggage or goods. The HARPER CASE seems to be the first case wherein there was an attempt to avoid liability because of the stipulation in the check against innkeepers responsibility for loss, but the decision that such stipulation was void for unreasonableness is fully supported, as pointed out in the HARPER CASE, in analogous decisions on carrier's obligations. The other cases in the annotation, it will be seen, are easily distinguishable from the HARPER CASE, as well as from each other, on the facts, no two cases presenting a situation that could be considered analogous, and so cannot be considered in conflict.

The loss of a salesman's stock of jewelry valued at $6,300, taken from the coat room of a hotel where a guest left it with a boy in charge, taking a check therefor, is within the operation of a statute exempting an innkeeper from liability for the loss of money, jewelry, or other valuables of a guest not delivered to him or his agent or clerk for deposit. Elcox v. Hill (1878) 98 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 103.

Elcox v. Hill seems to be the only case aside from the HARPER CASE where the party making use of the check room was actually a guest at the time. The decision in the Elcox Case, it will be seen, turned on facts not present in the HARPER CASE, and so is easily distinguished from that case.

As to effect of statute limiting innkeeper's liability for goods not delivered into his custody, see notes to Rockhill v. Congress Hotel Co. 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 576, and Jones v. Savannah Hotel Co. 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1168.

In Kleckner v. Hotel Strand (1914) 60 Pa. Super. Ct. 617, a traveler on a Saturday evening went to a hotel and, upon being informed that there were no accommodations at that time, stated that he would wait awhile and if accommodations could be secured later the clerk should let him know. To a statement that he would leave his grip the clerk said, "Very well, we will check it." Not hearing from the clerk at a late hour he secured accommodations elsewhere. On returning Monday morning for his grip, it could not be found. In holding that it was a case of bailment for mutual benefit, and that the hotel was liable for ordinary care and so had the burden of proving that it was not guilty of negligence, the court said: "The facts may not place it under one of the technical classes of bailments for mutual benefit, but it constitutes one of those exceptional cases which may properly be termed a bailment for mutual benefit. Such bailments arise where there exists a possibility or chance of expected profit to accrue from the patronage of the intending guest. . . . The defendant, in conducting a hotel, invited the public to become guests thereof. When this plaintiff applied for accommodations he placed himself in a position of becoming a guest. Had nothing beyond the refusal of accommodations taken place no contractual relations could have arisen. When the plaintiff told the defendant that he would wait for word as to accommodations, and the defendant accepted the plaintiff's proposition by saying, 'Very well, we will check it (the grip),' the defendant tacitly placed the plaintiff on the waiting list for accommodation. An implied contract arose, the consideration for which was the 'chance of profit' from plaintiff's patronage. Under these circumstances we believe it was the duty of the defendant to exercise ordinary care over such luggage, left in a proper place and under proper conditions. It would impose a hardship on the public to say that when a guest goes to a crowded hotel or one in which there are a large number of people seeking accommodation, and, after making application for accommodations, is requested to wait, that the safety of his luggage in the hands of a hotel representative is at the risk of the guest. Though the technical relation of innkeeper and guest might not have arisen, by reason of the failure of the hotel authorities to accept the person as a guest, their conduct gives rise to a higher degree of care over property left with them than that exercised in the case of a gratuitous bailment for which the appellee contends. This relationship would not exist for an unreasonable length of time. It must be determined within a reasonable time. The plaintiff waited until Saturday night and returned early Monday morning. The court could not, as a matter of law, declare this an unreasonable length of time."

A hotel keeper who keeps a guest's baggage during his absence, giving a receipt or check therefor, will not, al- though he continues his liability as hotel keeper for such baggage, be liable for its value if it is lost or destroyed by inevitable accident. McElwaine v. Balmoral Hotel Co. (1891) Montreal L. Rep. 7 S. C. (Quebec) 139.
L.R.A.1918C.

In Glenn v. Jackson (1891) 93 Ala. 342, 12 L.R.A. 382, 9 So. 259, where a departing guest checked his valise until his return, the decision as to nonliability of the innkeeper for its loss turned on the fact that the porter who checked the valise was without authority to do so.

(As to liability of innkeeper for effects left by departing guest who intends to return, see annotation to Watkins v. Hotel Tutwiler Co. L.R.A.1917F, 834.)

In Bean v. Ford (1909) 65 Misc. 481, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1074, the decision as to nonliability as innkeeper for baggage lost from check room turned on the fact that the baggage was checked by one making free use of the inn. It was held, however, that there is in such a case a liability as gratuitous bailee where the loss is due to the innkeeper's own negligence.

(As to liability of innkeeper for loss of baggage or effects of one making free use of the inn, see annotation to Parker v. Dixon, L.R.A.1916E, 534.)

One who attended a ball and supper given under the auspices of a fire company who sold the tickets therefor, at a hotel at which he was not a guest, was held in Carter v. Hobbs (1863) 12 Mich. 52, 83 Am. Dec. 762, not to have become a guest at such hotel so as to hold the innkeeper liable, as such, for the loss of an overcoat and hat given to the clerk in charge of the office, the capacity in which the articles were received, the court stated, being merely as ordinary bailee.
J. H. B.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON EX REL. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, Respt.,

v.

SPOKANE & INLAND EMPIRE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(89 Wash. 599, P.U.R.1916D, 469, 154 Pac. 1110.)

Public service corporations — private contract — disclosure to Commission.
1. The Public Service Commission is not

Note. — As to power of Public Service Commission to regulate disposition of surplus products, see annotation following this case, post, 680.

entitled to a disclosure of private contracts made by an electric railway company for the utilization of its surplus power, for consideration in fixing rates for its public service.

For other cases, see Public Service Commissions, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — scope of statute.

2. Private contracts for the utilization of its surplus power by an electric railway company must, in order to come within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission, be expressly included in the statute extending the jurisdiction of such Commission over public service corporations.

For other cases, see Public Service Commissions, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County granting a writ of mandamus to compel it to submit its private contracts to relator. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Graves, Kizer, & Graves, for appellant:

The defendant's power business is not a public business, in view of the uses to which the power sold by it is put, and is therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission.

Rutland R. Light & P. Co. v. Clarendon Power Co. 86 Vt. 45, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1204, 83 Atl. 332; State ex rel. Tacoma Industrial Co. v. White River Power Co. 39 Wash. 648, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 842, 82 Pac. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 987; Tacoma v. Nisqually Power Co. 57 Wash. 420, 107 Pac. 199; State ex rel. Lyle Light, P. & Water Co. v. Superior Ct. 70 Wash. 486, 127 Pac. 104; State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 71 Wash. 84, 127 Pac. 591; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 134, 24 L. ed. 77, 87; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1085, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L.R.A.1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; State ex rel. Harris v. Superior Ct. 42 Wash. 660, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 672, 85 Pac. 666, 7 Ann. Cas. 748; Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L.R.A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac. 681; Re Aubrey, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 78 Pac. 900, 1 Ann. Cas. 927; State ex rel. Richey v. Smith, 42 Wash. 237, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 674, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 84 Pac. 851, 7 Ann. Cas. 577.

Messrs. W. V. Tanner, Attorney General, and Scott Z. Henderson, Assistant Attorney General, for respondent:

Irrespective of any question of eminent domain, the contracts of defendant are L.R.A.1918C.

"clothed with a public interest," and therefore subject to regulation, and the determination of the policy of regulation is for the legislature.

Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L.R.A.1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; State ex rel. Harlan v. Centralia-Chehalis Electric R. Power Co. 42 Wash. 632, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 198, 85 Pac. 344; State ex rel. Harris v. Superior Ct. 42 Wash. 660, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 672, 85 Pac. 666, 7 Ann. Cas. 748; State ex rel. Harris v. Olympia Light & P. Co. 46 Wash. 511, 90 Pac. 656; State ex rel. Tolt Power & Transp. Co. v. Superior Ct. 50 Wash. 13, 96 Pac. 519; State ex rel. Shropshire v. Superior Ct. 51 Wash. 386, 99 Pac. 3; State ex rel. Dominick v. Superior Ct. 52 Wash. 196, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 448, 100 Pac. 317; Tacoma v. Nisqually Power Co. 57 Wash. 420, 107 Pac. 199; Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L.R.A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac. 681; State ex rel. Galbraith v. Superior Ct. 59 Wash. 621, 140 Am. St. Rep. 893, 110 Pac. 429; State ex rel. Clark v. Superior Ct. 62 Wash. 612, 114 Pac. 444; State ex rel. Lyle Light, P. & Water Co. v. Superior Ct. 70 Wash. 486, 127 Pac. 104; State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 71 Wash. 84, 127 Pac. 591; State ex rel. Mountain Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 77 Wash. 585, 137 Pac. 994; Walker v. Shasta Power Co. 149 Fed. 568, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 725, 87 C. C. A. 660, 160 Fed. 856; Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Pier, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 538, 118 N. W. 857; Kilbourn City v. Southern Wisconsin Power Co. 149 Wis. 168, 135 N. W. 499; Re Southern Wisconsin Power Co. 140 Wis. 245, 122 N. W. 801; Jones v. North Georgia Electric Co. 125 Ga. 618, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122, 54 S. E. 85, 5 Ann. Cas. 526; Nolan v. Central Georgia Power Co. 134 Ga. 201, 67 S. E. 656; Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Koochiching Co. 97 Minn. 429, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 638, 107 N. W. 405, 7 Ann. Cas. 1182; State ex rel. W. J. Armstrong Co. v. Waseca, 122 Minn. 348, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 437, 142 N. W. 319; State ex rel. Mason v. Consumers Power Co. 119 Minn. 225, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1181, 137 N. W. 1104, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 19; Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Pratt, 101 Minn. 197, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 105, 112 N. W. 395; Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 35 Mont. 108, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, 88 Pac. 773, 10 Ann. Cas. 1055, 37 Mont. 60, 94 Pac. 631; Hollister v. State, 9 Idaho, 8, 71 Pac. 541; Washington Water Power Co. v. Waters, 19 Idaho, 595, 115 Pac. 682, 186 Fed. 572; Rockingham County Light & P. Co. v. Hobbs, 72 N. H.

531, 66 L.R.A. 581, 58 Atl. 46; Boyd v. Winnsboro Granite Co. 66 S. C. 433, 45 S. E. 10; Wilson v. D. W. Alderman & Sons Co. 69 S. C. 176, 48 S. E. 81; Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co. 71 S. C. 457, 110 Am. St. Rep. 579, 51 S. E. 485; D. W. Alderman & Sons Co. v. Wilson Lumber Co. 77 S. C. 165, 57 S. E. 756; McMeekin v. Central Carolina Power Co. 80 S. C. 512, 128 Am. St. Rep. 885, 61 S. E. 1020; Williams v. Haile Gold Min. Co. 85 S. C. 1, 66 S. E. 117, 1057; Harrell v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 89 S. C. 97, 71 S. E. 359; Gainesville v. Gainesville Gas & E. P. Co. 65 Fla. 404, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1119, 62 So. 919; Rutland R. Light & P. Co. v. Clarendon Power Co. 86 Vt. 45, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1204, 83 Atl. 332; Wissler v. Yadkin River Power Co. 158 N. C. 465, 74 S. E. 460; Lucas v. Ashland Light, Mill & P. Co. 92 Neb. 550, 138 N. W. 761; Hagerla v. Mississippi River Power Co. 202 Fed. 776; Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 70 W. Va. 83, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 602, 73 S. E. 86; Great Falls Power Co. v. Webb, 123 Tenn. 584, 133 S. W. 1105; Tuttle v. Jefferson Power & Improv. Co. 31 Okla. 710, 122 Pac. 1102; 1 Wyman, Pub. Serv. Corp. §§ 60, 114.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent brings a mandamus proceeding to compel a disclosure of private contracts. The appellant is a traction company operating a street railway system in the city of Spokane, and some interurban lines running out of Spokane into the surrounding country. It maintains a power plant which generates about 12,000 horse power. Its present average need for its operations is about 9,000 horse power. Some years ago, at a time when its own power plant had not been completed, appellant entered into a contract to take each year 3,800 horse power from the Washington Water Power Company, a power company operating in the same territory. With the development of its own plant giving approximately 12,000 horse power and the contract holding it to take 3,800 horse power from the Washington Water Power Company, appellant has a yearly supply of approximately 16,000 horse power, or about 6,000 or 7,000 horse power more than its present average need, although at times it uses as much as 12,000 horse power. This surplus it has sold under private contract to others, and it has been put to various uses, its customers being a land company, one or two farmers, who use the power for irrigation purposes, two manufacturing plants, a grain elevator, an irrigation company, and three or four individual owners of local electric light plants in towns and villages in the vicinity of Spokane. The object of this proceeding is to compel appellant to submit its private contracts to the Public Service Commission, it being the theory of the Commission that it has jurisdiction over that part of the appellant's business which heretofore has been regarded as private and in which the state had no interest; that it cannot make an adequate and intelligent survey of the rates charged by appellant in its service to the public without them; and, further, that to regulate the rates for traction purposes, it must have a disclosure of all contracts and all activities yielding a revenue to appellant, whether they be private, entered into with individuals, or affect a public service only.

We understand the law in this state to be that companies furnishing electrical energy may or may not be public service corporations, depending upon the objects for which they were organized and the business in which they are engaged, the logic of the cases being that we will judicially inquire whether the sale of power is a selling to the public generally or is only an incident to the business in which the company is engaged: as, for instance, a sale pending a time when its surplus will be needed to accomplish its assumption of duty to the public; for it has been held that a public service corporation can anticipate its future needs and develop energy reasonably in excess of present requirements. The character of such companies and their relation to the public has been frequently considered by this court. We find no departure from our first holding that a sale of electrical energy or power for private enterprises is not an engaging in a public business, and gives such companies no right to assert the sovereignty of the state. Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L.R.A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac. 681; State ex rel. Tacoma Industrial Co. v. White River Power Co. 39 Wash. 648, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 842, 82 Pac. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 987; State ex rel. Harris v. Superior Ct. 42 Wash. 660, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 672, 85 Pac. 666, 7 Ann. Cas. 748; State ex rel. Harris v. Olympia Light & P. Co. 46 Wash. 511, 90 Pac. 656; State ex rel. Tolt Power & Transp. Co. v. Superior Ct. 50 Wash. 13, 96 Pac. 519; State ex rel. Shropshire v. Superior Ct. 51 Wash. 386, 99 Pac. 3; State ex rel. Dominick v. Superior Ct. 52 Wash. 196, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 448, 100 Pac. 317; Tacoma v. Nisqually Power Co. 57 Wash. 420, 107 Pac. 199; State ex rel. Lyle Light P. & Water Co. v. Superior Ct. 70 Wash. 486, 127 Pac. 104; State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 71 Wash. 84, 127 Pac. 591. In all of these cases the company was asserting the right of eminent domain in order to avail itself of the rights and privileges granted by statute to public service corporations. In the absence of controlling legislation the court refused to extend the right. In the Nisqually Power Company Case we even held the use of the word "private" in a legislative act to have been inadvertent and therefore surplusage. The court has not inclined to the thought that corporations not directly engaged in the sale of power to the public generally should be clothed in the garb of the state, in the absence of an unquestioned intent on the part of the legislature so to do.

The case at bar is presented from the other angle. The company is insisting that its contracts with private individuals for the sale of excess power are of no concern to the state because they pertain to private business in no way affecting the public, while the state is insisting that such contracts are essential to an intelligent exercise of its admitted function to inquire into and regulate appellant's traction rates. In other words, appellant rests upon the law as we have heretofore found it to be, and respondent insists that the court has indicated a purpose to relax the rule in the later cases (State ex rel. Clark v. Superior Ct. 62 Wash. 612, 114 Pac. 444; State ex rel. Lyle Light P. & Water Co. v. Superior Ct. 70 Wash. 486, 127 Pac. 104; State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 71 Wash. 84, 127 Pac. 591; State ex rel. Mountain Timber Co. v. Superior Ct. 77 Wash. 585, 137 Pac. 994), or, if not, the Act of 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 541, § 8; 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8626-8) is ample to sustain the right of respondent to inquire into and control that part of the business of appellant which has heretofore been considered as private, and not a proper subject of state control.

To review the cases in detail would serve no purpose. We have discovered in them no purpose to depart from our former holdings. There may be some expressions in cases involving collateral questions which seemingly touch the question under discussion, and which may give impulse to the thought that we had it in mind to modify some of our decisions, but the fact remains that whenever the exact question has been submitted to the court, it has held to the doctrine of the earlier cases; that is, that the sale of power to be used by others for traction purposes, lighting, manufacturing, etc., is not a public use, and that the sale of surplus power, or the difference between the ordinary requirements and the peak load, by a corporation which does do a public service business, when such surplus is not in use, is only an incident to the public employment, of which the law will take no notice. Notwithstanding the criticisms of counsel, there is sound reason for our former holdings, to which we shall advert when discussing the next phase of the case.

The final and controlling question is whether the Act of 1911 has extended the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission over power companies, regardless of the character of the business in which they are engaged. Counsel for respondent says: "We may rest our case on the proposition that, irrespective of any question of eminent domain, the contracts of appellant are 'clothed with a public interest,' and therefore subject to regulation, and that the determination of the policy of regulation is for the legislature."

Counsel for appellant admits: "The sole question in the case is whether the defendant's power business is a public business, in view of the uses to which the power sold by it is put, and is therefore subject to the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission. If it is within the legislative power to make public a business conducted as defendant's power business is, undoubtedly the legislature has done so, and the case was rightfully decided. It is an electrical company, and owns an electric plant within the definitions of the statute. Laws 1911, p. 541, § 8; 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8626-8. The act makes no distinction between an electrical company selling its product for public purposes and one selling for private purposes. All such companies selling 'electricity for light, heat, or power for hire' are declared to be public service companies, subject to regulation by the public, and under the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission."

This leads us to a construction of the statute. The purpose of the state in creating the Public Service Commission was to regulate "public service properties and utilities." In the White River Power Co. Case, 39 Wash. 648, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 842, 82 Pac. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 987, we held the question whether the legislature could clothe power companies with a public character open, saying: "We do not mean to say that the right of eminent domain can, in no case, be extended to a corporation organized for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity for power and other purposes. But before this can be done, public necessity must require it, and the right of the public to the use and enjoyment of the property must be regulated, guaranteed, and safeguarded by proper legislation."

It is argued that the present act (Laws 1911, p. 538; 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 8626-1 et seq.) furnishes ample authority for holding that public necessity, as evidenced by the legislative declaration, now requires that such companies be held subject to regulation in their private affairs, and that the right of the public to the enjoyment and use of such property is regulated, guaranteed, and safeguarded by appropriate legislation. But we think the act does not go so far. That it assumes jurisdiction over power companies and electrical companies may be conceded, but we find nothing that compels the conclusion that the legislature intended to inquire into or regulate such companies except in so far as their business affects the right of the whole public to their products upon fair or reasonable terms. Granting, for the sake of argument, the right of the legislature to exercise the police power to the extent of regulating and controlling the price to be charged for power sold to private individuals or to others, such right should not be declared by the courts, in the absence of express legislation. The regulation and control of business of a private nature is sustained by reference to the police power, and even then it is sustained only when the courts have been able to say that a business is, in character and extent of operation, such that it touches the whole people and affects their general welfare. It is upon this principle that Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, and German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L.R.A. 1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, rest. Until the legislature brings a business within the police power by clear intent, courts will not do so. Courts have assumed to say whether an act of the legislature falls within the police power, but primarily the assertion of police power is for the legislature. They are not disposed to hold that a thing should be done by an individual or by the whole public because the public welfare demands it. They have acted only after the legislature has defined the object of the power. In other words, the courts have never said primarily that the police power should be applied in any given case. Their only inquiry has been whether a legislative act is reasonably within the legislative power, and the thing sought to be done is fairly within the terms of the act. And it is well that it is so, for the legislative body can extend the domain of the police power with sufficient rapidity. There is no reason why the courts should engage in a rivalry with it.

At the time the Act of 1911 was passed the law was well defined and certain in its terms. The sale of power to individuals or companies, to be in turn sold, was not a public use. The rule and the cases declaring it must have been well understood by the legislature. Yet the act nowhere attempts to cover any use theretofore deemed to be private. Its whole context seems to compel the thought that it had in mind only such uses as the public might compel. There is nothing to indicate a legislative intent to declare that the sale of surplus or secondary power pending a future use by a company in the performance of its public functions is a thing that affects the general welfare, the health, peace, or happiness of the citizen, or that it is in any way necessary to sustain the right of the state to govern.

Neither has the business of selling surplus power been so notoriously beset by abuses that we can judicially notice it as having an outlaw character. The right to regulate under the present law must be measured by the public interest. It will hardly be contended that appellant's contracts with those to whom it sells its surplus is of any interest or concern to anyone other than the immediate parties. It is not alleged that it is neglecting its public duty because of them. No one has a right to compel appellant to sell its surplus. The act of sale is purely voluntary. Like the merchant, it can sell at one price to one man and at another price to another. The parties to the contracts are not complaining. If either is not content with the offering of the other, he does not have to contract. He can go his way. But it is not so with appellant when exercising its public function, that is, furnishing something—a necessity—that all are entitled to receive upon equal terms, under equal circumstances, and without exclusive conditions. Beale & W. Railroad Rate Regulations, § 1.

The only interest the state can have in such contracts is that they may not be made and persisted in to the detriment of the public. They are made subject to the paramount undertaking of the company, and must give way to the public interest if necessity requires. If at any time the state, acting through its accredited agency, puts a burden upon a public service corporation which requires the use of its surplus energy, it must devote such energy to the public use and abandon its private contracts, for they are no longer mere incidents to the undertaking in which the public has no interest, but are an encumbrance upon a public service. A private contractor could not compel specific performance of his contract as against an intervening public right. Thus reasoning, it follows that inquiry into these collateral matters is not essential to the performance of the public functions of the respondent. The Commission insists that it cannot find a basis for rate making without knowing the private, as well as the public, affairs of the appellant. Granting that the appellant is entitled to a fair return upon its investment and the public to a fair rate of transportation, to hold that respondent could figure appellant's private contracts as a basis for rate making would, in turn, compel the holding that appellant would be entitled to take from the public enough to make good its losses in its private enterprises. The state has no interest either in appellant's gains or losses in its private enterprises. It has not yet assumed to stand as an inquisitor or conservator in private business. The act creating the Commission reflects no more than an intent to care for every right of the public in so far as they relate to the public functions of a public service corporation. It provided for equality of service, a physical valuation, "the total market value of the property of each public service company operating in this state, used for the public convenience within the state," and that the Commission shall "ascertain the probable earning capacity of each public service company under the rates now charged by such companies;" that is, rates for service falling within the scope and intendment of the law; for "rates" must be held to mean a charge to the public for a service open to all and upon the same terms, and not a consideration of a private contract in which the public has no interest.

This holding makes it unnecessary for us to inquire into the power of the legislature to assume a control over business of a private nature, or whether such an act being-passed raises a legislative or judicial question. It is enough that the Public Service Commission Law does not go to that extent in its letter, and cannot be held to have gone to that extent by construction without doing violence to the manifest purpose and spirit of the law.

Remanded, with instructions to deny the writ.

Morris, Ch. J., and Chadwick and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Fullerton, J., concurs in the result.

Petition for rehearing denied December 9, 1916.

Annotation—Power of Public Service Commission to regulate disposition of surplus products.

Disposition of surplus product by public service corporation.

Cases passing upon the disposition of by-products, such as coke, tar, and other residuals produced in the manufacture of artificial gas, are not included in the present note.

In STATE EX REL. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION v. SPOKANE & I. E. R. Co. ante, 675, it is held that the Commission is not entitled to a disclosure of private contracts made by an electric railway for the utilization of its surplus power, for consideration in fixing railway rates. It appeared that the railway company generated part of its own electric energy and bought some from a power company. It would seem that if the railway company was obliged to maintain a comparatively large plant upon which its patrons were obliged to pay a return to take care of peak loads, with the result that there was surplus electric energy during off-peak periods, that, as to such surplus, it would be the duty of the railway company to dispose of it to the best advantage for the benefit of its patrons, and that the proceeds realized from the sale thereof should be taken into consideration in fixing railway rates. Of course, the disposition of electric energy procured from other sources, or produced through the operation of excess machinery upon which the patrons are not obliged to pay a return, is a private matter and of no concern to the company's patrons.

Sale by private company of surplus product to the public.

In Cawker v. Meyer (1911) 147 Wis. 320, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 510, 133 N. W. 157, which was an action to restrain the Commission from enforcing the Public Utility Law against a building owner, it was held that a building owner does not come within the meaning of a statute constituting a public utility everyone who shall furnish heat, light, or power, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, by furnishing heat, light, and power to his own tenant, and selling surplus to three neighbors. The court said: "It was not the furnishing of heat, light, or power to tenants, or, incidentally, to a few neighbors, that the legislature sought to regulate, but the furnishing of those commodities to the public; that is, to whoever might require the same. Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Pier (1908) 137 Wis. 325, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 538, 118 N. W. 857. The use to which the plant, equipment, or some portion thereof is put must be for the public, in order to constitute it a public utility. But whether or not the use is for the public does not necessarily depend upon the number of consumers; for there may be only one, and yet the use be for the public,—as where a plant is built and operated for furnishing power to the public generally, but for a time finds one consumer who uses it all. If the product of the plant is intended for, and open to the use of, all the members of the public who may require it, to the extent of its capacity, the fact that only one or two thereof consume the entire product renders the plant none the less a public utility. On the other hand, a landlord may furnish it to a hundred tenants, or, incidentally, to a few neighbors, without coming either under the letter or the intent of the law."

But in Roach v. M. O. Danciger & Co. (1917; Mo.) P.U.R.1917C, 144, it was held that a manufacturing company, although generating electricity primarily for its own use and selling only its surplus energy, within a limited portion of a city, to customers over their own wires and poles, and although not having a franchise to operate as an electric utility, and not using the streets and public places of the city, was nevertheless an electric utility within the meaning of the Missouri statutes, defining an electric plant as including all property used in connection with the generation of electricity for light, heat, and power for sale, so as to subject it to the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission upon the complaint of a consumer whose service had been discontinued.

In Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (1918; Idaho) P.U.R.1918B, 535, it was held that a manufacturing company could not dispose of surplus water in territory served by an existing utility without securing a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Public Utilities Commission. The Commission said: "The whole theory of regulated monopoly upon which the Public Utility Act of Idaho is built, and which was approved by the supreme court of the state in Idaho Power & Light Co. v. Blomquist (1914) 26 Idaho, 222, 141 Pac. 1083, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 282, would be broken down if, on a pretext of surplus power, perhaps only surplus equipment, a rival might invade a field occupied by a public utility which was furnishing adequate service at reasonable rates, and take from it one, two, or perhaps more of its best patrons, without in any way subjecting itself to the law under which the existing utility was operating; and the public would ultimately have to bear the burden of useless duplication. The Commission believes that the public interest is paramount and must be the controlling factor in deciding this case."

In Sandpoint Water & Light Co. v. Humbird Lumber Co. (Idaho) supra, where it appeared that the water was obtained by the company through the operation of stand-by pumping equipment installed to provide adequate fire protection for its own property, the Commission distinguished STATE EX REL. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION v. SPOKANE & I. E. R. Co. the reported case, by pointing out that the lumber company's water was procured through the operation of excess machinery. The Commission said: "The lumber company claims to have a surplus of water beyond its own needs, and relies on the decision of the supreme court of Washington in STATE EX REL. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION v. SPOKANE & I. E. R. Co. to sustain its right to dispose of such surplus without thereby becoming a public utility; but an examination of the facts and conditions connected with the lumber company's water supply shows that it has only surplus machinery and equipment, and not a surplus of water. In the Washington case, supra, the surplus consisted of electrical energy actually and necessarily generated to enable the railroad to supply its own needs, and the company was permitted to sell this surplus temporarily until such times as it should require it for its own use, without being required to account for the proceeds to the Public Service Commission. In this case the lumber company, in order to provide itself with adequate fire protection, installed pumps of larger capacity than are needed for the ordinary demands of its mills and yards, but to supply the railway company requires special service independent of any service or need of the lumber company. The electric pumps are automatically started in response to the needs of the railway company, and there is no reciprocal service on the part of the railway company, the pipes leading to its tanks being provided with check valves, so that water once delivered into said tanks cannot return to the system of the lumber company."

For discussion of cases passing upon the effect of rendering incidental service to members of the public to make corporation, otherwise private, a public utility, see annotation to Wingrove v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A. 1918A, 213.

Miscellaneous.

Although not strictly within the scope of the present note, Citizens Electric Illuminating Co. v. Lackawanna & W. Valley R. Co. (1916) 255 Pa. 176, 99 Atl. 465, is of interest in this connection. In this case an electric railroad company was enjoined from furnishing electricity for power purposes through the operation of excess generating machinery at the suit of an electric company chartered to furnish such service in that territory upon the ground that the railroad company was exceeding its corporate powers in furnishing electric power service. The court said: "The right of a corporation to sell and dispose of surplus material on hand, not required in the conduct of its chartered business, is not questioned. The attempted analogy between the cases cited by appellant's counsel and the present one fails right here. It is a mistake to speak of the electric current that appellant proposes to sell to the coal company as surplus current that the company has on hand and for which it has no use. That current has never been developed, and can be developed only as appellant employs its surplus machinery to that end. It is the machinery that constitutes the surplus, and not the electric current."

A. L. R.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

JAMES W. McMILLIN, Admr. etc., of Eugene McMillin, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

BOURBON STOCKYARDS COMPANY.

(— Ky. —, 200 S. W. 328.)

Negligence — care to protect premises from boys.

A stockyard company which maintains about its cattle dip fences reasonably sufficient to keep out intruders, and which drives boys off the premises whenever they are seen there, is not liable for the death of a boy who falls into the dip after going along an alley and finding an open gate leading to the dip.

For other cases, see Negligence, l. c, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 5, 1918.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas Branch, Third Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant, in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's son, alleged to have been caused by defendant's failure sufficiently to protect its premises from intrusion by children. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles Reisch, for appellant:

The owner of premises upon which there is something dangerous and at the same time attractive to children of tender years, who knows that the place is, or because of its location is likely to be, frequented by them, owes a duty to exercise care to so safeguard it as to prevent their injury.

Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb, 129 Ky. 395, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179, 130 Am. St. Rep. 469, 111 S. W. 712; Thompson v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 138 Ky. 109, 127 S. W. 531; Kisler v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 913; Hermes v. Hatfield Coal Co. 134 Ky. 300, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 120 S. W. 351; Lyttle v. Harlan Town Coal Co. 167 Ky. 345, 180 S. W. 519; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Indian Ref. Co. v. Mobley, 134 Ky. 822, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497, 121 S. W. 657; Miller v. Chandler, 168 Ky. 606, 182 S. W. 833; 19 Cyc. 5; Osborn v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 86 Kan. 440, 121 Pac. 364; Hogan v. Houston Belt & Terminal R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 1166; Indianapolis v. Williams, 58 Ind. App. 447, 108 N. E. 387; Thompson v. Alexander City Cotton Mills, 190 Ala. 184, 67 So. 407, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 721; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Crocker, 131 Ala. 585, 31 So. 561; Cœur d'Alene Lumber Co. v. Thompson, L.R.A.1915A, 731, 131 C. C. A. 316, 215 Fed. 8; Shawnee v. Cheek, 41 Okla. 227, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 672, 137 Pac. 724, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 290; Thomp. Neg. § 1020; Carter Coal Co. v. Smith, 173 Ky. 843, 191 S. W. 631.

Mr. Samuel Trusty also for appellant.

Note. — The duty of a property owner to a trespassing child is discussed in the note to Walsh v. Pittsburgh R. Co. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 559.

The doctrine of attractive nuisance, or the "turntable doctrine," as it is sometimes called, is treated at length in the note to Cahill v. Stone, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094. Many L.R.A.1918C.

specific and concrete applications of the latter doctrine are considered in notes cited in the L.R.A. Indexes under the title, "Negligence," subtitles, "Children—Dangerous attractions; turntables." The L.R.A. Digests should also be consulted under the title "Negligence" for later cases on this point.

Messrs. Humphrey, Middleton, & Humphrey and Louis Seelbach, Jr., for appellee:

The case at bar is not one for the application of the attractive nuisance doctrine.

1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 946, 968, 1024; Lackat v. Lutz, 94 Ky. 287, 22 S. W. 218; Reeves v. French, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 220, 45 S. W. 771, 46 S. W. 217, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 155; Wells v. Duncan Coal Co. 157 Ky. 196, 162 S. W. 821; Branham v. Buckley, 158 Ky. 848, 166 S. W. 618, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 861; Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb, 129 Ky. 395, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179, 130 Am. St. Rep. 469, 111 S. W. 712; Lyttle v. Harlan Town Coal Co. 167 Ky. 345, 180 S. W. 519; Schauf v. Paducah, 106 Ky. 228, 90 Am. St. Rep. 220, 50 S. W. 42, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 73; Thompson v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 138 Ky. 109, 127 S. W. 531; Hermes v. Hatfield Coal Co. 134 Ky. 300, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 120 S. W. 351; Kisler v. Kentucky Distillers & Warehouse Co. — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 913; Coon v. Kentucky & I. Terminal R. Co. 163 Ky. 223, L.R.A.1915D, 160, 173 S. W. 325; 29 Cyc. 464; Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094, note; Thompson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1101, note; Miller v. Chandler, 163 Ky. 301, 173 S. W. 779.

Under the attractive nuisance doctrine, liability of the owner or occupier of the land is based on negligence.

1 Thomp. Neg. § 1024; Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Lyttle v. Harlan Town Coal Co. 167 Ky. 345, 180 S. W. 519; Miller v. Chandler, 168 Ky. 606, 182 S. W. 833.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the southwest corner of the Bourbon Stockyards at Louisville the stockyard company maintained quarantine pens in which were put cattle suspected of being diseased. On one side of these quarantine pens there was what is known as a cattle dip, consisting of a concrete trough about 40 feet long, 3½ feet wide, and placed below the level of the ground. This trough was filled with a solution composed of water and other ingredients prescribed by the government, and cattle with tick and perhaps other diseases would be driven into this concrete trough and through the solution it contained, which, in places, was deep enough to submerge the cattle and cause them to swim. These quarantine pens were inclosed by a solid fence, and the cattle dip was also inclosed by a separate slat fence. On one side of the pens there was an alley between Market and Jefferson streets, which passed directly into the stockyards. In this alley there was a gate leading into what was called a runway inside the quarantine pens, and another gate leading from this runway into the ground where the cattle dip was located. These gates, which were usually closed, were at times left open, so that boys who found their way into the alley, as they could do from the street on which it opened, could then go into the quarantine pens and into that part of the pens in which the cattle dip was located by going through the gates before mentioned, if they were open, or by climbing over them or the surrounding fences, if the gates were closed; and it is shown that a number of boys in the neighborhood were in the habit of playing from time to time in the stockyard premises, as well as in the quarantine pens, and about where the cattle dip was located.

In October, 1914, Eugene McMillin, a little boy about six years old, in company with Frank Shipman, another little boy about the same age, went through the alley, and, finding the gates open, they went into the quarantine pens and were playing about the cattle dip. After getting to the cattle dip one of them stood on one of the concrete walls that had been made on each side of the dip, while the other got on the opposite wall, and here they were playing by pitching a toy gun across the dip from one to the other. While so engaged the gun fell into the dip, and Eugene McMillin, in an effort to get it, also fell into the dip, and soon afterwards died from the effects of the poisonous water which he swallowed. Subsequently this suit was brought by his administrator to recover damages for his death upon the ground that the cattle dip was an attractive place for children, and not sufficiently protected, and after the conclusion of the evidence in his behalf, the trial court took the case from the jury, and the administrator appeals.

There is evidence by a number of boys from eight to fifteen years old that they played in the stockyards, the quarantine pens, and about the dip many times; that sometimes they would go on the premises by climbing over the gates or the fences, and at other times the gates would be open and they would go through that way. It also appears from the evidence that whenever the superintendent or any of the employees of the stockyard saw the boys, they would run them out, but at times they would play about the premises for some little while before being observed by the stockyard people.

As illustrating the efforts made to keep boys out and the ways in which they got in, we may refer briefly to the evidence. Arch Burch, superintendent of the stockyards company, introduced as a witness for the plaintiff, said that there was an alley on the north side of the pen leading from Wenzell street into the stockyard; that there was a big gate at the end of the alley in the stockyard and also a smaller gate through which people could go; that he had been in charge of the stockyards for a number of years, and had seen children playing in the grounds, but they were always run out when discovered; that in order to get to their dipping pens from the alley a person had to go through two gates. Thomas Lawson, an employee of the company, said that he had seen boys in the quarantine pens frequently, and always ran them out; that he had instructions to do so from Mr. Burch, the superintendent, and did the best he could to keep them out although it was right difficult to do it; that it was the practice to keep the gates closed and fastened. Jeff Darringer, another employee of the company, introduced by the plaintiff, said that whenever they saw boys in there they had orders to and did run them out. Birdie Hall, who lived in a house a couple of hundred feet from the quarantine pens, said she had seen boys playing in the grounds many times; that she saw these two little boys go into the quarantine pens on the day Eugene McMillin lost his life; that when they went in the gate leading from the alley into the pens was open, and they went through the gate.

On this evidence the argument is made that as the quarantine pens and stockyard premises were attractive places for children to play in, and the cattle dip a dangerous place, the stockyard company was under a duty to so inclose and protect the cattle dip as to prevent children from playing about it, and thereby putting their lives in peril.

We have written a number of cases on the subject of the duty of the owners of attractive and dangerous premises to protect them from trespassing children, and have extended what is known as the attractive nuisance doctrine possibly farther than, and certainly as far as, any other court whose opinions have come under our observation; but we do not think the principle announced in Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Lyttle v. Harlan Town Coal Co. 167 Ky. 345, 180 S. W. 519; and Miller v. Chandler, 168 Ky. 606, 182 S. W. 833, can be applied to the facts of this case. The cattle dip into which this little boy unfortunately fell was on the private premises of the company, inclosed not only by one but by two fences, reasonably sufficient to keep out intruders.

It is true that there was a gate leading from the alley into the runway, separated from the dip by a solid fence, and at each end of this runway there was a gate leading into the place where the dip was located; and there was some evidence that one or perhaps both of these gates were open at the time these children went from the runway into the inclosure where the dip was located. But we think that when the owner of private premises, although there may be on these premises a dangerous place attractive to children, has his premises inclosed by a fence so constructed as to reasonably prevent children from climbing over it, he is not to be held liable for accidents that happen to trespassing children who find a roundabout way to get into the premises, and then happen to find a gate that is open and through which they go to the place of danger. As said by the lower court in a brief opinion, the evidence in this case "further shows that practically the only dangerous place that has been made known here is the cattle dip; and it further shows that the dip was surrounded on all sides with a fence and beyond that by other fences around the cattle sheds. Now it seems to me that when a man protects his property in that way, he has exercised in full the duty which the law imposed upon him in exercising ordinary care to protect them from intrusion, and if, notwithstanding his protection, people go in there and get injured, they assume the risk, and not he. To hold otherwise would be, it seems to me, to say that a man using property in a large city for manufacturing purposes, or using dangerous machinery of any kind, or having appliances from which danger might be incurred by people coming in contact with them, would be absolutely powerless to protect himself.

Everybody who has any acquaintance with the habits of children knows how difficult it is to keep them out of inclosures inside of which there are suitable playgrounds, or indeed any kind of ground on which children can run and romp, or where there are things that are attractive to children. And so the law, in its tender regard for the safety of children, and in an effort to protect them from being hurt by the dangerous places, appliances, and machinery of one kind and another that may be found in premises where children are in the habit of going, or where they might be attracted to go, puts on the owner of such premises a duty that he does not owe to adults. But this duty does not go to the extent of making the owner an insurer of the safety of trespassing children. It only requires him to take reasonable precautions for their safety, and among these precautions are the duty of warning and notice as well as the duty, in some instances, of protecting by barriers, and especially are these last precautionary measures required at places where children are permitted without objection to go and play. But the owner need not keep gates that are on his inclosed premises continually locked, and need not build his fence so high that no person can climb over it; nor is he required to have servants continually on the lookout for trespassing children. He need only exercise reasonable care, considering all of the surrounding conditions and circumstances, to prevent trespassing children from being hurt by the dangerous things he may have about his premises, and this we think the stockyard company did.

In cases like this it is very often difficult to draw with precision or clearness the line between the cases holding the owner of the premises liable and the cases holding him not liable, but we think this case must be put with the cases of Thompson v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 138 Ky. 109, 127 S. W. 531; Hermes v. Hatfield Coal Co. 134 Ky. 300, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 120 S. W. 351; and Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb, 129 Ky. 395, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 909, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179, 130 Am. St. Rep. 469, 111 S. W. 712, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

(Department No. 2.)

COUNTY OF MULTNOMAH, FOR USE OF
L. H. McMAHAN, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUAR-ANTY COMPANY et al., Respts.

(— Or. —, 170 Pac. 525.)

Bond — contractor — recovery for rent of engine.

Under a statutory bond by one contracting with a county for the improvement of a highway, conditioned to pay all persons supplying labor or materials for the prosecution of the work, recovery may be had for the rent of a road engine hired by a subcontractor for use on the job.

For other cases, see Bonds, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 22, 1918.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County sustaining demurrers to and dismissing a suit upon a contract and bond, for the recovery of rent for the use of a road engine. Reversed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

This is an action by the county of Multnomah for the use and benefit of L. H. McMahan upon a contract and bond executed by the Pacific Bridge Company, a corporation, and its surety. The complaint alleges, in substance, the following facts:

On June 21, 1915, Multnomah county entered into a contract with the defendant Pacific Bridge Company for the improvement of a portion of Columbia River highway, namely, section D, from the east end of Oneonta bridge to the easterly line of the county. The contract and bond are set out in the complaint as exhibits. By the material provisions of the contract the construction company specifically agreed "to furnish all material, tools, and equipment and all labor necessary to complete the above-described work, strictly in accordance with said plans, specifications, and schedule of rates," and before the contract became effective to furnish the county with a bond providing for the faithful performance of the agreement. The contractor agreed "to promptly, as due, make payments to all persons supplying" him with labor or material for the prosecution of the work provided for. Provision was made granting a right of action to persons furnishing material, labor, and supplies to the contract company who were not paid, as follows: "The contractor further agrees that any person who supplied labor or material for the prosecution of any work provided for under this contract is hereby authorized to institute an action against said contractor or his sureties on his own relation in the name of the county, and to prosecute the same to final judgment for his own use and benefit. The contractor further agrees that all the provisions of the laws of the state of Oregon, applicable to the protection of subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers engaged in carrying out the terms of this contract, are hereby made

Note. — The nature of labor or materials which will support an action upon a contractor's bond is discussed in the notes to Standard Boiler Works v. National Surety Co. 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, and United States Rubber Co. v. Washington Engineering Co. L.R.A.1915F, 951; and see later cases, National Surety Co. v. United States, L.R.A. 1917A, 336; Southern Surety Co. v. Municipal Excavator Co. L.R.A.1917B, 558; and Wisconsin Brick Co. v. National Surety Co. L.R.A.1917C, 912. L.R.A.1918C.

For analogous questions as to mechanics' liens, see L.R.A. Indexes. under the title, "Mechanics' Liens," subtitle, "For what work or materials;" and see especially notes in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 866: 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1040; and L.R.A.1915E, 986, on mechanics' lien for materials wholly or partially consumed in process of work, but not becoming a part of the structure.

a part of this contract, whether expressly incorporated herein or not."

The construction company filed a bond with the county in accordance with the contract and § 6266, L. O. L., with the defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as surety. After reciting the contract between Multnomah county and the Pacific Bridge Company, the bond provides: "Now, therefore, if the said principal herein . . . shall faithfully and truly observe and comply with the terms, conditions, and provisions of the said contract, in all respects, and shall well and truly and fully do and perform all and singular the covenants, conditions, guaranties, matters, and things by it agreed, covenanted, and undertaken to be performed under said contract, plans, and specifications, upon the terms proposed therein, . . . and shall indemnify and save harmless the county of Multnomah, . . . and shall promptly pay all laborers, mechanics, subcontractors, and materialmen, and all persons who shall supply such laborers, mechanics, or subcontractors with materials, supplies, or provisions for carrying on such work, all just debts, dues, and demands incurred in the performance of such work, . . . then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

It will be seen that the contract and bond embraced all the conditions mentioned in the statute, and some specifications in excess of the statutory requirements.

After setting forth the organization of the county, the incorporation of the construction company and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, and the contract and bond, plaintiff's complaint proceeds to allege as follows: The Pacific Bridge Company commenced the construction of the improvement, and during the course thereof entered into an agreement with the defendant T. A. Sweeney for the grading of the highway. In performing this work he used a caterpillar engine which he hired from L. H. McMahan, whom he promised and agreed to pay the sum of $10 per day for the use thereof. Between June 21, 1915, and October 24th of that year Sweeney had the use of the caterpillar engine for work on the improvement for a period of sixty-four days, making an aggregate total of $640 due therefor, no part of which has been paid except $10 and $210 expended in making renewals and repairs on the engine, leaving a balance of $420 unpaid. Prior to the commencement of the action L. H. McMahan made application to the county of Multnomah by affidavit for a certified copy of the bond and contract of the defendant Pacific Bridge Company and was furnished the same. The defendants filed separate demurrers to the complaint upon the L.R.A.1918C.

ground that that pleading did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer of defendant T. A. Sweeney was on the further ground that there is no basis for the contractual relation set forth in the complaint between himself and the plaintiff. The respective demurrers were sustained by the court, and plaintiff having refused to plead further, judgment was entered in favor of the several defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. William P. Lord and Arthur I. Moulton for appellant.

Messrs. Clark, Skulason, & Clark, for respondent companies:

Stipulated rental for the use of a caterpillar engine is neither labor nor material as the words are commonly construed, or as they are used in the legislation upon which plaintiff relies.

Allen v. Elwert, 29 Or. 428, 44 Pac. 823, 48 Pac. 54; McKinnon v. Red River Lumber Co. 119 Minn. 479, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 872, 138 N. W. 78; Potter Mfg. Co. v. A. B. Meyer & Co. 171 Ind. 513, 131 Am. St. Rep. 267, 86 N. E. 837; Troy Public Works v. Yonkers, 207 N. Y. 81, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 311, 100 N. E. 700; McAuliffe v. Jorgenson, 107 Wis. 132, 82 N. W. 706; Wood, C. & Co. v. El Dorado Lumber Co. 153 Cal. 230, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 585, 126 Am. St. Rep. 80, 94 Pac. 877, 15 Ann. Cas. 382; Hall v. Cowen, 51 Wash. 295, 98 Pac. 670; Gilbert Hunt Co. v. Parry, 59 Wash. 647, 110 Pac. 541, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 225; Essency v. Essency, 10 Wash. 375, 38 Pac. 1130.

Plaintiff cannot treat the bond involved here as a common-law obligation, and maintain this suit upon such theory.

Portland v. New England Casualty Co. 78 Or. 195, 152 Pac. 253; People v. Metropolitan Surety Co. 211 N. Y. 107, 105 N. E. 99; Parker v. Jeffery, 26 Or. 187, 37 Pac. 712; Brower & T. Lumber Co. v. Miller, 28 Or. 565, 52 Am. St. Rep. 807, 43 Pac. 659.

Mr. Thomas Mannix for respondent Sweeney.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 256; L. O. L. § 6266), the legislature enacted the following: "Hereafter any person or persons, firm, or corporation, entering into a formal contract with the state of Oregon, or any municipality, county, or school district within said state, for the construction of any buildings, or the prosecution and completion of any work, or for repairs upon any building or work, shall be required before commencing such work, to execute the usual penal bond with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligations that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor or materials for any prosecution of the work provided for in such contracts."

The act provides that any person or persons who so furnish labor or material may obtain a copy of the contract and bond, and that such person "shall have a right of action, and shall be authorized to bring suit in the name of the state of Oregon, or any county, municipality, or school district within such state for his or their use and benefit against said contractor and sureties." This act was amended in 1913, but not so as to change the provisions above referred to.

The position taken by the defendants is that the payment for the use of the caterpillar engine is not provided for in the contract and bond under the terms of the statute. In the expression of the statute it is quite likely that the lawmakers, to a certain extent, had in contemplation the various lien statutes providing for liens on buildings and other property, both real and personal, for labor and materials. However, the enactment under consideration has a different purport and broader meaning than the ordinary lien statutes; therefore the construction of the latter affords but little assistance in arriving at the intent of the former. The lien statutes have usually been strictly held to cover only what is incorporated into the building or property against which the lien is claimed. Take, for instance, our Mechanics' Lien Statute (L. O. L. § 7416), which provides in part that a "person performing labor upon or furnishing material, or transporting or hauling any material of any kind to be used in the construction, alteration, or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building," shall have a lien upon the same. Such lien statutes obviously cover only what goes into the building or structure and adds to the value of the same.

In American Surety Co. v. Lawrenceville Cement Co. (C. C.) 110 Fed. 721, Judge Putnam states: "However, this principle of discrimination is so strongly intrenched in the practical rules properly applicable to the construction of this statute that it needs no further exposition. It has, however, no necessary relation to repairs of an incidental and comparatively inexpensive character, made on the plant during the progress of the work, representing only the ordinary wear and tear or the equivalent thereof. Such repairs, under some circumstances, are within the purview of the statute, and are not always excluded by any rules of construction which we must apply to it."

Even this underlying equity which requires these lien statutes to be so limited in their application is not applied with absolute strictness; for instance, where a bill of lumber is sold to one erecting a building, no distinction is made between the portions of such material which are actually incorporated into the parts of the buildings and those which are used in erecting temporary floors and stagings necessary to aid in the construction. When the Congress of the United States enacted the statute from which the one under consideration, providing for giving the bond in question, was copied, it used a much broader expression than is employed in the lien statutes. Our law uses the following language: "Shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor or materials for any prosecution of the work, provided for in such contracts."

As declared by Judge Putnam in American Surety Co. v. Lawrenceville Cement Co. supra, "the statute in question concerns every approximate relation of the contractor to that which he has contracted to do."

In the present case the act and the bond are susceptible of a more liberal construction than the lien statutes. Under the law and the plain language of the bond all indebtedness incurred for labor and material used in the prosecution of the work contracted to be performed is thereby protected. The grading of the highway was an important part of the construction. If Mr. Sweeney had owned the engine as a part of his construction outfit, and had used the same in the prosecution of the work in the same way he did after hiring the machine, there could have been no question but that a fair compensation for the wear and deterioration of the instrumentality would have been protected by the bond under the law. The making of the contract with another for the use of the engine in moving the dirt and material in the prosecution of the work of making the grade does not change the substance of the transaction so that the reasonable expense therefor would not come within the provisions of the bond. On the other hand, such compensation, which takes the place of the necessary wear and incidental repairs of the machine (see American Surety Co. v. Lawrenceville Cement Co. supra), comes directly within the protection of the letter and spirit of the bond. The use of the caterpillar engine having been supplied to the contractor through the medium of the subcontractor Sweeney for the prosecution of the work provided for in the contract, and the Pacific Bridge Company having given a bond with surety to pay for the same, and having failed to do so, as alleged in the complaint, the demurrers to the complaint should have been overruled. See United States use of Hill v. American Surety Co. 200 U. S. 197, 50 L. ed. 437, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; School Dist. ex rel. Hammond Lumber Co. v. Alameda Constr. Co. — Or. —, 169 Pac. 507; School Dist. v. Hallock, — Or. —, 169 Pac. 130; Portland v. New England Casualty Co. 78 Or. 195, 152 Pac. 253; Columbia County v. Consolidated Contract Co. 83 Or. 251, 163 Pac. 438. In Grants Pass Bkg. & T. Co. v. Enterprise Min. Co. 58 Or. 174, 177, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395, 113 Pac. 859, 1 W. & M. Cas. Ann. 412, a suit to enforce a miner's lien allowed by § 7444, L. O. L., to any person furnishing materials or supplies for the working or development of any mine, it was held in an elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Moore that electricity furnished to a mine for illumination or power constituted "supplies" within the meaning of the law.

The line of demarcation must be drawn between labor and material furnished a contractor which are covered by such a bond and those without the pale of such an undertaking by taking into consideration the service and material in the particular case. In National Surety Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1917A, 336, 143 C. C. A. 99, 228 Fed. 581, the syllabus says: "Supplies furnished a contractor with the United States, which were specifically intended for current consumption directly on the work, such as drills and material for drills used in drilling machines, and made to be used up currently, and in fact used up in direct and immediate contact with rock removed as part of the contract, were covered by the contractor's bond; the removal of such rock being a part of the 'construction of the work.'"

By the explicit terms of the contract the use of the engine referred to and that of other similar appliances was made a part of the contract price. According to the averments of the complaint the energy of the instrument entered directly into the construction of the highway just as effectively as though it had been owned by the contractor or subcontractor, and evidently served, to a large extent at least, as a substitute for manual labor. There is no chance for a double allowance for the service claimed.

This case is somewhat analogous to and within the reasoning of the so-called Powder Cases and Coal Cases. See Schaghticoke Powder Co. v. Greenwich & J. R. Co. 183 N. Y. 306, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 288, 111 Am. St. Rep. 751, 76 N. E. 153, 751, 5 Ann. Cas. 443, which is a lien case, and City Trust, S. D. & Surety Co. v. United States, 77 C. C. A. 397, 147 Fed. 155. The statute should not be extended to include the use of material not intended to be protected by it or by the contract and bond, such as claims for the purchase of an engine, hoisting apparatus, or the like. In the case of United States L.R.A.1918C.

Fidelity & G. Co. v. Bartlett, 231 U. S. 237, 58 L. ed. 200, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88, the contractors were to build a breakwater. They owned a quarry which, in order to perform their contracts, it was necessary to open to get out the stone, transport it, and dump it into the water. The question involved was the labor cost of quarrying and hauling the materials. The court held that the whole of this was labor performed on the contract.

According to the strict legal definition of the term "labor and material" the use of the engine would not be embraced therein. 2 Words & Phrases, 2d Series, p. 1321. There can be no question but that the service of the machine in the actual grading of the highway, as alleged in the complaint, is covered by the language of the contract and bond. We see no reason why the parties negotiating the transaction may not follow their own wills as long as their minds coincide perfectly, in stipulating as to matters which are often the subject of controversy, as shown by the opinions in the cases above cited, and plainly say by their written instrument what shall be included in the contract and bond, considered as labor and material and paid for by the contractor and his surety, and so avoid disputes between those interested in the construction of the public improvement.

Statutes like the one in question have usually been and should be given a liberal construction so as to carry out the legislative intent and effect the purpose contemplated by the law. United States v. American Surety Co. (C. C.) 110 Fed. 721; American Surety Co. v. Lawrenceville Cement Co. supra; Portland v. New England Casualty Co. 78 Or. 195, 152 Pac. 253; Ulster Sav. Inst. v. Young, 161 N. Y. 23, 55 N. E. 483; Hurley-Mason Co. v. American Bonding Co. 79 Wash. 564, 140 Pac. 575. A public corporation authorized by law to require bonds of contractors for public work to secure the payment of labor and materials is not restricted by the statute from taking other or additional measures and provisions in excess of those specified by the statute in order to protect those who aid in the public work. Brandt, Suretyship, 3d ed. § 31; 1 Elliott, Roads & Streets, 3d ed. § 646; 2 Dill, Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 830; 19 R. C. L. p. 1078, § 364.

In the case at bar, if the work mentioned had been performed by the exercise of the muscles of laborers, there would have been no question but that the same was protected by the statute. With the hard surface road pavement coming into vogue, new methods of road construction, utilizing high-power machinery, equipment, and appliances, have superseded the old mode of construction with pick and shovel. It seems to us that it was intended by the enactment, as expressed by the lawmakers, that the construction of an improvement, such as a paved highway, should be paid for; that in order to carry out the intent of the law it was the right and duty of the county officials to require a bond protecting the payment of obligations incurred for labor or material approximating the construction work. Plainly, the contract and bond in question made such provisions and nominated the item sued for. The language of the statute indicates that the lawmakers had in mind the modern conditions prevailing at the time of the enactment. By the recitation in their contract and bond the parties to the transaction have to a certain extent placed their own construction upon the law, assented thereto, and made their binding agreement in conformity therewith. Within the meaning of the contract and bond, which are in accordance with the spirit of the statute, the service of the engine should be deemed "labor and material." We are guided by the averments of the complaint. If the claim for the service of the machine was not reasonable, or if the instrumentality was not used as alleged, that should be explained in an appropriate manner.

The judgment of the lower court sustaining the demurrers to the complaint is reversed, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

McBride, Ch. J., and Moore and McCamant, JJ., concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

EVA EASLEY

v.

EAST TENNESSEE NATIONAL BANK,
Appt.

(138 Tenn. 369, 198 S. W. 66.)

Bills and notes — certificate of deposit — holder in due course.

1. A demand certificate of deposit stipulating that there shall be no interest after twelve months is negotiated an unreasonable time after issue if not negotiated until more than a year after its date, within the meaning of a statute providing that when so negotiated the holder is not deemed a holder in due course.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Lost instrument — recovery without bond.

2. Recovery on a lost certificate of deposit which, under the statute, could not, because not negotiated within a year after issue, be in the hands of a holder for value, may be had two years after demand, without giving an indemnity bond, under a statute providing that after the lapse of two years from maturity, recovery may be had on a lost instrument without bond.

For other cases, see Lost Instruments, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For certificate of deposit as a negotiable instrument, see annotation following this case, post, 691.

The question as to whether or not an action may be maintained on a lost negotiable instrument without giving indemnity is indirectly touched upon in the note to Campbell v. Myers, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 648, on "Jurisdiction, as between equity and law courts, of suits or actions on lost negotiable instruments."

L.R.A.1918C.

Costs — litigation necessitated by negligence — liability of innocent party.

3. A bank sued on a certificate of deposit lost by the negligence of the holder should not be charged with costs, although recovery is had against it.

For other cases, see Costs and Fees, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 31, 1917.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Knox County in favor of complainant in a suit brought to recover on a lost certificate of deposit issued by defendant to plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cormick, Frantz, McConnell, & Seymour for appellant.

Messrs. Cates & Price, for appellee:

The certificate of deposit in question is a negotiable instrument.

Citizens Nat. Bank v. Brown, 45 Ohio St. 39, 4 Am. St. Rep. 526, 11 N. E. 799; Cassidy v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Minn. 86, 14 N. W. 363; Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 484, 24 L.R.A. 444, 42 Am. St. Rep. 683, 58 N. W. 1016; Smilie v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 315; Kavanagh v. Bank of America, 239 Ill. 404, 88 N. E. 171; Dickey v. Adler, 143 Mo. App. 326, 127 S. W. 593; Forrest v. Safety Bkg. & T. Co. 174 Fed. 345; Ford v. Brown, 114 Tenn. 467, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 188, 88 S. W. 1036.

Complainant should not be required to execute an indemnity bond to the bank in order to entitle her to payment, for the reason that said certificate of deposit is barred as to anyone other than complainant, and by express statute in Tennessee she is relieved from executing an indemnity bond, because her suit is to set up a lost instrument and recover judgment thereon, said instrument being more than two years past due.

Lowry v. Medlin, 6 Humph. 449; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 1481, pp. 1657, 1658; Moore v. Fall, 42 Me. 450, 66 Am. Dec. 297; Torrey v. Foss, 40 Me. 74; 2 Parsons, Bills & Notes, 296, 303.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to set up a lost certificate of deposit issued by the defendant bank and to recover the amount of the same. From a decree in favor of the complainant below, defendant has appealed to this court.

On September 10, 1910, A. Easley, deceased, deposited in the East Tennessee National Bank $4,950, for which he took a certificate in words and figures as follows:

Certificate of Deposit.

East Tennessee National Bank of Knoxville, Tennessee.

No. 13841.

September 10, 1910. $4,950.

A. Easley, Agt., has deposited in this bank $4,950, payable to the order of self, on the return of this certificate properly indorsed.

Interest at 3 per cent if left three months.

No interest after twelve months.

No interest for fractional parts of a month.

Safe deposit boxes for rent.

S. V. Carter, Cashier.

Easley died August 25, 1913, and by will appointed his wife, the complainant, his executrix, and devised and bequeathed to her all his estate.

While this deposit was made in the name of A. Easley, agent, the proof shows that the funds were his own, and this is not seriously controverted by the bank.

Prior to the death of Easley, and something more than a year after the date of the deposit, this certificate was lost. Deceased was in the habit of collecting his interest semiannually, and after collecting the instalment of interest due September 10, 1911, the said certificate of deposit was mislaid and has not yet been found. It is obvious from the testimony of the complainant that the certificate of deposit was in the possession of her husband until after September 10, 1911, and that he had not transferred it to anyone prior to that time. Some time subsequent to the death of her husband, the complainant made demand on the bank for the payment to her of the sum so deposited by the deceased. The bank declined to make this payment until the complainant executed to it an indemnity bond to cover any loss it might sustain by reason of said certificate of deposit having come into the hands of an innocent holder. Complainant was not able financially to make a bond in the amount required by the bank.

It is the contention of the bank that a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument; that it is not due until presented and demand made for its payment; and that, if the Easley certificate were now outstanding in the hands of an innocent holder, no demand having been made, the bank would be liable therefor.

On the other hand, the complainant insists that a certificate of deposit, like a demand note, is due from the date of its issuance, and that this certificate, even if now outstanding, is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Complainant further insists that said certificate of deposit was in the possession of her husband unindorsed for more than a year after it was issued, and that no person who later acquired it could be a holder in due course, since any negotiation occurred an unreasonable length of time after the issuance of the paper. We do not find it necessary to pass on the question of the application of the Statute of Limitations.

We think a certificate of deposit such as the one in suit is a negotiable instrument. The authorities generally so hold. 3 R. C. L. p. 573; 7 C. J. p. 648. This court has treated such instruments as negotiable, although without any discussion. Ford v. Brown, 114 Tenn. 467, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 188, 88 S. W. 1036.

The certificate of deposit is undoubtedly payable on demand. It is payable "on the return of this certificate properly indorsed;" that is to say, upon presentation.

"An instrument is payable on demand (1) where it is expressed to be payable on demand, or at sight, or on presentation." Acts 1899, chap. 94, § 7; Thompson's Shannon's Code, § 3516a6.

The Negotiable Instruments Statute further provides: "Where an instrument payable on demand is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after its issue, the holder is not deemed a holder in due course." Acts 1899, chap. 94, § 53; Thompson's Shannon's Code, § 3516a52.

"In determining what is a 'reasonable time' or an 'unreasonable time,' regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade or business (if any) with respect to such instruments, and the facts of the particular case." Acts 1899, chap. 94, prefix; Thompson's Shannon's Code, § 3516a-191.

It will be observed that the certificate of deposit in suit provides on its face that it shall bear no interest after twelve months.

The purpose of making time deposits, evidenced by certificates, ordinarily is to procure interest on the money deposited. Usually such certificates of deposit are renewed at the end of twelve months from the date of issuance, or at such other period as may be stipulated for the cessation of interest. Accordingly, we think that a demand certificate of deposit such as the one before us, stipulating "no interest after twelve months," negotiated more than a year after its date, is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after its issue, and one who takes it is not a holder in due course.

The supreme court of North Dakota reviewed the cases on the question of reasonable time, and said: "It is well established that a note payable on demand is due within a reasonable time after its date, and there are practically no authorities which hold that such a reasonable time can be extended beyond a year." McAdam v. Grand Forks Mercantile Co. 24 N. D. 645, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 246, 140 N. W. 725.

For the purpose of indorsement, demand paper has been held to be overdue in two months (Camp v. Scott, 14 Vt. 387); ten weeks (Losee v. Dunkin, 7 Johns. 70, 5 Am. Dec. 245); three months (Herrick v. Woolverton, 41 N. Y. 581, 1 Am. Rep. 461); four months (La Due v. First Nat. Bank, 31 Minn. 33, 16 N. W. 426); six months (Thompson v. Hale, 6 Pick. 259). And see other cases collected in note 93c, 8 C. J. 408.

Looking to the authorities, the nature of this instrument, the usage of business, and the facts of this particular case, we conclude that no one who may have come into possession of the instrument in suit can be a holder in due course. It certainly could not have been negotiated until more than a year after the date of its issuance.

The complainant is entitled to recover from the bank the amount of the said certificate of deposit without the execution of an indemnity bond. Our statutes, as contained in Thompson's Shannon's Code, are as follows:

"5694. Lost instruments, how supplied.—Any lost instrument may be supplied by affidavit of any person acquainted with the facts, stating the contents thereof, as near as may be, and that such instrument has been unintentionally lost or mislaid, and is still the property of the person claiming under it, unpaid and unsatisfied.

"5697. Indemnity bond may be required.—The court of justice before whom the action is tried, may, in case recovery is had upon a lost instrument, require the party claiming under it to give bond with good security, in double the amount of the claim, payable to the opposite party, and conditioned to indemnify such party against any demand by action on such lost instrument; and execution shall be stayed until such bond is given.

"5698. Unless two years have elapsed since maturity of instrument.—The person recovering on such lost instrument may, however, after the lapse of two years from the maturity of such instrument, enforce his recovery without giving the bond prescribed in the last section, in which case, the person from whom the recovery is had may plead the judgment in bar of an action by the actual holder of such lost instrument."

Complainant made demand for the payment of the deposit evidenced by this certificate more than two years ago. If a demand was necessary to mature the certificate as between her and the bank, still she could not be required to present the certificate. It being lost and its whereabouts unknown, as a matter of course it was impossible for her to present it, and to hold that presentation of the lost instrument must be made would be to destroy the efficacy of the section of the Code last quoted as to such paper.

Section 5698, supra, provides that the "person from whom recovery is had may plead the judgment in bar of an action by the actual holder of such lost instrument." This fully protects the bank.

Under the circumstances of the case, we think the chancellor properly taxed the costs of this proceeding to the complainant. The defendant bank has acted in good faith throughout, and only desired to be protected. This litigation has been rendered necessary by the carelessness of the complainant or her husband, the deceased, and the bank should not be put to any expense on account thereof.

The decree of the Chancellor is affirmed, with all costs taxed to the complainant.

Annotation—Certificate of deposit as a negotiable instrument.

I. Introduction, 691.

II. Majority rule that certificate is a negotiable instrument, 694.

III. Minority rule that certificate is not a negotiable instrument, 703.

L.R.A.1918C.

I. Introduction.

The term "negotiable" has not always been used consistently and with a fixed meaning. It has been stated to include any written security which may be transferred by indorsement or delivery so as to vest in the indorsee the legal title, and enable him to maintain a suit thereon in his own name.<sup>1</sup> The term "negotiable," when used with reference to commercial paper, imports more than the quality of being transferable by indorsement. In addition thereto the indorsement imposes upon the indorser a liability that the indorsement or delivery of a negotiable instrument to one who takes it for value before maturity and without notice of any defenses thereto entitles the one so taking to recover thereon against the maker the amount of the instrument; in other words, assuming that the instrument is not void, such holder is relieved of defenses to the instrument which might have been made to it in the hands of the payee. A negotiable instrument prima facie imports a consideration; this may be overcome in an action between the original parties, but a bona fide holder takes the instrument free from the defense of lack of consideration.

The indorsement of a negotiable instrument raises an implied contract on the part of the indorser with and in favor of the indorsee and every subsequent holder to whom the instrument is transferred, (1) that the instrument itself, and the antecedent signatures thereon, are genuine; (2) that he (the indorser) has a good title to the instrument; (3) that he is competent to bind himself by the indorsement as indorser; (4) that the maker or acceptor is competent to bind himself to the payment, and will, upon due presentment of the instrument, pay it at maturity, or when it is due; (5) that if, when duly presented, it is not paid by the maker or acceptor he (the indorser) will, upon due and reasonable notice given him of the dishonor, pay the same to the indorsee or other holder.<sup>2</sup>

It is in the ordinary sense, as above defined, that the term "negotiable instrument" is used in this discussion.

In determining whether a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument, theoretically, two questions are involved: (1) The abstract question of whether such an instrument is in its nature negotiable; and, assuming an affirmative answer to this question, there remains (2) the question whether the instrument involved in the particular case is in form negotiable. Some courts, having answered the first question in the affirmative, have not considered the second, and seemingly erroneous conclusions have been reached.<sup>3</sup>

Except in Pennsylvania, it is held in the abstract that a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument. In a great majority of these cases the certificate contained negotiable words. It is assumed that the certificate must be in form negotiable in practically all the cases so holding. It has been expressly stated that in order that an instrument be negotiable it must be expressed in negotiable words.<sup>4</sup> It is clear that a certificate of deposit may be drawn in such a form that it is non-negotiable.<sup>5</sup> A certificate reciting the receipt of a sum of money which the bank agrees to repay to the depositor "or her assigns

<sup>1</sup> Odell v. Gray (1851) 15 Mo. 342, 55 Am. Dec. 147, cited in International Bank v. German Bank (1879) 71 Mo. 183, 36 Am. Rep. 468.

<sup>2</sup> 3 R. C. L. § 363, p. 1148.

<sup>3</sup> See Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357, infra, note 15.

<sup>4</sup> Johnson v. Henderson (1877) 76 N. C. 227.

<sup>5</sup> A certificate which contained the words "not transferable" was assumed by all parties to be non-negotiable, in Dollar v. International Bkg. Corp. (1909) 10 Cal. App. 83, 101 Pac. 34, the only question being whether or not it was assignable.

A certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of a sum of money to be accounted for by the bank, which contains on its face an indorsement to the effect that it is "a deposit receipt, not transferable," is held non-negotiable in Bank of Montreal v. Clark (1903) 108 Ill. App. 163. Accordingly the bank was held subject to garnishment in a suit against the depositor.

A deposit note acknowledging the receipt L.R.A.1918C.

of money "to account for here on demand," containing the statement that the note is not transferable and must be produced on each occasion of any withdrawal, is held not to be a negotiable instrument in Griffin v. Griffin (1898) 79 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 442.

The words "not transferable," printed in large letters across a deposit receipt, were held to prevent its being considered a negotiable instrument in Re Commercial Bank (1897) 11 Manitoba L. R. 494.

An instrument designated a certificate of deposit, which recited that certain money has been placed to the credit of the depositor, and that "this amount is left on deposit in this bank, with the understanding that it is not to be withdrawn for two years, counted from this date, in consideration of which we hereby agree to pay the [the depositor] straight interest at the rate of 7% (seven per cent) per annum."—is not a negotiable instrument which can be assigned by indorsement and delivery. Young v. American Bank (1904) 44 Misc. 305, 89 N. Y. Supp. 913.

Apparently the instruments involved in on return of this certificate, which is assignable only on the books of the company," has been held non-negotiable.<sup>4b</sup>

In discussing the general question of negotiability, the court states that, "while the usual terms employed to confer negotiability on an instrument for the payment of money are to make it payable to order or bearer, still instruments payable to assigns have been held to be negotiable in cases where it was apparent from the whole nature of the instrument and the language employed that such was intended to be their character.

. . . Therefore, had the first sentence of the certificate terminated with the words, 'on return of this certificate,' it might be claimed, not without force, that the certificate was intended to be negotiable. But the words quoted are followed by the provision, 'which is assignable only on the books of the company.' We think the clear effect and intent of this provision was to render the instrument non-negotiable, and to protect the company in dealing with the holder of the certificate as such holder might appear on the books of the company, without liability to third parties to whom, unknown to the defendant, it might have been transferred."

It has been held that "the rule which applies to negotiable instruments should not be invoked with reference to a certificate of deposit, until the certificate has been indorsed and transferred by the original holder."<sup>5</sup>

It is held generally in some cases that a certificate of deposit is a promissory note.<sup>6</sup> In some cases so stating the char-

Saderquist v. Ontario Bank (1887) 15 Ont. App. Rep. 609, and Bank of Montreal v. Little (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 313, were non-negotiable in form.

<sup>4b</sup> Zander v. New York Secur. & T. Co (1904) 178 N. Y. 208, 102 Am. St. Rep. 492, 70 N. E. 449.

It is stated in Re Fearing (1910) 138 App. Div. 881, 123 N. Y. Supp. 396, that a certificate of deposit transferable only by assignment is not, strictly speaking, a negotiable instrument. This case was affirmed without reference to this point by the court of appeals in (1911) 200 N. Y. 340, 93 N. E. 956.

<sup>5</sup> Bank of Commerce v. Harrison (1901) 11 N. M. 50, 66 Pac. 460.

<sup>6</sup> Taylor v. Hutchinson (1905) 145 Ala. 202, 40 So. 108.

Swift v. Whitney (1858) 20 Ill. 144, holding that a certificate of deposit reciting that the depositor "has deposited with us . . . to the credit of himself, to be paid in like funds to his order hereon," is a promissory note so as to be admissible as evidence under the common count in an action thereon. The court, in referring to the certificates, further states that "they might, undoubtedly, have been negotiable under our statutes, if not by the law merchant."

Hunt v. Divine (1865) 37 Ill. 137, holding a certificate of deposit reciting that the depositor "has deposited in this bank . . . subject to the order of himself, and payable in like funds on return of this certificate three months after date," is a promissory note, and like a promissory note no demand of payment need be made thereon as a condition precedent to suit, nor is a return of the certificate a condition precedent to a right of recovery.

Bertolet v. Stoner (1911) 164 Ill. App. 605, holding that a gift of the certificate of deposit is completed by delivery without indorsement.

Mereness v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 112 Iowa, 11, 51 L.R.A. 410, 84 Am. St. Rep. 318, 83 N. W. 711, holding that the Statute of L.R.A. 1918C.

Limitations began to run on a demand certificate of deposit from the date thereof. But this decision is overruled by the decision in Elliott v. Capital City State Bank (1905) 128 Iowa, 275, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 111 Am. St. Rep. 198, 103 N. W. 777, holding that a demand certificate of deposit issued by a bank is not a demand promissory note within the rule that the Statute of Limitations begins to run upon it as soon as issued. See note to the latter case in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, upon whether a demand is necessary to mature a demand certificate of deposit.

Dietrich v. Rothenberger (1903) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 338, 75 S. W. 271.

Beardsley v. Webber (1895) 104 Mich. 88, 62 N. W. 173, holding that the institution of a suit is a sufficient demand for the payment of a certificate of deposit.

A certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of a stated sum of money "to the credit of himself [the depositor], payable on the return of this certificate, properly indorsed," is stated in Talladega Ins. Co. v. Woodward (1870) 44 Ala. 287, to be in effect a promissory note payable on demand.

A certificate of deposit was held in Mills v. Barney (1863) 22 Cal. 240, to stand on the same footing as a promissory note so far as concerned the right of the bank to recover from an indorser to whom the amount of the certificate had been paid, where it appeared that a previous indorsement was forged.

In Brummagin v. Tallant (1866) 29 Cal. 503, 89 Am. Dec. 61, a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor on demand was held to be governed by the rules applicable to the case of a demand note, in that the Statute of Limitations began to run against the same at the date thereof without demand.

A certificate of deposit is treated as a promissory note in Brown v. McElroy (1875) 52 Ind. 404; but it is there held that, contrary to the rule that obtains in the case of an ordinary promissory note payable acter of a certificate of deposit, the question was one of negotiability, and these cases are treated infra; but in the cases cited in note 6, it is not clear that the question was one of negotiability. A promissory note may be negotiable or non-negotiable, so that the characterization of an instrument as a promissory note does not answer the question as to its negotiability, unless it is a necessary implication from the facts and the decision that the court had in mind the question of negotiability. No attempt has been made in the present note to include an exhaustive list of cases characterizing certificates of deposit as promissory notes, in which it is not clear that negotiable promissory notes were meant by the expression. Under special circumstances an instrument in form a certificate of deposit may be a mere receipt.<sup>7</sup>

The maturity of certificates of deposit on demand, there must be a demand of payment of the bank and a refusal before suit can be brought.

In Gregg v. Union County Nat. Bank (1882) 87 Ind. 238, a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor on the return of the certificate was held to be dishonored paper by lapse of time, when it was not negotiated for six years after its date. In view of the fact that it was a dishonored paper when taken by the plaintiff, the court stated that it was not necessary to decide whether it was negotiable by the law merchant.

A certificate of deposit reciting that money has been deposited in the bank payable to the order of the depositor on the return of the certificate is stated, in Krebs v. Blatz (1909) 134 Ky. 505, 121 S. W. 436, to be in effect a promissory note. It is further stated in this case that, when the depositor placed his name on the back of the paper and transferred it for a valuable consideration, he became liable to his transferee "as assignor." Upon the subsequent failure of the bank, when the depositor knew that his transferee was looking to him as the assignor, he made a settlement with him in which the certificate of deposit was returned; a number of years after this settlement the suit at bar arose, and the court held that the assignor, having elected to make a settlement and accept a return of the certificate, could not change his election.

A certificate of deposit issued by an association formed under the general banking law, payable to the order of a particular person a stated time after date with interest, was held, in Bank of Orleans v. Merrill (1842) 2 Hill (N. Y.) 295, to be in effect a negotiable promissory note, and having been issued without the sanction of the comptroller could not form the basis of a right of action.
L.R.A.1918C.

has been discussed in a previous note in this series of reports.<sup>8</sup>

The present note is confined to instruments issued by banks which are ordinarily known as certificates of deposit.<sup>9</sup>

II. Majority rule that certificate is a negotiable instrument.

Ordinarily a certificate of deposit contains a statement to the effect that the depositor has deposited in the bank a stated sum of money, and that such sum is payable to his order on the return of the certificate properly indorsed. The certificate usually contains provisions as to interest. A typical form may be seen in the opinion in Easley v. East Tennessee Nat. Bank, ante, 689. It is held generally in some cases without any reference to its form, that a certificate of deposit is a negotiable promissory note<sup>10</sup> or a negotiable instru-

A certificate which, so far as appears, was given by an individual, reciting that a stated sum of money had been received from a named person for which "I am responsible, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, upon production of this receipt, and after three months' notice," is held to be a promissory note. La Forest v. Babineau (1906) 37 Can. S. C. 521.

By virtue of an express statute, it was held in Blood v. Northrup (1862) 1 Kan. 28, that a certificate of deposit was subject, in the hands of an assignee, to the same defenses as could have been made against the same in the hands of the assignor.

<sup>7</sup> In Hotchkiss v. Mosher (1872) 48 N. Y. 478, where one who had guaranteed the payment of certain notes at a bank paid the notes and allowed the same to remain with the bank for collection from the principal obligor, and received from the bank as evidence of the transaction a certificate of deposit stating that he had deposited a certain sum of money with the bank, it was held that the certificate was simply an acknowledgment of so much money deposited with the bank, and of the same force and effect as a receipt for money.

<sup>8</sup> Note to First Nat. Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 15 L.R.A. 386.

<sup>9</sup> See First Nat. Bank v. Clark and the note appended thereto, as to ordinary deposit slips given by banks. 17 L.R.A. 580.

<sup>10</sup> McMillan v. Richards (1858) 9 Cal. 365. 70 Am. Dec. 655, holding that attachment would not lie against the bank after the certificate had been issued.

Springfield M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Peck (1882) 102 Ill. 265, recognizing that under the Illinois rule such certificates are negotiable.

Hanna v. Manufacturers' Trust Co. (1905) 104 App. Div. 90, 93 N. Y. Supp. 304.

In Elmore County Bank v. Avant (1914) 189 Ala. 418, 66 So. 509, an action upon a promissory note by a bank which had pur-ment.<sup>11</sup> But usually the form appears and is substantially as set forth above, and such a certificate of deposit is held to be a negotiable instrument.<sup>12</sup> In other cases the note by giving a certificate of deposit, the court, in sustaining a recovery, states that such a certificate is a negotiable promissory note, and after it is negotiated the bank could not defend a suit by a subsequent holder; so that after the original holder had negotiated his certificate of deposit, the bank was in the same position as if it had paid the holder value for the note sued upon.

In Zang v. Wyant (1898) 25 Colo. 551, 71 Am. St. Rep. 145, 56 Pac. 565, an action by creditors of a bank against the stockholders to enforce the statutory liability, a showing that a certificate of deposit had been issued to the parties seeking the recovery is held insufficient to entitle them to a recovery, the court stating that such certificates are negotiable instruments and transferable by indorsement and delivery, and it was therefore incumbent upon those who sought to recover thereon to prove their present ownership and produce them upon the trial, or show by competent testimony that they had been lost or destroyed. Otherwise a recovery might be had by the original payee after he had transferred and parted with his title to the instrument to a bona fide holder, who would have the right to maintain an action thereon notwithstanding such recovery.

A certificate was assumed to be a negotiable instrument in Coye v. Palmer (1860) 16 Cal. 158.

<sup>11</sup> Kushner v. Abbott (1912) 156 Iowa, 598, 137 N. W. 913; City Bank v. Bryan (1913) 72 W. Va. 29, 78 S. E. 400; Benedum v. First Citizens Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 124, 78 S. E. 656.

A certificate of deposit issued by a bank for borrowed money was without discussion assumed to be a negotiable instrument in Barnes v. Ontario Bank (1859) 19 N. Y. 152.

Certificates of deposit are treated in Kinney v. Hynds (1897) 7 Wyo. 22, 49 Pac. 403, 52 Pac. 1081, as negotiable instruments although there is no discussion.

A cashier's check which is referred to by the court as a certificate of deposit is held negotiable in Drinkall v. Movius State Bank (1901) 11 N. D. 10, 57 L.R.A. 341, 95 Am. St. Rep. 693, 58 N. W. 724.

It is held generally in National City Bank v. Titlow (1916) 233 Fed. 838, that a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument; but in that case the plaintiff was held not entitled to the rights of a bona fide holder because of having had notice of an infirmity in the instrument.

<sup>12</sup> Maxwell v. Agnew (1884) 21 Fla. 154, holding that a certificate of deposit payable to the depositor or bearer is in effect a promissory note payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery, so that, when the bank has once paid it to a person to whom it had been delivered by the depositor, such payment protects the bank against any claim of the depositor.
L.R.A.1918C.

Carey v. McDougald (1849) 7 Ga. 84, holding the indorser of a certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of a certain sum of money, "which sum said bank will pay to him [the depositor] or his order on this certificate, on the 1st day of January next," liable on his indorsement.

Lynch v. Goldsmith (1879) 64 Ga. 42, holding that a depositor to whom a certificate of deposit was issued certifying that he had deposited in the bank a stated sum of money "subject to his order," who indorsed the certificate upon a transfer thereof, was liable to the transferee upon his indorsement.

Auten v. Crahan (1899) 81 Ill. App. 502, holding that a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor on the return of the certificate properly indorsed was a negotiable instrument, and therefore the bank was not subject to be garnished in a suit against the depositor.

Drake v. Markle (1863) 21 Ind. 433, 83 Am. Dec. 358, holding that a certificate of deposit reciting that the depositor has deposited a stated sum of money "payable to the order of himself, in currency, on return of this certificate," is a negotiable promissory note, so that parties whose names appear on the back thereof are prima facie indorsers.

First Nat. Bank v. Stapf (1905) 165 Ind. 162, 112 Am. St. Rep. 214, 74 N. E. 987, 6 Ann. Cas. 631, holding a depositor who had indorsed a certificate of deposit "payable to the order of self, in current funds, on the return of this certificate properly indorsed," liable on his indorsement to the indorsee.

Bingham v. Newton Bank (1918) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 318.

Bean v. Briggs (1855) 1 Iowa, 488, 63 Am. Dec. 464, holding that the payees of a certificate of deposit which recited that they had deposited in the bank a stated number of dollars "to the order of themselves, payable two months after date, payable to their order on return of this certificate, at interest," who had indorsed the same upon a transfer thereof, were liable upon their indorsement.

Fells Point Sav. Inst. v. Weedon (1862) 18 Md. 320, 81 Am. Dec. 603, holding a certificate of deposit which, after reciting the deposit of a stated sum of money and the provision as to interest, provides that the sum "will be paid to him [the depositor] or to his order on demand, and on returning this certificate," is a negotiable instrument, so as to entitle the bank to the return of the certificate as a voucher of payment and as security against any future claim.

Cassidy v. First Nat. Bank (1882) 30 Minn. 86, 14 N. W. 363, approved in Mitchell v. Easton (1887) 37 Minn. 335, 33 N. W. 910.

Dickey v. Adler (1910) 143 Mo. App. 326, 127 S. W. 593, holding a certificate of de-cases in which such a form appears, a certificate of deposit is stated to be in effect a promissory note when a question of negotiability is involved, and it seems posit payable to "the order of self" negotiable under the Negotiable Instruments Law.

Fultz v. Walters (1874) 2 Mont. 165.

Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (1894) 40 Neb. 484, 24 L.R.A. 444, 42 Am. St. Rep. 683, 58 N. W. 1016, holding that a bona fide purchaser of a certificate of deposit for value before maturity is protected to the same extent as an innocent holder of other negotiable paper, approving of First Nat. Bank v. Security Nat. Bank (1892) 34 Neb. 71, 15 L.R.A. 386, 33 Am. St. Rep. 618, 51 N. W. 305, containing a statement to the same effect, but holding the transferee not entitled to the rights of a bona fide holder because he had taken the certificate after maturity.

Pardee v. Fish (1875) 60 N. Y. 265, 19 Am. Rep. 176, holding that one to whose order a certificate of deposit in the usual form was payable, with interest, on the return of the certificate, who had indorsed the same upon a transfer thereof, was liable upon his indorsement.

Munger v. Albany City Nat. Bank (1881) 85 N. Y. 580; Read v. Marine Bank (1893) 136 N. Y. 454, 32 Am. St. Rep. 758, 32 N. E. 1083; Re Baldwin (1902) 170 N. Y. 156, 58 L.R.A. 122, 63 N. E. 62; Re Ellard (1909) 62 Misc. 374, 114 N. Y. Supp. 827; Re Marine (1912) 78 Misc. 707, 140 N. Y. Supp. 231, affirmed without reference to this point in (1915) 169 App. Div. 65, 154 N. Y. Supp. 845.

Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Brown (1887) 45 Ohio St. 39, 4 Am. St. Rep. 526, 11 N. E. 799; Cuyahoga Steam Furnace Co. v. Lewis (1853) 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 15.

Folk v. Moore (1916) 103 S. C. 266, 88 S. E. 18, holding third parties who indorsed their names upon the back of a certificate of deposit before delivery liable as makers.

EASLEY V. EAST TENNESSEE NAT. BANK, ante, 689.

Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland County Bank (1867) 40 Vt. 377, holding a certificate of deposit which recited the deposit in the bank of a stated number of dollars payable to the order of the depositor on the presentation of the certificate properly indorsed, to be a negotiable instrument upon which an indorsee might maintain an action.

Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 534, 79 S. E. 662, holding a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor in current funds, on the return of the certificate properly indorsed, a negotiable instrument.

Curran v. Witter (1887) 68 Wis. 16, 60 Am. Rep. 827, 31 N. W. 706, holding negotiable a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor on the return of the certificate properly indorsed.

Miller v. Austen (1851) 13 How. (U. S.) 218, 14 L. ed. 119, holding a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor upon the return of the certificate a negotiable instrument.

Bank of Saginaw v. Title & T. Co. (1900) L.R.A.1918C.

105 Fed. 491, holding a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor on the return of the certificate properly indorsed to be a negotiable instrument.

See reference to Ford v. Brown (1904) 114 Tenn. 467, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 188, 88 S. W. 1036, in EASLEY V. EAST TENNESSEE NAT. BANK.

In Darden v. Banks (1857) 21 Ga. 297, certificates of deposit payable to the order of the depositor are held to be but the promissory notes of the bank and negotiable, and, being payable in "current notes," to be within the prohibition of a statute against the issuance by a bank of any bank bills, notes, etc., payable in any other manner than with gold and silver coin.

A certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of a stated sum of money "payable to the order of" the depositors "on return of this certificate, thirty days from date," is assumed, in Johnson v. Barney (1855) 1 Iowa, 531, to be a negotiable instrument.

The person to whose order such a certificate had been made payable was held liable upon an indorsement of the same, in Towle v. Starz (1897) 67 Minn. 370, 36 L.R.A. 463, 69 N. W. 1098.

A certificate reciting that money had been deposited for the account of a certain person, and containing a promise to pay to said person "or to his order, on return of this receipt, with 7 per cent per annum interest," which, so far as appears, was given by an individual, was held to be a negotiable promissory note in Frank v. Wessels (1876) 64 N. Y. 155.

A certificate of deposit reciting that the depositor "has deposited in this bank $4,000 in currency, payable in like funds, to the order hereon of himself," is held in Howe v. Hartness (1860) 11 Ohio St. 449, 78 Am. Dec. 312, to have all the characteristics of a negotiable promissory note, unless the fact that it is payable in currency affects the negotiability. As to whether a certificate payable in currency is negotiable, see infra.

A certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor in current funds, upon the return of the certificate properly indorsed, is assumed to be a negotiable instrument in Tobin v. McKinney (1901) 15 S. D. 257, 91 Am. St. Rep. 694, 88 N. W. 572, rehearing of (1900) 14 S. D. 52, 91 Am. St. Rep. 688, 84 N. W. 228, and it is held that the negotiability of the certificate is not destroyed by the provision, "payable to the order of herself, in current funds, on return of this certificate properly indorsed."

A certificate of deposit which recites the deposit of money, and states that the certificate "will be cashed only upon being returned to the bank by [the depositors] or their order," is a negotiable certificate. The court states that, while there is no promise to pay in so many words, the language of the last paragraph of the instrument is susceptible of no other construction than such a promise to pay either to the depos-safe to assume that the court meant to hold it negotiable.<sup>13</sup>

itors or their order. Young v. American Bank (1904) 44 Misc. 308, 89 N. Y. Supp. 915.

The court in Re Central Bank (1889) 17 Ont. Rep. 574, holds negotiable a certificate of deposit which was payable to the order of the depositor with interest at 4 per cent per annum on receiving a fifteen-days notice, but contained a provision that no interest will be allowed unless the money remains with the bank a stated time. The certificate contained a provision, "This receipt to be given up to the bank when payment of either principal or interest is required." The court states that, admitting that such an instrument does not possess all the incidents of a promissory note, it is so far negotiable as to pass a good title to a bona fide purchaser.

The privy council expressed an opinion in Richer v. Voyer (1874) L. R. 5 P. C. (Eng.) 461, 30 L. T. N. S. 506, 22 Week. Rep. 849, that a certificate payable to the order of a named person upon the surrender of the certificate, which required the deposit to remain a stated time to bear interest, is a negotiable instrument; but expressly refrained from deciding this question.

<sup>13</sup> In Poorman v. Mills (1868) 35 Cal. 118, 95 Am. Dec. 90, holding that a certificate of deposit stating that the depositor has deposited a certain sum payable to himself or order on demand, or on return of the certificate properly indorsed, passes by delivery when indorsed in blank, and that the holder may write over the indorsement, "Pay to the order of (the bearer)" and that that has the effect in the hands of a bona fide holder of an indorsement in full.

Laughlin v. Marshall (1857) 19 Ill. 390, holding the payee of a certificate of deposit which was made "payable to the order of himself, . . . on the return of this certificate," who had transferred the same by indorsement, liable on his indorsement to his indorsee.

Cate v. Patterson (1872) 25 Mich. 191, holding that a certificate of deposit is a promissory note within the meaning of a statute permitting an action thereon by attaching a copy thereof to a declaration upon the common counts. In this case the person to whose order the certificate was payable was held liable as an indorser to the person to whom he had transferred the certificate.

That a certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor in current funds, on the return of the certificate, is a negotiable instrument, seems not to have been denied in Tripp v. Curtenius (1877) 36 Mich. 494, 24 Am. Rep. 610, reversing a judgment in favor of transferees thereof, who had taken the certificate four months after its date, and who claimed to be bona fide holders and therefore relieved of the defense of payment to a prior holder. The court states that on such a certificate the time begins to run from the date thereof. "and no one L.R.A.1918C.

It has been held that, when such an instrument has been indorsed by the can become a bona fide purchaser who does not take it within some reasonably short period."

In the subsequent case of Birch v. Fisher (1883) 51 Mich. 36, 16 N. W. 220, the lapse of thirty-one days is held not sufficient to raise the presumption that the paper has been dishonored, so as to prevent one who took the same after that lapse of time from the date thereof becoming a bona fide holder, and entitled to hold the same as against the party to whose order it was made payable, from whom it had been obtained by fraud.

Jensen v. Wilslef (1913) 36 Nev. 37, 132 Pac. 16, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1220, holding the person to whose order such a certificate was made payable liable as an indorser upon his indorsement upon a transfer thereof.

A certificate of deposit is held in Philpot v. Temple Bkg. Co. (1907) 3 Ga. App. 742, 60 S. E. 480, to be a chose in action, the delivery of which as a gift constitutes an equitable assignment of the money for which it calls.

A certificate of deposit which stated that the depositor had deposited in the bank a stated number of dollars "to the credit of himself, payable in like funds on the return of this certificate duly indorsed, four months after date," was held to be an instrument within the meaning of a statute prohibiting a banking association from issuing or putting in circulation "any bills or notes" unless the same shall be made payable on demand, and therefore to be void. Bank of Peru v. Farnsworth (1857) 18 Ill. 563. In arriving at this conclusion the court states that this instrument "is simply a promissory note. No particular form of words is necessary to make a promissory note. . . . This paper contains all these essential elements of a promissory note without limit or qualification, and beside that simply expresses the consideration on which the promise is made." The action in this case was brought by an indorsee, and the court states that, "like a promissory note, it was put in circulation by the indorsement of the promisee, and this action is brought by the assignee. If it was not a promissory note in the commercial sense of the term, then by what authority was it negotiated?"

It is expressly stated in Bank of Peru v. Farnsworth (Ill.) supra, that the certificate of deposit may be put in circulation by indorsement of the promisee, and the transfer thereof is spoken of as a negotiation.

In Hunt v. Divine (1865) 37 Ill. 137, supra, the plaintiff is spoken of as an assignee of the certificate, although in describing the certificate it is stated to have been indorsed by the payee.

See Swift v. Whitney (1858) 20 Ill. 144.

In some cases dealing with certificates of deposit the negotiable character of the paper is conceded. In Kilgore v. Bulkley (1841) 14 Conn. 362, an action against the indorsers of a certificate of deposit which payee, he should be considered as the drawer of a check or bill for the amount named therein, so as to be entitled to have it protested for nonpayment and to receive notice thereof.<sup>14</sup>

The certificates involved in the foregoing cases, so far as appears, contained stated that the depositors had deposited a stated sum of money which was payable "to their order and the return of this certificate," it was admitted that the indorsement by the defendants of the instrument in question imposed on them a liability to pay the plaintiff the sum therein mentioned, provided a legal demand was made when due and payment refused and legal notice of such payment given to the defendants, and it is stated that "the instrument in question is conceded, by the counsel for the defendants, to be a promissory note; but the result to which the court has come would be the same whether it is to be considered as a note or, in connection with the defendants' indorsement, an accepted draft or order, or, as it is otherwise termed, a certified check, provided it is a note of the bank in the one case, or a draft or check on the bank in the other."

<sup>14</sup> Piner v. Clary (1856) 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 645, holding that the indorser of such a certificate was discharged by laches on the part of the indorsee in failing to make protest and give notice thereof within a reasonable time. This case is approved in Robertson v. Jones (1884) 6 Ky. L. Rep. 71. Compare with Patterson v. Poindexter (1843) 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554, infra, note 48.

<sup>15</sup> Welton v. Adams (1854) 4 Cal. 37, 60 Am. Dec. 579. The certificate here recited a deposit of a stated amount of money "payable at our office . . . on return of this certificate with her indorsement herein." The certificate having been lost, the court held that the bank could not be compelled to pay the amount thereof except upon receipt of indemnity against the presentation of the original certificate. This case is approved in McMillan v. Richards (1858) 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655.

In Kavanagh v. Bank of America (1909) 239 Ill. 404, 88 N. E. 171, a certificate of deposit reciting that "F. M. Creelman has deposited in this bank $500, payable in current funds five months from date, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, on return of this certificate properly indorsed," was held a negotiable instrument, and free from defenses in the hands of a bona fide indorsee. The argument in this case was that the certificate was not a negotiable instrument assignable by indorsement, so as to convey the legal title to the indorsee, because it was not payable to a person named therein as required by the Negotiable Instrument Act. In answer to this argument the court states that the certificate acknowledges the receipt of the money from the depositor, and states that it is payable on return of the certificate the usual words of negotiability. It has been held in case of a certificate of deposit containing none of the usual words of negotiability, such as "or order" or "or bearer," that the certificate was negotiable.<sup>15</sup> In all but one<sup>16</sup> of the certificates involved in these cases, the cerproperly indorsed; that the legal effect is a promise to pay to the depositor who is named in the instrument, and the court concludes that the certificate is in effect a promissory note and negotiable under the statute. The Kavanagh Case is approved in Pryor v. Bank of America (1909) 240 Ill. 100, 88 N. E. 288.

A bank which had issued a certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of money, and containing the provision that it is "payable on the return of this certificate properly indorsed," was held liable to a bona fide holder thereof for the entire amount of the certificate, although it had made a payment thereon to the person to whom it was made payable. National Bank v. Washington County Nat. Bank (1875) 5 Hun (N. Y.) 605. The court treats the deposit of money as a bailment, but states that, when the bank has given a certificate of deposit and made the certificate payable on its return properly indorsed, it has added to its original undertaking as a depositary "an agreement that they will pay the deposit to the holder of that certificate properly indorsed. They are therefore under a liability as depositary, to be ready to redeliver the money whenever demanded; and further, to deliver it to any holder of that certificate properly indorsed. It followed, therefore, that they are liable to a bona fide holder of the certificate, notwithstanding a payment to the original depositor."

A certificate of deposit payable to the depositor in current funds, on the return of the certificate properly indorsed, was treated without discussion in Old Nat. Bank v. Exchange Nat. Bank (1908) 50 Wash. 418, 97 Pac. 462, as a negotiable instrument, so as to entitle an indorsee thereof to recover from the bank free from defenses which the bank had against the depositor. The certificate was also treated as a negotiable instrument in that an indorser thereof is subject to the liabilities of an indorser of a negotiable instrument. The bank of deposit was located in a state other than that in which the action was brought, and a statute of the state in which the bank of deposit was located, providing that a negotiable written contract for the payment of money may be transferred by indorsement in like manner with negotiable instruments, and that such indorsement transfers all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement, was urged by the bank of deposit as authorizing it to offset its claim against the depositor. The court, however, did not pass upon the statute; neither did the statute, tificate was payable on the return thereof "properly indorsed." It has been expressly held that the words "properly indorsed" in a certificate payable to the depositor "on return of this certificate properly indorsed" necessarily imply that the instrument is payable to the depositor or his order.<sup>17</sup> It has been held, apart from the effect of the Negotiable Instrument Law, that, while the usual words of negotiability are "or order" or "or bearer," no fixed form of words is necessary to impart negotiability,<sup>18</sup> so that the words "properly indorsed" may with propriety be interpreted to impart that quality to the instrument, if it is apparent that in using them it was intended to make the instrument negotiable. It is doubtful, however, whether some of the courts holding negotiable such instruments as were involved in the cases cited in this paragraph considered the effect of the absence of the ordinary words of negotiability. The Negotiable Instruments Law provides that an instrument, to be negotiable, must be payable to order or to bearer, or in some states to the order of a specified person or to bearer.<sup>19</sup> Whether a strict compliance with this statute will be required, or whether other words clearly indicating an intent to make the instrument negotiable, will be held sufficient, remains to be seen.

Coming now to the more specific questions connected with the determination of whether a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument, it appears that so far as appears, impose upon an indorser of a non-negotiable instrument the liabilities of an indorser of a negotiable instrument.

Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357, holding a certificate of deposit reciting a deposit of money by a stated person, "payable to himself in currency on the return of this certificate," to be a negotiable instrument.

Forrest v. Safety Bkg. & T. Co. (1909) 174 Fed. 345, holding that a certificate of deposit reciting that a named person has deposited a stated sum of money "to the credit of himself, payable in current funds on the return of this certificate properly indorsed," is a negotiable instrument.

In Long v. Straus (1886) 107 Ind. 94, 57 Am. Rep. 87, 6 N. E. 123, 7 N. E. 763, the court had for its consideration an acknowledgment of the receipt of money in the language, "Received of Joseph S. Long $1,600, on deposit, in national currency." Upon the first opinion the court did not regard this as an ordinary certificate of deposit, but in the opinion on rehearing the court, after stating that certain implied obligations arose, continued that, if "the in-such a certificate of deposit is ordinarily likened to a promissory note. The lack of a promise in express words does not prevent its being considered in effect a promissory note. The West Virginia court<sup>20</sup> states: "That the paper in question is neither a check nor bill of exchange is admitted, but, by the great weight of authority, it is held to be in legal effect a promissory note, notwithstanding the lack of a promise in express words." It has been stated by the Iowa court that the test to determine whether such a certificate is in effect a promissory note, "perhaps, consists in the inquiry whether the transaction is a deposit, or an immediate debt and engagement to pay."<sup>21</sup> The court then referring to the certificate of deposit involved in the case at bar,<sup>22</sup> states that it has all the requisites of a negotiable promissory note, and continues: "It is conceded to have words of negotiability, in being made payable 'to the order of themselves' and 'to their order.' . . . Then, again, it is a written instrument for the payment of a fixed amount in money absolutely, and subject to no contingency, at a certain time, and it is conclusively certain who is to pay and be paid. These requisites make a good promissory note, provided there is also what amounts, in legal effect, to a promise to pay. . . . For this purpose, no particular form of words is necessary, nor need there be a promise in express language; but it is sufficient if an undertaking to pay is implied on the face instrument we have under consideration had been written out in full, although payable on demand, it would be a promissory note, and it seems, under the principles we have stated, that it is a promissory note, and as such negotiable." The question involved in this case, however, did not require a decision as to the negotiability of the instrument, and the court expressly refrained from deciding this question.

<sup>16</sup> See Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357.

<sup>17</sup> Forrest v. Safety Bkg. & T. Co. (1909) 174 Fed. 345.

<sup>18</sup> 3 R. C. L. p. 876, § 61; Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 106.

<sup>19</sup> This provision is not considered by the court in Kavanagh v. Bank of America (1909) 239 Ill. 404, 88 N. E. 171, supra, a case decided under the Negotiable Instruments Act.

<sup>20</sup> Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 534, 79 S. E. 662.

<sup>21</sup> Bean v. Briggs (1855) 1 Iowa, 488, 63 Am. Dec. 464.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., see supra, note 12, for form of certificate.

of the note. . . . And so an order or promise to deliver a certain sum of money to A, or to be accountable or responsible to A for a certain sum of money, or that A shall receive it from the maker, is a good promissory note. . . . The usual express words 'I promise to pay,' etc., it is true, are not contained in this instrument, but an undertaking to pay is clearly implied, as contradistinguished from a mere acknowledgment of a deposit in the nature of a bailment. That the sum is stipulated to draw interest almost necessarily excludes the conclusion that it was a bailment or simple deposit. Then, as to the promise aside from the whole tenor of the instrument, we have the word 'payable' used in two connections, relating to the time of payment, as also to whose order the money was to be paid." The supreme court of Michigan,<sup>23</sup> in dealing with a certificate of deposit which recited that there had been "deposited in this bank $550, payable to the order of Rufus Cate, with interest if left three months, on the return of this certificate," states that "it contains all the elements necessary to constitute a promissory note, the statement of the deposit being, in legal effect, no more than a statement of the consideration; and the word 'payable,' in the context in which it stands, must be treated as an express promise to pay, as this is the only possible meaning which can be attributed to it. It was payable on demand, no other time being fixed, and the sum was certain, within the meaning of that term as generally used in the definition of a promissory note; the amount of principal was certain at all events and though, if left for three months, interest was to be added from its date, yet there was no time, whether before or after the expiration of the three months, when, if payment had been demanded, the amount due would not have been absolutely certain,—if before the three months, the stated principal only; if after that time, the interest to be added to that principal." The English privy council states obiter that "the word 'payable' in the certificate in question unquestionably imports a promise to pay the sum deposited."<sup>24</sup>

While a certificate of deposit is usually treated as being an instrument in the nature of a promissory note, it has been held that a certificate of deposit payable to the order of depositor on the return of the certificate properly indorsed is not a demand promissory note, within the meaning of a statute making promissory notes on demand subject to all the equities between the original parties. Such a certificate is held not to be due until a demand is made and the certificate returned or tendered. Accordingly, one who has taken such a certificate by indorsement from the depositor a short time after its issue may show that he is a bona fide holder thereof and entitled to the rights of a bona fide holder of negotiable paper.<sup>25</sup> The Massachusetts court states that "such certificates are issued with the design that they shall be used as money, and taken with as much confidence as the bills of the bank, and to avoid the risk and inconvenience of keeping, carrying, and counting sums of money, and are so regarded in mercantile affairs. . . . Such certificates are not commonly known in the community as promissory notes."

Certain provisions usually found in certificates of deposit have been the subject of adjudication by the courts. In some cases it is admitted that a certificate of deposit as such is a negotiable instrument,<sup>26</sup> the argument being against the negotiability of the particular one involved in the case at bar.

The fact that such instruments are made payable on return of the certificate is not such a contingency as affects the negotiable character thereof.<sup>27</sup> The re-

<sup>23</sup> Cate v. Patterson (1872) 25 Mich. 191.

<sup>24</sup> Micher v. Voyer (1874) L. R. 5 P. C. (Eng.) 461, 30 L. T. N. S. 506, 22 Week. Rep. 849.

<sup>25</sup> Shute v. Pacific Nat. Bank (1884) 136 Mass. 487.

The maturity of certificates of deposit is discussed in the note to First Nat. Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 15 L.R.A. 386.

<sup>26</sup> Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908; First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat. Bank (1892) 84 Tex. 40, 19 S. W. 334.

<sup>27</sup> Bingham v. Newton Bank (1918) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 318; Cassidy v. First L.R.A. 1918C.

Nat. Bank (1882) 30 Minn. 86, 14 N. W. 363, approved in Mitchell v. Easton (1887) 37 Minn. 335, 33 N. W. 910.

Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908. The court here states that the language, "on return of this certificate properly indorsed," expresses no more than the law implied as the duty of the holder in the absence of any such stipulation.

Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (1894) 40 Neb. 484, 24 L.R.A. 444, 42 Am. St. Rep. 683, 58 N. W. 1016; Frank v. Wessels (1876) 64 N. Y. 155; Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 534, 79 S. E. 662. See Tobin v. McKinney quirement that the certificate of deposit be payable on return of the certificate "properly indorsed" has been held not to render it non-negotiable.<sup>28</sup> One court taking this view argues that "a 'proper' indorsement is such an indorsement as the law merchant requires in order to authorize a payment to the holder. If presented by the original payee, no indorsement would be proper, or at least necessary; if presented by another, 'proper indorsement' to show his title would be requisite. We do not think that this provision operates as a condition destroying the negotiability of the instrument."<sup>28</sup>

Even though a demand upon the bank is necessary before action can be brought upon the instrument, thus distinguishing it from a promissory note, the negotiable character of the instrument is not destroyed.<sup>29</sup>

A provision that the certificate shall bear interest if it remains a stated period does not render the certificate uncertain as to amount, so as to destroy its negotiability.<sup>30</sup> The Maine court<sup>31</sup> argues in the case of a certificate payable on demand, that "if payment be demanded at any time within six months [the time fixed for the payment of interest], the amount payable is certain; it is the face of the certificate. If payment be not demanded until after six months, the amount payable is equally certain; it is the face of the certificate and interest to the time of payment. In this respect, the certificate is like a note payable at a time certain, with interest at a specified rate from the date of the note, or from maturity if it is not paid at maturity."

A provision that a notice shall be given a stated time before payment can be required does not prevent the instrument from being negotiable.<sup>32</sup>

One of the requisites of a negotiable promissory note is that it be payable in money. Whether when a note is payable in current funds or in currency it is negotiable within this requirement is a question upon which there is not an agreement among the authorities.<sup>33</sup> The same question arises in case of certificates of deposit payable in "currency" or in "current funds," etc. It is apparent that a discussion limited to certificates of deposit cannot adequately cover this question; it is necessary to consider the cases dealing with instruments other than certificates of deposit. As to this question, therefore, this discussion does not purport to be exhaustive. The same difference of opinion that exists in cases of commercial paper generally is found to exist in cases of certificates of deposit; one line of authorities holds that such certificates payable in current funds or in currency are non-negotiable,<sup>34</sup> at least that they are prima (1901) 15 S. D. 257, 91 Am. St. Rep. 694, 88 N. W. 572, supra.

An instrument in the form of a certificate of deposit, which apparently was issued by an individual for money deposited with him, is stated not to be payable on a contingency because of the fact that the instrument is made payable "on the return of this certificate." Smilie v. Stevens (1866) 39 Vt. 315.

<sup>28</sup> Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (1894) 40 Neb. 484, 24 L.R.A. 444, 42 Am. St. Rep. 683, 58 N. W. 1016.

<sup>29</sup> Pardee v. Fish (1875) 60 N. Y. 265, 19 Am. Rep. 176.

<sup>30</sup> Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908; Cate v. Patterson (1872) 25 Mich. 191. see text to note 23, supra; Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (Neb.) supra.

Richer v. Voyer (Eng.) supra (dictum), approved in Re Central Bank (1889) 17 Ont. Rep. 574.

<sup>31</sup> Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908.

<sup>32</sup> Richer v. Voyer (1874) L. R. 5 P. C. (Eng.) 461, 30 L. T. N. S. 506, 22 Week. Rep. 849 (dictum); Re Central Bank (Ont.) supra.

<sup>33</sup> See 1 Dan. Neg. Ins. § 56, p. 76.

<sup>34</sup> Huse v. Hamblin (1870) 29 Iowa, 501, 4 Am. Rep. 244, holding a certificate of L.R.A.1918C.

deposit payable "in currency" to be non-negotiable.

Johnson v. Henderson (1877) 76 N. C. 227 (payable "in current funds"); Ford v. Mitchell (1862) 15 Wis. 304 (payable "in currency"); Platt v. Sauk County Bank (1863) 17 Wis. 222 (payable "in current funds"); Lindsey v. McClelland (1864) 18 Wis. 481, 86 Am. Dec. 786 (payable "in current funds").

The foregoing Wisconsin cases are practically overruled in Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357, although the court there states that, in upholding the negotiable quality of the certificate of deposit in the case at bar, "it has not been found necessary expressly to overrule any of those cases," referring to the foregoing Wisconsin cases.

National State Bank v. Ringel (1875) 51 Ind. 393, holding that the depositor is not compelled to give a bond of indemnity in order to recover the amount of the certificate from the bank, where the certificate has been lost.

The court in Krieg v. Palmer Nat. Bank (1912) 51 Ind. App. 34, 95 N. E. 613, recognizes that there is considerable difference in the decisions as to whether a bill or note payable in current funds is negotiable, but adheres to the rule established in Indiana that such an instrument is not negotiable facie non-negotiable, but that parol evidence is competent to show that the term "currency" or "current funds" describes that which by custom or law is money.<sup>35</sup>

On the contrary, it has been held that a certificate payable in current funds or in currency is negotiable.<sup>36</sup> The latter seems to be the rule followed in the recent cases, and arises doubtless from the fact that currency is now practically synonymous with money. The Indiana court<sup>37</sup> argues that, "beginning with the issue of United States Treasury notes, declared to have the quality of legal tender, it has been the practice of drawers of bills of exchange and makers of promissory notes to indicate payment in gold or silver or such notes, and from that time the terms 'current funds' and 'currency' have been used to designate any of these, all being current and declared by statute to be legal tender. The better rule now seems to be that instruments of the kind in question, payable in 'current funds' or in 'currency,' are payable in money. . . . We therefore hold that this certificate of deposit is payable in money, and is negotiable as an inland bill of exchange." The Maine court<sup>38</sup> states, in its discussion of this question, under the law merchant. Accordingly, a certificate of deposit payable "in current funds" was held non-negotiable under the law merchant, but negotiable by virtue of the Indiana statute. The Indiana statute is not set out, but in the headnote in the official report of the case is stated to make all promissory notes, bills of exchange, bonds, or other instruments in writing negotiable by indorsement thereon.

The above Indiana cases overruled by Millikan v. Security Trust Co. (Ind.) infra.

<sup>35</sup> It is stated in Huse v. Hamblin (1870) 29 Iowa, 501, 4 Am. Rep. 244, that "it is probable that competent evidence would have been admitted, if offered, to prove that the word 'currency' used in the instrument describes that which by custom or law is money, and thus the certificates would have been shown to be commercial paper, . . . but the record does not show that any such evidence was offered."

<sup>36</sup> Millikan v. Security Trust Co. (1918) — Ind. —, 118 N. E. 568, overruling National State Bank v. Ringel and Krieg v. Palmer Nat. Bank (Ind.) supra; Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908.

Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (1894) 40 Neb. 484, 24 L.R.A. 444, 42 Am. St. Rep. 683, 58 N. W. 1016; Pardee v. Fish (1875) 60 N. Y. 265, 19 Am. Rep. 176 (payable in current bank notes); Howe v. Hartness (1860) 11 Ohio St. 449, 78 Am. Dec. 312; Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 534, 79 S. E. 662.

Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. L.R.A. 1918C.

that "we think that the modern and better doctrine is that the term 'current funds,' when used in commercial transactions as the expression of the medium of payment, should be construed to mean current money, funds which are current by law as money, and that when thus construed a certificate of deposit payable in current funds is in this respect negotiable."

A certificate of deposit which recites the deposit of "twenty-one hundred and eighty and <sup>00</sup>/<sub>100</sub> dollars in cks., payable to the order of himself, on the return of this certificate properly indorsed," does not contain a promise to pay money, and is therefore not negotiable.<sup>39</sup>

Special statutory requirements as to negotiability.

Negotiability may depend upon special statutory requisites; if the certificate does not comply with these, it is not negotiable.<sup>40</sup> Thus, under a statute interpreted to require that paper be payable at a bank in order to be negotiable, a certificate of deposit has been held to be non-negotiable where it is not expressly made payable at a bank.<sup>41</sup> But the contrary view has been taken and the 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357, holding that a certificate of deposit payable "in currency" is negotiable. A statute declared instruments negotiable which contained a promise to pay "any sum of money as therein mentioned." A previous statute had made instruments containing a promise to pay "any sum of money therein mentioned" negotiable, and the court holds that the insertion of the word "as" in the amended statute indicated an intention to make instruments payable in currency negotiable.

This is expressly made the rule by a statute which governed Piner v. Clary (1856) 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 645. See Tobin v. McKinney (1901) 15 S. D. 257, 91 Am. St. Rep. 694, 88 N. W. 572, supra, note 12.

<sup>37</sup> Millikan v. Security Trust Co. (1918) — Ind. —, 118 N. E. 568.

<sup>38</sup> Hatch v. First Nat. Bank (1900) 94 Me. 348, 80 Am. St. Rep. 401, 47 Atl. 908.

<sup>39</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat. Bank (1892) 84 Tex. 40, 19 S. W. 334. It was admitted in this case that the abbreviation "cks." stood for checks.

<sup>40</sup> Renfro Bros. v. Merchants & M. Bank (1887) 83 Ala. 425, 3 So. 776.

<sup>41</sup> Renfro Bros. v. Merchants & M. Bank (Ala.) supra. The fact that the certificate was headed with the names of the bankers by whom issued and the city or town in which they did business, and that it was payable on the return of the certificate, was held not to be a naming of the bank as the place of payment, within the meaning of such a statute. The purpose of such a statute is to require the place of payment ordinary certificate of deposit held to be payable at a bank within the meaning of these statutory requirements.<sup>42</sup>

The omission of the words, "for value received," renders the instrument non-negotiable under some statutes.<sup>43</sup>

III. Minority rule that certificate is not a negotiable instrument.

The view has been taken that a certo be designated with certainty, and not left to inference or implication. The certificate of deposit was accordingly held subject, in the hands of an assignee, to payment and set-off under the provisions of the statute that all contracts and writings, except bills of exchange and promissory notes payable in money at a bank or private banking house and paper issued to circulate as money, shall be subject to all payments, set-offs, and discounts had or possessed against the same previously to notice of the assignment or transfer.

<sup>42</sup> Bingham v. Newton Bank (1918) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 318, holding that a certificate of deposit containing the name of the issuing bank at the top, and certifying to the deposit of money, which is made "payable to the order of self . . . on the return of this certificate properly indorsed," is payable at a bank within the meaning of such a statute.

Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank (1913) 72 W. Va. 534, 79 S. E. 662.

It was not necessary for the court, in Krieg v. Palmer Nat. Bank (1912) 51 Ind. App. 34, 95 N. E. 613, to decide whether the certificate of deposit was payable at a bank, nor did it do so; but it expressed an opinion that "a fair and reasonable interpretation of the instrument leads to the conclusion that it is payable at the Huntington County Bank, Huntington, Indiana." The certificate in question contained the bank's name at the top and recited that the depositor had deposited in the bank a stated sum of money "payable to the order of himself in current funds on the return of this certificate properly indorsed."

<sup>43</sup> International Bank v. German Bank (1877) 3 Mo. App. 362, reversed on other grounds in (1879) 71 Mo. 183, 36 Am. Rep. 468; Savings Bank v. National Bank (1889) 38 Fed. 800 (involving a Missouri contract).

<sup>44</sup> Patterson v. Poindexter (1843) 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554.

Charnley v. Dulles (1844) 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 353, holding a certificate of deposit reciting that a named person "has this day deposited in this bank $3,000 for the use of J. S. Skinner, and payable only to his order upon the return of this certificate," not a negotiable instrument.

Lebanon Bank v. Mangan (1857) 28 Pa. 452, holding a certificate reciting that the depositor "has deposited in this bank . . . subject to his order, and payable only on the return of this certificate," not a negotiable instrument.

Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown L.R.A. 1918C.

tificate of deposit is not a negotiable instrument in the ordinary meaning of that term.<sup>44</sup> The certificate is likened to a promissory note, and the theory upon which this conclusion is based is that a promissory note must contain an express promise to pay; an implied promise is not sufficient.<sup>45</sup> A promise to pay on the return of the certificate makes the promise contingent according to these

Sav. Bank (1860) 36 Pa. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390, holding a certificate of deposit reciting the deposit of money payable to the order of the depositor six months after date, in currency, on the return of the certificate, not a negotiable instrument.

Dempsey v. Harm (1887) 7 Sadler (Pa.) 426, 20 W. N. C. 266, 12 Atl. 27, holding a certificate reciting the deposit of money payable to the depositor or order on the return of the certificate properly indorsed not a negotiable instrument.

A mint certificate which is evidence of so much bullion in the mint is held not to be negotiable in Hegeman v. M'Call (1855) 1 Phila. (Pa.) 529.

But in Dutton v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (1884) 16 Phila. (Pa.) 94, a clearing house duebill reciting that there is "due by the Merchants National Bank to banks $1,900. This duebill is only good when signed by one and countersigned by another authorized person, and is payable only in the exchange through the clearing house the day after issue," is a negotiable instrument; the court stating that the whole tenor of the instrument, together with the usual custom of the banks and of the mercantile community, tends to establish the fact that these instruments are regarded as payable to bearer as such deposited as cash, and paid on presentation by the bank of issue through the clearing house.

The Pennsylvania Negotiable Instrument Act has been interpreted by a Federal court to include certificates of deposit in its description of negotiable instruments. Forrest v. Safety Bkg. & T. Co. (1909) 174 Fed. 345.

O'Neill v. Bradford (1844) 1 Pinney (Wis.) 390, 42 Am. Dec. 574. That such instruments are not negotiable was, however, doubted in this state. In Lindsey v. McClelland (1864) 18 Wis. 481, 86 Am. Dec. 786, and in the subsequent case of Klauber v. Biggerstaff (1879) 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773, 3 N. W. 357, the O'Neill Case was finally overruled and such certificates held negotiable. The rule of the Klauber Case has subsequently been followed in this jurisdiction. See Curran v. Witter (1887) 68 Wis. 16, 60 Am. Rep. 827, 31 N. W. 706, note 12, supra.

<sup>45</sup> The promise to pay contained in a certificate reciting that the depositor, naming him, "has deposited in this bank, payable twelve months from 1st May, 1839. . . . and payable only to their order upon the return of this certificate," is not an express promise within the meaning of this authorities, and therefore prevents the certificate from being a promissory note.<sup>46</sup> The agreement as to interest has also been held to prevent some certificates being regarded as promissory notes.<sup>47</sup> Such a certificate does not become a check or inland bill of exchange upon the indorsement thereof.<sup>48</sup> But for purposes of transfer merely, such a certificate is held to be transferable by indorsement.<sup>49</sup> rule, but an implied promise. Patterson v. Poindexter (Pa.) supra.

Lebanon Bank v. Mangan (Pa.) supra; O'Neill v. Bradford (Wis.) supra, overruled, see comment in note 44.

<sup>46</sup> Patterson v. Poindexter and Lebanon Bank v. Mangan (Pa.) supra.

<sup>47</sup> Thus, in Patterson v. Poindexter (Pa.) supra, a certificate of deposit issued on July 2d, 1839, and payable "twelve months from 1st May, 1839, with 5% (five per cent) till due, per annum," is held not to be such a plain, unambiguous, and unconditional promise to pay as to make of the instrument a promissory note.

<sup>48</sup> Patterson v. Poindexter (1843) 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554. Compare with Piner v. Clary (1856) 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 645, supra, note 14.

The holding in O'Neill v. Bradford, supra, note 44, that such a certificate is not a bill of exchange, has been overruled.

<sup>49</sup> Patterson v. Poindexter and Charnley v. Dulles (Pa.) supra.

In O'Neill v. Bradford, overruled, supra, note 44, the court states that the certificate is "probably" transferable by indorsement.

W. A. E.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

STEWART DRY GOODS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

MRS. A. L. HUTCHISON.

(177 Ky. 757, 198 S. W. 17.)

Master and servant — holding over after expiration of year — effect of increase of salary.

1. The mere increase of an employee's salary in accordance with the original understanding does not change the presumption that one who, having been employed for a year, continues in service after its expiration, is to serve for another year.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — damages — value of services.

2. One wrongfully discharged from another's service is not bound to credit on the claim for breach of contract the value of his services in a business of his own which he undertakes to establish, if such business proves to be unprofitable.

For other cases, see Damages, III. s, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — breach of contract — absence of evidence.

3. The jury cannot consider in an action for damages for wrongful discharge of an employee, the question of his own breach of contract, if there is no evidence in the case as to the terms of the contract.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 16, 1917.)

Note. — As to presumption from continuing in employer's service after the expiration of the original term, see annotation following this case, post, 706.

Generally, as to remedy of wrongfully L.R.A.1918C.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, Third Division of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract of employment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. R. C. Kinkhead for appellant.

Mr. Matt O'Doherty for appellee.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

Mrs. A. L. Hutchison brought this suit against the Stewart Dry Goods Company to recover damages for a breach of contract of employment. From a verdict and judgment in her favor, the defendant company appeals.

According to plaintiff's evidence, she was employed by the defendant in January, 1912, as manager of its lace and trimmings department, for a term of one year at an agreed salary of $1,500 a year, with the further understanding, however, that her salary was to be increased from time to time if such increase was deserved. Pursuant to this agreement her salary was first increased to $1,800 per year, and in 1914 to $2,400 per year. She continued in defendant's service from January, 1912, to August, 1915, when she claimed she was wrongfully discharged. She further testified that after her discharge, she made diligent efforts to find other employment for the balance of the year, but was unable to do so because she was discharged in August, and contracts for such employment were usually made in Jan-discharged servant by action for damages for breach of contract, see note to Howay v. Going-Northrup Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49; and specifically as to effect of servant engaging in his own business, see page 104.

uary or July. Failing to find other employment she entered business for herself in December, 1915, but this venture resulted in a loss. According to the evidence for defendant, plaintiff was not employed for any definite period of time, and she was discharged because she failed to observe the same business hours usually observed by its other employees.

1. While we have not had occasion to pass on the precise question, it is the well-settled rule in other jurisdictions that where one enters the service of another for a definite period, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period without a new contract, it is presumed that the old contract continues; and this presumption must prevail, unless overcome by a new agreement or facts sufficient to show that a different hiring was intended by the parties. Hence, where an employee, originally hired for a year, is allowed to go on working after the end of the term, he is deemed to be serving under a new contract for another year, which results by operation of law from a continuance of the employment. Labatt, Mast. & S. § 141; 26 Cyc. 976; Glendale Fruit Co. v. Hirst, 6 Ariz. 428, 59 Pac. 103; Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443; State Bd. of Agri. v. Meyers, 20 Colo. App. 139, 77 Pac. 372; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 142 Ill. 125, 30 N. E. 1030; Lalande v. Aldrich, 41 La. Ann. 307, 6 So. 28; Lister's Agri. Chemical Works Co. v. Pender, 74 Md. 15, 21 Atl. 686; Sines v. Wayne County, 58 Mich. 503, 25 N. W. 485; Bennett v. Mahler, 90 App. Div. 22, 85 N. Y. Supp. 669; Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 56; Laughlin v. School Dist. 98 Mich. 523, 57 N. W. 571; Chipley v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934. Though conceding this to be the rule, counsel for the defendant insist that it is not applicable to this case because plaintiff herself admits that the original contract was changed by the subsequent increases in her salary. In considering the effect of this change, it must be remembered that according to the testimony of plaintiff, such increases were contemplated by the original contract. Not only so, but these changes affected only the amount of plaintiff's compensation, and not the duration or period of her employment. These changes were not sufficient, therefore, to rebut the legal presumption that the original term or period of plaintiff's employment was extended for each of the subsequent years by plaintiff's continuing in the service of the defendant after the expiration of those periods. In this connection it is also suggested that the acceptance of a proposi- tion for employment at a specified rate per year is not an employment for a year, but one merely at will. Cuppy v. Stollwerck Bros. 158 App. Div. 628, 143 N. Y. Supp. 967; Doolittle v. Pacific Coast Safe & Vault Co. 79 Or. 498, 154 Pac. 753. While this proposition may be true, plaintiff does not claim that she was merely employed at so much per year, but states emphatically that she was originally employed for a period of one year. It follows that the above rule has no application to the facts of this case.

2. The point is also made that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury to diminish plaintiff's damages by the reasonable value of her services in the business in which she engaged in the month of December, 1915. It is the rule that where an employee under contract to perform services for a stipulated time is wrongfully discharged by his employer before the expiration of the term of his services, the measure of damages is the contract price, less what the discharged employee has earned or might by reasonable diligence have earned. John C. Lewis Co. v. Scott, 95 Ky. 484, 44 Am. St. Rep. 251, 26 S. W. 192. Though a discharged employee is only required to seek other like employment, his damages will be reduced by amounts earned at any employment during the unexpired term. Elliott, Contr. § 2156; Tenzer v. Gilmore, 114 Mo. App. 210, 89 S. W. 341; Toplitz v. Ullman (N. Y. City Ct.) 46 N. Y. S. R. 294, 20 N. Y. Supp. 50, affirmed in 2 Misc. 130, 20 N. Y. Supp. 863. Hence it is held that if a discharged employee engages in business for himself during the unexpired term, his damages should be reduced by his earnings in that business. While there is some difference of opinion as to whether his earnings should be measured by profits or the pecuniary value of his services in the business (Lee v. Hampton, 79 Miss. 321, 30 So. 721; Kramer v. Wolf Cigar Stores Co. 99 Tex. 602, 91 S. W. 775; Richardson v. Hartmann, 68 Hun, 9, 22 N. Y. Supp. 645; Huntington v. Ogdensburgh & L. C. R. Co. 33 How. Pr. 416), all the authorities agree that the time of the discharged employee must be profitably occupied, and we have been unable to find any case holding that the damages should be reduced where his services in his own behalf did not result in any profit or pecuniary benefit of any kind. On the contrary, it has been held that where the business in which the discharged employee engaged was unprofitable, it was immaterial and improper to say why such result was brought about. Heagy v. Irondale Lead Co. 101 Mo. App. 361, 73 S. W. 1006. It has also been held that where the discharged employee participates in the conduct of a partnership business, and it was impossible to tell whether the profits were derived from the capital invested by him, or from his personal services in the partnership business, or, if derived from both, what part thereof arose from such services, the jury were not required to reduce his damages by the amount of such profits. Kyle v. Pou, 96 Ga. 166, 23 S. E. 114. Here the evidence shows that plaintiff engaged in business for herself for a period of one month during the unexpired term of her contract. Instead of proving remunerative, the business did not pay expenses, and plaintiff lost a portion of her capital. It was not made to appear that her efforts, though unprofitable for that month, resulted in building up a business which subsequently proved profitable. In other words, her services were of no pecuniary value whatever. Under these circumstances, the refusal to give an instruction authorizing a reduction of damages on account of such services was not error.

3. Lastly it is insisted that the trial court erred in refusing to give the following instruction offered by the defendant: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, after notice that she was not performing her duties in accordance with her contract, failed or refused to so perform them, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find."

This instruction was properly refused because no witness claiming to know the terms of the original contract of employment testified to any violation thereof by plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

Annotation—Presumption from continuing in employer's service after the expiration of the original term.

Generally, as to duration of contract of hiring which specifies no term, but fixes compensation at a certain amount per day or month or year, see note to Warder v. Hinds, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 529, and the supplemental annotation to Reasnor v. Watts, R. & Co. 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 629.

At common law—general rule.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that an employee originally hired for a definite term who continues to render the same services after the expiration of such term without explicitly entering into a new agreement is prima facie presumed or deemed to be serving under a new contract having the same terms and conditions as the original one, the continuance in the employment of the hirer with the consent of the latter after the time specified in the contract being equivalent to a new hiring for the same length of time, on the same terms.<sup>1</sup> And in at least one juris-

<sup>1</sup> The following cases either announce or recognize this rule: Horton v. Wollner (1882) 71 Ala. 452; Ewing v. Janson (1893) 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Hermann v. Littlefield (1895) 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443; State Bd. of Agri. v. Meyers (1904) 20 Colo. App. 139, 77 Pac. 372; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert (1890) 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bulkley (1868) 48 Ill. 189; Ingalls v. Allen (1890) 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026, reversing on other grounds (1889) 33 Ill. App. 458; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Adams (1892) 142 Ill. 125, 30 N. E. 1030; Morgan & Wright v. McCaslin (1904) 114 Ill. App. 427, affirmed in (1904) 213 Ill. 358, 72 N. E. 1066; Moline Plow Co. v. Booth (1885) 17 Ill. App. 574; Mears v. O'Donoghue (1895) 58 Ill. App. 345; Fish v. Marzluff (1906) 128 Ill. App. 549; Akron Mill Co. v. Leiter (1914) 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99; STEWART DRY GOODS CO. v. HUTCHISON, ante, 704; McCullough Iron Co. v. Carpenter (1887) 67 Md. 554, 11 Atl. 176; Lister's Agri. Chemical Works v. Pender (1891) 74 Md. 15, 21 Atl. 686; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Parker (1900) 92 Md. 22, 47 Atl. 1042; Bell v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co. (1907) 205 Mo. 475, 103 S. W. 1014; Morris v. Z. T. Briggs Photographic Supply Co. (1915) 192 Mo. App. 145, 179 S. W. 783; Hale v. Shee- L.R.A.1918C.

han (1894) 41 Neb. 102, 59 N. W. 554; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber (1903) 67 Neb. 644, 60 L.R.A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 93 N. W. 1024; Leidigh v. Keever (1903) 5 Neb. (Unof.) 207, 97 N. W. 801; Fitch v. Martin (1905) 74 Neb. 538, 104 N. W. 1072; Capron v. Strout (1876) 11 Nev. 304, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 391; Passino v. Brady Brass Co. (1912) 83 N. J. L. 419, 84 Atl. 615; Huntingdon v. Claffin (1868) 38 N. Y. 182; Adams v. Fitzpatrick (1891) 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143, affirming (1889) 24 Jones & S. 580, 5 N. Y. Supp. 181; Bacon v. New Home Sewing Mach. Co. (1891) 59 Hun, 624, 37 N. Y. S. R. 56, 13 N. Y. Supp. 359, affirmed without opinion in (1892) 129 N. Y. 658, 30 N. E. 65; Wallace v. Devlin (1885) 36 Hun (N. Y.) 275; Mason v. Secor (1894) 76 Hun, 178, 27 N. Y. Supp. 570; Mendelson v. Bronner (1908) 124 App. Div. 396, 108 N. Y. Supp. 807; Mason v. New York Produce Exch. (1908) 127 App. Div. 282, 111 N. Y. Supp. 163; Caldwell v. Caldwell Co. (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 970; Hodge v. Newton (1888) 14 Daly, 372, 13 N. Y. S. R. 139; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. (1900) 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984, reversing (1898) 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 549; Wallace v. Floyd (1857) 29 Pa. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Ranck v. Albright (1860) 36 Pa. 367; Booth v. National India Rubber Co. (1897) diction such a presumption is declared by express statutory provision to exist. Thus, in California, by Civil Code, § 2012, it was expressly provided that "where after the expiration of an agreement respecting wages and the term of service the parties continue the relation of master and servant they are presumed to have renewed the agreement for the same wages and term of service."<sup>2</sup>

But this presumption that the employment is continued upon the same conditions and terms is rebuttable and may be overcome by proof of a new contract, or of facts and circumstances that show that the parties in fact understood that the terms of the old contract were not to apply to the continued service.<sup>3</sup> And the questions whether the original contract was continued or whether it was abandoned and a new contract made are ones exclusively of fact,<sup>4</sup> with the burden of proof upon the party maintaining the existence of a new and independent relation, where the other party affirmatively asserts the presumption of a continuance of the original contract.<sup>4</sup>

Some of the decisions go no further than to assert that the original hiring and the bare continuance of service after the expiration of the definite term are facts from which a jury may infer that the contract of service has been renewed by implication for another term of the same length and at the same salary as the original contract called for.<sup>5</sup> And where it also appears that the original contract provided that if either party did not wish to continue or renew it, he should give thirty days' notice, and no notice was given, it has been held that the facts justify a finding of an implied renewal.<sup>6</sup> However, the above rulings are perhaps not in conflict with the general rule that there is a presumption of continuance, but have taken the form indicated because of the way in which the questions arose, and are in effect but another form of the rule as laid down by one case<sup>7</sup> which declares that if nothing is said or done by either party at the end of the term to terminate the contract, but, on the contrary, the person performing service is allowed to continue on without objection, "the facts raise the presumption" from which it may be found that both parties have assented to the contract continuing in force for another term.

In one jurisdiction,<sup>8</sup> in seeming conflict with the general rule stated supra, it has been expressly held that a servant employed for one year at a definite salary, who continued to perform the same services after the expiration of the 19 R. I. 696, 36 Atl. 714; Houston Ice & Brewing Co. v. Nicolini (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 96 S. W. 84; Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763; Norfolk Hosiery & Underwear Mills Co. v. Westheimer (1917) — Va. —, 92 S. E. 922; Kellogg v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (1896) 94 Wis. 554, 69 N. W. 362; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. (1898) 101 Wis. 157, 76 N. W. 1108; Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Appleton (1907) 132 Wis. 563, 113 N. W. 44; Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. R. 161, 17 West. L. R. 261; Short v. Laery (1891) 11 N. Z. L. R. (S. C.) 17, as quoted in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 711. And see infra, text and notes 15 and 39.

<sup>2</sup> See Gabriel v. Bank of Suisun (1904) 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736.

<sup>3</sup> See, generally, Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert (1890) 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Mears v. O'Donoghue (1895) 58 Ill. App. 345; Akron Mill. Co. v. Leiter (1914) 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99; STEWART DRY GOODS CO. v. HUTCHISON, ante, 704; Faber v. Abatoir Co. 3 La. A. (Orleans) 3, as cited in 1914-17 Cyc. Ann. p. 1848; McCullough Iron Co. v. Carpenter (1887) 67 Md. 554, 11 Atl. 176; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Parker (1900) 92 Md. 22, 47 Atl. 1042; Hale v. Sheehan (1894) 41 Neb. 102, 59 N. W. 554; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber (1903) 67 Neb. 644, 60 L.R.A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 93 N. W. 1024; Summers v. Phenix Ins. Co. (1906) 50 Misc. 181, 98 L.R.A. 1918C.

N. Y. Supp. 226; and Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763. And see also infra, text and notes 35 and 45.

<sup>4</sup> Travelers Ins. Co. v. Parker (1900) 92 Md. 22, 47 Atl. 1042.

<sup>5</sup> Connor v. Hackley (1841) 2 Met. (Mass.) 613; Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. (1870) 106 Mass. 56; O'Connor v. Briggs (1903) 182 Mass. 387, 65 N. E. 836; Dunton v. Derby Desk Co. (1904) 186 Mass. 35, 71 N. E. 91; Maynard v. Royal Worcester Corset Co. (1908) 200 Mass. 1, 85 N. E. 877; Tallon v. Grand Portage Copper Min. Co. (1884) 55 Mich. 147, 20 N. W. 878, followed in Laughlin v. School Dist. (1894) 98 Mich. 523, 57 N. W. 571; Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works (1894) 103 Mich. 124, 61 N. W. 532; Wright v. Elk Rapids Iron Co. (1902) 129 Mich. 543, 89 N. W. 335.

<sup>6</sup> Allen v. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. (1910) 205 Mass. 569, 91 N. E. 887.

<sup>7</sup> Sines v. Wayne County (1885) 58 Mich. 503, 25 N. W. 485. And see Laughlin v. School Dist. (1894) 98 Mich. 523, 57 N. W. 571.

<sup>8</sup> Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. (1897) 24 Ont. App. Rep. 110. And see this case as set out infra, text and note 19. But see also Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. R. 161, 17 West. L. Rep. 261, wherein the Harnwell case was seemingly not regarded as in conflict with the general rule.

term, without any new agreement, is not presumed to be serving under a new contract having the same terms and conditions as the original one. This decision was put upon the ground that the employer's tacit acceptance of the services after the beginning of the second year did not, of itself, justify the inference that the new contract was, like the original one, binding for a year.

And it has been held that a continuance in service after the expiration of a contract for a definite period does not raise a presumption that the terms on which the same services are rendered are the same as those during the original period, where the parties bear the relation of parent and child, it having been said that in such a case the ground for the presumption fails.<sup>9</sup> And no presumption that a former contract is renewed arises either where the services rendered after the original term has expired are of a materially different character from those previously rendered under such contract,<sup>10</sup> or where the continued services are rendered to a different employer; as, for instance, where the original contract was with an individual and the continued services were rendered for a partnership which the original employer had formed with another,<sup>11</sup> or where the original contract was with certain trustees of a railroad and a corporation was subsequently formed which took over the road and for which the same character of services were performed,<sup>12</sup> or were continued under an individual who purchased the business of the original employer.<sup>13</sup>

And in order to rely upon a contract arising by implication from continued services the plaintiff must set up his cause of action as it exists, it having been held insufficient merely to plead that a contract was entered into on a certain date, which date was that of the expiration of the original contract.<sup>14</sup>

—duration of continued employment.

A corollary of the general rule, stated supra, text 1, is that where the relation of master and servant is continued after the expiration of the agreed term, a presumption arises that the parties intended that the renewed engagement should be for the same period as that covered by the original contract;<sup>15</sup> at least, where the original term of employment does not exceed one year, or is for one year,<sup>16</sup> and provided that the parties do not bear such a relation to

<sup>9</sup> Rex v. Sow (1817) 1 Barn. & Ald. 178, 106 Eng. Reprint, 66. In this case, however, it also appeared that the parent had stopped paying wages with the expiration of the original term of employment.

<sup>10</sup> White v. United States Gypsum Co. (1911) 168 Mich. 238, 133 N. W. 501. And see infra, text and notes 50-52.

<sup>11</sup> Mason v. Secor (1894) 76 Hun, 178, 27 N. Y. Supp. 570. And see Lichtenhein v. Fisher (1896) 6 App. Div. 385, 39 N. Y. Supp. 553.

<sup>12</sup> Morrison v. Ogdensburgh & L. C. R. Co. (1868) 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 173.

<sup>13</sup> Bain v. Anderson (1898) 28 Can. S. C. 481. And see infra, text and note 55.

<sup>14</sup> Treffinger v. M. Groh's Sons (1905) 100 App. Div. 433, 91 N. Y. Supp. 837, holding that an allegation that plaintiff was hired for a year, beginning at a certain date, was not sustained by proof of an earlier employment for a year and its annual continuance.

<sup>15</sup> The following cases support this rule: State Bd. of Agri. v. Meyers (1904) 20 Colo. App. 139, 77 Pac. 372; Leahy v. Cheney (1916) 90 Conn. 611, L.R.A.1917D, 809, 98 Atl. 132; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert (1890) 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Moline Plow Co. v. Booth (1885) 17 Ill. App. 574; Lister's Agri. Chemical Works v. Pender (1891) 74 Md. 15, 21 Atl. 686; Passino v. Brady Brass Co. (1912) 83 N. J. L. 419, 84 Atl. 615; Douglass v. Merchants Ins. Co. (1890) 118 N. Y. 484, 7 L.R.A. 822, 23 N. E. 806; Bacon v. New Home Sewing L.R.A.1918C.

Mach. Co. (1891) 59 Hun, 624, 37 N. Y. S. R. 56, 13 N. Y. Supp. 359, affirmed without opinion in (1892) 129 N. Y. 658, 30 N. E. 65; Wallace v. Devlin (1885) 36 Hun (N. Y.) 275; Mason v. Secor (1894) 76 Hun, 178, 27 N. Y. Supp. 570; Ball v. Stover (1894) 82 Hun, 460, 31 N. Y. Supp. 781; Bennett v. Mahler (1904) 90 App. Div. 22, 85 N. Y. Supp. 669; Treffinger v. M. Groh's Sons (1906) 112 App. Div. 250, 98 N. Y. Supp. 291, affirmed without opinion in (1906) 185 N. Y. 610, 78 N. E. 1114; Mendelson v. Bronner (1908) 124 App. Div. 396, 108 N. Y. Supp. 807; Mason v. New York Produce Exch. (1908) 127 App. Div. 282, 111 N. Y. Supp. 163; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. (1900) 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984, reversing (1898) 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 549; Wallace v. Floyd (1857) 29 Pa. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763; Broughton v. Brantford (1869) 19 U. C. C. P. 434; Rex v. Hales (1794) 5 T. R. 668, 101 Eng. Reprint, 372; Short v. Laery (1891) 11 N. Z. L. R. (S. C.) 17, as quoted in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 711.

<sup>16</sup> Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert (1890) 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Akron Mill. Co. v. Leiter (1914) 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99; STEWART DRY GOODS CO. v. HUTCHISON, ante, 704; Adams v. Fitzpatrick (1889) 24 Jones & S. 580, 5 N. Y. Supp. 181, affirmed in (1891) 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143; Brightson v. H. B. Claffin Co. (1904) 180 N. Y. 76, 72 N. E. 920, reversing on other grounds (1903) 84 App. Div. 557, 82

each other as not to afford a ground for the presumption; as, for instance, has been held to be the case where the relationship was that of parent and child.<sup>17</sup>

So in California, by express statutory provision (Civ. Code, § 2012), it is provided that where, after the expiration of an agreement respecting the term of services, the parties continue the relation of master and servant, they are presumed to have renewed the agreement for the same term of service.<sup>18</sup> However, it has been expressly held in one case<sup>19</sup> that continuing the same services after the expiration of an express hiring for one year certainly does not raise a presumption that it is to continue for another year absolutely. Of course there can be no presumption of a new term of longer duration than the original period.<sup>20</sup> And it has been held that the presumption does not attach to a continuance in service unless there was a prior contract for a whole year, and continued service thereunder for the whole period.<sup>21</sup> Also that where the original contract exceeds one year the law cannot imply a contract for a new period of equal duration, since it cannot make that valid without a writing which the law requires shall be in writing.<sup>22</sup> But where the original contract is for a term greater than one year, it has been held that the implied contract of renewal is for the term of one year on the terms of the original contract,<sup>23</sup> although the contrary has also been held.<sup>24</sup>

As to the terminability of the continued employment, the rule is that it may be terminated before the expiration of the renewal period, provided the original contract granted a right of removal at any time,<sup>25</sup> the general rule being that the presumption regarding the similarity of terms extends to the conditions under which the original con-

N. Y. Supp. 667; Wallace v. Devlin (1885) 36 Hun (N. Y.) 275; Hodge v. Newton (1888) 14 Daly, 372, 13 N. Y. S. R. 139; Greer v. People's Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1884) 18 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 517; Kellogg v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (1896) 94 Wis. 554, 69 N. W. 362; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. (1898) 101 Wis. 157, 76 N. W. 1108, on former appeal in (1897) 96 Wis. 376, 71 N. W. 606; Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Appleton (1907) 132 Wis. 563, 113 N. W. 44; Cotes v. Sadler (1667) 2 Keble, 16, 84 Eng. Reprint, 11; Bullock v. Wimmera Fellmongery Co. (1879) 5 Vict. L. R. 362, 1 Austr. L. T. 59, as quoted and set out in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 711.

<sup>17</sup> Rex v. Sow (1817) 1 Barn. & Ald. 178, 106 Eng. Reprint 66, per Bayley, J.

<sup>18</sup> See Gabriel v. Bank of Suisun (1904) 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736.

<sup>19</sup> Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. (1897) 24 Ont. App. Rep. 110, holding that the fact that the previous hiring was expressly for one year certain could not help the court to infer an implied contract for a similar period. And see Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. R. 161, 17 West. L. R. 261, as set out infra, note 29.

<sup>20</sup> White v. United States Gypsum Co. (1911) 168 Mich. 238, 133 N. W. 501, holding that where the original contract is for less than a year, no presumption of renewal for a full year on the same terms arises by reason of continuance in the same service. And see Caldwell v. Caldwell Co. (1904) 88 N. Y. Supp. 970, wherein it was held that, in the absence of a prior contract for a whole year and continued service thereunder for the full period, no presumption of a contract for another year arises from a continuing in the same service.

<sup>21</sup> Caldwell v. Caldwell Co. (N. Y.) supra (original service was for ten months); Barnes v. Summit Silk Mfg. Co. (1909) 113 L.R.A.1918C.

N. Y. Supp. 977 (expressly holding that where an employee was hired from March to December of one year, and held over into the following January, there was no renewal of the contract for the same period for which he was originally hired, which would have been the balance of the year from March 1st); Moskowitz v. Mawhinney (1912) 137 N. Y. Supp. 903 (holding that where a contract of employment was for six months, with the privilege of renewal for six months more, which privilege was exercised and the service was continued after the expiration of the second six months' period, there was no presumption that the parties had agreed to a renewal of the contract for a third six months' period). But see Wood v. Miller (1912) 78 Misc. 377, 138 N. Y. Supp. 562, wherein it was said that where an employee is hired for a definite term of six months, a renewal of that term will be implied from a continuance of the service after the expiration of the original period.

<sup>22</sup> Schott v. La Campagne Générale Trans-Atlantique (1906) 52 Misc. 236, 102 N. Y. Supp. 901.

<sup>23</sup> Adams v. Fitzpatrick (1889) 24 Jones & S. 580, 5 N. Y. Supp. 181, affirmed in (1891) 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143; Brightson v. H. B. Claffin Co. (1903) 84 App. Div. 557, 82 N. Y. Supp. 667, reversed on pleading and practice point in (1904) 180 N. Y. 76, 72 N. E. 920; Broughton v. Brantford (1869) 19 U. C. C. P. 434.

<sup>24</sup> Schott v. La Campagne Générale Trans-Atlantique (N. Y.) supra (original contract was for the two years).

<sup>25</sup> Douglass v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (1890) 118 N. Y. 484, 7 L.R.A. 822, 23 N. E. 806; Gilles v. Bank of Victoria (1872) 3 Vict. L. R. 46, 3 Austr. Jur. 35, as set out in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 722.

tract was subject to rescission. Consequently where there was no provision for rescission during the original term, the parties are each entitled to fulfillment of the contract for the full period of renewal.<sup>26</sup> And according to a New Zealand authority, to terminate a renewed hiring at the end of any year where it is regarded as one from year to year, a reasonable notice must be given.<sup>27</sup> And of course, where it is held, as in Ontario,<sup>28</sup> that a continuing of service after the expiration of a term for one year does not raise a presumption of a continuance for a like period, the employee can be dismissed upon proper notice at any time after the expiration of the original contract.<sup>29</sup>

In Michigan it has been held that a new period of service for the same term as the original contract cannot be implied from a continuance of labor on one side and the payment for services on the other, where the original contract was invalid under the Statute of Frauds, as purporting to cover a period of a year, commencing in futuro.<sup>30</sup> And in one New York case<sup>31</sup> it has been held that where the original contract was for a year, and was not in writing, either party is entitled to terminate the relation arising from continued services at will; but in other later cases<sup>32</sup> in the same state the position has been taken that even though the original contract was unenforceable so long as it remained executory, yet, when fully and voluntarily performed by both parties, its invalidity could no longer be asserted by either, and afforded an adequate basis upon which to predicate an inference of fact as to the intention of the parties in proceeding in accordance with its terms upon a further term than that provided by it. And it has been held that a contract implied from a continuing employment, since it arises by implication of law, is not within the purview of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>33</sup> And of course, the original term not being within the Statute of Frauds, the implied contract, which begins and is to be performed within one year,<sup>34</sup> is not within the statute.

The general presumption of a renewed contract for a period equal to the original contract may be overcome by proof of a new agreement, or of facts sufficient to show that a different hiring was intended by the parties,<sup>35</sup> or that, after the expiration of the original contract, the work was continued in a capacity other than that of a servant.<sup>36</sup> Under this rule it has been judicially decided that where the change affects only the amount of salary, and not the duration or period of employment, as, for instance, where the salary is increased from time to time, the change is not sufficient to rebut the presumption that continuing in the service was for another term equal to the original term,<sup>37</sup> especially where the increase was made during the original term.<sup>38</sup>

<sup>26</sup> Cotes v. Sadler (1667) 2 Keble. 16, 84 Eng. Reprint, 11. And see Mackenzie v. Union F. & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 1 N. S. W. L. R. 103, as set out in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 722.

<sup>27</sup> Wood v. Wellington Woolen Co. (1895) 14 N. Z. L. R. 296, condemning and disapproving, according to 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 722, a dictum to the contrary effect in Short v. Laery (1891) 11 N. Z. L. R. (S. C.) 17.

<sup>28</sup> See supra, text and note 19.

<sup>29</sup> Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. (1897) 24 Ont. App. Rep. 110. And in connection with this case, see Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. R. 161, 17 West. L. R. 261, wherein it was held that although the continued service raised a presumption that there was a new hiring upon the same terms and for the same period, the master could terminate the new contract upon reasonable notice to the employee.

<sup>30</sup> Lally v. Crookston Lumber Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 257, 88 N. W. 846.

<sup>31</sup> Tucker v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & I. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 139, 6 N. Y. Supp. 134.

<sup>32</sup> Adams v. Fitzpatrick (1891) 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143; Ball v. Stover (1894) 82 Hun, 460, 31 N. Y. Supp. 781; Hodge v. L.R.A. 1918C.

Newton (1888) 14 Daly, 372, 13 N. Y. S. R. 139.

<sup>33</sup> Passino v. Brady Brass Co. (1912) 83 N. J. L. 419, 84 Atl. 615; Bennett v. Mahler (1904) 90 App. Div. 22, 85 N. Y. Supp. 669; Hodge v. Newton (N. Y.) supra. But see Brightson v. H. B. Claflin Co. (1904) 180 N. Y. 76, 72 N. E. 920, reversing (1903) 84 App. Div. 557, 82 N. Y. Supp. 667.

<sup>34</sup> Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763.

<sup>35</sup> STEWART DRY GOODS CO. v. HUTCHISON, ante, 704; Summers v. Phenix Ins. Co. (1906) 50 Misc. 181, 98 N. Y. Supp. 226; Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.) supra; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. (1898) 101 Wis. 157, 76 N. W. 1108, on former appeal in (1897) 96 Wis. 376, 71 N. W. 606; Rex v. Macclesfield (1789) 3 T. R. 76, 100 Eng. Reprint 76.

<sup>36</sup> Rex v. Sow (1817) 1 Barn. & Ald. 178, 106 Eng. Reprint, 66 (continued services were held to have been rendered under the relation of child to her parent).

<sup>37</sup> STEWART DRY GOODS CO. v. HUTCHISON; Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763.

<sup>38</sup> Houston Ice & Brewing Co. v. Nicolini (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 96 S. W. 84.

—remuneration under continued employment.

Another corollary of the general rule that a servant continuing in the master's service after the expiration of a definite term is prima facie presumed to continue under the terms of the old contract is that there is an implied agreement that the employer will continue to pay the employee the same remuneration specified in the original contract.<sup>39</sup> The reason for this general rule has been stated as follows: "If the employee remains in the same employment, after his term of service has expired, without making demand for increased pay, the employer may well presume that no increased compensation is expected or will be required; and having acted upon that presumption, and failed to protect himself by a new contract, the employee will be held to have assented to a performance of the service at the original price. The rights of the employee and employer are mutual and reciprocal. So, where the employer permits a continuation of the service after the term has expired, without a new stipulation as to the price, it will be presumed that he expected and intended to pay for the service the original compensation stipulated."<sup>40</sup> In California by express statute (Civ. Code, § 2012) it is provided that where, after the expiration of an agreement respecting wages, the parties continued the relation of master and servant, they are presumed to have renewed the agreement for the same wages.<sup>41</sup>

But it has been ruled that no presumption arises when the original contract was merely for compensation for past services extending over a definite period, without any reference to services thereafter to be rendered.<sup>42</sup> Nor does the presumption arise where the rate of

<sup>39</sup> For cases embodying or recognizing this rule, see Horton v. Wollner (1882) 71 Ala. 452; Ewing v. Janson (1893) 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Westbrook Grain & Commission Co. v. Rice (1916) 125 Ark. 503, 189 S. W. 39; Nicholson v. Patchin (1855) 5 Cal. 474; Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co. (1908) 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128; State Bd. of Agri. v. Meyers (1904) 20 Colo. App. 139, 77 Pac. 372; Leahy v. Cheney (1916) 90 Conn. 611, L.R.A.1917D, 809, 98 Atl. 132; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert (1890) 84 Ga. 714, 8 L.R.A. 410, 11 S. E. 491; Jackson v. Doolittle (1917) — Ga. App. —, 94 S. E. 595; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bulkley (1868) 48 Ill. 189; Ingalls v. Allen (1890) 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026, reversing on other grounds (1889) 33 Ill. App. 458; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Adams (1892) 142 Ill. 125, 30 N. E. 1030; Borg v. Strauss (1910) 247 Ill. 462, 93 N. E. 296; Moline Plow Co. v. Booth (1885) 17 Ill. App. 574; Painter v. Durham (1915) 195 Ill. App. 468; Munchoff v. Ford (1896) 17 Ind. App. 131, 46 N. E. 357; Akron Mill. Co. v. Leiter (1914) 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99; Laubach v. Cedar Rapids Supply Co. (1904) 122 Iowa, 643, 98 N. W. 511; Hahnel v. Highland Park College (1915) 171 Iowa, 492, 152 N. W. 571; Curtis v. Dodd (1915) 172 Iowa, 521, 154 N. W. 872; Thompson v. Detroit & L. S. Copper Co. (1890) 80 Mich. 422, 45 N. W. 189; Morris v. Z. T. Briggs Photographic Supply Co. (1915) 192 Mo. App. 145, 179 N. W. 783; Capps v. Adams County (1889) 27 Neb. 360, 43 N. W. 114; Hale v. Sheehan (1894) 41 Neb. 102, 59 N. W. 554; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber (1903) 67 Neb. 644, 60 L.R.A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 93 N. W. 1024; Leidigh v. Keever (1903) 5 Neb. (Unof.) 207, 97 N. W. 801; New Hampshire Iron Factory Co. v. Richardson (1830) 5 N. H. 294; Chamberlain v. Davis (1856) 33 N. H. 121; Rindge v. Lamb (1878) 58 N. H. L.R.A.1918C.

278; Smith v. Velie (1875) 60 N. Y. 106; Adams v. Fitzpatrick (1891) 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143, affirming (1889) 24 Jones & S. 580, 5 N. Y. Supp. 181; Bacon v. New Home Sewing Mach. Co. (1891) 59 Hun, 624, 37 N. Y. S. R. 56, 13 N. Y. Supp. 359; affirmed without opinion in (1892) 129 N. Y. 658, 30 N. E. 65; Cox v. United Surety Co. (1911) 128 N. Y. Supp. 622; Eicke v. Wittemann Co. (1913) 157 App. Div. 412, 142 N. Y. Supp. 190; Vail v. Jersey Little Falls Mfg. Co. (1860) 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 564; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. (1900) 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984, reversing (1898) 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 549; Wallace v. Floyd (1857) 29 Pa. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Ranck v. Albright (1860) 36 Pa. 367; Norfolk Hosiery & Underwear Mills Co. v. Westheimer (1917) — Va. —, 92 S. E. 922; Burden v. Cropp (1893) 7 Wash. 198, 34 Pac. 834; Weise v. Milwaukee County (1881) 51 Wis. 564, 8 N. W. 295; Kellogg v. Citizens Ins. Co. (1896) 94 Wis. 554, 69 N. W. 362; Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Appleton (1907) 132 Wis. 563, 113 N. W. 44; Broughton v. Brantford (1869) 19 U. C. C. P. 434; Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. R. 161, 17 West. L. R. 261; Mansfield v. Scott (1833) 1 Clark & F. 319, 6 Eng. Reprint, 936.

<sup>40</sup> Ingalls v. Allen (1890) 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026. And practically the same language was used in Leidigh v. Keever (1903) 5 Neb. (Unof.) 207, 97 N. W. 801, and Ranck v. Albright (1860) 36 Pa. 367.

<sup>41</sup> See Gabriel v. Bank of Suisun (1904) 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736.

<sup>42</sup> Bell v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co. (1907) 205 Mo. 475, 103 S. W. 1014 (holding that a contract to pay a servant a certain salary for each of three years, already served, could form no basis for a presumption that continued services of the same kind were to be paid for at the same rate); Smith v. Velie (1875) 60 N. Y. 106 (holding that continued services rendered after the compensation was not fixed by the original agreement.<sup>43</sup> And it has been ruled in an early English case<sup>44</sup> that there is no presumption of a continuance upon the old terms where the relationship of the parties is such that the continued services are deemed to be rendered in a different capacity, as where the contracting parties are parent and child.

And the presumption which arises on a servant's continuing in the master's service after the expiration of a definite term of employment at a fixed salary, that the employer will continue to pay him the same salary or wages paid during the original period, is rebuttable by proof that a new contract for the continued period has been entered into, or by facts and circumstances showing that the parties did not intend to continue upon the terms and conditions of the original contract.<sup>45</sup> And such a new contract is competent to destroy the implied agreement that the master would continue to pay according to the old terms, even though it was void under the Statute of Frauds.<sup>46</sup> But, in the absence of any new agreement in regard to salary, some change in the services required and performed, such as the assumption of some additional duties, or a diminution of the labor, or slightly different and less exacting labors or duties,<sup>47</sup> even when accompanied by a change in the place of employment, does not rebut or destroy the presumption that the salary is to be the same as under the original contract, provided it can be said that such service is a continuation of the original service, and within the scope generally of the original employment,<sup>48</sup> and that if the services were slightly different and less exacting, the servant was ready at all times to perform the same services as formerly, if required.<sup>49</sup> But the presumption depends upon a continuance of the same character of service; or, in other words, does not arise where the character of the service is materially and radically altered,<sup>50</sup> for it has been said that it would be contrary to reason if it applied where the character of the services is altered.<sup>51</sup> Likewise it has been held that where the services are of a materially different character and an interval of unemployment has preceded the later work, there is no continuity of service or continuance of the former employ-expiration of an agreement entered into after the original commencement of the services, fixing the wages for a specified time, cannot form the basis for a presumption of renewal). But see Vail v. Jersey Little Falls Mfg. Co. (1860) 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 564.

<sup>43</sup> Leidigh v. Kever (1903) 5 Neb. (Unof.) 207, 97 N. W. 801.

<sup>44</sup> Rex v. Sow (1817) 1 Barn. & Ald. 178, 106 Eng. Reprint, 66, holding that the fact that the parties were parent and child removed all ground for a presumption that the continued services were rendered on the old terms.

<sup>45</sup> Horton v. Wollner (1882) 71 Ala. 452; Borg v. Strauss (1910) 247 Ill. 462, 93 N. E. 296; Hahnel v. Highland Park College (1915) 171 Iowa, 492, 152 N. W. 571; Hale v. Sheehan (1894) 41 Neb. 102, 59 N. W. 554 (holding that a renewal is not so strongly implied as to preclude the admission of parol evidence of different terms); Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber (1903) 67 Neb. 644, 70 L.R.A. 927, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 93 N. W. 1024 (acceptance of reduction in salary precludes recovery of back pay in the amount of the reduction at the end of the renewed term); Burden v. Cropp (1893) 7 Wash. 198, 34 Pac. 834. And see Curtis v. Dodd (1915) 172 Iowa, 521, 154 N. W. 872, wherein it was said that the presumption controlled "in the absence of other testimony as to the value of the services."

<sup>46</sup> Horton v. Wollner (Ala.) supra. And see Hahnel v. Highland Park College (1915) 171 Iowa, 492, 152 N. W. 571. L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>47</sup> Westbrook Grain & Commission Co. v. Rice (1916) 125 Ark. 503, 189 S. W. 39; Leahy v. Cheney (1916) 90 Conn. 611, L.R.A. 1917D, 809, 98 Atl. 132 (holding that additional duties of a domestic servant, caused by an increase in the master's family, do not affect the presumption); Ingalls v. Allen (1890) 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026, reversing on other grounds (1889) 33 Ill. App. 458; Painter v. Durham (1915) 195 Ill. App. 468; Lehigh v. Kever (Neb.) supra; Ranck v. Albright (1860) 36 Pa. 367.

<sup>48</sup> Westbrook Grain & Commission Co. v. Rice (Ark.) (employee became manager of a newly formed branch store); Ingalls v. Allen (Ill.) and Leidigh v. Kever (Neb.) supra (services transferred from city to farm).

<sup>49</sup> Painter v. Durham (1915) 195 Ill. App. 468.

<sup>50</sup> Ewing v. Janson (1893) 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Ingalls v. Allen (Ill.) supra; White v. United States Gypsum Co. (1911) 168 Mich. 238, 133 N. W. 501.

<sup>51</sup> Ewing v. Janson (Ark.) supra. In this case the court illustrated the application of the rule as follows: "If one should complete his term of service as a carpenter, and continue service as a plowman or a teamster, there would be no reason to presume that the parties understood he was to receive the same rate of compensation, and we are aware of no authority to support such a principle."

ment sufficient to warrant the finding of an implied contract for another term of the same length and at the same salary as the original contract,<sup>52</sup> although the fact alone that the employer ceased to carry on his business for a part of the term, and that, during such period, there was nothing for the employee to do, does not have the same effect, provided he held himself ready to and did perform all such services as were required and for which his contract called.<sup>53</sup> Again, it has been held that where the employer changes his place of residence and engages in a new business, and a servant is paid up and discharged and later assumes a position at similar work in the new place and business, the facts do not necessarily raise a presumption of a continuing contract of hiring at the former rate of wages.<sup>54</sup> So, where the same work is continued under a different employer, without any express agreement as to wages, no prima facie presumption arises that the remuneration shall be the same as under the original contract, and the servant may recover the value of his services;<sup>55</sup> but in such a case the remuneration stipulated in the original contract is an element of evidence from which the jury may or may not infer that the same wages are to be paid.<sup>56</sup>

Under the rule of a presumption of a continuance of the old rate of remuneration recovery can only be had at the rate of wages stipulated in the original contract, the presumption precluding a recovery on a quantum meruit for the value of work performed during the period of continued employment.<sup>57</sup> And it, of course, follows that, in the absence of special circumstances, the servant is entitled to remuneration for the full renewal period,<sup>58</sup> and that neither party can change the terms of the contract during the period covered thereby without the consent of the other.<sup>59</sup> However, it has been held, but without show of reason, that although the new contract is presumed to be for a like period and upon the same terms as the original one, it may be terminated upon reasonable notice, so that recovery could not be had for the full term in case "reasonable" notice of termination was given.<sup>60</sup>

In civil law jurisdictions — Louisiana.

In Louisiana continuation in an employer's service after the expiration of a definite term without any new agreement is what is known as "tacite réconduction," which imports a renewal of the original contract as regards all its terms.<sup>61</sup> This, of course, would render the new term of the same dura-

<sup>52</sup> O'Connor v. Briggs (1903) 182 Mass. 387, 65 N. E. 386.

<sup>53</sup> Vail v. Jersey Little Falls Mfg. Co. (1860) 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 564.

<sup>54</sup> Reed v. Swift (1873) 45 Cal. 255 (servant worked in hotel under original contract and as a domestic on the employer's farm after termination of the original contract); Ingalls v. Allen (Ill.) supra (manager of ranch had services terminated upon sale of ranch, and some time later served in hotel and livery stable in another state).

<sup>55</sup> Connor v. Hackley (1840) 2 Met. (Mass.) 613 (construction contract was assigned to defendant, who continued plaintiff in his employment).

<sup>56</sup> Connor v. Hackley (Mass.) supra.

<sup>57</sup> Nicholson v. Patchin (1885) 5 Cal. 474; Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co. (1908) 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bulkley (1868) 48 Ill. 189; Ingalls v. Allen (Ill.) supra; Munchoff v. Ford (1896) 17 Ind. App. 131, 46 N. E. 357; Ranck v. Albright (1860) 36 Pa. 367; Weise v. Milwaukee County (1881) 51 Wis. 564, 8 N. W. 295. But see McMillan v. Page (1888) 71 Wis. 655, 38 N. W. 173, wherein it was held that where a girl entered the service of a stranger for a specified time at an agreed price, and, after the expiration thereof, continued in the same service without other compensation than board and clothing, the law implied a promise on the employer's part to pay the reasonable value of the services; but the question whether the original contract controlled the rights and liabilities of the parties was not considered.
I.R.A.1918C.

<sup>58</sup> See generally cases cited supra, note 15, and especially Wallace v. Devlin (1883) 36 Hun (N. Y.) 275; Ball v. Stover (1894) 82 Hun, 460, 31 N. Y. Supp. 781; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. (1900) 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984, reversing (1898) 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 549; and Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (1917) 120 Va. 458, 91 S. E. 763.

<sup>59</sup> See Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. (1898) 101 Wis. 157, 76 N. W. 1108; and Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Appleton (1907) 132 Wis. 563, 113 N. W. 44.

<sup>60</sup> Halter v. Goody (1911) 4 Sask. L. Rep. 161, 17 West. L. R. 261, following on this point Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. (1897) 24 Ont. App. Rep. 110, in which, however, the ruling seems to have been that there was no presumption of a renewal for a new period on the old terms. See case as set out supra, text and notes 8, 19, and 29.

<sup>61</sup> Alba v. Moriarty (1884) 36 La. Ann. 680; Lalande v. Aldrich (1889) 41 La. Ann. 307, 6 So. 28; Sullivan v. New Orleans Stave & Head Co. (1892) 44 La. Ann. 787, 11 So. 89; Burton v. Behan (1895) 47 La. Ann. 117, 16 So. 769; National Automatic Fire Alarm Co. v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1905) 115 La. 633, 39 So. 738. And see Vowell v. Metairie Asso. (1867) 19 La.

tion as the original one,<sup>62</sup> and at the same salary,<sup>63</sup> and entitle a servant wrongfully discharged during such term to recover salary for the unexpired part of the term. At least, the salary would be the same down to the formal termination thereof.<sup>64</sup> But this presumption of renewal of the original contract is rebuttable and may be overcome; as, for example, by proof that the servant was notified before the expiration of his term that, in the event of the happening of a certain contingency, his services would no longer be required, and that such contingency actually happened,<sup>65</sup> or that a new contract was entered into.<sup>66</sup>

— Quebec.

In Quebec, by Civil Code, art. 1667, it is provided that a contract of personal services may be prolonged by "tacit relocation," which means tacit renewal.<sup>67</sup> This doctrine of tacit renewal, it has been said,<sup>68</sup> rests not on an arbitrary statute or legal enactment, but originates in the natural and reasonable presumption that the parties have so willed; wherefore the Quebec statute seems to be largely the embodiment of the earlier civil as well as common-law doctrines.

And where there has been a re-employment of a servant for a year by tacit relocation the servant may, if wrongfully dismissed during the year, recover salary for the entire year,<sup>69</sup> and the employer cannot discharge his liability for such salary by offering the servant another position.<sup>70</sup>

And where, by the terms of the original contract, the master cannot end the employment at the end of the term except by the giving of notice, a renewal of the contract results from the failure to give such notice and a continuation of the services.<sup>71</sup>

— Scotland.

As is stated in 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 725, under the law of Scotland a continuance of employment after the expiration of a contract period without any new agreement results in what is known as "tacit relocation,"—a phrase which is defined in Fraser on Master & Servant, p. 58, as "a presumed renovation of the contract from the period at which the former one expired, and it is held to arise from implied consent of parties, in consequence of their not having signified their intention that the agreement should terminate at the period stipulated;" which doctrine the latter author says is borrowed from the Roman law. This "tacit relocation," or presumed renewal of the contract, is with one exception<sup>72</sup> upon the same terms as the original one, the terms of the new contract being regulated by those of the original one.<sup>73</sup>

Ann. 298, wherein it was held that a superintendent of a race course who continued in the association's service after the expiration of his contract without any new agreement was entitled to the same rate of wages as originally until the grounds were taken over by military forces.

<sup>62</sup> Alba v. Moriarty and Lalande v. Aldrich (La.) supra.

<sup>63</sup> Lalande v. Aldrich (La.) supra; Sullivan v. New Orleans Stave & Head Co. (1892) 44 La. Ann. 787, 11 So. 89, holding that recovery cannot be had upon a quantum meruit.

<sup>64</sup> National Automatic Fire Alarm Co. v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1905) 115 La. 633, 39 So. 738.

<sup>65</sup> Burton v. Behan (1895) 47 La. Ann. 117, 16 So. 769 (servant remained a few days after the expiration of the original term, evidently in the hope that the contingency would not happen and that his services would be needed).

<sup>66</sup> Faber v. Abatoir Co. 3 La. A. (Orleans) 3, as cited in 1914-17 Cyc. Ann. p. 1848.

<sup>67</sup> See Delaney v. Love (1897) Rap. Jud. Quebec 14 C. S. 40 (wherein it was held that a continuation of the same services after the expiration of a definite period raised the inference that there was a tacit renewal of the original contract for another period of the same length); and Dugdale v. L.R.A. 1918C.

Montreal (1860) Q. B. 3 Legal News (L. C.) 204, and Les Commissaires d'E'cole v. Canfield (1889) 18 Rev. Leg. (Q. B. Quebec) 297, both of which hold, as is set out in 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 728, that a contract for services had been renewed for one year by "tacite réconduction."

<sup>68</sup> Delaney v. Love (Quebec) supra.

<sup>69</sup> Dugdale v. Montreal (L. C.) and Les Commissaires d'E'cole v. Canfield (Quebec) supra.

<sup>70</sup> Les Commissaires d'E'cole v. Canfield (Quebec) supra.

<sup>71</sup> School Comrs. v. Desmeules (1883) 15 Quebec L. R. 226, 12 Legal News (L. C.) 371, 17 Rev. Leg. (Q. B.) 84.

<sup>72</sup> See 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, § 236, text 2, wherein the learned author said: "Though the original contract may have been for a longer period than one year, the renewed agreement can never be for more than one year because no verbal contract of location can extend longer. The renewal may, however, be held to be only for half a year or other period, according to the presumption in law applicable to the particular kind of service in question."

<sup>73</sup> See Mansfield v. Scott (1831) 4 Sc. Sess. Cas. 1st series, 325, affirmed in (1833) 6 Wilson & S. 277, 1 Clark & F. 319, 6 Eng. Reprint, 936 (holding that a contract for a year was renewed in all its parts by tacit

And in Scotland, at least, in case of certain classes of servants such as agricultural, domestic, and the like, it is held that express notice must be given at least forty days before the expiration of the original contract in order to prevent tacit relocation or renewal of the contract.<sup>74</sup> And this necessity of giving notice to prevent tacit relocation cannot be eliminated by a local usage allowing dismissal without warning unless such usage is proved to be uniform and notorious.<sup>75</sup> But it has been held that the rule of tacit relocation is an artificial one, depending on custom, and therefore is not applicable to any servants except those in respect to whom the prevalence of such custom is established.<sup>76</sup> relocation from year to year by a continuing of the service); Tait v. Mackintosh (1841) 16 F. C. (Sc.) 658 (holding, as is set out in 3 Scot's Dig. (1800-1873) col. 231, that a manager of a farm, who was engaged on certain terms for a year, was entitled during the service and for three subsequent years by tacit relocation to the same terms); Day v. Liquidators of Pattison (1900) 8 Scot. L. T. 30 (holding, as shown by the quotation in 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 726, that there is a tacit renewal of the old contract as to period of notice where the duties, the salary, and the time of payment, all continue the same as under the original contract); Stevenson v. North British R. Co. (1905) 42 Scot. L. R. 768, 7 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series, 1106 (holding, according to 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 726, that a tacit relocation was inferred where the servant had been at first employed "for one year certain," and the relation was continued several years without any new agreement).

<sup>77</sup> MacLean v. Fyfe (1813) 1 F. C. (Sc.) 698 (holding with respect to a gardener that notice by inference was not sufficient); Anderson v. Wishart (1818) 1 Murray (Sc.) 429 (farm overseer); Morrison v. Allardyce (1823) 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 1st series, 337 (cook-maid); Cameron v. Scott (1870) 9 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 343 (cattleman on farm). And see Lennox v. Allan (1880) 18 Scot. L. R. 13, 8 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 38; and Morrison v. Abernethy School Bd. (1876) 3 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 945, as set out in 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 727.

<sup>75</sup> Morrison v. Allardyce (1823) 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 1st series, 337.

<sup>76</sup> Lennox v. Allan (1880) 18 Scot. L. R. 13, 8 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 13 (holding, as set out in 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 726, that the rule does not apply to artisans); Brenan v. Campbell (1898) 25 Sc. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 423 (holding, according to 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, p. 727, that a civil engineer and architect, who was employed as a factor, was not entitled to notice of termination of his employment with the expiration of the original contract period, since he was not employed as a servant).
G. J. C.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

(Division No. 1.)

BERTIE A. HAYS

v.

R. S. HOGAN et al.

(— Mo. —, 200 S. W. 286.)

Appeal — reasons for granting new trial.

1. Although the appellate court cannot consider the reasons given by the trial court for granting a new trial, if they were not entered of record as required by statute, yet it may consider them as throwing light upon the viewpoint of the court during the trial and when passing upon the motion for new trial.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IV. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Parent and child — liability of owner for negligence of child in operating automobile.

2. The owner of an automobile maintained for the use and pleasure of his family is not liable for injuries caused by negligence of his son in driving it, if the son, who is a member of his family and permitted at times to use the car, has it out against orders, for his own pleasure, at the time of the accident.

For other cases, see Parent and Child, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — The liability of the owner for injuries inflicted by an automobile while being used by a member of his family is considered in the notes to McNeal v. McKain, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775; Birch v. Abercrombie, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 59; Griffin v. Russell, L.R.A. 1916F, 223; and Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, L.R.A. 1917F, 363; and see later cases, Hutchins v. Haffner, L.R.A. 1918A, 1008; Blair v. Broadwater, L.R.A. 1918A, 1011; and Halverson v. Blosser, L.R.A. 1918B, 498.

On making prima facie case of responsibility for negligence of driver of automobile by proof of defendant's ownership of car or employment of driver, see note to White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091.

For notes on related questions, see L.R.A. Indexes under the title, "Automobiles."

For excessive or inadequate damages for personal injuries resulting in death, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Craft, L.R.A. 1916C, 817.

Evidence — presumption of agency in driving automobile.

3. No presumption arises from the fact that at the time of an accident a son was driving his father's automobile, that he was acting within the scope of his authority, which will cast upon the father the burden of showing the contrary.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — special legislation — requiring care by automobilist.

4. A statute requiring an owner of an automobile operated upon a highway to stop the same when signaled to do so by a driver of horses, and to exercise the highest degree of care, is not unconstitutional special legislation.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — verdict — sufficiency.

5. A verdict finding for plaintiff and assessing damages at $6,500, Six Thousand $5.00 Dollars," is not too uncertain to support a judgment, when supported by affidavits of jurors that the jury agreed upon $6,500 as the amount of the verdict.

For other cases, see Trial, V. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — death — excess.

6. $6,500 is not excessive to award for the death of a man fifty-seven years old, who supported his wife and eight children, although one leg was off below the knee and one arm was smaller than the other.

For other cases, see Damages, III. i, 4, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 22, 1917.)

CERTIFICATION by the Springfield Court of Appeals for determination by the Supreme Court of questions arising upon directions to the Circuit Court for Greene County to reinstate the verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed as to main defendant; reversed as to the other.

Statement by Woodson, J.:

The plaintiff brought this suit in the circuit court of Howell county against the defendants to recover $10,000 damages for the death of her husband, through the alleged negligence of the latter in so running and operating an automobile as to frighten the team of mules hitched to the wagon in which he was riding, and thereby causing it to run away and overturn the wagon, and in so doing fell upon and crushed and killed him. The verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff, and on motion a new trial was ordered, from which order the plaintiff duly appealed the cause to the Springfield court of appeals, which reversed the judgment ordering the new trial and remanded the cause, with directions to the circuit court to reinstate the verdict and judgment as originally entered therein. On motion for a rehearing one of the judges of the court of appeals dissented from the former opinion and certified the cause here, because, as stated, it was in conflict with certain decisions of this court. The facts of the case are few and largely undisputed. The facts, as disclosed by the record, are these:
L.R.A.1918C.

The plaintiff and the deceased were husband and wife; that on May 27, 1912, he was killed by means of a farm wagon in which he was riding, turning over and upon him, and crushing him to death, caused by the team of mules hitched thereto becoming frightened at the automobile owned by defendant, R. S. Hogan, and driven by his son, J. E. Hogan, the other defendant. The occurrence took place on a public highway in Howell county, Missouri. R. S. Hogan owned the car, and had done so for a year or more prior to the date of the injury; that he purchased it for the use of himself and family; that while the son, J. E. Hogan, had, with the permission of his father, driven the car in the performance of his duties to the latter, and for the pleasure of his mother and other members of the family, yet he was instructed by the father, R. S. Hogan, to never take the car out or drive it for his own purposes without his permission or that of his mother. Upon this occasion the son was driving the car for his own purposes without the authority of his father or mother; that the son, J. E. Hogan, was a member of his father's family; that the father kept no hired chauffeur; that the machine had been bought and maintained for the use of the family as a pleasure vehicle; and that it was driven and used prior to the accident by the son, J. E. Hogan, and two brothers of defendant J. E. Hogan. The father himself testified in a deposition which was offered by plaintiff as a part of her case without objection: "Well, we use it just as a family vehicle, as a pleasure car, and for such use as the family might desire; just a family vehicle."

Both defendants testified that the son lived at the home of his father as a member of the family, paid no board whatever, and was employed in the bank in which the defendant father was president. It appeared from the depositions of the defendants introduced by the plaintiff that the son had used the machine from time to time for a period of more than a year, and that the father granted him the use of it whenever he asked for it. The testimony of a number of witnesses was to the effect that the defendant's son had been seen by them driving this automobile on various occasions prior to the time of the accident, both in the day-time and in the evening, sometimes with other members of the Hogan family in the machine as passengers, and at other times with only himself and his wife or other friends riding with him. The testimony further disclosed that the machine was kept in a garage at the father's home, and that defendant J. E. Hogan learned to drive from the use of this very machine in question.

The plaintiff introduced the depositions of R. S. and J. E. Hogan in presenting her case in chief. By these depositions it is shown that R. S. Hogan did not permit his son Jack to use the automobile at pleasure; that none of his sons were at liberty to use the machine at pleasure; and in answer to the question, "Was he permitted to use the machine for his own pleasure and that of his friends?" the answer was, "Not without permission." From this deposition it further shows that defendant R. S. Hogan did not know of the son ever taking the automobile without asking either him or his mother, and that he never knew of his taking the machine out and using it for himself and friends, outside of the family. The father was not at home on the day of the accident, but was in another part of the state. There was evidence tending to prove that the automobile was being carelessly and negligently driven at the time of the accident, and that was the cause of the team becoming frightened and running away, which resulted in the injury, as before stated. There was also evidence tending to show the contrary. Since, however, the jury has passed upon that question, no useful purpose would be served by detailing it here.

Messrs. Wilfley, McIntyre, & Nardin and O. L. Haydon, for plaintiff:

The verdict in the case at bar is, on the record, without ambiguity, and clearly shows that the verdict agreed to by the jury and returned into court was a verdict for six thousand five hundred ($6,500) dollars.

State v. Underwood, 57 Mo. 52, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; State v. Rush, 95 Mo. 206, 8 S. W. 221; Devoy v. St. Louis Transit Co. 192 Mo. 219, 91 S. W. 140; Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Pelzer Mfg. Co. 22 C. C. A. 283, 42 U. S. App. 123, 76 Fed. 481; Capen v. Stoughton, 16 Gray, 364; West v. Bank of Americus, 63 Ga. 230; Heinkin v. Barbrey, 40 Ga. 252; Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 148, 36 L. ed. 920, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Davis v. Huber Mfg. Co. 119 Iowa, 56, 93 N. W. 78; Jackson ex dem. Noah v. Dickenson, 15 Johns, 309; Peters v. Fogarty, 55 N. J. L. 386, 26 Atl. 855; Dalrymple v. Williams, 63 N. Y. 361, 20 Am. L.R.A.1918C.

Rep. 544; Wolfram v. Schoepke, 123 Wis. 19, 100 N. W. 1054, 3 Ann. Cas. 398.

Where one owns and maintains an automobile for the use and pleasure of himself and family, and an injury is inflicted through the negligence of the person in charge of the automobile while using the machine for one of the purposes for which it is kept, the owner is liable, whether the person driving the machine at the time is a member of the family or a hired chauffeur.

Denison v. McNorton, 142 C. C. A. 631, 228 Fed. 401; Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224, 144 S. W. 52; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Campbell v. Arnold, 219 Mass. 160, 106 N. E. 599; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970, 146 N. W. 1091; Ploetz v. Holt, 124 Minn. 169, 144 N. W. 745; Guignon v. Campbell, 80 Wash. 543, 141 Pac. 1031; Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 Pac. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; Allen v. Bland, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 168 S. W. 35; Hazzard v. Carstairs, 244 Pa. 122, 90 Atl. 556; Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219; Cowell v. Saperston, 149 App. Div. 373, 134 N. Y. Supp. 284, 208 N. Y. 619, 102 N. E. 1100; McHarg v. Adt, 163 App. Div. 782, 149 N. Y. Supp. 244; Missell v. Hayes, 86 N. J. L. 348, 91 Atl. 322; Davis v. Littlefield, 97 S. C. 171, 81 S. E. 487; Winn v. Haliday, 109 Miss. 691, 69 So. 685; Carrier v. Donovan, 88 Conn. 37, 89 Atl. 894; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Lashbrook v. Patten, 1 Duv. 317; Winfrey v. Lazarus, 148 Mo. App. 388, 128 S. W. 276; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 422, 133 S. W. 351; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 240, 153 S. W. 527, 6 N. C. C. A. 313; Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1125.

The ownership of the machine being conceded by the defendants, the presumption follows that when the defendant's son was using it, he had his father's consent, and the burden was then cast on the defendant father to prove to the satisfaction of the jury that no consent, express or implied, had been given by him to the son.

Shamp v. Lambert, 142 Mo. App. 567, 121 S. W. 770; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 240, 153 S. W. 527, 6 N. C. C. A. 313; Christensen v. Christiansen, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 155 S. W. 905; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; Hazzard v. Carstairs, 244 Pa. 122, 90 Atl. 556; Boon v. Matthews, 227

Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219.

The constitutional question attempted to be raised for the first time in the motion for a new trial comes too late, and will be regarded by this court as having been waived.

Hartzler v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 218 Mo. 562, 117 S. W. 1124; Lohmeyer v. St. Louis Cordage Co. 214 Mo. 685, 113 S. W. 1108; State v. Gamma, 215 Mo. 100, 114 S. W. 619; Dahnke-Walker Mill. Co. v. Blake, 242 Mo. 23, 145 S. W. 438; George v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 249 Mo. 197, 155 S. W. 453.

Messrs. Green & Green, W. J. Orr, J. D. Brooks, Hamlin & Seawell, and Lewis Luster, for defendants:

The higher courts never interfere with the order of the lower court granting a new trial unless its discretion is abused. Then, too, if there is any good reason appearing on the record for granting a new trial, the order granting it will be upheld.

Warren v. Cowden, 107 Mo. App. 485, 151 S. W. 501; Green v. Terminal R. Asso. 211 Mo. 18, 109 S. W. 715; Smart v. Kansas City, 208 Mo. 162, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 565, 123 Am. St. Rep. 415, 105 S. W. 709, 13 Ann. Cas. 932; Lovell v. Davis, 52 Mo. App. 342; Iron Mountain Bank v. Armstrong, 92 Mo. 265, 4 S. W. 720; Farrell v. St. Louis Transit Co. 103 Mo. App. 457, 78 S. W. 312.

The verdict of the jury is uncertain and ambiguous, and the trial court was justified in arresting the judgment and granting a new trial because of the ambiguous verdict; and after the jury is discharged, the court is not authorized to amend the verdict to conform to what he believes to be the intention of the jury, and the appellate court certainly could not assume such power.

Newton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 168 Mo. App. 199, 153 S. W. 495; Haumuller v. Ackermann, 130 Mo. App. 387, 109 S. W. 857; Gaither v. Wilmer, 71 Md. 361, 5 L.R.A. 757, 17 Am. St. Rep. 542, 18 Atl. 590; Dyer v. Combs, 65 Mo. App. 148; Poulson v. Collier, 18 Mo. App. 604.

The petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against either defendant, because based upon an unconstitutional law, and this question can be raised at any time.

McGrew v. Missouri P. R. Co. 230 Mo. 496, 132 S. W. 1076; Simpson v. Witte Iron Works, — Mo. App. —, 144 S. W. 895; Saxton Nat. Bank v. Bennett, 138 Mo. 494, 40 S. W. 97; Bennett v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 642, 16 S. W. 947; Logan v. Field, 192 Mo. 66, 90 S. W. 127.

The statute relating to motor vehicles, as enacted by the legislature of 1911, and found L.R.A.1918C.

on page 322 of Session Acts of 1911, is unconstitutional.

Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, 140 N. W. 615, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163; Berry v. Metzger Motor Car Co. 175 Mich. 466, 141 N. W. 529; State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook, 154 Mo. 375, 48 L.R.A. 265, 77 Am. St. Rep. 765, 55 S. W. 627; Hannibal v. Missouri & K. Teleg. Co. 31 Mo. App. 23; State ex rel. Harris v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. 346; State v. Granneman, 132 Mo. 326, 33 S. W. 784; Witzmann v. Southern R. Co. 131 Mo. 618, 33 S. W. 181; St. Louis v. Weitzel, 130 Mo. 616, 31 S. W. 1045; State ex rel. Kirkwood v. Heege, 135 Mo. 112, 36 S. W. 614.

Where a father purchases an automobile and maintains it as a family vehicle, with restricted uses, and a son is cautioned not to use the car without first obtaining permission, and the son, violating this injunction, uses the car without permission upon an independent pleasure trip of his own, accompanied by no other member of the father's family, the father cannot be held responsible in case the son, while negligently driving the car, causes injury.

Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87, 60 So. 150; Riley v. Roach, 168 Mich. 294, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 134 N. W. 14; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670, 71 Atl. 535; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933, 135 N. W. 232; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Cohen v. Borgenecht, 83 Misc. 28, 144 N. Y. Supp. 399; Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228; Patterson v. Kates, 152 Fed. 481; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Stewart v. Brauch, 103 App. Div. 577, 93 N. Y. Supp. 161; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 412; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296; Garretzen v. Duencle, 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405; Evans v. Supply Dyke Automobile Co. 121 Mo. App. 266, 101 S. W. 1132; Maddox v. Brown, 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336; Broadstreet v. Hall, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933, and note, 168 Ind. 192, 120 Am. St. Rep. 356, 80 N. E. 145; Howe v. Leighton, 75 N. H. 601, 75 Atl. 102; Spelman v. Delano, 177 Mo. App. 28, 163 S. W. 300; Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 95, 77 S. E. 1096; Tanzer v. Read, 160 App. Div. 584, 145 N. Y. Supp. 708; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, L.R.A. 1916D, 618, 155 Pac. 437; Heissenbittel v. Meagher, 162 App. Div. 752, 147 N. Y. Supp. 1087; B. & R. Co. v. McLeod, — Alberta, —, 7 D. L. R. 579; Farthing v. Strouse, 172 App. Div. 523, 158 N. Y. Supp. 841; Loehr v. Abell, 174 Mich. 590, 140 N. W. 926; Armstrong v. Sellers, 182 Ala. 582, 62 So. 28; Schumer v. Register, 12 Ga. App. 743, 78 S. E. 731; Roberts v. Schanz, 83 Misc. 139, 144 N. Y. Supp. 824; University of Missouri Bulletin 1914, Law Series 5, p. 30; Case & Comment (Aug. 1915) p. 220; 28 Harvard L. Rev. (Nov. 1914) p. 91; Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, L.R.A. 1917F, 363, 115 N. E. 443.

Any verdict under the evidence in this case for more than nominal damages would be excessive, even in case of liability; and the instruction given on behalf of plaintiff on the measure of damages is erroneous.

Hickman v. Missouri P. R. Co. 22 Mo. App. 345; Knight v. Sadtler Lead & Zinc Co. 75 Mo. App. 541; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 93, 16 S. W. 924; McGowan v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co. 109 Mo. 533, 19 S. W. 199; Parsons v. Missouri P. R. Co. 94 Mo. 296, 6 S. W. 464; Goss v. Missouri P. R. Co. 50 Mo. App. 614; Coleman v. Himmelberger-Harrison Land & Lumber Co. 105 Mo. App. 254, 79 S. W. 981; Leahy v. Davis, 121 Mo. 227, 25 S. W. 941.

Woodson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I. This case is properly here, not only on account of the fact that the court of appeals certified it here under the mandate of the Constitution, but also because certain constitutional questions are involved, which will be presently considered. For the reasons stated, we will pay no further attention to the question of the jurisdiction of this court over this case.

II. The large question presented by this record for determination is stated by counsel for appellant in this language: "Where one owns and maintains an automobile for the use and pleasure of himself and family and an injury is inflicted through the negligence of the person in charge of the automobile while using the machine for one of the purposes for which it is kept, the owner is liable. And this is true whether the person driving the machine at the time is a member of the family or a hired chauffeur."

In support of this proposition we are cited to the following authorities: Denison v. McNorton, 142 C. C. A. 631, 228 Fed. 401; Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224, 144 S. W. 52; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Campbell v. Arnold, 219 Mass. 160, 106 N. E. 599; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 970, L.R.A. 1918C.

146 N. W. 1091; Ploetz v. Holt (1913) 124 Minn. 169, 144 N. W. 745; Guignon v. Campbell, 80 Wash. 543, 141 Pac. 1031; Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 Pac. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; Allen v. Bland (1914)—Tex. Civ. App.—, 168 S. W. 35; Hazzard v. Carstairs, 244 Pa. 122, 90 Atl. 556; Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219; Cowell v. Saperston, 149 App. Div. 373, 134 N. Y. Supp. 284, also 208 N. Y. 619, 102 N. E. 1100; Missell v. Hayes, 86 N. J. L. 348, 91 Atl. 322; Davis v. Littlefield, 97 S. C. 171, 81 S. E. 487; Winn v. Haliday (1915) 109 Miss. 691, 69 So. 685; McHarg v. Adt (1914) 163 App. Div. 782, 149 N. Y. Supp. 244; Carrier v. Donovan, 88 Conn. 37, 89 Atl. 894; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Lashbrook v. Patten, 1 Duv. 317; Winfrey v. Lazarus, 148 Mo. App. 388, 128 S. W. 276; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. loc. cit. 422, 133 S. W. 351; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 240, 153 S. W. 527, 6 N. C. C. A. 313; Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1125.

Preliminary to the discussion of this question, it may not be improper to state that the trial court granted the new trial because under the record it was of the opinion the defendant R. S. Hogan was not liable, and that the verdict of the jury was so indefinite and uncertain a proper judgment could not be rendered thereon; in that connection the court also stated that it did not sustain the motion for a new trial because the verdict was not supported by the evidence or was against the weight of the evidence, nor on the ground of passion or prejudice of the jury against the defendants. Counsel for respondents contend that this court has no authority to consider the reasons assigned by the trial court for granting the new trial, because those reasons were not entered of record as required by § 2023, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1909, but were preserved, if at all, in the bill of exceptions.

This court has repeatedly held that where a statute such as this requires a matter to be spread of record, it must be done, and cannot be preserved in a bill of exceptions, and vice versa, if required to be saved in the bill of exceptions, it cannot be preserved by the record proper. Hewitt v. Steele, 118 Mo. 463, 24 S. W. 440; Taylor v. Scherpe & K. Architectural Co. 47 Mo. App. 257; Pennowsky v. Coerver, 205 Mo. 135, 103 S. W. 542. Notwithstanding this insistence, which is well founded, still we may consider the same as throwing light upon the view the circuit court took of the case during the progress of the trial, and the view he had of it when passing on the motion for a new trial. This carries us back to the large proposition before quoted. By reading it in the light of the remarks made by the trial court in granting the new trial, it is apparent that during the trial the court was of the same opinion as counsel for appellant as to the liability of R. S. Hogan, namely, that he was liable by virtue of the facts that he was the owner of the car, that it was for the use and pleasure of himself and family, that it was being used at the time of the injury for the pleasure of the son (a member of the family) and his friends, and the further fact that it was being negligently driven by the son; and that is true whether the son was driving the car for his own use with or without the authority of the father. In short, the father was liable in this case because he permitted his son, a member of his family, to drive the car upon other occasions, a piece of dangerous machinery, even though he was not about the father's business, but his own. But upon reflection the trial court, in passing upon the motion for a new trial, evidently changed its mind as to the liability of the father under those facts, which, as that court said, were clearly established by the evidence, but held he was not liable thereunder.

From those two rulings it is clear the court was of the opinion that there was no evidence introduced tending to show that J. E. Hogan, the son, was the agent and servant of R. S. Hogan, or that he was at the time of the injury acting for his father. In other words, that there was no evidence tending to show that the relation of master and servant existed between them, and therefore the father was not liable to the plaintiff on account of permitting his son, a member of his family, to use a dangerous piece of machinery on a public highway. We are likewise of the opinion that this record fails to show that J. E. Hogan was the agent of R. S. Hogan in driving the car upon the occasion in question, or that he was performing any duty for the father at that time. In fact the evidence shows he was not; consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to a recovery in this case against R. S. Hogan upon the ground that J. E. Hogan was his agent and servant. By this process of elimination we now return to the question, Is the father liable to the plaintiff in this case for the reason that he permitted his son to use this car, a dangerous piece of machinery, as counsel for plaintiff terms it, for his personal use or pleasure? Counsel for plaintiff, as before stated, contend for the affirmative of this proposition, while those for the defendant insist to the contrary. We have carefully read all the authorities heretofore cited by counsel for plaintiff, and are satisfied that many of them are directly in point, and others announce the general doctrine that a father, in such a case, is liable for negligence of the son.

There has been so much said and written upon that question as shown by the copious quotations taken from the opinions of courts of the various states, which appear in briefs of counsel for plaintiff, it would be difficult to add anything new thereto; so we will content ourselves by saying that the authorities cited fully sustain the rule of law contended for by counsel for plaintiff. But the authorities are not all one way upon that question. Nor are we satisfied with the soundness of the rule announced by the authorities cited by counsel for plaintiff. The position of counsel for defendants upon that question is stated in this language: "Where a father purchases an automobile and maintains it as a family vehicle, with restricted uses, and a son had been cautioned not to use the car without first obtaining permission, and the son, violating this injunction, uses the car without permission upon an independent pleasure trip of his own, accompanied by his friends, but by no other member of the father's family, the father cannot be held responsible in case the son, while negligently driving the car, causes injury."

And in support thereof we are cited to the following cases: Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87, 60 So. 150; Riley v. Roach, 168 Mich. 294, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 134 N. W. 14; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670, 71 Atl. 535; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933, 135 N. W. 232; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Cohen v. Borgenecht, 83 Misc. 28, 144 N. Y. Supp. 399; Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228; Patterson v. Kates (C. C.) 152 Fed. 481; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Stewart v. Baruch, 103 App. Div. 577, 93 N. Y. Supp. 161; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 412; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296; Garretzen v. Duenckel, 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405; Evans v. A. L. Dyke Automobile Supply Co. 121 Mo. App. 266, 101 S. W. 1132; Maddox v. Brown, 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336; Broadstreet v. Hall, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933, and note (168 Ind. 192, 120 Am. St. Rep. 356, 80 N. E. 145); Howe v. Leighton, 75 N. H. 601, 75 Atl. 102; Spel- man v. Delano, 177 Mo. App. 28, 163 S. W. 300; Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 95, 77 S. E. 1096; Tanzer v. Read, 160 App. Div. 584, 145 N. Y. Supp. 708; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, L.R.A.1916D, 618, 155 Pac. 437; Heissenbuttel v. Meagher, 162 App. Div. 752, 147 N. Y. Supp. 1087; B. & R. Co. v. McLeod, — Alberta, —, 7 D. L. R. 579; Farthing v. Strouse, 172 App. Div. 523, 158 N. Y. Supp. 841; Loehr v. Abell, 174 Mich. 590, 140 N. W. 926; Armstrong v. Sellers, 182 Ala. 582, 62 So. 28; Schumer v. Register, 12 Ga. App. 743, 78 S. E. 731; Roberts v. Schans, 83 Misc. 139, 144 N. Y. Supp. 824; University of Missouri Bulletin, Law Series 5 (Dec. 1914) p. 30; Case & Comment (Aug. 1915) p. 220; 28 Harvard L. Rev. (Nov. 1914) p. 91.

By carefully reading the position of counsel for defendants before quoted, it will be seen that it includes all the facts that can possibly be deducted from the evidence preserved in this record; and if defendant R. S. Hogan's liability cannot be predicated upon those facts, then a recovery cannot be had against him in this case. Preliminary to the legal discussion of this question, it may add clarity thereto to restate the fact that this record is totally barren of all evidence tending to show that J. E. Hogan was the agent or servant of R. S. Hogan, or that the former was driving the car at the time of the injury for his use or benefit, without, as previously stated, the facts that J. E. Hogan was a member of the former's family, that the car was purchased for the family use, and that it was being driven by the latter at the time of the injury, created that relation. This latter proposition will be considered later. Attending the former, in the case of Garretzen v. Duenckel, 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405, the court said: "A master is not responsible for any act or omission of his servants which is not connected with the business in which they serve him, though in general he is responsible for the manner in which they execute his orders, and for their negligence in selecting means by which the orders are to be carried out. In determining whether a particular act is done in the course of a servant's employment, it is proper first to inquire whether the servant was at the time engaged in serving his master. If the act was done while the servant was at liberty from his service, and pursuing his own ends exclusively, there can then be no question that the master is not responsible, even though the injuries complained of could not have been committed without the facilities afforded by the servant's relations to his master."

While it is true that court held the defendant liable in that case, yet it was because the servant was acting within the L.R.A.1918C.

scope of his authority when he was showing the gun. This case has been cited with approval of this court so often it would be useless to refer to them. But it should be borne in mind that in the case at bar, in the very act of driving the machine, J. E. Hogan violated the orders of R. S. Hogan, for he had no authority whatever to drive it without first obtaining the latter's permission to so do. That fact differentiates this case from the Garretzen-Duenckel Case just considered. Nor will it be inappropriate to here state that it has never been the law of this state that the father is liable for the torts of even his minor children; that is, liable therefor merely because of the relationship of parent and child. Bassett v. Riley, 131 Mo. App. 676, 111 S. W. 596; Baker v. Haldeman, 24 Mo. 219, 69 Am. Dec. 430; Paul v. Hummel, 43 Mo. 119, 97 Am. Dec. 381. For stronger reasons the father should not be liable for the torts of his adult son.

The reports are full of cases holding that where a servant, even with the master's consent, takes the latter's car, and while using it for his own purposes negligently injures a person thereby, the master is not liable. Guthrie v. Holmes, — Mo. —, 198 S. W. 854, decided by this court in banc at present term; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Howe v. Leighton, 75 N. H. 601, 75 Atl. 102; Patterson v. Kates (C. C.) 152 Fed. 481; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 933, 135 N. W. 232; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670, 71 Atl. 535; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 426, 133 S. W. 351. In the case of Maddox v. Brown, 71 Me. 432, 36 Am. Rep. 336, where a minor son who had been permitted to use his father's horse and wagon without restriction took them upon one occasion, in the absence and without the knowledge of the father, on business of his own, and left the horse unhitched in the street, and the horse ran away and injured the plaintiff's carriage, it was held that the father was not liable for the damage done the carriage, because the son was not the agent or servant of the father. In Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87, 60 So. 150, where an eighteen-year-old boy took his father's automobile for his own use without the father's knowledge, but by his implied general permission, it was held that the son was not the agent of the father, and that the latter was not liable for the negligence of the former in operating the car. In Maher

v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228, it was held that the owner of an automobile is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of his son in driving a car, merely because of the relationship, or because he permitted his son to drive the car.

The same rule is announced in the case of Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 412. See also Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87, 60 So. 150, where the court used this language: "The meager facts before us, though interpreted with favor to the appellant, present the case of a mere permissive use of the father's vehicle by the son for his own purposes of business or pleasure. On what principle can it be said, in this state of the case, that the son was the servant of the defendant and acting within the course or scope of his employment? It seems clear that the ordinary rule of master and servant has no application to such a case, and prior to the advent of the automobile, the contrary doctrine had no general currency in this country or England. [Citing many cases and continuing:] We find Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 351; Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224, 144 S. W. 52, and Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219, referred to as sustaining appellant's contention for appellee's liability in this case. The first named of these cases is closely in point, and does clearly hold with the appellant. In the second there were members of the family other than the driver in the machine. The third may be discriminated on the very substantial ground that the machine was being operated by a driver regularly employed for the purpose. The doctrine contended for amounts to this, that the pleasure of the family in its utmost detail is the business of the father. As applied to the case at hand, it means that the son, in pursuit of his own pleasure, with an automobile owned by his father, was engaged in the business of the father. But the doctrine, we think, has no firm foundation in reason or common sense. In theory it overlooks well-settled principles of law; in practice it would interdict the father's generosity and his reasonable care for the pleasure, or even the well-being, of his children by imposing a universal responsibility for their acts. As said in Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 756, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296: 'It would subject a parent to liability if he bought for his son a baseball or for his daughter a golf club, and, by permitting them to be used by his children for their appropriate purposes, injury occurred. It bases the creation of the relation of master and servant upon the purpose which the parent had in mind in acquiring ownership of the vehicle and its permissive use by the child. This proposition ignores an essential element in the creation of that status as to third persons; that such use must be in furtherance of, and not apart from, the master's service and control, and fails to distinguish between a mere permission to use and a use subject to the control of the master and connected with his affairs.' In the case from which we have just quoted it was held, on facts substantially identical with those in the case at bar, that the owner of the automobile and father of the driver was not liable. So in Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228. The same conclusion finds support in Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761, which case is stated and commented upon in 75 Cent. L. J. 43, as follows: 'Thus, in the Massachusetts case, a father purchased an automobile for the use of his family, and his minor son was the only member of the family licensed to operate it. The wife had permission to use it at her pleasure, and the son was expected to obey any request of his mother to take her out in the car. Plaintiff was injured by the son's negligence when he was taking his mother out at her request. The court said: "If, instead of hiring a stranger, the father chose to have the same work performed by his minor son, to whose time and services he was entitled as a matter of law, it could not be ruled as a matter of law that a jury might not find the business to be that of the father. This is not a case of mere permissive use of the father's vehicle by the son for his own pleasure." This authority, therefore, might even be deemed against, rather than in support of, the principal case (Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224, 144 S. W. 52), especially when it was stated in another part of the opinion: "If the act is not done by the son in furtherance of the father's business, but in performance of some independent design of his own, the father is not liable." Liability was placed merely on the fact that there was room in the evidence for the jury to find that a request by defendant's wife was equivalent to direction by him for his son, as his hired man, to perform for him a service.'"

In Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296, the father owned an automobile which he kept upon his premises, and his daughter, about nineteen years of age, was accustomed to drive it, and did so whenever she felt like it; asking permission to use it when the father was at home, but when not at home took it sometimes without permission. There was no proof that the daughter was actually employed by the father to operate the machine. The court said: "No other member of the family was with her; so that the machine was then being run by the daughter upon no errand of the father."

She was allowed to operate the machine from time to time, and drove it whenever she felt like it, as also did her brother; and defendant testified that he bought the machine "for our own use," the same as a person might buy a horse or carriage for the family, and that it was operated mostly by his son and daughter. On the day of the accident the father was absent in New York city, and did not know that his daughter was intending to use the automobile, but he knew that she did use it whenever she desired to do so. On this occasion she took it of her own accord without asking permission, and had three friends in the car with her and was out for her own pleasure. In this case against the father on account of the daughter negligently injuring a person in the highway, it was held that such proof was not sufficient to constitute the daughter a servant or agent of the master, and that a motion for direction of a verdict for the defendant should have prevailed. This case was well considered and many authorities cited, and as said by counsel for defendants: "The facts are in many respects similar to the case at bar, but the case at bar is even stronger on behalf of the father for the reason that defendant J. E. Hogan was directed never to use the car without first asking permission of his father or mother, and on the day of the accident in question was using the machine in direct violation of this injunction."

In Riley v. Roach, 168 Mich. 294, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 134 N. W. 14, it was held that if the owner of an automobile, upon leaving home, instructs the chauffeur not to take the machine out without orders from himself or wife, he is not liable for injury done by the machine while it is being used to take out one of his guests, his wife's sister, but when so used it was not with the expressed consent of the owner or his wife. In B. & R. Co. v. McLeod, — Alberta, —, 7 D. L. R. 579, a son was held to be using the automobile for his own purpose, and not to be acting as his father's agent at the time the accident occurred, where it appeared that he had driven his father's car for three years, and had an opportunity to take the car and use it whenever he liked; that on the day of the accident, he went to the garage, took the car for a ride with some friends, and during the course of the ride the accident occurred. The court approved the decision in Doran v. Thomsen, supra, L.R.A.1918C.

where the parent was held not liable in a case where the child was using the car alone for her own purposes. In Tanzer v. Read, 160 App. Div. 584, 145 N. Y. Supp. 708, the wife was driving the car purchased for family use. She was out for her own pleasure, and the courts held that while engaged in such recreation she was not in any sense acting as her husband's agent, even though she utilized his property as a means for pleasure. In Farthing v. Strouse, 172 App. Div. 523, 158 N. Y. Supp. 841, the court held that there was no presumption that the defendant's wife was in his service and engaged in his business, and that the principle of respondeat superior does not apply where it appeared that the wife was using the car alone for her own purposes, although the husband had given her authority to use it for pleasure, or for any purpose whatever.

The case of Heissenbittel v. Meagher, 162 App. Div. 752, 147 N. Y. Supp. 1087, is "on all fours" with the case at bar. The opinion is short and to the point. In discussing the question the court said: "The plaintiff, while standing in a public street waiting for a surface car, was struck and injured by an automobile belonging to defendant and driven by his son, a young man twenty-four years of age. This son was pursuing his studies as a law student, and lived with his father as a member of his family. The automobile was a pleasure vehicle kept by defendant for the use of himself and his family. His son was privileged to use it for his individual purposes whenever he so desired. It was customary also for the son to act as chauffeur of the car when it was used by defendant or other members of the family. On the occasion of the accident, the son had taken the car out for a pleasure drive, accompanied by several of his friends. Neither defendant nor any other member of his family, except his son, was in the party. It is evident from these facts that when the accident happened the car was neither expressly nor constructively in the use or service of the defendant, and that in driving the car the son was in no way acting as defendant's agent. Under these circumstances, we hold that defendant is not liable for his son's negligent operation of the car. The principle involved has been applied in so many cases that the citation of but a few will suffice. Tanzer v. Read, supra; . . . Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, with costs, and the complaint dismissed, with costs. All concur."

In Loehr v. Abell, 174 Mich. 590, 140 N.

W. 926, it was held that a father is not liable for the negligence of his minor son when using the automobile with the father's permission, but for his own pleasure; the son being a licensee only. In Armstrong v. Sellers, 182 Ala. 582, 62 So. 28, it was held that the owner of an automobile who habitually consented to his wife's use of the machine is not liable, in the absence of statute, to one run down by the machine, which was being driven by a third person who had the privilege to use the machine, and with whom the owner's wife was riding. In Schumer v. Register, 12 Ga. App. 743, 78 S. E. 731, it was held that no cause of action was set forth against the owner of an automobile by a count which alleged that the defendant, a widow, having exclusive control of her minor daughter, was the owner of an automobile, and that the daughter was riding in it, having authority and command over its movement, and that it was being driven by a third party, when it was negligently run into the plaintiff. It was further held that this count would set forth no cause of action under a statute making every person liable for the torts committed by his child or servant by his command, or in the prosecution of his business, although an amendment of the count alleged that the automobile was kept for the comfort and pleasure of the owner's family, who were authorized to use it at any time for their pleasure; it being held that, in order to render the parent liable under such statute, the child must have been engaged in his parent's business. In McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, L.R.A.1916D, 618, 155 Pac. 437, where all the authorities are reviewed, the court, in speaking of the rule announced by the Missouri courts of appeals, says: "Such a doctrine, in the ordinary affairs of life, would be monstrous to say the least. But, if it were assumed that a distinction should be made between automobiles and other vehicles and instrumentalities, it should be made by the legislature, the lawmaking power, and not by the courts, who merely declare the law as they find it. We, however, can conceive neither reason nor logic in attempting to make such a distinction."

In Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 95, 77 S. E. 1096, where a son about twenty years old was driving with three of his friends in the car, there was evidence that the car was maintained for the use of the owner and his family. There the court held that the trial judge should have directed a nonsuit as to the father, for the reason that the evidence is undisputed that the son at the time of the accident was not engaged in any business for the owner, but was about his own business or pleasure, and no jury question was raised on that point. This is one of the L.R.A.1918C.

many cases which hold as a matter of law that the father is not liable. In commenting upon the latter case, the University of Missouri Bulletin, vol. 15, No. 34, Law Series 5, December, 1914, said: "The statement from Doran v. Thomsen, above quoted, points out the fallacy of the Missouri cases. The creation of the relation of master and servant should not be based upon the purpose which the parent had in mind in buying the automobile and the permissive use by a member of his family. One might keep an automobile for the use of the members of a club, the students of a certain school, the residents of a certain town, or for the general public; yet who will say, in case he permits such persons to use the machine and they injure a third party, that the relation of master and servant existed, and that, in using the automobile for one of the purposes for which it was bought, the clubman or the student, or a member of the general public, was in the business of the owner, and that he is therefore liable for their acts. If public interest demands that ownership, coupled with a permissive use of an automobile by a member of the owner's family, be made a basis of liability for injuries to third parties, this result can be reached only by a departure from the established law of agency. It is submitted that Sturgis, J., was right in holding Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1165, in conflict with Walker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 121 Mo. 575, 24 L.R.A. 363, 42 Am. St. Rep. 547, 26 S. W. 360, and Garretzen v. Duenckel, 50 Mo. 104, 11 Am. Rep. 405. Suppose, however, a frail son, or one injuring his health by too zealous an application to work: His affectionate, though wealthy, father is much concerned. He buys a machine, and tells his son to use it in the pursuit of health and pleasure. While thus pursuing, the son pursues and runs down the plaintiff instead. If these facts could be proved, a not unwilling jury might find that the son's frolic was not 'a frolic of his own,' but really of his father's. The question is whether any father does this. It is submitted that most of them do not. Such an idea of vicarious enjoyment is far too fanciful,—as much so in the case of an automobile as it would be, for instance, if the father bought a pair of roller skates for the son, or told him to use the family roller skates. The argument might as well be extended to a chauffeur who is occasionally allowed the use of the car so that he will be more satisfied with his work," and concludes the discussion with the remark: "Let not the ancient maxim be transformed to read: 'Qui facit per auto facit per se.'"

In Case and Comment, August number, 1915, at page 220, in an article by Joseph

T. Winslow, of the Massachusetts Bar, on the subject of the owner's liability for injury occurring while the automobile is being used by members of his family, announces the general rule to be that "a father cannot be held liable for the negligent operation of his car by his son merely because he owned the car, or because he permitted the son to drive it whenever he wished, or because the driver was his son."

And after reviewing the authorities he says in the summary (page 226): "It seems that where a child acts as the chauffeur for the family, of a car kept for family purposes, the owner will generally be held liable for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the car by the child while he is driving it for other members of the owner's family who have permission to use it. It appears, however, that where a child or a member of the owner's family at the time an injury occurs is driving the car for his or her own purposes, the owner will not as a rule be liable, although the Missouri court of appeals in some cases has taken the view that a parent may be held liable under such circumstances if the car was one which was kept for general family use, upon the theory that it was being used by the owner's agent for one of the purposes for which it was kept by him. In case the owner of a car kept for family use furnishes a chauffeur other than a member of his family, he is ordinarily liable for an injury occurring while the chauffeur is driving the car under orders of some member of the owner's family."

The writer concludes by stating that the cases decided by the Missouri appellate courts, are, in his opinion, unsound upon principle, and unsupported by the weight of authority.

After a careful consideration of all the authorities cited, we have reached the same conclusion, and hold that the mere ownership of an automobile purchased by a father for the use and pleasure of himself and family does not render him liable in damages to a third person for injuries sustained thereby, through the negligence of his minor son while operating the same on a public highway in furtherance of his own business or pleasure; and the fact that he had the father's special or general permission to so use the car is wholly immaterial.

III. It is next insisted by the counsel for plaintiff that the ownership of the car by the father, and that it was being driven by his son at the time of the injury with the former's consent, raise a presumption that the latter was acting within the scope of his authority, and therefore the burden of proof rests upon the father to show the contrary. The vice of this insistence con-L.R.A.1918C.

sists in assuming that the ownership of the car by the father and his consent of its use by the son constituted the latter his agent and servant, and therefore at the time of the injury the car of R. S. Hogan was being driven by his servant, J. E. Hogan. That is non sequitur. That sequence would no more follow in this case than it would in case a member of this court should lend his car to a friend to drive to Fulton, and while en route he should negligently run over and injure a third person. In both cases the agency would have to be first established, and then, and not until then, would the presumption arise that the son or friend was acting within the scope of his authority, and thereby shift the burden of proof upon the father. Guthrie v. Holmes, — Mo. —, 198 S. W. 854.

Moreover, if the insistence of counsel for plaintiff is correct, then the court would be required to enforce one presumption upon another; namely, first, that the son was the agent of the father; and, second, that the agent was acting within the scope of his authority. This is never done. A presumption must be based upon a fact, and not upon inference or upon another presumption. Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 113 Mo. 570, 18 L.R.A. 599, 21 S. W. 1, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 714; Bigelow v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 48 Mo. App. 367; State v. Lackland, 136 Mo. 26, 37 S. W. 812; Glick v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 57 Mo. App. 97.

The same rule governs expert opinions. It is not proper to predicate an expert opinion upon another. They must be based either upon the facts, or facts assumed to be true stated in the hypothetical question. McAnany v. Henrici, 238 Mo. 103, 141 S. W. 633. The points so far decided affect R. S. Hogan, the father alone, but the remaining questions are common to both defendants.

IV. Counsel for defendants contend that §§ 8 and 9 of the Act of 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 322), requiring the operator of an automobile upon a public highway to stop the same when signaled to so do by a driver of a team of horses, etc., and to exercise the highest degree of care, etc., are unconstitutional, null, and void. This contention is not well founded. This court in the case of State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601, 102 S. W. 483, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725, held the Act of 1903, approved March 23, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 162), which, for the purposes of this case, is practically the same as the Act of 1911, constitutional. That case had received the approval of this court in the cases of St. Louis v. Hammond, — Mo. —, 199 S. W. 411, and Roper v. Greenspon, — Mo. —, 198 S. W. 1107, both decided at the present term of this court, the latter in banc, neither of which have yet been officially reported. We therefore rule this contention against the defendants.

V. Counsel for defendants insist that the order of the trial court granting the new trial was proper for the reason that the verdict of the jury was so indefinite and uncertain that a valid judgment could not be rendered thereon. The following is a copy of the verdict: "We, the jury, find the issues in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendants, J. E. Hogan and R. S. Hogan, and assess her damages at the sum of $6,500, Six Thousand $5.00 Dollars."

In support of the verdict six of the jurors filed affidavits stating that the amount of the verdict agreed upon by the jury was for the sum of $6,500.

That such affidavits are competent is no longer an open question in this state. State v. Underwood, 57 Mo. 40, loc. cit. 52, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 251; State v. Rush, 95 Mo. 199, loc. cit. 206, 8 S. W. 221; Devoy v. St. Louis Transit Co. 192 Mo. 197, loc. cit. 218, 219, 91 S. W. 140. The reports of other courts are also rich with such rulings. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Pelzer Mfg. Co. 22 C. C. A. 283, 42 U. S. App. 123, 76 Fed. 481; Capen v. Stoughton, 16 Gray, 364; West v. Bank of Americus, 63 Ga. 230; Heinkin v. Barbrey, 40 Ga. loc. cit. 252; Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. loc. cit. 148, 36 L. ed. 920, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Davis v. Huber Mfg. Co. 119 Iowa, 56, 93 N. W. 78; Jackson ex dem. Noah v. Dickenson, 15 Johns. 309, 8 Am. Dec. 236; Peters v. Fogarty, 55 N. J. L. 386, 26 Atl. 855; Dalrymple v. Williams, 63 N. Y. 361, 20 Am. Rep. 544; Wolfgang v. Schoepke, 123 Wis. 19, 100 N. W. 1054, 3 Ann. Cas. 398.

When we read the verdict in this case in the light of the affidavits filed, there can be no reasonable doubt but that the jury agreed upon the sum of $6,500 as the amount thereof. This is also manifest from the figures $6,500, the first sum stated therein, but when the attempt was thereafter made to state the amount in words, the scrivener wrote the words "Six Thousand," and for some reason undisclosed added "$5.00 Dollars," thereby making the entire verdict as to the amount read, "at the sum of $6,500, Six Thousand $5.00 Dollars." It is perfectly clear from the face of the entire record, that is, the petition, answer, evidence, verdict, and affidavits filed, that through inadvertence the scrivener placed the punctuation point before instead of after the last two naughts found in the verdict. Had it been placed after them instead of before, both statements of the amount would have corresponded, and this question would not have been here; but as it L.R.A.1918C.

stands, it contradicts the remainder of the verdict and the affidavits, but if transposed the entire verdict becomes harmonious and in keeping with the record, as before stated. This view of the verdict was taken by the court of appeals in the case of Gurley v. O'Dwyer, 61 Mo. App. 348. In that case the suit was on a promissory note for $103.70, and the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jurors, do find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1.12, 16-100."

The court rendered judgment therein for the sum of \$112.16. Thereupon the defendant moved the court set aside verdict and judgment, and enter judgment on the verdict for \$1.12 and 16-100, according to the literal finding of the jury, which it was contended was a perfect verdict for \$1.12  $\frac{16}{100}$ , and therefore the court had no authority to change it to \$112.16. In passing upon that question, the St. Louis court of appeals said: "Touching the second complaint, we see no reason why an inaccurate punctuation should destroy a verdict which is responsive to the issues any more than inaccurate grammar or spelling, so long as the meaning of the verdict is perfectly clear in the light of surrounding circumstances. In State v. McNamara, 100 Mo. 100, 13 S. W. 938, the jury in their verdict assessed the defendant's punishment to two years in the 'Penitentiary.' In Snyder v. United States, 112 U. S. 216, 28 L. ed. 697, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118, the jury made a still greater blunder in spelling. Both Supreme Courts held that the meaning was perfectly plain, and that the verdict was good. In the case at bar there was no pretense that anything was paid on the note. The only defense interposed was non est factum. As the verdict for the jury was for the note with interest, and as that is the only verdict which they could have rendered in conformity with the evidence, provided they found for the plaintiff at all, the court did not err in entering the verdict according to the obvious intent of the jury, and rejecting the literal reading or erroneous punctuation. Besides this, we are bound to assume, in support of the action of the court, that the verdict was read to the jury, as is universally done, and that they assented to it as a verdict for \$112.16. We have never heard of a jury going down to fractions of a cent in their calculation of damages. Section 2100 of the Revised Statutes of 1889 provides that errors not affecting substantial rights of the adverse parties shall be disregarded."

And we fully agree with the court of appeals in saying there is no reason why an inaccuracy in punctuation should destroy a verdict which is responsive to the issues any more than inaccuracy in grammar or spelling, so long as the meaning of the verdict is perfectly clear in the light of the surrounding facts and circumstances. No one can read this verdict in the light of the facts and circumstances disclosed by this record and reach any other conclusion than that it was the intention of the jury to find, and it did find, for the plaintiff in the sum of $6,500. This point is ruled against defendants.

VI. It was finally insisted that the court properly granted a new trial because the verdict was excessive. We have carefully examined the evidence upon this point and are of the opinion that this insistence is not well grounded. Whilst it is true the evidence shows the deceased was fifty-seven years old, with one leg off 6 inches below the knee, and one arm was somewhat smaller than the other, yet it further shows that he supported himself and family, composed of his wife and eight children. Under that evidence, we are unable to say the verdict was excessive.

We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment of the Circuit Court as to R. S. Hogan should be affirmed, and reversed and remanded as to J. E. Hogan, with direction for the court to reinstate the judgment on the verdict as to him.

All concur except Bond, J., absent.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

ALLEN G. FISHER

v.

DELIA O'HANLON et al.

and

JAMES ROWAN, Appt.

(93 Neb. 529, 141 N. W. 157.)

Bills and notes — mortgage security — option as to payment — negotiability.

1. Where a promissory note negotiable in form, by which the maker promises to pay a certain sum in money at a certain specified time, is made, and the note is secured by a mortgage, the reservation in the mortgage of an option on the part of the mortgagor to pay a part of the amount due at any time he may elect before maturity does not destroy the negotiability of the note secured by the mortgage.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, I. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — holder in due course.

2. A holder of a negotiable promissory note "in due course" is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: (1) That it is complete and regular upon its face. (2) That he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact. (3) That he took it in good faith and for value. (4) That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it." Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 41, § 52.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by REESE, Ch. J.

Note. — As to garnishment of debt evidenced by negotiable paper, see annotation following this case, post, 731.

Generally as to provision in bill or note accelerating maturity as affecting negotiability, see note to Kennedy v. Broderick, L.R.A.1915B, 472. L.R.A.1918C.

Garnishment — money due on note.

3. The indebtedness of the maker upon a promissory note, before its maturity, is not the subject of attachment. His obligation is not to the payee named in the note, but to the holder, whoever he may be.

For other cases, see Garnishment, I. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 17, 1913.)

APPEAL by defendant Rowan from a judgment of the District Court for Daves County in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding to collect a claim against Delia O'Hanlon by garnishment of the amount alleged to be due her on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert W. Crites, for appellant:

To subject such property to attachment, it must be within the jurisdiction of the court.

American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Hettler, 37 Neb. 849, 40 Am. St. Rep. 522, 56 N. W. 711; Edney v. Willis, 23 Neb. 63, 36 N. W. 300; Reimers v. Seatco Mfg. Co. 30 L.R.A. 364, 17 C. C. A. 228, 37 U. S. App. 426, 70 Fed. 573; Heard v. Dubuque County Bank, 8 Neb. 10, 30 Am. Rep. 811; Stark v. Olsen, 44 Neb. 654, 63 N. W. 37; Cook v. Satterlee, 6 Cow. 108, 16 Am. Dec. 432; Dobbins v. Oberman, 17 Neb. 163, 22 N. W. 356; Charlton v. Reed, 61 Iowa, 166, 47 Am. Rep. 808, 16 N. W. 64; Frost v. Fisher, 13 Colo. App. 322, 58 Pac. 872; Clark v. Skeen, 61 Kan. 526, 49 L.R.A. 190, 78 Am. St. Rep. 337, 60 Pac. 327; Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L.R.A. 544, 68 N. W. 278; Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 34 L. ed. 349, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 999; First Nat. Bank v. Buttery, 17 N. D. 326, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 878, 116 N. W. 341, 17 Ann. Cas. 52; National Bank v. Kenney, 98 Tex. 293, 83 S. W. 368; Farmer v. Bank of Graettinger, 130 Iowa, 469, 107 N. W. 170; First Nat. Bank v. Skeen, 101 Mo. 689, 11 L.R.A. 748, 14 S. W. 732; Pemberton v. Hoosier, 1 Kan. 108; Capron v. Capron, 44 Vt. 410; Smith v. Ellis, 29 Me. 422; Protection Ins. Co. v. Bill, 31 Conn. 534; Riker v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 14 R. I. 402, 51 Am. Rep. 413; White v. Smith, 77 Ill. 351, 20 Am. Rep. 251; Story, Promissory Notes, § 29; Goshen & M. Turnp. Road v. Hurtin, 9 Johns. 217, 6 Am. Dec. 273.

Messrs. William D. Elmer, Andrew M. Morrissey, and William P. Rooney, for appellee:

The note was in Chadron with the mortgage when garnishment was served on the debtor, also residing there; hence the debt might be attached by garnishment.

Campbell v. Nesbitt, 7 Neb. 303.

The garnishment and judgment having created an assignment of the note and mortgage, Rowan was charged with a duty to examine the records, and this county court judgment amounting to and being an assignment, the plaintiff was entitled to record the evidence of this assignment.

Ames v. Miller, 65 Neb. 208, 91 N. W. 250; Rice v. Winters, 45 Neb. 532, 63 N. W. 830; Stewart v. Walker, 80 Neb. 68, 127 Am. St. Rep. 747, 113 N. W. 814.

The note was not negotiable by delivery.

Lederer v. Union Sav. Bank, 52 Neb. 137, 71 N. W. 954; Rumery v. Loy, 61 Neb. 755, 86 N. W. 478; Roblee v. Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank, 69 Neb. 184, 95 N. W. 61.

This court has held such note not to be negotiable.

Allen v. Dunn, 71 Neb. 832, 99 N. W. 680; Garnett v. Meyers, 65 Neb. 287, 91 N. W. 400, 94 N. W. 803; Consterdine v. Moore, 65 Neb. 299, 101 Am. St. Rep. 620, 91 N. W. 399, 96 N. W. 1021; Roblee v. Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank, 69 Neb. 183, 95 N. W. 61; Iowa Nat. Bank v. Carter, 144 Iowa, 715, 123 N. W. 237.

Mr. Allen G. Fisher also for appellee.

Reese, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 9th day of November, 1908, Henry Hern and Maria Hern executed their promissory note to Delia O'Hanlon for the sum of $500, due five years after date, with interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The note is negotiable in form; and, so far as the note itself upon its face is concerned, it is conceded to be negotiable. However, it was secured by a mortgage, which contains a stipulation that "the said Henry Hern and Maria Hern to have the privilege of paying the sum of $25 or $50 at any time during the five years on account of said principal sum." Otherwise the reference to the note is in the usual L.R.A.1918C.

form. The note, as appears upon its face, matures November 9, 1913. Sometime prior to the 12th day of November, 1908, plaintiff commenced suit against Mrs. Delia O'Hanlon in the county court of Dawes county. On the 7th day of December, 1908, the sheriff of the county made a return to the county court of summons and writ of attachment and garnishment, "from which the court finds that due and legal service of each of said writs has been made on November 23, 1908, by delivery to defendant in person in said county of true and certified copy of each writ, together with all indorsements thereon," and on said date Henry Hern and various banks "have each been attached as garnishee and their fees paid, and that thereby there was attached on said date a certain note and mortgage dated November 9, 1908, payable five years after date, from Henry Hern to defendant," the same being the note and mortgage above herein referred to. The answer of the garnishee was taken, and upon the request of plaintiff the cause was set down for trial upon the calendar for December 12, 1908, at 9 o'clock A. M., to which date the cause was continued. On that day the cause was tried in the absence of an appearance by defendant. The court found due and legal service of summons and writ of attachment had been made and rendered judgment against defendant in favor of plaintiff for $750. Hern was ordered to pay the money due upon the note into court as it matured. The defendant was ordered to surrender the note and mortgage to the sheriff or the court, with order of sale of the attached property. The defendant was "forbidden to receive, receipt for, or collect" any of the money due thereon, and the garnishee "forbidden to pay any portion of the debt" to "any person except into court or its officer." The above reference to the proceedings is taken from a partial transcript of the proceedings filed in the office of the county clerk of Dawes county, which was offered in evidence on the trial of this cause in the district court. No formal transcript of the judgment was offered. The possession of neither the note nor mortgage was ever obtained under the garnishment proceedings, nor was either sold under any order of sale. Plaintiff brought this suit in the district court to foreclose the mortgage, alleging substantially the foregoing facts, and making Henry Hern, Maria Hern, Mrs. O'Hanlon, Mrs. Jackson, and James Rowan defendants. Rowan filed his answer with a cross petition, alleging his ownership of the note and mortgage, their transfer to him in due course of trade before maturity, the failure to pay interest due, and seeking a foreclosure thereof. Mrs. O'Hanlon and Mrs. Jackson failed to answer. A decree was entered with findings in favor of plaintiff, declaring the note due by reason of the failure to pay interest, and ordering the foreclosure in favor of plaintiff. Defendant Rowan appeals.

It appears that Mrs. O'Hanlon and Mrs. Jackson are sisters, both well along in years, and neither familiar with the customs of trade and commerce. Mrs. Jackson was possessed of some means. Mrs. O'Hanlon was practically destitute, with the exception of the 160 acres of land in Dawes county, which had come to her by inheritance. It had been necessary for her to make a number of trips from her home in Chicago, Illinois, to Chadron; and, in order to do so, she borrowed the necessary money to pay her expenses from Mrs. Jackson until the indebtedness amounted to $525. Soon after receiving the note and mortgage from Hern, and on the 25th day of November, 1908, she executed an assignment of the note and mortgage to Mrs. Jackson, and caused them to be sent to her by mail to Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, where Mrs. Jackson resided. Soon thereafter they met, and Mrs. O'Hanlon paid Mrs. Jackson the $25 remaining due, thus satisfying her obligation to Mrs. Jackson. At a later date, alleged to be on or about the 22d day of October, 1909, Rowan purchased the note and mortgage from Mrs. Jackson, the evidence showing that he paid the sum of $500 in money therefor. The depositions of Mrs. O'Hanlon, Mrs. Jackson, and Mr. Rowan were taken at Chicago. Mrs. O'Hanlon testified to the transfer of the note and mortgage to Mrs. Jackson, the time and consideration, the indebtedness to Mrs. Jackson, and the subsequent payment of the $25 remaining due. These facts were testified to by Mrs. Jackson, and that the note and mortgage were received by mail and accepted by her as payment on the $525 debt due from Mrs. O'Hanlon, and that at the time of the acceptance of the note and mortgage and the final satisfaction of the balance due her and cancellation of the indebtedness she had no knowledge or information that any effort had been made by plaintiff to reach the debt and the note and mortgage by attachment or other process. She also testified to their sale to Rowan and the receipt of the sum of $500 in money therefor. Mr. Rowan testified to the payment of the money and the receipt of the note and mortgage indorsed by Mrs. O'Hanlon and Mrs. Jackson without any knowledge or information of the attachment proceedings.

As the note is not yet due, according to its terms, there is no doubt that what was done in the way of its transfer was before maturity. But it is contended by plaintiff that the clause in the mortgage giving the makers of the note the option of paying sums of $25 and $50 on the debt at any time they might desire to do so destroyed the negotiability of the note, and rendered it non-negotiable under the rule that the note and mortgage, considered together, constituted the contract. If the provision in the mortgage rendered the note non-negotiable, it may be conceded that, so long as it remained in the hands of the attachment defendant, the debt was liable to attachment process. If the note was negotiable and passed into the hands of innocent purchasers for value before maturity, the purchaser would be protected. We are not aware that this identical question has been decided by this court. We are therefore required to consult the decisions of other courts of last resort, for we find nothing in the statute of this state settling the question.

In Bowie v. Hume, 13 App. D. C. 286, a negotiable promissory note was executed by the makers, and at the foot of the instrument and below the signatures were the words, "With privilege of paying all or any portion any time before maturity," signed by the makers. It was held that this did not affect the negotiability of the note. See also Louisville Bkg. Co. v. Gray, 123 Ala. 251, 82 Am. St. Rep. 120, 26 So. 205, where the same rule in principle is applied, and Louisville Bkg. Co. v. Howard, 123 Ala. 380, 82 Am. St. Rep. 126, 26 So. 207. In Independent School Dist. v. Hall, 113 U. S. 135, 28 L. ed. 954, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 371, the school district had issued its negotiable bond under the provision of a statute which declared that the instrument should be "payable at the pleasure of the district at any time before due," and it was held that this did not destroy the negotiability of the bond, that it created only an option of the maker to pay before maturity, but that the holder could not exact payment until the day of maturity had passed. In Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 197, it was held that a promissory note by which the maker agreed to pay a certain sum "on or before" a day named was a negotiable instrument; the words "on or before" only gave the maker the option before the date of maturity, but conferred upon the holder no right to enforce payment before that time. See also § 4, chap. 41, Comp. Stat. 1911. In Cunningham v. McDonald, 98 Tex. 316, 83 S. W. 372, it was held that "a promissory note is not rendered non-negotiable by the fact that the maker, promising to pay by a day certain, reserves to himself by its terms the right to pay sooner." In Leader v. Plante, 95 Me. 339, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415, 50 Atl. 54, a promissory note was made payable "within one year after date," and it was held to be negotiable. The option to pay did not destroy its negotiability. The authorities are not entirely harmonious upon the question of what recitals in a note render it non-negotiable. But we have found no case where it is directly held that the reservation of a mere option on the part of the maker of an otherwise negotiable note or bond to pay a part of the debt before maturity, the exact time for maturity being fixed, destroys the negotiability of the note. In so far as the time when the payee may demand and enforce payment, this note, even with the stipulation of the mortgage included as a part of it, complies strictly with the requirements of § 1, chap. 41, Comp. Stat. 1911, known as the "Negotiable Instruments Law." The case of Campbell v. Nesbitt, 7 Neb. 300, is relied upon by plaintiff as sustaining his view of the right to attach the debt in question, but it gives us no real light upon the question as the note in that case became due on the 10th day of March, 1872, and was attached in 1874, long after its maturity, and while yet in the hands of the payee, who did not transfer it until in November, 1874, and after judgment had been rendered against the garnishee. The note was clearly dishonored, and had lost its negotiable quality at the time of its transfer to plaintiff Campbell. Without pursuing this subject further, we hold that the reservation of the option in the mortgage did not destroy the negotiability of the note.

As to the defendant Rowan being a bona fide holder for value before maturity, the evidence is all one way. Whether true or false, he testified that he made the purchase without any knowledge of the attachment proceedings, in good faith, and paid the sum of $500, the face of the note, in money. He is supported in this by Mrs. Jackson, who testified that he paid her the money, and that she indorsed and delivered the note to him. It is provided by § 52, chap. 41, Comp. Stat. 1911, that a holder in due course is one who has taken the instrument under the conditions that it is complete and regular upon its face; that he became the holder before it was overdue, and without notice of any previous dishonor, if such was the fact; that he took it in good faith and for value, and without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. So far as is shown by the evidence, he appears to have come within the provisions of this section. It is true that he had never seen the land, and knew little or nothing about its quality or the condition of the title, except what information he had obtained from the indorsers with L.R.A.1918C.

whom he had been acquainted for many years; and it would be quite natural for one of his want of experience in commercial affairs to rely upon their fairness, and to presume that 160 acres of Nebraska land would be sufficient security for $500.

The note being negotiable, and its possession and custody not having been obtained under the attachment and garnishment proceedings, the question arises as to what rights, if any, plaintiff acquired by his action. In Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 339, in an opinion by Judge Field, it is said: "The indebtedness of the garnishee was upon a promissory note, which did not mature for several months thereafter. From the very nature of a promissory note, it is evident that, before its maturity, the indebtedness of the maker thereon cannot be the subject of attachment. His obligation is not to the payee named in the note, but to the holder, whoever he may be. From its negotiability it may often pass into the possession of parties entire strangers to the maker, and, even if held by the defendant at the time of garnishment, it does not follow that it would be in his hands at its maturity, and, if transferred before maturity to a bona fide holder, it could be enforced, even if paid upon the attachment. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 418, 70 Am. Dec. 655; Sheets v. Culver, 14 La. 452, 33 Am. Dec. 593. It follows that the notice served upon Marshall previous to the maturity of his note did not operate as a garnishment of the amount in his hands. Nor would the notice served subsequent to the maturity have any greater effect unless the note was, at the time, in the possession of the defendant, from whom its delivery could be enforced on its payment upon the attachment." In Clough v. Buck, 6 Neb. 343, Judge Gantt, in writing the opinion of the court, said: "It seems to be a general rule that a negotiable note or bill is not, before maturity, subject to attachment. The reason of the rule is well stated in Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 340,"—and quite a lengthy excerpt is copied from the opinion with approval. In 2 Wade, on Attachment, § 458, it is said: "Whatever be the form of commercial paper that evidences the original liability of the party summoned, as a general rule, he cannot be charged as the debtor of the payee, if the paper was negotiable when issued, and still retains its negotiability,"—citing a number of cases, and stating the reasons for the rule in the text with considerable elaboration. In 1 Daniel, on Negotiable Instruments, 5th ed. § 800a, it is said: "The purchaser of a bill, note, or other negotiable instrument for value and before maturity is not, as a general rule, affected by any litigation to which he is not a party, which may then be pending, and in which the instrument is involved, nor will a decree or judgment, when rendered in such litigation, affect him; the doctrine of lis pendens having no application to negotiable instruments." See also Drake, Attachment, 7th ed. §§ 582 et seq.

Some questions involving the procedure are presented, but they need not be noticed. After a patient and careful investigation of the subject, we are led to the conclusion that plaintiff acquired no rights by his garnishee process, and that the decree of the district court foreclosing the mortgage in his favor cannot be sustained; that, as Rowan was made a defendant and presented his mortgage, asking a foreclosure thereof, the court should retain the case and make a final disposition of it. Henry Hern, the maker of the note, sold the mortgaged premises to William Hern, who assumed the payment of the mortgage debt, and who is made a party defendant herein, and subsequent to such sale, and during the pendency of this suit, the said Henry Hern died, but no serious question arises from these facts, the said William Hern being a party defendant.

The decree of the District Court, foreclosing the mortgage in favor of plaintiff and dismissing Rowan's cross petition as a first lien, is reversed and the cause is remanded to the District Court, with directions to dismiss plaintiff's suit, and to enter a decree in favor of Rowan, foreclosing the mortgage.

Reversed.

Barnes, Letton, and Sedgwick, JJ., concur. Fawcett, Hamer, and Rose, JJ., not sitting.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Garnishment of debt evidenced by negotiable paper.

- I. The theme, its scope and limitations, 732.*
- II. The common law and negotiable paper as a subject of garnishment, 732.*
- III. Legislation respecting garnishment of negotiable paper:*
  - a. Necessity for such legislation, 733.*
  - b. Statutes subjecting negotiable paper to garnishment stricti juris, 733.*
  - c. Garnishment of negotiable paper under statutes in general language, 734.*
  - d. Special legislation subjecting negotiable paper to garnishment, 734.*
  - e. Legislation exempting negotiable paper from garnishment, 736.*
- IV. Garnishability as affected by the question of maturity:*
  - a. Before maturity, 736.*
  - b. After maturity, 741.*
- V. Garnishment of negotiable paper after its transfer:*
  - a. Before maturity, 742.*
  - b. After maturity, 743.*
  - c. Until notice is given:*
    - 1. Of transfers of immature paper, 743.*
    - 2. Of transfers of overdue paper, 744.*
    - 3. Legislation making notice requisite to protect from garnishment, 745.*

V. c—continued.

- 4. Form and sufficiency of notice, 746.*
- VI. Rights, after garnishment, of bona fide holders of negotiable paper acquired for value, before maturity, 746.*
- VII. Garnishment of commercial paper negotiated mala fides, 748.*
- VIII. Garnishment of negotiable paper payable on demand:*
  - a. In general, 750.*
  - b. Certificates of deposit, 750.*
  - c. Drafts and bills of exchange, 751.*
  - d. Orders to pay money, 751.*
  - e. Warehouse receipts, 752.*
  - f. Government warrant, 752.*
- IX. The debtor and creditor relation in garnishment of negotiable paper, 752.*
- X. Garnishment of negotiable paper owned but not possessed by defendant:*
  - a. Pledged as collateral security:*
    - 1. To creditors, 754.*
    - 2. To sureties, 754.*
  - b. In custody of bailees, 755.*
  - c. In keeping of makers, 756.*
- XI. The debtor in garnishment of negotiable paper:*
  - a. Status, 756.*

XI.—continued.b. Rights:

1. To have his obligation mature before he is liable, 757.
2. To a surrender of his obligation, 757.
3. To interplead rival claimants, 757.

c. Duties, 758.

XII. Answer in garnishment of negotiable paper, 759.

XIII. Effect of garnishee's payment to holder of negotiable paper, 761.

XIV. Effect of renewing negotiable paper under garnishment, 762.

XV. Garnishment as a protection to garnishee against claim of indorsee of negotiable paper, 762.

XVI. Right of indorsee of negotiable paper to recover from garnishor money collected by garnishment, 763.

XVII. Legal presumptions in garnishments of negotiable paper, 764.

XVIII. Conclusion, 765.

I. The theme, its scope and limitations.

With the question, What gives the quality of negotiability to a piece of paper when it is an evidence of indebtedness? this annotation is unconcerned. The note is confined to cases which deal with the question of garnishability upon the assumption that the paper in question was negotiable, and is not concerned with cases which decide that question upon the assumption that the paper was non-negotiable. The cases, therefore, which have turned upon the lack of negotiability of the writing which evidenced the debt sought to be reached by attachment or garnishment have not been collated.

The cases discussed embrace for the most part those which have involved promissory notes and bills of exchange, but there are others in which was concerned commercial paper in other forms; notably, negotiable bank certificates of deposit.

The garnishment of a debt after the garnishee had delivered a check to pay it was the subject of a note to National Park Bank v. Levy Bros. & Co. 19 L.R.A. 475, which is supplemented in an annotation to American Agri. Chemical Co. v. Sringer, L.R.A.1917F, 394.

Cases dealing with attempts to apply debts due upon negotiable paper to the payment of judgments pursuant to statutes governing proceedings supplementary to execution have not been included in this annotation because they are esteemed beyond its scope, or, at least, to be in a class apart, so as to be more wisely discussed separately.

The question of attachment in the sense of an actual levy and seizure of the note as a chattel is not within the scope of the note.<sup>1</sup> Otherwise no distinctions have been made in the annotation among attachment, garnishment, and trustee process. In respect of commercial paper none appears necessary.<sup>1a</sup>

II. The common law and negotiable paper as a subject of garnishment.

At common law commercial paper cannot be seized and sold upon execution.<sup>2</sup> The power of the court of chancery must be invoked to reach and apply it to the payment of the holder's debts.<sup>3</sup> And as negotiable promissory notes are not subject to seizure and sale on execution, unless by express statute, they are not, in the absence of a statute, subject to attachment or garnishment.<sup>4</sup> Now to sub-

<sup>1</sup> The liability of a promissory note to levy and seizure under attachment or execution is considered in the note to Fishburn v. Londershausen, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1234.

<sup>1a</sup> Garnishments are a species of attachment. Willis v. Lyman (1858) 22 Tex. 268.

<sup>2</sup> Jones v. Norris (1841) 2 Ala. 526; Field v. Lawson (1844) 5 Ark. 376; McGehee v. Cherry (1849) 6 Ga. 550; Crawford v. Schmitz (1892) 130 Ill. 564, 29 N. E. 40; McClelland v. Hubbard (1830) 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 361; Johnson v. Crawford (1843) 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 377; Smith v. Kennebec & P. R. Co. (1858) 45 Me. 547; People ex rel. Martin v. Wayne County (1858) 5 Mich. 223; Ingalls v. Lord (1823) 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 240; People v. National Mut. Ins. Co. (1897) 19 App. Div. 247, 46 N. Y. Supp. 102; L.R.A.1918C.

Rhoads v. Megonigal (1845) 2 Pa. St. 39; Moore v. Pillow (1842) 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 448; Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614.

<sup>3</sup> Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

<sup>4</sup> Maine F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Weeks (1811) 7 Mass. 438; Perry v. Coates (1813) 9 Mass. 537.

It is no defense to the maker of a promissory note when sued by the holder, that it was attached and sold as personal property to a stranger who claimed to own it, because title to commercial paper cannot be transferred that way. Prout v. Grout (1874) 72 Ill. 456.

Commercial paper—bills, checks, drafts, notes, etc.—is not subject to garnishment or attachment, nor to levy on execution, beject current negotiable commercial paper to attachment, garnishment, or trustee process is derogatory to the common law merchant, which insures the freest and least embarrassed circulation of such paper in business transactions.<sup>5</sup>

By the law merchant every bona fide indorsee of a negotiable bill of exchange, promissory note, or other form of commercial paper which he acquired for value before maturity, in the usual course of business, holds it free from all equitable defenses which may exist between the original parties to the instrument.<sup>6</sup> By the law merchant the buyer of an unmatured current negotiable bill or note has the right to presume it unpaid.<sup>7</sup> By the law merchant he obtains the right to collect it from the maker.<sup>8</sup> He gets an absolute and unconditioned title to the paper,<sup>9</sup> for, unlike all other property, bills of exchange and promissory notes, negotiable in form, carry on their face the whole evidence of their title,<sup>10</sup> and the disputant of that title has the burden of proving a defense to it.<sup>11</sup>

III. Legislation respecting garnishment of negotiable paper.

a. Necessity for such legislation.

Attachments and garnishments are, of course, creatures of statutes. It requires a statute to make negotiable paper a subject of garnishment or attachment,<sup>12</sup> especially before its maturity.<sup>13</sup> Unless a cause choses in action are incapable of being sold on legal process. Fitch v. Waite (1823) 5 Conn. 117; Grosvenor v. Farmers & M. Bank (1839) 13 Conn. 104; Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614.

To charge one as trustee or garnishee of a defendant, the latter must have a cause of action against him, or else he must have in keeping personal property belonging to the defendant, capable of seizure and sale on execution. Maine F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Weeks (Mass.) supra.

It has always been considered as settled in this state, it was said in the opinion of the court in Stone v. Dean (1831) 5 N. H. 502, that a trustee who has given a negotiable note to the principal cannot be charged as a trustee on account of such note.

<sup>5</sup> Hall v. Bowker (1871) 44 Vt. 77.

<sup>6</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (1880) 53 Md. 217.

<sup>7</sup> Hinsdill v. Afford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>8</sup> Brown v. Fisher (1906) 35 Ind. App. 549, 74 N. E. 632.

<sup>9</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113.

<sup>10</sup> Kieffer v. Ehler (1852) 18 Pa. 388.

<sup>11</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Texas (1873) 20 Wall. (U. S.) 88, 22 L. ed. 298.

<sup>12</sup> Maine F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Weeks (1811) L.R.A.1918C.

statute makes choses in action and commercial paper subjects of attachment or garnishment, one in possession thereof to collect for a defendant cannot be made liable as garnishee.<sup>14</sup> The law merchant may be modified by statute so as to render negotiable promissory notes subject to attachment or garnishment under certain conditions, while they are current and unmatured,<sup>15</sup> but when such a note is not within the statute, it is not subject to the trustee process on attachment.<sup>16</sup> If a statute does not authorize a judgment against the maker of a promissory note as trustee for the payee, the court has no power to render it; and if it assumes such power, the judgment it renders is inoperative.<sup>17</sup> Strict conformity to law is essential to the validity of garnishments.<sup>18</sup>

b. Statutes subjecting negotiable paper to garnishment stricti juris.

A statute subjecting negotiable commercial paper while current to attachment or garnishment should be strictly construed. It should not be construed so as to defeat long-established rules of the law merchant when that is a part of the general body of the law.<sup>19</sup> It should not be construed any more broadly or given any greater effect than its terms and obvious purpose require.<sup>20</sup> And to charge the maker of a negotiable promissory note as trustee or garnishee of the payee in a case within the statute, the proceedings it prescribes must be

7 Mass. 438; Perry v. Coates (1813) 9 Mass. 537.

<sup>13</sup> Ludlow v. Bingham (1799) 4 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. ed. 736.

<sup>14</sup> Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614.

<sup>15</sup> Kimball v. Gay (1844) 16 Vt. 131.

<sup>16</sup> Kibling v. Burley (1850) 20 N. H. 359.

<sup>17</sup> Horn v. Thompson (1855) 31 N. H. 562.

The court in that case, after citing the state statute authorizing judgments against makers of negotiable promissory notes as trustees for payees, said that it conferred no general powers upon the courts respecting commercial paper, but specified only promissory notes, and restricted the law's operation to such only as had been made and were payable in New Hampshire, or had been made by persons who, at the time, resided in the state; and added, that if one should be charged as trustee in a case where the negotiable paper was not included in the statute, the judgment would be inoperative for want of judicial power to render it.

<sup>18</sup> Willis v. Lyman (1858) 22 Tex. 268.

<sup>19</sup> Carson v. Allen (1850) 2 Pinney (Wis.) 457, 2 Chand. (Wis.) 123, 54 Am. Dec. 148

<sup>20</sup> Hall v. Bowker (1871) 44 Vt. 77.

strictly followed, unless all the parties in interest voluntarily waive its safeguards.<sup>21</sup>

c. Garnishment of negotiable paper under statutes in general language.

Without undertaking at this point to deal with the question whether or not a debt evidenced by negotiable paper is subject to garnishment before maturity, or with other conditions affecting garnishment in particular instances, it may be observed here that, as a matter of statutory construction, notwithstanding the rule of strict construction just referred to, it is almost unanimously held or assumed that general laws describing the subjects of garnishment embrace debts evidenced by negotiable paper if neither expressly excluded nor included.<sup>22</sup> It has, indeed, once been held that a statute authorizing in general terms the garnishment of property, money, and effects does not embrace unmatured negotiable commercial paper,<sup>23</sup> but it has, on the other hand, several times been held that a debt evidenced by a negotiable promissory note is included in a statute authorizing the garnishment of goods, chattels, money, credits, and effects belonging to a defendant.<sup>24</sup> Under a statute making all sorts of debts subject to garnishment, a debt due upon a negotiable promissory note cannot, it has been held, be made an exception,<sup>25</sup> and a statute making all debts, whether due or to become due, without regard to the form of the evidence of them, expressly subject to garnishment, includes debts owing the defendant upon negotiable instruments.<sup>26</sup> A debt due upon commercial paper is held to be within a statute providing that any debtor of an attachment defendant may be subjected to garnishment, and from the day of the service of the summons shall be accountable for the debt to the attachment plaintiff.<sup>27</sup>

At times, though rarely, there appears evidence of some judicial misgiving over holding current negotiable paper subject to attachment under statutes couched in general language, but it is never sufficiently potent to influence the decision.<sup>28</sup>

d. Special legislation subjecting negotiable paper to garnishment.

In some states resort has been had to explicit legislation to subject in certain circumstances negotiable commercial paper to attachment or garnishment. The states of New Hampshire and Vermont are instances.

In the former state, according to its supreme court,<sup>29</sup> a debtor upon a negotiable promissory note previous to the year 1841 could not be charged as trustee, and holders had been accustomed by transfers to put their property beyond the reach of their creditors. The injury to these creditors was thought to outweigh the benefits of an unrestricted circulation of commercial paper, and the legislature attempted to restore the balance by enacting a statute subjecting, in certain conditions, debts due upon negotiable paper to the trustee process, and subordinating the after-title of an indorsee to the attachment lien, without regard to whether the paper was transferred before maturity or after it became due.<sup>30</sup> The distinction between the law of states where the law merchant prevails unaffected by legislation, and New Hampshire, under the operation of that statute, was pointed out in a case decided a few years after its enactment, wherein it was said that if a note is indorsed in good faith, for a valuable consideration, before it falls due, by the principles of the common law the indorsee holds it free from any claims of creditors of the payee; but, by

<sup>21</sup> Horn v. Thompson (1855) 31 N. H. 562; Thompson v. Carroll (1857) 36 N. H. 21.

<sup>22</sup> Hightower v. Smith (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 44, note; Huff v. Mills (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 42; Turner v. Armstrong (1836) 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412; Daniel v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403; Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

<sup>23</sup> Hubbard v. Williams (1858) 1 Minn. 54. Gil. 37, 55 Am. Dec. 66.

<sup>24</sup> Smith v. Spinnenweber (1914) 114 Ark. 384, 170 S. W. 84; Scott v. Hill (1831) 3 Mo. 88, 22 Am. Dec. 462; Quarles v. Porter (1848) 12 Mo. 76; Briant v. Reed (1862) 14 N. J. Eq. 271.

L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>25</sup> King v. Carhart (1855) 18 Ga. 650.

<sup>26</sup> Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

<sup>27</sup> Cleaneay v. Junction R. Co. (1866) 26 Ind. 375.

<sup>28</sup> Whilst we are sensible of the difficulties that present themselves in holding that debts evidenced by negotiable paper may be attached in the hands of the payor to satisfy an execution debt of the payee, it was said by the court in Quarles v. Porter (1848) 12 Mo. 76, yet such appear to be the statutory provisions of this state.

<sup>29</sup> Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183.

<sup>30</sup> Vide, N. H. Rev. Stat. chap. 208, §§ 10, 14, 18.

the New Hampshire statute, the indorsee in such cases takes the note subject to the claim of any creditor who may have laid an attachment upon it by the service of a trustee process at any time before it is transferred in the case of notes made or made payable within the state, by or to residents of the state.<sup>31</sup>

This statute did not impair the negotiable quality of promissory notes,<sup>32</sup> nor did it apply to notes neither made nor payable in New Hampshire, by and to residents of other states.<sup>33</sup> Under its operation a debtor upon a negotiable promissory note made and payable outside of the state, to an inhabitant of another state, although a resident himself of New Hampshire, was not chargeable as trustee;<sup>34</sup> but a negotiable promissory note made in the state and payable generally, without particular designation of the place of payment, was held to be made and to be payable within the state, so as to render the maker chargeable as trustee in an attachment against the holder.<sup>35</sup>

Under the operation of that statute, in order for the maker of a negotiable promissory note attached as a debt owing the payee by the service of trustee process to escape being charged as trustee where the paper had been transferred to another holder, it had to appear that the note was transferred before the trustee process was served, or that it was made or payable outside of the state, or that the parties to it resided beyond the borders of the state.<sup>36</sup>

The contemporary legislation of Vermont followed an expression of opinion by the supreme court of the state to the effect that while a statute relating to actions by indorsees of negotiable paper, which should provide that the makers should have offsets of all debts due them from the payees before notice of the indorsement, and might give in evidence aught which in equity would discharge them in actions by the payees, would protect a maker of a negotiable promissory note charged as trustee of the payee, before notice of its transfer, from the claim of the holder, a statute which went no further than to provide that any debt taken by judgment from a trustee should acquit him from any action brought to recover it by the principal debtor would afford no protection in an action upon a promissory note by an indorsee for value before maturity.<sup>37</sup>

After the decision embodying that opinion was rendered, the legislature enacted a statute<sup>38</sup> by which all debts owing by promissory notes, either unmatured or past due, without exception, and regardless of the places designated for their payment or the convenience of the parties to them, were made subject to attachment in actions against the payees by their creditors by trustee process served on the makers until notice should have been given to the trustees of transfers of the paper to other holders. Later this statute was modified in such wise as to exempt from trustee process commercial paper transferred before maturity to domestic banks.<sup>40</sup> Under the operation of the modifying legislation, banks in Vermont which discounted negotiable promissory notes in due course before maturity were no longer required to give notice of their holdings, and were protected against trustee process previously served on the makers as debtors of payees<sup>41</sup> even though their indorsers intended to evade an attachment by transferring the paper, provided the discounting banks acted in good faith in the transaction.<sup>42</sup>

The New Hampshire and Vermont legislation just noticed has been attacked as violative of one or more provisions of the Constitution of the United States, but the state courts have upheld its validity.<sup>43</sup>

<sup>31</sup> Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Gibbs (1854) 28 N. H. 316.

<sup>32</sup> Peck v. Maynard (N. H.) supra.

<sup>33</sup> Kibling v. Burley (1850) 20 N. H. 359.

<sup>34</sup> Carbee v. Mason (1885) 64 N. H. 10, 4 Atl. 791.

<sup>35</sup> Orcutt v. Hough (1874) 54 N. H. 472.

<sup>36</sup> Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Gibbs (N. H.) supra.

<sup>37</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>38</sup> Act of 1841, Vt. Comp. Stat. chap. 32, § 45.

<sup>39</sup> Kimball v. Gay (1844) 16 Vt. 131; Seward v. Garlin (1861) 33 Vt. 583.

<sup>40</sup> Vt. Gen. Stat. chap. 34, § 47.

<sup>41</sup> Sargent v. Wood (1878) 51 Vt. 597.

<sup>42</sup> Hall v. Bowker (1871) 44 Vt. 77.
L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>43</sup> The New Hampshire statute respecting attachment of negotiable promissory notes by trustee process on the maker as debtor to the payee was held not open to the objection of unconstitutionality upon the score of impairing the obligation of a contract. Philbrick v. Philbrick (1859) 39 N. H. 468.

The immunity from hostile legislation of the states which belongs to national banks as instrumentalities or agencies of the United States government is in no sense invaded by the Vermont statute respecting attachment of negotiable paper by service of trustee process upon the maker after the debtor who held it has transferred it, unless, before the service of such

e. Legislation exempting negotiable paper from garnishment.

In sundry states legislation has been enacted protecting from attachment or garnishment commercial paper in some or all of its forms, and the acts have generally been held efficient by the local courts.

There was a statute of Illinois<sup>44</sup> which was held to exempt from garnishment a bank's certificate of deposit, payable only when returned to the bank, properly indorsed by the depositor, even when it continued to be held by the defendant payee.<sup>45</sup>

A statute of Massachusetts<sup>46</sup> provided that no person should be considered or adjudged to be a trustee within its intent and meaning by reason or on account of his having made, given, indorsed, negotiated, or accepted any negotiable security whatever. The supreme judicial court of the commonwealth declared that this statute was in such plain and comprehensive language that it was not permitted to hold liable a garnishee who came within its terms, and decided, therefore, that the payee of a negotiable promissory note could not be held liable for the sum due upon it as trustee for his indorsee upon an attachment by the latter's creditor before any judgment had been rendered against him, although he had been sued on the note by the defendant, and a verdict against him had been returned, and the note itself was on file in court, so that it could not be transferred to a new holder.<sup>47</sup>

In Oklahoma, by statute (Comp. Laws 1909. § 5725) no judgment may be rendered upon the liability of a garnishee which arises by reason of his having drawn, accepted, made, indorsed, or guaranteed any negotiable bill, draft, note, or other security.<sup>48</sup> process, notice of the transfer was given by the new holder to the maker, but exempting domestic banks which discount commercial paper from the necessity of giving any notice, while leaving open to the operation of the statute banks out of the state, whether national or state institutions, which discount such paper in the same manner. Hawley v. Hurd (1900) 72 Vt. 122, 52 L.R.A. 195, 82 Am. St. Rep. 922, 47 Atl. 401.

Nor does that statute, in discriminating against foreign and in favor of domestic banks in the manner aforesaid, infringe either the provision of the Federal Constitution (art. 4, § 2), entitling the citizens of each state to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, nor the prohibition (§ 1 of the 14th Amendment) against making or enforcing any L.R.A.1918C.

By a statute of Rhode Island all debts secured by bills of exchange or negotiable promissory notes were exempted in express terms, without limitation, from attachments, and under its operation debts due upon overdue commercial paper, even when it was still held by the payee, equally with those evidenced by unmatured paper, were held not subject to garnishment.<sup>49</sup>

Under the Vermont statute<sup>50</sup> exempting from trustee process all commercial paper transferred before maturity to banks within the state, a promissory note actually discounted by a domestic bank before it became due is exempt from the process although the bank did not receive it until after judgment had been taken against the maker as trustee for the payee.<sup>51</sup>

But despite a positive statute forbidding any person to be adjudged a trustee by reason of any negotiable note made by him, the fact that a debtor for merchandise purchased, charged as trustee of the debt in an action against the seller, gave the latter his promissory note, negotiable in form, to apply on the contract of sale of which the purchase was a part, will not prevent judgment against him for the debt actually due, where the whole contract was abandoned and the note was never negotiated, but was instead deposited with a bailee pending the execution of the contract, and surrendered to the maker and destroyed.<sup>52</sup>

IV. Garnishability as affected by the question of maturity.

a. Before maturity.

In a goodly number of cases it has been held that, as a general rule, while a negotiable promissory note is current, unmatured, and subject to be transferred state law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, because incorporated banks are not citizens within the meaning and purview of either of such sections. Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> Starr & C. Anno. Stat. chap. 62, § 15.

<sup>45</sup> Auten v. Crahan (1899) 81 Ill. App. 502.

<sup>46</sup> Act of Feb. 28, 1795, § 12.

<sup>47</sup> Eunson v. Healey (1806) 2 Mass. 32.

<sup>48</sup> First State Bank v. Latimer (1915) 48 Okla. 104, 149 Pac. 1099.

<sup>49</sup> Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Clarke (1908) 29 R. I. 192, 69 Atl. 681.

<sup>50</sup> Vt. Gen. Stat. chap. 34, § 47.

<sup>51</sup> National Bank v. Webster (1874) 47 Vt. 43.

<sup>52</sup> Woodman v. Carter (1897) 90 Me. 302, 38 Atl. 169.

before maturity to a bona fide indorsee for value and without notice, the maker of it cannot be charged as garnishee of the payee,<sup>53</sup> cannot be held,<sup>54</sup> cannot be bound,<sup>55</sup> cannot be subjected to liability,<sup>56</sup> or held liable.<sup>57</sup>

In several cases the courts have gone beyond this and held that, in the absence of an authorizing statute, debts due upon negotiable promissory notes cannot be garnished or attached before the maturity of the paper;<sup>58</sup> that they are not subject to garnishment or attachment when out in circulation, unmatured, and liable to be transferred to innocent holders,<sup>59</sup> and that the process is not available against the maker of a negotiable promissory note to the creditor of the payee or indorsee until it has ceased to be negotiable by falling due.<sup>60</sup>

The reasons adduced why negotiable commercial paper is not and ought not to be subject before maturity to attachment or garnishment are weighty and persuasive. If, it has been said, negotiable securities were subject to attachment or garnishment, their credit in commercial transactions would be materially injured, if not ruined;<sup>61</sup> that their negotiability would be entirely destroyed if the sums payable by them could be attached in the hands of the makers as debts due the payees;<sup>62</sup> and that, if it could be maintained that a judgment of condemnation against a maker of a negotiable promissory note, summoned as garnishee in an attachment against the payee or his indorsee, and the payment thereof, would protect such garnishee from liability upon his obligation if subsequently sued by a holder who had acquired the paper without notice, for value, and before maturity, the doctrine would be destructive of the negotiability of all promissory notes, and would interfere injuriously with the daily business and transactions of men dealing with commercial paper.<sup>63</sup>

Another authority has declared that to hold that an attachment prevents a subsequent bona fide indorsee of negotiable commercial paper from acquiring a good title would be almost a destruction of one of the essential characteristics of negotiable instruments.<sup>64</sup>

The peculiar character of the obligation furnishes the ground for exempting from the garnishee process a negotiable promissory note before it becomes due.<sup>65</sup> A statutory exemption of unmatured negotiable paper from attachment has been referred to as based on the strongest of reasons, because such paper is in its nature commercial, and its facile safe <sup>53</sup> Wohl v. First Nat. Bank (1908) 154 Ala. 332, 46 So. 231; Stone v. Dean (1831) 5 N. H. 502; Carbee v. Mason (1835) 64 N. H. 10, 4 Atl. 791; Iglehart v. Moore (1858) 21 Tex. 501; Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 73 Am. Dec. 257; Kapp v. Teel (1870) 33 Tex. 811; Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971; Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spittler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

It has been confessed that the weight of authority sustains the statement of the text. Gatchell v. Foster (1891) 94 Ala. 622, 10 So. 434.

The Texas supreme court has said that the statement of the text may be considered the settled law of the state. Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 73 Am. Dec. 257, supra.

Afterwards, the same court, citing the cases of Dobbin v. Wybrants (1848) 3 Tex. 457, and Iglehart v. Moore (1858) 21 Tex. 501, supra, said, ament the proposition, the "question has been ably argued and we think correctly settled, and we are not now inclined to attempt to disturb those decisions." Kapp v. Teel (1870) 33 Tex. 811, supra.

<sup>54</sup> Hubbard v. Williams (1868) 1 Minn. 54, Gil. 37, 55 Am. Dec. 66.

<sup>55</sup> Huot v. Ely (1830) 17 Fla. 775.

<sup>56</sup> Gaffney v. Bradford (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 441, citing as decisive Brown v. Rogers (1827; S. C.) Columbia spring term.

<sup>57</sup> Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. L.R.A.1918C.

(Tenn.) 401; Hutcheson v. King (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 161, 53 S. W. 216, in which the court said that this "is the general rule, we believe, well established by the authorities in this state as well as elsewhere."

A corporation which has issued and delivered a series of mortgage bonds maturing at the end of a term of years, payable to bearer with interest annually upon presentation of attached coupons, cannot be made liable as garnishee in an action against an individual holder, because the bonds are unmatured, negotiable instruments in circulation, which may pass at any time to an innocent transferee against whom the garnishment would be no protection. Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spittler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

<sup>58</sup> Gregory v. Higgins (1858) 10 Cal. 330; Perkins v. Guy (1873) 2 Mont. 15; Ludlow v. Bingham (1760) 4 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. ed. 736; Wybrants v. Rice (1848) 3 Tex. 458.

<sup>59</sup> Sheets v. Culver (1840) 14 La. 449, 33 Am. Dec. 593; Kimball v. Plant (1840) 14 La. 511; Clough v. Buek (1877) 6 Neb. 343; Guillot v. Wallace (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 168 S. W. 978.

<sup>60</sup> Littlefield v. Hodge (1850) 6 Mich. 326.

<sup>61</sup> Jones v. Gorham (1807) 2 Mass. 375.

<sup>62</sup> Wybrants v. Rice (1848) 3 Tex. 458.

<sup>63</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (1879) 63 Md. 217.

<sup>64</sup> Kieffer v. Ehler (1862) 18 Pa. 338.

<sup>65</sup> Perkins v. Guy (1873) 2 Mont. 15.

passage from man to man as a medium of exchange is of great public utility.<sup>66</sup>

A further reason why the maker of a negotiable bill or note, not yet due, is not liable upon it as garnishee, is not alone because it is or may be in circulation, but, because of its negotiability, he is liable upon it to whosoever may be its holder, whether known or unknown.<sup>67</sup> As one authority has put it, from the very nature of a promissory note it is evident that before it matures the indebtedness of the maker upon it cannot be the subject of an attachment: his obligation is not to the payee, but to the holder; from its negotiability it may pass to entire strangers to the maker, and even if, when garnished, it is held by the payee, it does not follow that he would hold it when it fell due; and if, before it matured, he should transfer it to a bona fide indorsee, the latter could enforce it even though the maker had paid it on attachment.<sup>68</sup>

It is impossible, according to another authority, for the maker of a negotiable promissory note put in circulation and not yet matured, or anybody else except the actual holder, to tell at any given hour during its currency to whom the maker is liable upon it.<sup>69</sup> The difficulty of subjecting a credit represented by an unmatured negotiable promissory note to the process of garnishment, it has also been said, is to be found not only in the nature and character of negotiable commercial paper, but also in the fact that it puts the garnishee in a worse position than otherwise he would have occupied, and subjects him to the danger of having to pay the same debt twice.<sup>70</sup> The law exempts the maker of a negotiable promissory note from garnishment while it is current and not yet due, because otherwise the judgment would not protect him from liability to the holder.<sup>71</sup> If, another court has said, the maker of an outstanding unmatured negotiable promissory note could be charged as trustee of the payee on account of it, it might happen that either a bona fide holder of the paper must lose the amount of it, or the maker, without any fault of his own, be compelled to pay it twice.<sup>72</sup>

Notwithstanding this array of decisions and the potency of the reasons adduced to support them, the authorities are conflicting upon the question whether an unmatured negotiable bill or note can be impounded and ultimately collected by means of attachment or garnishment.<sup>73</sup> A difference of opinion exists among jurists respecting whether or not debts evidenced by commercial paper negotiated before maturity are subject to attachment or garnishment.<sup>74</sup> In numerous cases it has been held that the mere fact that commercial paper is negotiable does not exempt it from

<sup>66</sup> Jones v. Gorham (Mass.) supra.

<sup>67</sup> Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614; Hutcheson v. King (Tex.) supra.

<sup>68</sup> Gregory v. Higgins (1858) 10 Cal. 339.

<sup>69</sup> Hubbard v. Williams (Minn.) supra.

The general rule that a negotiable bill or note is not attachable before its maturity is founded upon the nature of the paper and the impossibility of determining to whom the maker is indebted thereon at any given time, since his obligation is not to the payee, but to the holder, whoever he may be; and as the paper, passing from hand to hand, may come into the possession of an unknown stranger, the latter, if a bona fide holder, may enforce it against the maker and prior indorsers, although he may have acquired it after the service of the attachment, and even though the maker may have paid it as garnishee. Clough v. Buck (1877) 6 Neb. 343.

<sup>70</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (Md.) supra.

The reason the maker of a negotiable promissory note may not be charged as garnishee before it matures is because, if this were done, he would be put to the hazard of having to pay the same debt twice. Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971, supra.

This is the underlying principle of the rule that the maker of negotiable paper is L.R.A.1918C.

not liable to garnishment before its maturity. Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spittler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985, supra.

<sup>71</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>72</sup> Stone v. Dean (1831) 5 N. H. 502, supra.

The attachment or garnishment of debts due upon commercial paper out in circulation before maturity, as another authority put it, is impracticable because it involves either the loss of his investment by an innocent holder, or a double payment by the unlucky maker. Hubbard v. Williams (1858) 1 Minn. 54, Gil. 37, 55 Am. Dec. 66, supra.

<sup>73</sup> Smith v. Spinnenweber (1914) 114 Ark. 384, 170 S. W. 84.

<sup>74</sup> St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Cohen (1845) 9 Mo. 421.

Whether or not a judgment creditor could reach and apply on his judgment a promissory note held by the judgment debtor by means of garnishee process against the maker, after a transfer of the paper to a third person, was left an open, undecided question in Jones v. Norris (1841) 2 Ala. 526, in which the court held that the note could not be taken through garnishment process served upon the indorsee.

garnishment.<sup>75</sup> A negotiable instrument may be the subject of garnishment,<sup>76</sup> and, it has been said, a debt due upon a negotiable promissory note is as much liable to attachment as any other debt.<sup>77</sup>

As long as the defendant continues to be the owner and holder of a negotiable promissory note, it is, according to sundry cases, subject to garnishment<sup>78</sup> or attachment.<sup>79</sup> If the garnishee is served with process before the maturity of the paper and while the defendant is still the owner, and if the latter continues to be the holder of it until it matures and becomes past due, the garnishee is held liable.<sup>80</sup>

An attachment or garnishment by service upon the maker of a negotiable security belonging to the defendant before it matures is said to be effectual against everyone except a bona fide indorsee for value who acquires it before it falls due.<sup>81</sup>

But a negotiable promissory note is current, as the mercantile phrase is, until it becomes due,<sup>82</sup> and garnishing the maker of it before it matures, as debtor of the payee, does not stop its currency as commercial paper;<sup>83</sup> it does not prevent its transfer to a bona fide holder without notice and for value before it becomes due.<sup>84</sup> The maker of a negotiable promissory note is not liable upon it as trustee of the payee when it has been indorsed and transferred to another holder in good faith, irrespective of whether or not the notice of the transfer was given,<sup>85</sup> and regardless of whether the transfer preceded or followed the garnishment.<sup>86</sup>

<sup>75</sup> Mills v. Stewart (1847) 12 Ala. 90; Leslie v. Merrill (1877) 58 Ala. 322; Gatchell v. Foster (1891) 94 Ala. 622, 10 So. 434; Enos v. Tuttle (1819) 3 Conn. 27; Snider v. Ridgeway (1869) 49 Ill. 522; Colcord v. Daggett (1853) 18 Mo. 557; Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186; Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157; Bell v. Philadelphia Binding & Mailing Co. (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 38; Hightower v. Smith (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 44, note; Huff v. Mills (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 42; Turner v. Armstrong (1836) 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412; Daniel v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403; Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

A debt evidenced by a negotiable promissory note was long ago held garnishable under the Missouri general statute of the time, before its maturity, by process served on the maker by an execution creditor of the payee. Quarles v. Porter (1848) 12 Mo. 76.

Later it was declared to be well settled in that state that the maker of negotiable paper was subject to garnishment at the suit of a creditor of him who held the note at the time of the service of the process. Colcord v. Daggett (1853) 18 Mo. 557.

<sup>76</sup> Mims v. West (1868) 38 Ga. 18, 95 Am. Dec. 379.

<sup>77</sup> Culver v. Parish (1851) 21 Conn. 408.

<sup>78</sup> Mills v. Stewart (1847) 12 Ala. 90; Leslie v. Merrill (1877) 58 Ala. 322; Gatchell v. Foster (1891) 94 Ala. 622, 10 So. 434.

<sup>79</sup> Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343; Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157.

<sup>80</sup> Leslie v. Merrill (Ala.) supra; Bills v. National Park Bank (N. Y.) supra.

The supreme court of Illinois, in Snider v. Ridgeway (1869) 49 Ill. 522, could perceive, it said, no valid objection to commencing proceedings in garnishment to reach an indebtedness on a promissory note not yet due, provided judgment was not L.R.A.1918C.

rendered against the garnishee until after the note had matured.

Its contemporary, the supreme court of Indiana, in Cleneay v. Junction R. Co. (1866) 26 Ind. 375, understood the weight of authority to be on the side of the proposition that the maker of unmatured commercial paper was liable upon it in garnishment proceedings in an action against the payee or holder, but only after proof had been made that the paper had matured and had not in the meantime been transferred to a bona fide holder. And afterwards the Texas supreme court thought it had been settled by the weight of authority that attaching a negotiable promissory note before it became due, if it was past due and held by the defendant when judgment was taken against the garnishee, rendered him liable to pay the debt. Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>81</sup> Bills v. National Park Bank (N. Y.) supra.

<sup>82</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>83</sup> Littlefield v. Hodge (1859) 6 Mich. 326.

<sup>84</sup> Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183.

A judgment creditor of an owner of land whose judgment did not become a lien upon the land until after the landowner had entered into a contract of sale and had agreed to convey it upon full payment of the purchase price, of which a part was presently paid in cash and the balance was represented by the purchaser's negotiable promissory note, due in future, which was indorsed in due course of business by the payee before maturity to a bona fide holder for value, without knowledge of the judgment, is neither entitled to the amount of the note from the maker, nor to the lien on the land as against the indorsee. Riddle v. Berg (1886) 3 Sadler (Pa.) 566, 7 Atl. 232.

<sup>85</sup> Hutchins v. Evans (1841) 13 Vt. 541.

<sup>86</sup> A plaintiff in attachment is not entitled to a judgment of condemnation against the maker of a negotiable promissory note summoned as garnishee of the payee or indorsee

It follows that an attachment, garnishment, or trustee process of a debt owing by a negotiable bill of exchange or promissory note before the paper becomes due fails and is defeated by a subsequent transfer of the bill or note before maturity to a new and bona fide holder for value and without notice. It has accordingly been held in numerous cases that the lien acquired by service of an attachment or garnishee process on the maker of unmatured and current negotiable commercial paper is a tentative and qualified one which is divested by the negotiation of the paper before it matures, in the usual course of business, to an innocent purchaser for value.<sup>87</sup> The reason for this is the inapplicability of the doctrine of lis pendens to dealings in negotiable commercial paper before maturity.

In the opinion of one distinguished when such note was transferred to a third person for value before it became due, without notice of the attachment, either before or after service of garnishee process on the maker. Cruett v. Jenkins (1880) 53 Md. 217, overruling Somerville v. Brown (1847) 5 Gill (Md.) 399.

<sup>87</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113; Enos v. Tuttle (1819) 3 Conn. 27; Culver v. Parish (1851) 21 Conn. 408; Mims v. West (1868) 38 Ga. 18, 95 Am. Dec. 379; Burton v. Wynne (1876) 55 Ga. 615; Long v. Johnson (1884) 74 Ga. 4; Wilson v. McEachern (1911) 9 Ga. App. 584, 71 S. E. 946; Greer v. Powell (1867) 1 Bush (Ky.) 489; Kimball v. Plant (1840) 14 La. 511; Cruett v. Jenkins (1880) 53 Md. 217; Littlefield v. Hodge (1859) 6 Mich. 326; Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183; Fitch v. Brower (1886) 42 N. J. Eq. 300, 11 Atl. 330; Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343; Ormond v. Moyer (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564; Stone v. Elliott (1860) 11 Ohio St. 252; Howe v. Hartness (1860) 11 Ohio St. 449, 78 Am. Dec. 312; Kieffer v. Ehler (1852) 18 Pa. 388; Kimbrough v. Hornsby (1904) 113 Tenn. 605, 84 S. W. 613; Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614; Hutchins v. Evans (1841) 13 Vt. 541; Camp v. Scott (1842) 14 Vt. 387; State ex rel. Rogers v. Burton (1860) 11 Wis. 50.

Although by statute debts due by negotiable promissory notes are subjects of garnishment, garnisheeing the maker of one in an action by the payee's creditor will not hold after the paper passes before maturity to a bona fide holder for value. King v. Carhart (1855) 18 Ga. 650.

A summons of garnishment on the maker of a negotiable instrument does not impound the money it represents, so that its transfer in good faith before it falls due will not defeat the garnishment. Wilson v. McEachern (1911) 9 Ga. App. 584, 71 S. E. 946.

L.R.A.1918C.

American jurist, as appears by the report of one of his decisions, the question of the effect of judicial proceedings upon commercial paper has most frequently arisen in cases of garnishment, by which process a maker of such paper has been sought to be held for some debt of the payee; and the general current and decided weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine that such process is inoperative in respect of such paper.<sup>88</sup>

The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply in case of garnishment of a debt evidenced by a negotiable promissory note before its maturity, according to a decision of the supreme court of Georgia, nearly contemporaneous,<sup>89</sup> while both before and after it had been and was held in Pennsylvania that the doctrine of implied notice by lis pendens is totally inapplicable to cases of attach-

A debt owing upon negotiable paper to a defendant in attachment may, by a transfer to a bona fide holder for value and before maturity, cease to be such, and become a debt due the indorsee instead; and, if so transferred, cannot be appropriated through garnishee process against the debtor to the payment of the claim against the attachment defendant. Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

An attachment of the amount payable upon a negotiable promissory note indorsed in blank and in commercial form by service upon the maker while the defendant had possession, such note being afterwards transferred before it matured, to a third person, without notice, for a full consideration, cannot stand. Ludlow v. Bingham (1799) 4 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. ed. 736.

An attachment of a negotiable promissory note in the hands of the maker before its maturity, at the suit of a creditor of the payee, is worthless against a holder who acquired the paper in due course of business, in good faith, without notice, before its maturity, either before or after the attachment. Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186; Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157; Bell v. Philadelphia Binding & Mailing Co. (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

The maker of a negotiable promissory note, no statute being in force to the contrary, cannot be adjudged trustee of the payee where the latter has, before the paper became due, indorsed and transferred it to an innocent holder for value, even though the trustee process was served prior to the transfer, and the indorsee gave no notice of it. Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309; Little v. Hale (1839) 11 Vt. 482.

<sup>88</sup> Mr. Justice Miller in Durant v. Iowa County (1864) 1 Woolw. 69, Fed. Cas. No. 4,189.

<sup>89</sup> Mims v. West (1868) 38 Ga. 18, 95 Am. Dec. 379.

ment of negotiable commercial paper before maturity.<sup>90</sup>

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the rule requiring everyone to take notice of a pending litigation over the title to property he is about to buy from one of the litigants does not apply to commercial paper purchased before its maturity.<sup>91</sup>

There have been several decisions in harmony with those just mentioned, so that it may safely be said that the inapplicability of the lis pendens doctrine to bona fide transfers of negotiable paper for value and before maturity is generally conceded.<sup>92</sup>

The reason for excepting negotiable paper from the operation of the lis pendens rule is to protect the commercial community by removing all obstacles to the free circulation of such paper; since, if such paper, when regular upon its face, were to be subject to the possibility of a suit being pending between the original parties to it, its negotiability would be seriously affected and innumerable commercial transactions would be checked.<sup>93</sup>

The doctrine of lis pendens, it has been well said, is founded on no principle of natural equity, but solely on considerations of public policy; and the policy which excepts negotiable paper from its operation is at least as wise, as important, and as well established, as that on which the doctrine rests.<sup>94</sup>

b. After maturity.

An overdue negotiable promissory note has ceased to be current.<sup>95</sup> It is upon the same footing, it has been said, as other choses in action.<sup>96</sup> At maturity it becomes subject to defenses which theretofore were unavailable.<sup>97</sup> A past-due promissory note cannot be transferred to an innocent holder so as to cut off defenses which the maker may have against the previous holder.<sup>98</sup> As a general rule, the purchaser of commercial paper after it is overdue and dishonored is put on inquiry respecting any defenses which may be set up against it.<sup>99</sup> He may well presume that it has been wholly or partly paid, or that it ought not to be paid, and, hence, he takes the risk of a good defense to it.<sup>100</sup> If he buys it, he takes it subject to all the defenses which the maker of it had while it was the property of the preceding holder.<sup>101</sup> He acquires it subject to all existing equities between the original parties.<sup>102</sup>

It follows that the indorsee of a negotiable bill or note who takes it after it has matured, takes it subject to any attachment or garnishment previously served upon the maker as debtor of the payee or prior holder.<sup>103</sup> A fortiori does the indorsee of an overdue promissory

<sup>90</sup> Kieffer v. Ehler (1852) 18 Pa. 388; Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186; Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157; Bell v. Philadelphia Binding & Mailing Co. (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

<sup>91</sup> Warren County v. Marey (1878) 97 U. S. 107, 24 L. ed. 981.

<sup>92</sup> The general rule that the pendency of a litigation respecting real property is notice to all persons dealing with its subject, whether applicable or not to personal property in general, does not apply to transfers of negotiable paper before maturity. Winston v. Westfeldt (1853) 22 Ala. 760, 58 Am. Dec. 278.

The general rule that all persons dealing with property the subject of a pending suit can acquire from any party or privy to it only a title liable to be divested by the judgment or decree in such suit does not extend to negotiable paper. Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113.

The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply in cases of transfer of negotiable commercial paper before maturity, for value, to bona fide holders. Stone v. Elliott (1860) 11 Ohio St. 252; Howe v. Hartness (1860) 11 Ohio St. 449, 78 Am. Dec. 312; Kimbrough v. Hornsby (1904) 118 Tenn. 605, 84 S. W. 613; Wilson v. McEachern (1911) 9 Ga. App. 584, 71 S. E. 946.

It does not apply to dealings in commercial paper. Hall v. Bowker (1871) 44 Vt. 77.

<sup>93</sup> Warren County v. Marey (U. S.) supra.

<sup>94</sup> Stone v. Elliott (Ohio) supra.

<sup>95</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>96</sup> Hutchins v. Evans (1841) 13 Vt. 541.

<sup>97</sup> McCormack v. Williams (1915) 88 N. J. L. 170, L.R.A.1917E, 535, 95 Atl. 978.

<sup>98</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>99</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Texas, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 88, supra; 22 L. ed. 298.

<sup>100</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (Vt.) supra.

<sup>101</sup> Camp v. Scott (1842) 14 Vt. 387.

<sup>102</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Texas (U. S.) supra.

The general rule that a negotiable bill of exchange or promissory note, transferred when overdue, passes to the new holder subject to all the equities of the previous parties affecting it, was recognized and conceded in Ames v. Meriam (1867) 98 Mass. 294; but in that case it was held that the rule did not apply to a bank check indorsed over to a new holder a few days after it had been drawn and delivered.

<sup>103</sup> Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157; Daniel v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403.

It has been said that there is no contrariety of opinion in respect of a plea that a debt due by bill of exchange, negotiated

note take it subject to a garnishment previously served upon the maker when he well knows of such garnishment.<sup>104</sup> Trustee process served upon the maker of a negotiable promissory note as debtor of the payee takes precedence over and has priority to rights subsequently acquired by an indorsee of the paper after it has become past due.<sup>105</sup> As against a garnishment, an over due promissory note has ceased to be negotiable.<sup>106</sup> Therefore, after a negotiable promissory note has fallen due and remains unpaid, and while it is still the property of the defendant it is subject to attachment or garnishment by the service of process upon the maker,<sup>107</sup> and the latter's liability as garnishee or trustee thereby becomes fixed.<sup>108</sup>

V. Garnishment of negotiable paper after its transfer.

a. Before maturity.

It has never been questioned by any authority worthy of respect where the after its maturity to a plaintiff claiming it had been recovered by another on a process of attachment, is good at common law. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Cohen (1845) 9 Mo. 421.

<sup>104</sup> Stevens v. Pugh (1861) 12 Iowa, 430.

<sup>105</sup> Camp v. Scott (Vt.) supra.

<sup>106</sup> Hutcheson v. King (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 83 S. W. 215.

<sup>107</sup> Somers v. Losey (1882) 48 Mich. 294, 12 N. W. 188; Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge (1898) 116 Mich. 101, 72 Am. St. Rep. 507, 74 N. W. 310; Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343.

This has been declared to be law well settled by authority. Smith v. Spinnenweber (1914) 114 Ark. 384, 170 S. W. 84; Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (Tex.) supra.

After a debt due upon a promissory note secured by a mortgage has become due and has been attached by a judgment creditor of the mortgagee upon garnishee process against the maker and mortgagor, and the latter has been judicially ordered to pay the attaching creditor the sum due upon his judgment, a subsequent assignee of the note and mortgage takes them subject to the attachment, and becomes entitled to collect from the garnishee only the surplus above the attaching creditor's claim. Campbell v. Nesbitt (1878) 7 Neb. 300.

<sup>108</sup> The maker of a promissory note, indebted thereon to the payee after it has become due, is liable as garnishee in a suit against the payee by one of his creditors, notwithstanding the transfer of the note after service of the garnishment is known to the garnishee before he answers. Stevens v. Pugh (Iowa) supra.

The maker of a negotiable promissory L.R.A.1918C.

law merchant prevails unaffected by legislation that negotiable commercial paper after it has passed, before maturity, from a defendant to another holder in good faith for value, cannot be subjected to attachment or garnishment. It has gone beyond the reach of these processes. A bona fide indorsee of a negotiable promissory note transferred by the holder to him before it has become due, for a good consideration of value, takes it and the right to collect it from the maker wholly unaffected by a later garnishment as a debt owing the previous owner.<sup>109</sup> An attempt to garnishee a debt evidenced by an unmatured negotiable promissory note which had passed, before the service of the garnishee process, to a bona fide holder for value, necessarily fails because the garnishee is not indebted upon the paper to the defendant.<sup>110</sup> To entitle attaching creditors to judgment against the maker of a negotiable promissory note who was served as garnishee of the defendant, they are bound to prove that he held the note, summoned as trustee in attachment of the payee, is chargeable as such, where the note was overdue at the time the writ was served, and is not shown to have been transferred. Scott v. Hawkins (1868) 99 Mass. 550.

<sup>109</sup> Brown v. Fisher (1905) 35 Ind. App. 549, 74 N. E. 632.

A bona fide purchaser for value and before maturity from the holder of a negotiable promissory note which had been pledged to a bank as collateral security for a loan or discount, who gave notice of his purchase to the bank and demanded of it the possession of the instrument before an attachment had been issued and served by a creditor of his indorser, obtained a title and a right superior to those of the attaching creditor, although he did not get from the bank manual possession of the note. Howe v. Ould (1876) 28 Gratt. (Va.) 1.

By a transfer before maturity, made in good faith to repay an actual loan of money by the transferee, even from a husband to his wife, a negotiable promissory note is put out of the reach of an after-issued attachment through trustee process against the maker, as debtor of the payee. Clough v. Russell (1875) 55 N. H. 279.

An indorsement and transfer of a negotiable receipt for the payment of money when collected by the signer, made in good faith to a bona fide holder for value, with intent to vest the whole title to the paper in the indorsee, prior to the service of garnishee process upon the receptor, prevents the garnishment from taking effect. Beck v. Cole (1862) 16 Wis. 96.

<sup>110</sup> Lorain v. Lorain Sav. & Bkg. Co. (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 108, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 84.

paper at the time the attachment was served.<sup>111</sup> No judgment can be rendered against a garnishee indebted upon a negotiable promissory note to whosoever holds it, when, before it matured, and before service was made upon the garnishee, the note had been indorsed and transferred for value to an innocent third person by the defendant.<sup>112</sup>

b. After maturity.

An overdue negotiable promissory note continues to be negotiable in the sense that it is transferable by indorsement and delivery as before maturity.<sup>113</sup> It continues negotiable in this sense until it is paid, if not restrictively indorsed by the holder.<sup>114</sup> The transfer of a negotiable promissory note by indorsement and delivery after it has matured vests a complete legal title to it in the indorsee.<sup>115</sup> Anyone who disputes that title takes up the burden of establishing by evidence a good defense.<sup>116</sup>

Accordingly it has been decided that a bona fide indorsee for value of an overdue negotiable promissory note takes a good title to it, and gains a right to recover the amount due upon it from the maker and indorser superior to an attachment or garnishment which was not served until after he had become the owner and holder of the paper;<sup>117</sup> that garnishment is no defense to the maker in an action upon a negotiable promissory note by a bona fide indorsee for value who acquired it before the garnishee process was served, whether he got it before or after its maturity;<sup>118</sup> that for the maker of a negotiable promissory note, whether unmatured or past due, to be charged as garnishee of a defendant, the latter must be the owner and holder of it when the garnishment process is served;<sup>119</sup> that the maker of a negotiable promissory note which has matured cannot be charged as garnishee of the payee unless it affirmatively is shown to have belonged to such payee when the writ was served;<sup>120</sup> and that no judgment charging a garnishee for a debt due by negotiable commercial paper can be rendered where it appears that he is liable for it to a bona fide holder, not the defendant, to whom the paper was transferred prior to the garnishment, either before or after it had matured.<sup>121</sup>

c. Until notice is given.

1. Of transfers of immature paper.

It may be asserted with the utmost confidence that, in the absence of a positive statute requiring it, no notice to the maker of a negotiable instrument of its transfer before its maturity is ever necessary to guard an indorsee against a later attachment of the paper as an evidence of the maker's debt to a prior holder. The new owner is under no obligation where the law merchant prevails without change to notify the maker of his ownership in order to protect himself from a subsequent attachment or garnishment in an action against a prior holder or the payee;<sup>122</sup> for this purpose

<sup>111</sup> Scott v. Hill (1831) 3 Mo. 88, 22 Am. Dec. 462.

<sup>112</sup> Walden v. Valiant (1852) 15 Mo. 409; Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218; Davis v. Pawlette (1864) 3 Wis. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 690.

The statements in the text have further support in Fay v. Sears (1872) 111 Mass. 154; Edney v. Willis (1888) 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300; Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201; Knisely v. Evans (1877) 34 Ohio St. 158.

If a negotiable security was not due when the maker was served with process in attachment against the then holder, before he can be compelled to pay it it must be proved that the defendant was the holder of it when the attachment was served. Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343.

The maker of a negotiable promissory note attached as a debt due to the payee by the service upon him of trustee process, pursuant to the New Hampshire statute of 1842 (Rev. Stat. chap. 208, § 18; Comp. Stat. 529), would not be charged as trustee when the paper had been transferred to a new and bona fide holder before the process was I.R.A.1918C.

served. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Gibbs (1854) 28 N. H. 316.

<sup>113</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Texas (1873) 20 Wall. (U. S.) 88, 22 L. ed. 298; Edney v. Willis (1888) 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300; Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201; Knisely v. Evans (1877) 34 Ohio St. 158; Lorain v. Lorain Sav. & Bkg. Co. (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 108, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 84. See also note in 46 L.R.A. 753.

<sup>114</sup> Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Clarke (1908) 20 R. I. 192, 69 Atl. 681.

<sup>115</sup> Knisely v. Evans (1877) 34 Ohio St. 158.

<sup>116</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Texas (1873) 20 Wall. (U. S.) 88, 22 L. ed. 298.

<sup>117</sup> Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201.

<sup>118</sup> Knisely v. Evans (1877) 34 Ohio St. 158, and Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201, supra.

<sup>119</sup> Edney v. Willis (1888) 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300.

<sup>120</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 73 Am. Dec. 257.

<sup>121</sup> Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

<sup>122</sup> Jefferson County v. Fox (1840) 1 Morris (Iowa) 48.

no notice of transfer is necessary.<sup>123</sup> One who acquires a negotiable promissory note in good faith, for value, and before maturity, is neither bound to anticipate an after attachment against a prior holder, nor to give the maker any notice of the transfer to protect himself against a subsequent garnishment.<sup>124</sup> The rule that the assignee of a debt is entitled to its payment in preference to third persons who may have garnished the debtor only in case he has given previous notice to the debtor of the assignment of the debt does not apply to debts due by negotiable commercial paper indorsed in blank, and passing before maturity from holder to holder by mere delivery.<sup>125</sup>

So rarely have the doctrines just stated been challenged that it has been asserted that, as to promissory notes negotiable in terms, indorsed in blank, and circulating from hand to hand by mere delivery before they mature, "it has never been nor can it be pretended that any notice of transfer is necessary" to protect a holder against a subsequent garnishment of the maker as debtor of a previous holder.<sup>126</sup>

2. Of transfers of overdue paper.

With respect to the necessity for the holder of negotiable commercial paper who acquires it after it has become payable and is dishonored to notify the maker of its transfer in order to be protected against a subsequent attachment or garnishment, the courts are far from agreement. It is the general rule that negotiable commercial paper acquired after it is past due is subject to the same defenses as if it were not negotiable;<sup>128</sup> and it is certainly true that the maker of a promissory note payable to a defendant in attachment cannot be charged as trustee if it was transferred to another person before the service of the writ, and proper notice of such transfer was given to the maker, whether the note was or was not negotiable.<sup>127</sup>

That it is necessary for the purchaser of commercial paper which has lost its negotiability in general by becoming overdue to notify the maker that he has acquired it, in order to forestall an attachment or garnishment, is a proposition that has been both denied and affirmed by the courts.

On the one hand, it has been held that an overdue negotiable promissory note cannot be reached by garnishee process upon the maker as a debt due to the payee after it has been transferred to a third person by indorsement and delivery, whether the maker has or has not had notice of the transfer,<sup>128</sup> because once the payee has indorsed and transferred such a note to another, whether before or after it has matured, he no longer has a cause of action upon it against the maker, whether the latter knows or is ignorant of the transfer.<sup>129</sup> According to this authority notice to the maker of the transfer of his past-due negotiable promissory note by a defendant to a later bona fide holder has nothing to do with his liability as garnishee, the question being simply who was the legal holder of the paper, with the right to recover upon it, at the time of garnishment.<sup>130</sup> The indorsee of an overdue negotiable instrument when not so required by a statute is not, according to another authority, bound to notify the maker that a transfer of the paper has taken place, in order to protect himself against a subsequent attachment or garnishment, since the maker, on the transfer of the paper, ceased to be indebted to the former holder, regardless of his knowledge or ignorance that its ownership had changed.<sup>129</sup> According to another decision, a negotiable promissory note transferred to a bona fide holder for value after it has become due, and before any attachment or garnishment has issued, is thereby put out of the reach of garnishee process on the maker as a debt due the former holder, irrespective of whether or not he had received any notice of the transfer.<sup>130</sup>

On the other hand, several courts have taken the affirmative side of the proposition.

<sup>123</sup> Sheets v. Culver (1840) 14 La. 449, 33 Am. Dec. 593.

<sup>124</sup> Myers v. Beeman (1848) 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 116.

<sup>125</sup> Sheets v. Culver (La.) supra.

<sup>126</sup> Fairfield County Nat. Bank v. Hammer (1915) 89 Conn. 592, 95 Atl. 31; Austin v. First Nat. Bank (1912) 150 Ky. 113, 150 S. W. 8; McKim v. King (1882) 58 Md. 502, 42 Am. Rep. 340; Jacobus v. Jamestown Mantel Co. (1912) 149 App. Div. 856, 134 N. Y. Supp. 418, affirmed in (1914) 211 N. L.R.A.1918C.

Y. 154, 105 N. E. 210; Marsh v. Marshall (1866) 53 Pa. 396; Davis v. Miller (1857) 14 Gratt. (Va.) 1; Cottrell v. Watkins (1893) 89 Va. 801, 19 L.R.A. 754, 37 Am. St. Rep. 897, 17 S. E. 328.

<sup>127</sup> Fay v. Sears (1872) 111 Mass. 154.

<sup>128</sup> Edney v. Willis (Neb.) supra.

<sup>129</sup> Knisely v. Evans (Ohio) supra.

<sup>130</sup> Lorain v. Lorain Sav. & Bkg. Co. (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 108, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 84.

An assignment of a non-negotiable promissory note, it has been held, imposes no obligation upon the maker to the assignee until notice of the assignment has been given;<sup>131</sup> and a promissory note not transferred until it is past due is subject to all defenses existing between the maker and the payee until notice has been given of the transfer;<sup>132</sup> and, therefore, the maker of a negotiable promissory note payable on demand, summoned when the paper is overdue, as trustee of the payee, is chargeable if he has had no notice of a transfer.<sup>133</sup>

Again, it has been held that the maker of a negotiable promissory note which the payee owned at the time it matured, but which he transferred after it became due, to a third person, was liable as garnishee in an action against the payee, unless and until the indorsee gave notice of the transfer and of his ownership of the paper.<sup>134</sup>

If, it has been said, the maker of an overdue negotiable promissory note, who had been charged as trustee on attachment against the payee, should pay it to the attaching creditor without having had any notice that the note had been transferred to another holder, he would have a good defense to an action afterwards brought thereon by an indorsee,<sup>135</sup> for it has been held that the payment of a negotiable promissory note after its maturity, by the maker as garnishee, without any notice that the paper had been transferred to another holder than the defendant, protects him against liability in a later suit by an indorsee who did not get title to the note until after it fell due.<sup>136</sup> A judgment against the maker of a negotiable promissory note as trustee of the payee before he has been notified of any transfer of the paper has been declared to be a good defense to an action upon it by a post-maturity indorsee.<sup>137</sup>

Anyone who takes overdue negotiable paper is held to take it subject to garnishment, against which he can protect himself only by giving notice to the maker prior to the garnishment.<sup>137</sup> The indorsee of a past-due negotiable prom-issory note is said to be in danger of losing his right to recover upon it by an intervening judgment against the maker as trustee of the payee until he gives the maker notice that the note has been transferred to him.<sup>138</sup>

These views have been approved elsewhere.<sup>139</sup>

The purchaser of overdue negotiable commercial paper is held to be bound, in order to insure his right to recover upon it, to give notice that he has acquired it to the maker in season to enable the latter to set up the transfer in his answer in the garnishment proceeding, for the reason that if the maker, in his answer as garnishee, unwittingly and in good faith admits his debt upon the paper to the defendant, and in consequence suffers judgment to be taken against him, that judgment will and should be a bar to an action on the paper by the delinquent indorsee, as the maker cannot and ought not to be compelled to pay his obligation twice.<sup>140</sup>

3. Legislation making notice requisite to protect from garnishment.

In the past there have been enacted statutes requiring indorsees of negotiable paper to give notice of their ownership to makers to protect themselves against attachments and garnishments of payees and indorsers.

The state of Vermont is conspicuous for such legislation. A statute of that state<sup>141</sup> provided that all negotiable paper, whether unmatured or past due, might be attached by and should be subject to trustee process unless and until it had been negotiated and notice of the negotiation had been given to the maker or indorser before he was served with process.<sup>142</sup>

As the statute subjected to the trustee process as debts due the payees all promissory notes, without exception, regardless of time or place of payment or convenience of the parties, until notice had been given to the makers that they had been transferred to other holders, it was held that, under its operation, a bank which, in the usual course of business, had discounted a negotiable promissory

<sup>131</sup> Comstock v. Farnum (1806) 2 Mass. 96.

<sup>132</sup> Scott v. Hawkins (1868) 99 Mass. 550.

<sup>133</sup> McCoid v. Beatty (1861) 12 Iowa, 299; Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>134</sup> Scott v. Hawkins (Mass.) supra.

<sup>135</sup> Somers v. Losey (1882) 48 Mich. 294, 12 N. W. 188.

<sup>136</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (Vt.) supra.

<sup>137</sup> McCoid v. Beatty (Iowa) supra. I.R.A.1918C.

<sup>138</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (Vt.) supra.

<sup>139</sup> Vide, Mills v. Stewart (1847) 12 Ala. 90.

<sup>140</sup> Walters v. Washington Ins. Co. (1855) 1 Iowa, 404, 63 Am. Dec. 451; McCoid v. Beatty (Iowa) supra; Yocum v. White (1873) 36 Iowa, 288.

<sup>141</sup> Act of 1841, Comp. Stat. chap. 32, § 45.

<sup>142</sup> Seward v. Garlin (1861) 33 Vt. 583.

note payable at its own banking house in the future, and had neglected to give notice to the maker of the change of ownership, held the paper subject to a trustee process served on the maker as the payee's debtor.<sup>143</sup> Under that statute, too, it was held necessary that every transfer of a negotiable commercial instrument to a new holder should in turn be brought to the knowledge of the maker for the holder to be safe against attachments in actions against prior holders along the line.<sup>144</sup> The statute afterwards was amended so as to exempt domestic banks which had discounted commercial paper from the necessity of notifying the makers in order to protect themselves from subsequent attachments by trustee processes, but the amendment was held not to extend to or cover negotiable promissory notes turned over to the banks as collateral securities for other discounts.<sup>145</sup>

4. Form and sufficiency of notice.

In the case just cited it was further held that the mentioning by the payee to the maker of a purpose to use negotiable promissory notes as collateral security in some one or more banks, at the time the notes were delivered, and the payee's later voluntary statement to the maker that he had used them as collateral security for sundry discounts at a named bank, was insufficient notice of their transfer to protect the bank against an attachment by trustee process served on the maker for the benefit of a creditor of the payee.<sup>146</sup>

But a notice of transfer given to one of two makers of a joint and several negotiable promissory note has been held sufficient to give the indorsee a prior right to recover the sum due upon it over a creditor of the payee claiming under a subsequent attachment in virtue of trustee process served upon the other maker.<sup>146</sup>

And an action brought against the maker by an indorsee of an overdue negotiable promissory note, followed by a submission to arbitration of all matters in difference between the plaintiff, the defendant, and the payee of the paper, carried to a hearing before the arbitrator, was held sufficient and ample notice of transfer of the note to satisfy the statutory requirement of such notice in order to give exemption from after-served trustee process.<sup>147</sup>

Inasmuch, however, as a general statute making all personal property subject to be mortgaged does not embrace choses in action, the giving of a chattel mortgage upon a promissory note, and the filing of it pursuant to law, cannot take the place of a notice of indorsement and transfer of the note which the statute respecting trustee process requires to be given to the maker to render negotiable commercial paper passed to other holders than banks exempt from attachment.<sup>148</sup>

VI. Rights, after garnishment, of bona fide holders of negotiable paper acquired for value, before maturity.

By the law merchant an indorsee of a negotiable promissory note who acquires it for value, in good faith, before maturity, and without notice, obtains an absolute, unqualified title.<sup>149</sup> His title is secure against all equitable defenses existing between the original parties to the instrument.<sup>150</sup> The law merchant assures to everyone who obtains a bill of exchange or promissory note, negotiable in terms, before maturity, by regular indorsement, for a valuable consideration, and without either actual notice of any adverse claim or of such suspicious circumstances as put him on inquiry, the right to recover upon it.<sup>151</sup>

This title of a bona fide indorsee of negotiable paper obtained for value before maturity is therefore superior to a garnishment served before the paper was transferred.<sup>152</sup> The rights of such a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable commercial instrument are paramount to those of a garnisheeing creditor.<sup>153</sup> When acquired in the usual course of business those rights are paramount to all claims of other persons, by garnishee process or otherwise.<sup>154</sup> The interest acquired by a bona fide holder of a negotiable promissory note received while it was still current, in due course of business, cannot be defeated by a pending trustee process against the maker as the

<sup>143</sup> Kimball v. Gay (1844) 16 Vt. 131.

<sup>144</sup> Seward v. Garlin (Vt.) supra.

<sup>145</sup> Farmers' & M. Bank v. Drury (1863) 35 Vt. 469.

<sup>146</sup> Ayott v. Smith (1868) 40 Vt. 532, 94 Am. Dec. 436.

<sup>147</sup> Austin v. Ryan (1878) 51 Vt. 110.

<sup>148</sup> Woodward v. Laporte (1898) 70 Vt. 399, 41 Atl. 443.
L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>149</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113.

<sup>150</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (1880) 53 Md. 217.

<sup>151</sup> Kieffer v. Ehler (1852) 18 Pa. 388.

<sup>152</sup> Mayberry v. Morris Ala. supra.

<sup>153</sup> Wilson v. McEachern (1911) 9 Ga. App. 584, 71 S. E. 946.

<sup>154</sup> Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

payee's debtor.<sup>155</sup> A bona fide indorsee of a negotiable promissory note before maturity, for value, in the usual course of trade, holds it unaffected by a prior garnishment of the maker.<sup>156</sup> An attachment cannot affect such a holder's rights.<sup>157</sup> It is wholly ineffectual against him.<sup>158</sup>

The indorsee of commercial paper in good faith, for value, and before maturity, has his remedy upon it against the maker and indorser unaffected by garnishee proceedings to which he was no party.<sup>159</sup> His remedy cannot be affected by a garnishment of the maker in an action by the creditor of a prior holder, because the proceeding was res inter alios.<sup>160</sup> The pendency of garnishment proceedings against the maker is no defense to him when sued upon his negotiable promissory note by a bona fide holder for value, before maturity;<sup>161</sup> neither is a judgment against him as garnishee,<sup>162</sup> even when taken upon his admission of indebtedness to the defendant because of his lack of notice that the paper had been transferred to the plaintiff;<sup>163</sup> and a decree in chancery directing him to pay into court the amount due upon his obligation to satisfy a judgment against one who held it when the suit was begun affords him no better defense to a subsequent action upon the paper by an indorsee who took it before its maturity, during the pendency, but without notice, of the suit in chancery.<sup>164</sup> The case is no better for the unfortunate maker of negotiable commercial paper, who, as garnishee of a defendant in ignorance that it had been transferred before it fell due, actually pays it; he still has no defense based on such payment to an action upon it by a bona fide holder for value before maturity.<sup>165</sup> If he pays as garnishee, he does so at his peril.<sup>166</sup> His liability to the indorsee cannot be thus extinguished.<sup>167</sup> It is, of course, different

<sup>155</sup> Camp v. Scott (1842) 14 Vt. 387.

<sup>156</sup> Kimbrough v. Hornsby (1904) 113 Tenn. 605, 84 S. W. 613.

<sup>157</sup> Kimball v. Plant (1840) 14 La. 511.

<sup>158</sup> Day v. Zimmerman (1871) 68 Pa. 72, 8 Am. Rep. 157; Bell v. Philadelphia Binding & Mailing Co. (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

<sup>159</sup> State ex rel. Rogers v. Burton (1860) 11 Wis. 50.

<sup>160</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (Md.) supra, where in it was pronounced inconsistent with reason and contrary to public policy where the law merchant prevailed and legislation had made immune the bona fide holder for value of negotiable paper before maturity against all equitable defenses existing between prior parties, to allow his rights to be defeated or abridged by any proceeding to which he was not a party, instituted by a stranger against his debtor.

<sup>161</sup> Mason v. Noonan (1859) 7 Wis. 609.

The mere fact that the maker of a negotiable promissory note has been served with an attachment in an action by the payee's creditor, as trustee for the defendant, where the law merchant has been changed by a statute subjecting such notes to attachment if the parties to them reside and they are payable within the state, is not a bar to an action upon the note, brought by a bona fide indorsee before maturity, but at most is a plea in abatement, or ground for a stay of proceedings, since the attachment may never be perfected by judgment and satisfaction. Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183.

<sup>162</sup> Brittain v. Anderson (1874) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 316.

<sup>163</sup> Myers v. Beeman (1848) 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 116; Ormond v. Moye (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564.

<sup>164</sup> Stone v. Elliott (1860) 11 Ohio St. 252.

L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>165</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (Md.) supra; Littlefield v. Hodge (1859) 6 Mich. 326; Corey v. Webber (1893) 96 Mich. 357, 55 N. W. 982.

<sup>166</sup> Jefferson County v. Fox (1840) 1 Morris (Iowa) 48.

<sup>167</sup> Gillam v. Huber (1853) 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 155.

It is no defense to the maker of a promissory note, sued thereon by the holder, that he had previously been garnisheed as debtor of the payee, and compelled to pay the attaching creditor, notwithstanding he had set up the transfer of the note in answer to the garnishment. Gates v. Kerby (1850) 13 Mo. 157; Funkhouser v. How (1856) 24 Mo. 44.

A garnishee indebted upon a negotiable instrument who pays the money due thereby into court, pursuant to an order of a court which had not acquired jurisdiction of the defendant or subject-matter in the action, cannot set the order and payment up as a defense to a suit to recover the garnisheed debt, even against the defendant in the garnishment. First State Bank v. Latimer (1915) 48 Okla. 104, 149 Pac. 1099.

An early Maryland case, meagerly reported, appears to have held that by the garnishment of a debt due by a negotiable promissory note payable to a defendant by service of process on the maker before he had been notified of any transfer of the paper, a lien was acquired by the garnisher superior to the claim of a later indorsee, irrespective of whether the paper had been transferred before or after maturity. Stewart v. West (1804) 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 536.

But, long afterwards, the Maryland court of appeals decided that the garnishment of a negotiable promissory note as a debt due the payee, by service of process on the maker, was defeated by a subsequent transfer before maturity to a bona fide indorsee for value. In so deciding the court where the law merchant has been changed by legislation.<sup>168</sup>

VII. Garnishment of commercial paper negotiated mala fides.

If it is thought that undue stress is laid upon bona fides in transferring negotiable paper as a factor in frustrating garnishment, it should be remembered that innocence and good faith are vital elements in protecting an indorsee.

An indorsee of a negotiable promissory note who takes it before maturity from the payee, but after garnishment of the maker as the payee's debtor, with knowledge of the garnishment, receives it encumbered by and subject to such garnishment.<sup>169</sup>

The general rule that a negotiable bill or note is beyond the reach of an attachment before it matures is subject to the exception that a voluntary transfer of it, or one fraudulently made of purpose to protect the payee from the claims of his creditors, leaves it open to attachment or garnishment while it is in the hands of the indorsee, because he is not a bona fide holder.<sup>170</sup> The indorsement and transfer of a negotiable promissory note even before it falls due, by a payee in bad faith, to defraud his creditors, to an indorsee who is privy to the fraud, is worthless to defeat a garnishment by the payee's judgment creditor against the maker.<sup>171</sup> The holder of a promissory note which was transferred to him by the payee in fraud of creditors, who was privy to the fraud, cannot recover upon it from the maker, who paid it on garnishee process after its fraudulent transfer.<sup>172</sup> A transfer of negotiable commercial paper by a debtor holder to an indorsee as a gift, without consideration, being a fraud upon creditors and void as to them, leaves the sum due upon it subject to garnishment.<sup>173</sup>

An attaching creditor who has garnished the maker of negotiable promissory notes is held to have a right to litigate the question whether or not the defendant transferred them with intent to defraud his creditors, to an indorsee who was a party or privy to the fraud;<sup>174</sup> and if, in an action by an indorsee of a negotiable promissory note which has been attached before its maturity as the property of a prior indorser, circumstances make doubtful the time when the plaintiff received it, the burden is held to be cast upon him of showing that the transfer took place before maturity and in the usual course of business.<sup>175</sup>

Good faith in the maker of negotiable commercial paper is just as essential to safeguard him in case of garnishment as it is to protect the indorsee.

The law, it has been declared, does not shield the maker of a negotiable promissory note from a judgment in garnishment where he colluded with the payee to defeat the garnishor's right.<sup>176</sup> A negotiable promissory note given for property purchased of an absconding cited Steuart v. West, supra, and distinguished it by saying that it did not distinctly appear by the report that the note there involved was in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, before maturity, and therefore the case could not be considered a distinct adjudication of the question then at bar. Cruett v. Jenkins (Md.) supra.

<sup>168</sup> An indorsee for value and in good faith, before maturity, of a negotiable promissory note made and payable in New Hampshire, by and to a resident of that state, takes it under the statute thereof, subject to an attachment and trustee process previously issued and served upon maker and payee. Cox v. Severance (1899) 70 N. H. 86, 85 Am. St. Rep. 602, 46 Atl. 739.

A debt for which the debtor has made his promissory note payable to his creditor or order, and which has been attached upon garnishee process by the latter's judgment creditor before the maturity of the paper, has been held to be actually owing the payee, and not a holder by indorsement before maturity, and after garnishment, in British Columbia. Girard v. Cyrs (1896) 5 B. C. 45.

L.R.A.1918C

<sup>169</sup> Enos v. Tuttle (1819) 3 Conn. 27; Glanton v. Griggs (1848) 5 Ga. 424; Gillam v. Huber (1853) 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 155.

<sup>170</sup> Clough v. Buck (1877) 6 Neb. 343.

<sup>171</sup> Le Brun v. Romero (1907) 3 Porto Rico Fed. Rep. 225.

<sup>172</sup> Gillam v. Huber (Iowa) supra.

A holder of a negotiable promissory note who acquired it after it matured, from a prior holder, who took it with knowledge of the fact that the payee had indorsed and delivered it to a third person without consideration, and of purpose to defraud his creditors, shortly before it became due, cannot recover in an action thereon against the maker a sum of money paid by the latter under judicial order as garnishee of the payee, to one of his defrauded creditors, in garnishment proceedings while they were in full force and effect, although the garnishment afterwards lapsed. Clough v. Buck (Neb.) supra.

<sup>173</sup> Beck v. Cole (1862) 16 Wis. 95.

<sup>174</sup> Luckemeyer v. Seltz (1883) 61 Md. 313.

<sup>175</sup> Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186.

<sup>176</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

debtor, and made payable to a third person, in order to defraud creditors, has been subjected to attachment notwithstanding its transfer before maturity, where both maker and indorsee had knowledge of the fraud.<sup>177</sup> A maker indebted on a past-due negotiable promissory note still retained by the payee, which was given for part of the price of property purchased from a fraudulent debtor, held in his wife's name, to escape the claims of creditors, is liable as garnishee where the wife, the payee of the note, was privy to the fraud.<sup>178</sup>

Not all the courts are in full harmony upon the question under consideration.

It has been held, for example, that the fact that the maker of a negotiable promissory note knew when he made and delivered it that by its means the payee purposed to defraud his creditors,—a purpose the maker meant to facilitate,—did not make him liable to be charged as garnishee while the paper was outstanding and unmatured.<sup>179</sup>

It has also been held that the maker of a negotiable promissory note which was delivered and accepted in payment of a just debt could not be charged thereon as trustees by process afterwards issued and served, even though the transaction was for the express purpose of avoiding and evading an expected attachment or garnishment.<sup>180</sup>

Again, it has been held that the making and delivery of negotiable promissory notes in advance of and for the purpose of escaping an anticipated at-

<sup>177</sup> Enos v. Tuttle (Conn.) supra. That case was afterwards explained by saying that in it the absconding debtor, designing to defraud his creditors, conveyed his property to the maker of the note, and took for its price paper payable to his own son, who indorsed it over to one who was privy to the fraud, and, hence, the court had properly adjudged the maker to be trustee for the fraudulent debtor. Starr v. Carrington (1820) 3 Conn. 278.

The maker of negotiable promissory notes given for the purchase price of property, payable at the vendor's request to a third person, to carry out a scheme to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, may, after the maturity of the paper, be charged as trustee of the vendor, where the nominal payee has been cited to show cause, and has appeared and disclaimed all personal interest in the paper. Green v. Doughty (1834) 6 N. H. 572.

<sup>178</sup> Patton v. Gates (1873) 67 Ill. 164.

A trustee not indebted when summoned, to the defendant in attachment, but who, being his boarder, pays his board in advance, sometimes in cash and sometimes by making and delivering his negotiable promissory note for the amount, pursuant to a scheme to defeat the trustee process, has been held chargeable as trustee upon the notes he gave and paid or which were outstanding after he was summoned as trustee, and between the service and his disclosure, by virtue of a statute making a trustee liable not only for funds in his hands belonging to the defendant when summoned; but also for whatever might come into his hands or become due from him between the service of the writ and his disclosure. Cowdry v. Walker (1880) 59 N. H. 533.

For the money paid in advance for board, it was said by the court, the trustee is not chargeable, because, at the time of payment, it was neither money in his hands nor was it a debt due from him to the defendant. It is otherwise as to the notes. They were made after the writ was served, and, with one exception, had been paid. It does not appear from the disclosure to L.R.A.1918C.

whom they were paid or who is the holder of the note now outstanding, and it is not material. If the note is held by a third party, it was not transferred to him before the service of the writ upon the trustee. Whatever may be the rights of the holder of such a note, which we do not decide, the giving and payment of the notes, being for the purpose of defeating the trustee process, was in fraud of the plaintiffs, and the trustee is chargeable for the amount of the notes given to the defendant after the service of the writ upon the trustee.

In one case the opinion was expressed that the maker of negotiable promissory notes delivered in payment of property purchased from the payee to enable him to defraud his creditors would be charged as trustee of the fraudulent vendor in an action by a defrauded creditor, not because the maker was indebted on the paper to the defendant, but because he had participated in the fraud and had possession of property justly applicable to the payment of the creditors' demands. This opinion, however, was obiter dicta, and must be deemed merely the views of the individual judge who wrote it; for, while the fraudulent character of the transaction and the intent to defraud creditors appeared to have been established in the case, the notes involved were paid out to bona fide creditors of the payee to discharge honest debts, and he had a legal right, if he chose to exercise it, to prefer the indorsees to the plaintiff in attachment; the notes therefore, were valid and enforceable obligations of the maker in the hands of the indorsees, and the plaintiff was not legally defrauded by the conversion of the defendant's property into choses in action, and the application of the latter to the payment of debts due creditors equal in equity to the plaintiff. The maker was therefore discharged as trustee. Gregory v. Harrington (1860) 33 Vt. 241.

<sup>179</sup> Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971.

<sup>180</sup> Wood v. Bodwell (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 268.

tachment, by a maker afterwards summoned as trustee of the payee, where it was done pursuant to a valid contract entered into long before, effectually frustrated an attachment and absolved the garnishee from liability as trustee.<sup>181</sup>

An innocent purchaser of property who paid for it in good faith by making and delivering his negotiable promissory notes for the purchase price, payable to the seller's wife, is not liable as garnishee upon such of them as remain unpaid and are current and unmatured in an action by a creditor of the seller, defrauded by the transaction, notwithstanding the payee was a privy to the fraud, where the notes had been negotiated to a third person whose participation in or knowledge of the fraud was not established.<sup>182</sup>

VIII. Garnishment of negotiable paper payable on demand.

a. In general.

According as a negotiable commercial instrument payable on presentation and demand is considered in any given case as immature or overdue it is differently affected by garnishment, and the rights of the parties to it vary. An actual presentation and demand of payment is not essential to make it past due. A promissory note payable on demand automatically becomes overdue if it is not presented for payment within a reasonable time after its date.<sup>183</sup> An indorsee of a negotiable promissory note payable on demand, shown to have been still held by the payee two months after its date, takes it as overdue paper and subject to a trustee process served during the intervening time on the maker as the payee's debtor.<sup>184</sup> An actual presentation and demand of payment, especially if repeated, no matter how soon it follows the date, makes such a note past due immediately, and subject to an attachment of which the lien takes precedence to the claim of a subsequent indorsee.<sup>184</sup>

b. Certificates of deposit.

It has been asserted that whatever may be the rule respecting the maturity of commercial paper payable on demand, a negotiable security payable at sight or when presented cannot be deemed overdue until after its presentation for payment;<sup>185</sup> but it is improbable that thereby was meant that the time for presenting such an instrument was without limit.

A bank's certificate that a specific sum of money has been deposited with it, payable to the order of the depositor on presentation, in current funds with interest, is said to be a negotiable promissory note.<sup>186</sup> Before such a certificate can be regarded as overdue a time reasonably sufficient to negotiate and present it for payment must have elapsed;<sup>186</sup> and its negotiation two days after it bears date is a transfer of it before maturity.<sup>186</sup>

The obligation assumed by a bank or banker who issues a negotiable certificate of deposit is to pay the fund on presentation to the holder of it, whoever he may happen to be, and not to repay the amount deposited to the depositor, hence, once a certificate has been issued, negotiable in terms, and while it is current, the bank or banker has nothing in hand belonging to the depositor upon which an attachment can fasten.<sup>187</sup>

It is no defense to a bank sued by a bona fide holder for value, before maturity, of a certificate of deposit, negotiable and payable only after a stated time has elapsed, that it paid the amount thereby represented as garnishee under a garnishment in an action by third persons against the depositor.<sup>188</sup>

A bank which has issued to a defendant certificates of deposit payable to him or his order on presentation and surrender, and has received notice that they have been negotiated and belong to another, cannot, while they are outstanding and unpaid, be charged as garnishee;<sup>189</sup> it is not liable as garnishee upon such certificates in an action against the alleged principal of the person who made the deposits, after the paper has been transferred to strangers, even where it was converted in fraud of the defendant's rights.<sup>190</sup>

Bankers who have delivered to a de-

<sup>181</sup> Collins v. Smith (1859) 12 Gray (Mass.) 431.

<sup>182</sup> Diefendorf v. Oliver (1871) 8 Kan. 365.

<sup>183</sup> Camp v. Scott (1842) 14 Vt. 387.

<sup>184</sup> Culver v. Parish (1851) 21 Conn. 408.

<sup>185</sup> Ormond v. Moye (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564.

<sup>186</sup> Howe v. Hartness (1860) 11 Ohio St. 449, 78 Am. Dec. 312.
L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>187</sup> McMillan v. Richards (1858) 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655.

<sup>188</sup> Union State Bank v. First Nat. Bank (1916) 122 Ark. 612, 184 S. W. 411.

<sup>189</sup> Karp v. Citizens Nat. Bank (1889) 76 Mich. 679, 43 N. W. 680.

<sup>190</sup> St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Cohen (1845) 9 Mo. 421.

positor an interest-bearing negotiable certificate of deposit are not liable as garnishees in an attachment against him, served on the day the certificate was issued, but after it had left the bankers' control, and before 'it' came into the actual possession of the depositor, who, having no notice of the attachment, immediately indorsed and transferred it to a bona fide holder for value in due course of business before it possibly could have been presented for payment.<sup>191</sup> The indorsee in such a case is entitled to recover on the certificate from the bankers notwithstanding the service of the attachment antedating in time his title.<sup>191</sup>

In one state, by statute,<sup>192</sup> certificates of deposit payable only when returned and surrendered to the bank of issue, properly indorsed, are said to be exempt from garnishment, even if held by the payees.<sup>193</sup>

A bank, however, indebted upon a certificate of deposit payable to the depositor's order on demand and when returned properly indorsed, overdue because payment was refused to an indorsee of the payee when he presented it, was held liable as garnishee in an action against such indorsee notwithstanding he had subsequently transferred it to a third person, to whom the bank paid it after the garnishment.<sup>194</sup>

c. Drafts and bills of exchange.

As the indebtedness of the drawee of a bill of exchange does not arise until he accepts it, before acceptance it is not subject to garnishment.<sup>195</sup> Before presentation and acceptance the acceptor of a bill of exchange, or of an order for the payment of money, is not liable as garnishee in a suit against the payee where the latter had previously transferred the paper to a third person.<sup>196</sup> The indorsee for value of a draft before acceptance by the drawee is the owner of the paper, and the drawer is not, and therefore the sum to be had by means of it is not garnishable as a debt owing the drawer.<sup>196</sup> It is recognized as a sound doctrine, founded on the commercial policy of sustaining the credit and circulation of negotiable paper, that an innocent holder of a bill of exchange negotiated before maturity is entitled to recover upon it and shut out almost every equitable defense.<sup>197</sup>

To be subject to garnishment, debts due by bills of exchange must be within the statute which gives the remedy. Under a statute authorizing attachments which extends only to bills of resident makers that are payable within the state, a foreign insurance company which, after adjusting a local loss, had drawn and delivered to the policyholder to pay it a negotiable draft or inland bill of exchange upon itself, payable at its home office, was held not liable as trustee in an action against the payee.<sup>198</sup>

d. Orders to pay money.

Orders, other than bank checks, for the payment of money, are not, strictly speaking, commercial paper, but sometimes they have its characteristics in cases of garnishment. These cases are not numerous and may justifiably be noticed.

It was held in one case that a consignee of merchandise for sale on commission for account of the consignor was

<sup>191</sup> Howe v. Hartness (Ohio) supra.

<sup>192</sup> Starr & C. Anno. Stat. (Ill.) chap. 62, § 15.

<sup>193</sup> Auten v. Crahan (1898) 81 Ill. App. 502.

<sup>194</sup> Exchange Bank v. Gulick (1880) 24 Kan. 359.

<sup>195</sup> Dibble v. Gaston (1835) R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 444.

<sup>196</sup> Thus, a draft accompanying a bill of lading, drawn for the purchase price of a consignment of merchandise and discounted by a bank at the place of shipment for the consignor, belongs to the bank, and its proceeds are not subject to garnishment at the place of delivery of the consignment in an action upon a demand against the consignor. Merchants Nat. Bank v. Parker (1914) 142 Ga. 265, 82 S. E. 658.

And a bank which takes from a regular customer a draft drawn by himself to his own order, for the purchase price of a consignment of goods, upon the consignee, indorsed for deposit to his credit, and gives him credit for it in his account as cash subject to check, becomes the owner of such draft for value and before maturity, and entitled to its proceeds when collected, free from garnishment in an action by the consignee against the consignor for damages accruing from defects in the consigned goods. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Mayer (1892) 80 Ga. 108, 14 S. E. 891; National Bank v. Everett (1911) 136 Ga. 372, 71 S. E. 660.

Inland bills of exchange, drawn previously to the suit and transferred for value to third persons, verbally accepted by the drawees, to be paid out of the proceeds of cotton consigned to them for sale on the drawer's account, have priority over the claims of the drawer's creditors, resting upon a garnishment of the drawees. Kane v. Robertson (1874) 26 La. Ann. 335.

<sup>197</sup> St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Cohen (1845) 9 Mo. 421.

<sup>198</sup> Chadbourn v. Gilman (1885) 63 N. H. 353.

chargeable as trustee before he had disposed of the consignment upon attachment against the consignor, although he had, before the process was served, accepted an order to pay to the consignor or on his order, at the end of a stated number of days, a certain sum of money, or whatever amount might prove to be then due after deducting advances and expenses.<sup>199</sup> The reason assigned for this decision was that such an accepted order was not a negotiable instrument.<sup>199</sup>

But in another case, differentiated upon material facts, it was said that whether an order for the payment of money was to be regarded as a bill of exchange or a mere chose in action, inasmuch as the person upon whom it was drawn did not become indebted upon it to anybody until it had been presented to and accepted by him, and then only to the holder, he could not be garnished as the debtor of the payee, who had transferred the order to a third person prior to presentation or acceptance.<sup>200</sup>

These cases are readily distinguishable.

e. Warehouse receipts.

In the case of an attachment upon whisky belonging to the defendant, held for delivery upon his order in a distiller's warehouse, upon the surrender of negotiable warehouse certificates or receipts by the holder, no judgment can be taken against the warehouseman as garnishee while the certificates are outstanding and in circulation, held by unknown persons, until adequate indemnifying security against liability upon the paper has been furnished to the garnishee.<sup>201</sup>

f. Government warrant.

An attachment has been held to lie against the acting Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reach an undivided interest in a Treasury certificate issued or about to be issued to the defendant and another person for the purpose of paying them an award made by the commissioners appointed to carry into effect the convention between the United States and Mexico, where the certificate, although negotiable, had not yet been negotiated.<sup>202</sup>

IX. The debtor and creditor relation in garnishment of negotiable paper.

It has been dogmatically asserted that there is no liability as garnishee or trustee unless the person summoned is indebted when served.<sup>203</sup> The process of garnishment reaches only what the garnishee may owe the defendant at the time he is served.<sup>204</sup> It is essential to the incidence of an attachment, or to subject one to garnishment, that the relation of debtor and creditor subsist between the garnishee and the defendant.<sup>205</sup> To charge a garnishee as debtor of the defendant, it must be shown affirmatively that, at the time of garnishment, the defendant had a cause of action against the garnishee to recover a legal debt due or to grow due by the efflux of time.<sup>206</sup>

These are statements of an undoubted general rule.

Accordingly it is held that for a debt evidenced by negotiable paper to be subjected to garnishment there must exist between the garnishee and the defendant the relation of debtor and creditor.<sup>207</sup>

Now the maker of a negotiable promissory note out in circulation, unmaturing, cannot be said to be indebted to the payee upon it so as to be subject to garnishment,<sup>208</sup> because once such a note passes into circulation, the maker owes whomsoever may happen to own and hold it, and he cannot know who that is until it is presented for payment.<sup>209</sup> After a negotiable promissory note has been negotiated, its maker is no longer a debtor of the payee.<sup>209</sup> The indebtedness of a trustee upon his promissory note to the defendant in attachment is essential to his liability, and the question as to who is his real creditor on the paper is one of fact.<sup>210</sup>

Unless it is shown that a defendant in attachment is still the owner of a negotiable promissory note upon which the garnishee is indebted, or that such note

<sup>199</sup> Cushman v. Haynes (1838) 20 Pick. (Mass.) 132.

<sup>200</sup> Dibble v. Gaston (Ga.) supra.

<sup>201</sup> Roudebush v. Hollis (1898) 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 324.

<sup>202</sup> Stratton v. Young (1845) 1 Hayw. & H. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 13,528.

<sup>203</sup> Williams v. Marston (1825) 3 Pick. (Mass.) 65.

<sup>204</sup> Lorain v. Lorain Sav. & Bkg. Co. (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 108, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 84.

L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>205</sup> Turner v. Armstrong (1836) 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412; Maury v. McDonald (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 118 S. W. 812.

<sup>206</sup> Edney v. Willis (1888) 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300.

<sup>207</sup> Dibble v. Gaston (1835) R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 444.

<sup>208</sup> Hubbard v. Williams (1858) 1 Minn. 54, Gil. 37, 55 Am. Dec. 66.

<sup>209</sup> Wybrants v. Rice (1848) 3 Tex. 458.

<sup>210</sup> Leland v. Sabin (1853) 27 N. H. 74.

had not been transferred to another holder before it matured, it is not established that the garnishee is defendant's debtor.<sup>211</sup>

Accordingly, if no statute exists to compel a different ruling, a maker of negotiable paper cannot be made liable upon it as garnishee under attachment, garnishment, or trustee process, where the payee is the defendant, without proof that the payee still holds and owns the paper.<sup>212</sup> The rule is that one bound to pay a negotiable obligation can be made garnishee as debtor of the payee only after it is past due and in defendant's hands.<sup>213</sup> If the obligation was negotiated and transferred before it became due, by the defendant, to a third person, the garnishee is not liable on the garnishment, because he is not indebted to the defendant, but to the holder of the paper.<sup>214</sup> Inasmuch as the maker of a negotiable promissory note which has passed into circulation owes no one but the holder the debt it represents, he cannot be adjudged to pay it as garnishee without proof that the defendant is the holder and owner.<sup>215</sup> It has been declared to be a well-settled principle that no judgment can be rendered against the maker of negotiable paper as garnishee until it has been affirmatively established that such paper is still owned by the person whose property the garnishment essayed to condemn.<sup>216</sup>

In sundry other cases in point the courts have been almost equally emphatic.

It has been held that before a judgment can be rendered against a garnishee as debtor of a defendant upon commercial negotiable paper the plaintiff must show that such paper had become payable and was held by the defendant, or not held by a bona fide holder.<sup>217</sup>

Also, that a maker of a negotiable promissory note, summoned as garnishee of the payee, cannot be charged in judgment without proof that the note is still held and owned by the defendant.<sup>218</sup>

And again, that no judgment can be taken against a garnishee in attachment, indebted upon a negotiable promissory note, if he elects to stand upon his rights, without proof that the defendant is the holder of the note and had not transferred it before it matured.<sup>219</sup>

Ample support for the doctrines just stated may be found in divers other cases in which there entered other elements of importance.<sup>220</sup>

<sup>211</sup> Ormond v. Moyer (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564.

<sup>212</sup> Jefferson County v. Fox (1840) 1 Morris (Iowa) 48.

<sup>213</sup> Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

<sup>214</sup> Warne v. Kendall (1875) 78 Ill. 598.

<sup>215</sup> Denham v. Pogue (1868) 20 La. Ann. 195.

<sup>216</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113.

<sup>217</sup> Cleneay v. Junction R. Co. (1866) 26 Ind. 375.

<sup>218</sup> Carson v. Allen (1850) 2 Pinney (Wis.) 457, 2 Chand. 123, 54 Am. Dec. 148.

<sup>219</sup> Ormond v. Moyer (N. C.) supra.

<sup>220</sup> Vide, Cruett v. Jenkins (1879) 53 Md. 217, overruling Somerville v. Brown (1847) 5 Gill (Md.) 399; Walden v. Valiant (1852) 15 Mo. 409; Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218; Hutchins v. Evans (1841) 13 Vt. 541; Timm v. Stegman (1893) 6 Wash. 13, 32 Pac. 1004; Davis v. Pawlette (1864) 3 Wis. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 690.

Merely because one has made and delivered to a defendant a piece of negotiable paper in fulfilment of a contract to lend money, and as a substitute for cash, to enable the defendant to get the money by putting it in circulation, he does not become indebted to the defendant, and therefore cannot be made liable as garnishee. Maury v. McDonald (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 118 S. W. 812.

When the evidence discloses that the garnishee made a promissory note nominally in favor of the principal debtor, but actually as trustee for others, and that the note has not matured and is held by a stranger not before the court, no judgment can be rendered against the garnishee. Timm v. Stegman (1893) 6 Wash. 13, 32 Pac. 1004.

An administrator of an insolvent intestate who had made a negotiable promissory note to secure the payee against liabilities as surety for the maker upon other commercial paper cannot be charged as trustee for the payee in an action by a creditor of the latter, where the defendant, although his property had been attached thereon, had not taken up the paper upon which he was surety for the intestate, notwithstanding his claim upon the indemnifying note had been presented and allowed against the maker's estate. Commercial Bank v. Neally (1855) 39 Me. 402.

When by statute debts due upon negotiable securities are not subject to garnishment, an agent of the maker of negotiable paper not yet due, who has been intrusted by the maker with the means of paying it before maturity, cannot be held as garnishee of the holder of the paper before the transaction is completed, even where the latter has agreed to accept premature payment, and has discharged collateral security which he held. Husso v. Sikorski (1898) 101 Wis. 131, 76 N. W. 1117.

X. Garnishment of negotiable paper owned but not possessed by defendant.

a. Pledged as collateral security.

1. To creditors.

As a general rule, uncollected bills, notes, and other commercial securities put in pledge by debtors to their creditors as collateral security for debts owing to the pledgees are unavailable for the purposes of attachment or garnishment.<sup>221</sup> The maker of a negotiable promissory note that is in pledge as collateral security for a debt owing by the payee to a third person is not liable as garnishee in an action against the pledgeor until the debt for which it was pledged has been paid and the note has been surrendered.<sup>222</sup> The rule applies although the debt for which the paper was pledged is much less in amount than the value of the collateral securities.<sup>223</sup>

The lien of the pledgee of commercial paper pledged in good faith to secure an actual indebtedness takes precedence of the lien of a subsequent attachment;<sup>224</sup> his right to the pledges and the money to be obtained by their means is paramount to the rights of other creditors of the pledgeor until the debt is paid, and is unaffected by garnishment.<sup>225</sup>

But while the pledgee of commercial paper who holds it as security for a debt due him from the pledgeor is entitled to be paid that debt in full out of the proceeds, any surplus of such proceeds over and above what is due such pledgee is subject to garnishment.<sup>226</sup>

2. To sureties.

The same principles govern when paper is pledged to indemnify sureties against losses upon obligations assumed by them for the pledgeors.

The right of the holder of a negotiable promissory note indorsed to him in pledge to secure him against liability as surety for the payee is superior to and takes precedence of a garnishment afterwards served in an action against the pledgeor by his creditor.<sup>227</sup>

The lien of an attachment issued in an action against an owner of negotiable paper after the defendant had pledged it in good faith to indemnify his surety against a loss as such is subordinate to the lien of the pledgee of the paper.<sup>228</sup>

A surety in possession of an unmatured promissory note holding as security against his liability upon a personal obligation assumed for the payee has a right to its proceeds for his indemnity as against the payee's attaching creditor, even though he is a member of a partnership which made the note.<sup>229</sup>

Sureties in possession of negotiable promissory notes delivered by a defendant in attachment to indemnify them against liability on the bailor's account are not chargeable as trustees in advance of any demand for a return of the paper after it has ceased to be necessary for the purposes of the bailment.<sup>230</sup>

But the custodian of negotiable promissory notes belonging to an attachment defendant, pledged to the possessor for the double purpose of indemnifying him against a contingent liability as surety on a bond signed for the pledgeor and to secure collaterally the payment of sundry debts owing by the pledgeor, may be summoned under the New Hampshire statute and charged as trustee in respect of any surplus recovered upon the pledged paper over and above the sums necessary to satisfy the purposes of the pledge.<sup>231</sup>

<sup>221</sup> Grosvenor v. Farmers & M. Bank (1839) 13 Conn. 104; Hall v. Page (1848) 4 Ga. 428, 48 Am. Dec. 235; Lochrane v. Solomon (1868) 38 Ga. 290; Long v. Johnson (1884) 74 Ga. 4; Erwin v. Commercial & R. Bank (1848) 3 La. Ann. 186, 48 Am. Dec. 447.

<sup>222</sup> Dickinson v. Davis (1914) 164 Iowa, 449, 145 N. W. 957.

<sup>223</sup> Grosvenor v. Farmers & M. Bank (Conn.) supra.

<sup>224</sup> Fling v. Goodall (1860) 40 N. H. 216.

<sup>225</sup> Hall v. Page (Ga.) supra.

<sup>226</sup> Dickinson v. Davis (Iowa) and Fling v. Goodall (N. H.) supra.

Under the Vermont statute (Gen. Stat. chap. 34, § 47) which exempts from trustee process commercial paper transferred before maturity to a bank within the state, a negotiable promissory note indorsed as collateral security for a less debt to a domestic bank is exempt only to the extent necessary to pay the debt secured, and the maker is subject to be charged as trustee for the surplus. Sargent v. Wood (1878) 51 Vt. 597.

Any surplus which may become due to a defendant in garnishment from a negotiable receipt for the payment of money to be collected by the signer from collaterals transferred to him by the owner to pay certain debts due to the transferee and other creditors from such defendant is subject to garnishment. Beck v. Cole (1862) 16 Wis. 95.

<sup>227</sup> King v. Carhart (1855) 18 Ga. 650.

<sup>228</sup> Fling v. Goodall (N. H.) supra.

<sup>229</sup> Huot v. Ely (1880) 17 Fla. 775.

<sup>230</sup> Maine F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Weeks (1811) 7 (Mass.) 438.

<sup>231</sup> Fling v. Goodall (N. H.) supra.

b. In custody of bailees.

Jurists have differed in opinion as to the attachability of commercial paper in the keeping of bailees.

According to one authority the only way that negotiable instruments can be attached in an action against the owner is by taking actual possession of them, or by seizing them when held by a third person for the defendant's use,<sup>232</sup> and another has declared that only the person in possession of negotiable promissory notes belonging to an absent debtor, and not their maker, may be made a garnishee in attachment.<sup>233</sup>

On the other hand it is asserted that in garnisheeing a debt due on a negotiable promissory note it is the maker, and not the custodian of the paper, who must be made the garnishee,<sup>234</sup> and that the bailee of choses in action cannot be charged as trustee of the bailor by reason of their deposit in his keeping.<sup>235</sup>

In the trial of an issue arising on an answer of a garnishee, averring his own ownership of effects of an execution debtor, a promissory note of a third person cannot be taken to satisfy the claim of the execution creditor.<sup>236</sup> Garnishment will not lie against the possessor of promissory notes and other choses in action received by him from the defendant, which he claims to hold in his own right.<sup>237</sup>

The reason assigned why a custodian of commercial paper for collection on the defendant's account cannot, in respect of it, be made liable as garnishee without an express statute authorizing it, is because such evidences of debt cannot be seized and sold on execution.<sup>238</sup>

Bills and notes delivered to an agent or attorney by a defendant for collection, and which have not been collected, cannot, it has been held, be subjected to attachment or garnishment in the hands of the custodian, for the reason, among others, that the custodian is not indebted to the defendant.<sup>239</sup>

In conflict with this, it has been held that a writ of attachment against an absent debtor creates a lien on all choses in action belonging to the defendant in the hands, power, or possession of a garnishee intrusted with them to collect for the defendant's account,<sup>240</sup> and that that lien is superior to any intervening encumbrance or alienation unaccompanied by a delivery of the paper.<sup>241</sup>

It has been held that the payee of a bill of exchange who restrictively indorsed it and deposited it in a bank to his credit, for collection on his account, continued the owner and entitled to the proceeds of such bill, and that these proceeds, while in the hands of the collecting bank, were subject to garnishment in an action against such payee.<sup>242</sup>

A general assignee for creditors, empowered by the deed of assignment to sell the assigned property on credit and accept the promissory notes of the purchasers for the purchase price, cannot, it has been held, be charged as trustee in an action begun by attachment against the assignor after the power has been exercised and negotiable notes not yet due have been received, because the assignee is not personally responsible for either the property sold or its proceeds, and because, also, immature negotiable

<sup>232</sup> Erwin v. Commercial & R. Bank (1848) 3 La. Ann. 186, 48 Am. Dec. 447.

<sup>233</sup> Gaffney v. Bradford (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 441.

A promissory note payable to the order of and indorsed in blank by a defendant, and then put in the custody of a bailee to hold as an indemnity against the maker's liability as defendant's surety, and against an encumbrance on real estate bought by the maker of the payee, is subject to an attachment by the latter's creditors upon garnishee process against the custodian as long as the paper remains undelivered, and while any part of the purposes of the bailment remains unperformed, notwithstanding the issue by the bailor of an order to the bailee, not accepted by him, to deliver the note to a third person, on the ground that the liability of the maker as surety had been extinguished. Lassiter v. Bussy (1859) 14 La. Ann. 710.

<sup>234</sup> Cottingham v. Greely-Barnham Grocery Co. (1900) 129 Ala. 200, 87 Am. St. Rep. 58, 30 So. 560.
L.R.A. 1918C.

<sup>235</sup> Stone v. Dean (1831) 5 N. H. 502.

<sup>236</sup> Jones v. Norris (1841) 2 Ala. 526.

<sup>237</sup> Levisohn v. Waganer (1884) 76 Ala. 412.

<sup>238</sup> Price v. Brady (1858) 21 Tex. 614.

<sup>239</sup> Fitch v. Waite (1823) 5 Conn. 117.

<sup>240</sup> M'Bride v. Floyd (1831) 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 209. In that case the proceeds of a promissory note belonging to an absent debtor, in the hands of a sheriff, and not paid over to an attorney employed to collect it, realized by judgment and execution, attached before collection by service on the attorney as garnishee, were awarded to the attaching creditor in preference to a judgment creditor of the same defendant upon a senior unsatisfied execution held by the same sheriff.

<sup>241</sup> Freeman v. Exchange Bank (1891) 87 Ga. 45, 13 S. E. 160. This case later was distinguished where the depositor was credited with his deposit as cash, and allowed to draw against it by check. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Mayer (1892) 89 Ga. 108.

promissory notes are not subject to attachment.<sup>242</sup>

c. In keeping of makers.

An exception to the general rule that the maker of a current negotiable promissory note cannot be charged as garnishee before it matures in an action against the payee has been recognized in those cases where the maker has actual possession and control of his own obligation, so that he is in a position to protect himself against its transfer.<sup>243</sup> The rule rests upon the ground that the maker shall not be put in peril of paying his debt twice, and fails when that ground does not exist.<sup>244</sup> The reason failing, the rule becomes inoperative when the maker has his obligation in his own hands, since it is obvious that it cannot be transferred in the ordinary course of business while the maker keeps it and can protect himself against a double liability.<sup>245</sup>

It follows and accordingly more than once it has been held that the maker of unmatured negotiable commercial paper who has actual possession and control of it may be charged as garnishee or trustee of the debt it evidences in an action against the payee.<sup>246</sup>

As long as the maker of negotiable commercial paper keeps it in his own possession, he is in no danger of being liable upon it to a subsequent indorsee for it cannot be regarded as current.<sup>247</sup> He cannot escape liability as garnishee by delivering the paper to a third person to hold in escrow unless, in addition to parting with its manual possession, he also resigns all power and dominion over it.<sup>248</sup>

But a negotiable unmatured promissory note made by partnership cannot be said to be in the possession of the makers

so as to be the subject of garnishment when it is in the keeping of one member of the firm, to secure him against liability upon his personal obligation as surety for the payee.<sup>249</sup> And a debtor who has a right by previous valid contract, entered into in good faith, to discharge his debt by making and delivering to his creditor his negotiable promissory time notes of fixed dates and amounts, cannot be held to answer as trustee in attachment against the defendant creditor before any of such notes has matured, although none of them has been delivered.<sup>250</sup>

XI. The debtor in garnishment of negotiable paper.

a. Status.

It is said to be fundamental law that the liability of a garnishee to the plaintiff in the garnishment is no greater than it would be if the defendant were calling upon him to respond under the same state of facts.<sup>251</sup> By garnishment the garnishee ought not to be put to the hazard of having to pay the same debt twice.<sup>252</sup> No one, it has been declared, should be adjudged a trustee unless the judgment against him would be a defense to any action which might afterwards be brought to recover the same debt;<sup>253</sup> and, unless by his own fault, a garnishee will not be put in a position where he will be compelled to pay the garnished debt a second time.<sup>254</sup>

The garnishee's liability is limited to the payment of his debt. He is not liable for the costs of the garnishment proceeding.<sup>255</sup>

Although in the abstract the courts generally profess to regard a garnishee as a mere disinterested stakeholder who should be spared risk and loss and be

<sup>242</sup> Hopkins v. Ray (1840) 1 Met. (Mass.) 79.

<sup>243</sup> Huot v. Ely (1880) 17 Fla. 775.

<sup>244</sup> Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

<sup>245</sup> Stone v. Dean (1831) 5 N. H. 502.

<sup>246</sup> Ibid.; and Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (Tex.) supra; Hutcheson v. King (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 83 S. W. 215.

<sup>247</sup> Lehigh Coal & I. Co. v. West Superior Iron & Steel Co. (1895) 91 Wis. 221, 64 N. W. 746; Hutcheson v. King (Tex.) supra.

A negotiable instrument in the actual possession of the maker, which had been attached before its maturity in an action against the payee by due service of process on the maker, is bound by the attachment notwithstanding its transfer before maturity to a holder who knew all about the attachment and took title for the purpose of defeating it, with the knowledge and co-operation of the maker. Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343.
I R.A.1918C.

<sup>248</sup> Lehigh Coal & I. Co. v. West Superior Iron & Steel Co. (Wis.) supra.

<sup>249</sup> Huot v. Ely (Fla.) supra.

<sup>250</sup> Fuller v. O'Brien (1877) 121 Mass. 422.

<sup>251</sup> Dickinson v. Davis (1914) 164 Iowa, 449, 145 N. W. 957.

<sup>252</sup> Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971; Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

<sup>253</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309.

<sup>254</sup> Dickinson v. Davis (Iowa) supra.

<sup>255</sup> Huff v. Mills (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 42.

inconvenienced as little as possible through the garnishment, practically his path to repose is beset with thorns and pitfalls to avoid which he is required to be both wary and vigilant.<sup>256</sup>

b. Rights.

1. To have his obligation mature before he is liable.

Before a judgment can be taken against the maker of a negotiable commercial instrument the paper must have matured.<sup>257</sup> No judgment charging a garnishee can be rendered until the garnished debt falls due.<sup>258</sup> No judgment in favor of an attaching creditor against a garnishee is permissible for a debt upon a negotiable promissory note not yet payable.<sup>259</sup> Garnishee proceedings against the maker of a negotiable promissory note cannot be carried into judgment while it is not yet due and is current and liable to be transferred to a new holder.<sup>260</sup> The maker of a negotiable promissory note cannot be made to pay it before it matures by means of garnishment,<sup>261</sup>—he cannot be garnished as debtor of the payee until the paper is past due.<sup>262</sup> While a negotiable promissory note is outstanding and current, and before it becomes due, the maker is not subject to liability as trustee of the payee.<sup>263</sup>

All this is a general rule<sup>264</sup> and a principle of law well settled.<sup>265</sup>

2. To a surrender of his obligation.

There have been some decisions which have recognized as reasonable the right of a maker of negotiable paper to have it delivered up to him and canceled before or at least when he is called upon to pay it as a garnishee. He has a right, it has been held, to insist upon the production and surrender of his obligation or upon indemnity against liability upon it if it is not produced before any judgment is taken against him.<sup>266</sup> It has also been held that to render the maker of an unmatured negotiable instrument liable upon it as garnishee requires a decree in chancery which shall insure its delivery for cancelation;<sup>267</sup> and the opinion has been expressed that notice of garnishment served upon the maker of a negotiable promissory note after it has matured would not be effective unless the note was in the possession of the defendant at the time, and he could be compelled to give it up on payment of the attachment claim.<sup>268</sup>

A garnishment has been held to have been rightly discharged where the debt of the garnishee was evidenced by negotiable promissory notes not yet due, not surrendered, held by unknown persons, and against liability upon which to indorsees no indemnity was given or tendered.<sup>269</sup>

The right of a garnishee of a debt evidenced by his negotiable obligation to have it delivered up, canceled, or to be exonerated upon it, or to be indemnified against liability thereon when he pays it as a condition precedent to judgment, has been secured by statute.<sup>270</sup>

3. To interplead rival claimants.

The only concern of a garnishee is in respect of to whom he shall lawfully pay his debt.<sup>271</sup> It has been shown that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to transfers of current negotiable commercial paper, and the principle that judgments bind only those who are parties or <sup>256</sup> Vide, Gatchell v. Foster (1891) 94 Ala. 622, 10 So. 434; Cross v. Haldeman (1854) 15 Ark. 200; A. J. Harwi Hardware Co. v. Klippert (1903) 67 Kan. 743, 74 Pac. 254; Yarborough v. Thompson (1844) 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 291, 41 Am. Dec. 626; Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183; Myers v. Beeman (1848) 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 116; Ormond v. Moye (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564; Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201; Huff v. Mills (Tenn.) supra; Brittain v. Anderson (1874) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 316.

<sup>257</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (1878) 62 Ala. 113; Gregory v. Higgins (1858) 10 Cal. 339; Huot v. Ely (1880) 17 Fla. 775; Snider v. Ridgeway (1869) 49 Ill. 522; Cleneay v. Junction R. Co. (1866) 26 Ind. 375; Jefferson County v. Fox (1840) 1 Morris (Iowa) 48.

<sup>258</sup> Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

<sup>259</sup> Bell v. Philadelphia Binding & Mailing Co. (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 38. L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>260</sup> Carson v. Allen (1850) 2 Pinney (Wis.) 457, 2 Chand. 123, 54 Am. Dec. 148.

<sup>261</sup> Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971.

<sup>262</sup> Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 25 S. W. 985.

<sup>263</sup> Hutchins v. Evans (1841) 13 Vt. 541.

<sup>264</sup> Marble Falls Ferry Co. v. Spitler (Tex.) supra.

<sup>265</sup> Mayberry v. Morris (Ala.) supra.

<sup>266</sup> Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201.

<sup>267</sup> Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

<sup>268</sup> Gregory v. Higgins (1858) 10 Cal. 339.

<sup>269</sup> Hughes v. Powers (1897) 99 Tenn. 480, 42 S. W. 1; Kimbrough v. Hornsby (1904) 113 Tenn. 605, 84 S. W. 613.

<sup>270</sup> Yocum v. White (1873) 36 Iowa, 288.

<sup>271</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 73 Am. Dec. 257.

privies to them is hornbook law. And so it has been asserted by one court of last resort that the indorsee of a negotiable promissory note having acquired by its transfer a legal title to it and the debt it represents cannot be deprived of his right of property in it by any judgment or proceeding against the maker and the payee to which he was no party.<sup>272</sup>

There are decisions that the maker of a negotiable promissory note who has been charged upon it as garnishee of the payee when he has been sued upon it by one who claims ownership of the paper as an indorsee before maturity is entitled to have the garnishment creditor brought into the action to litigate the question whether he or the plaintiff is entitled to the proceeds of the note, and to enjoin the collection until that question shall be determined;<sup>273</sup> and legislation has been enacted making provision in case of attachment of debts due by commercial negotiable paper for bringing into the trustee proceeding persons who claim to own and hold the paper by transfers from the defendants.<sup>274</sup>

The right of the garnishee of a debt due upon negotiable promissory notes known to be held under a claim of ownership by another than the defendant in the garnishment to go into chancery and file a bill of interpleader against the garnisor and the claimant has been recognized and upheld.<sup>275</sup>

But it has been held that after the maker of a promissory note has suffered judgment to go against him as a garnishee indebted thereon to the payee when he well knew that the defendant had transferred the paper to a third person, it is too late for him to get relief by a bill in equity to interplead the judgment creditor with the holder of the note.<sup>276</sup>

c. Duties.

It is the duty of a garnishee to make disclosure. He is obligated fully and fairly to state all that he knows concerning his indebtedness to the defendant.<sup>277</sup>

It is his further duty to take the proper steps to protect himself against duplicating his liability. If he is protected by statute from paying his debt twice, he must seasonably invoke its protective proceedings to obtain its benefits.<sup>278</sup> If he would avoid a double payment he must protect himself by setting up the facts and taking the proper proceedings to escape.<sup>279</sup> If the attached debt is evidenced by the garnishee's negotiable promissory note he should, in addition, before allowing the attaching creditor to take judgment against him, insist upon proof that his obligation had not passed to a stranger before it matured, but that it was still owned and held by the defendant.<sup>280</sup>

If a garnishee indebted upon negotiable commercial paper omits in due season to claim the benefit of a statute enacted to afford him protection against duplicate liability, he must bear the consequent loss.<sup>281</sup>

It is also the duty of a debtor garnisheed on account of his negotiable promissory note to act in good faith

<sup>272</sup> Garrott v. Jaffray (1874) 10 Bush (Ky.) 413.

<sup>273</sup> Dobbin v. Wybrants (1848) 3 Tex. 457; Westmoreland v. Miller (1852) 8 Tex. 168; Iglehart v. Moore (1858) 21 Tex. 501; Iglehart v. Mills (1858) 21 Tex. 545.

<sup>274</sup> Horn v. Thompson (1855) 31 N. H. 562; Thompson v. Carroll (1857) 36 N. H. 21.

<sup>275</sup> Briant v. Reed (1862) 14 N. J. Eq. 271; Fitch v. Brower (1887) 42 N. J. Eq. 300, 11 Atl. 330.

In the first of these cases it was the opinion of the court of chancery that, irrespective of whether the right of an indorsee of a negotiable promissory note transferred for value before maturity, and taken in good faith, is or is not superior to the right of an attaching creditor of the payee who had served a garnishee process on the maker before the paper was transferred, to recover the amount due thereon, there is doubt enough concerning the priority of their conflicting claims to make it unsafe for the garnishee to elect between them which he will pay, and, hence, to escape the hazard L.R.A.1918C.

of a double payment, the garnishee is entitled to pay his debt into court and be discharged through a bill of interpleader.

In the second of these cases the first one was approved, and the court added that though it should be conceded that a negotiable promissory note transferred before maturity to a bona fide holder for value was not subject to an attachment against the payee even if served prior to the transfer, nevertheless, as the attaching creditor has a right where he has garnisheed the maker in advance to contest the good faith of the subsequent transfer of the paper, the garnishee is put in jeopardy of being compelled to pay his note twice, and should be spared that danger by a bill of interpleader.

<sup>276</sup> Yarborough v. Thompson (1844) 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 291, 41 Am. Dec. 626.

<sup>277</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (Tex.) supra.

<sup>278</sup> Yocum v. White (Iowa) supra.

<sup>279</sup> Peck v. Maynard (1849) 20 N. H. 183.

<sup>280</sup> Ormond v. Moye (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 564.

<sup>281</sup> Yocum v. White (Iowa) supra.

toward the plaintiff in garnishment. A garnishee who conspires with the payee to defeat creditors forfeits his claim to protection.<sup>282</sup> He will be held liable if he co-operates with the payee to defraud the latter's creditors.<sup>283</sup>

But mere knowledge on the maker's part that the purpose of the payee in obtaining a negotiable promissory note was to dispose of it in fraud of creditors, if the paper was made and delivered for a just debt, and the maker did nothing actively to promote the payee's fraudulent design, will not subject him to liability as garnishee while his obligation is outstanding and current.<sup>284</sup>

XII. Answer in garnishment of negotiable paper.

A garnishee can be charged only on his own answer.<sup>285</sup> The answer is evidence against him.<sup>286</sup> The facts set up in it, if not contradicted, determine the garnishee's liability.<sup>287</sup> The averments in it, if not put in issue by the attaching plaintiff, must be taken as admitted.<sup>288</sup> The answer is presumptively conclusive.<sup>289</sup> It is conclusive respecting the indebtedness when no statute provides otherwise.<sup>290</sup> And it is evidence against the plaintiff until outweighed by competent testimony.<sup>291</sup>

In order that a garnishee indebted upon a promissory note may avail himself of the defense that it is subject to be transferred before maturity to a bona fide holder for value, without notice, it must affirmatively be disclosed by his answer that the note was negotiable.<sup>292</sup> An answer in such a case, averring that a negotiable promissory note made and delivered by the garnishee was indorsed before maturity by the payee and afterwards by two other persons, and was then held for collection by a named bank, sufficiently shows a want of indebtedness to the payee, and is good to prevent judgment on the garnishment.<sup>293</sup> A maker of a negotiable promissory note served as garnishee of the payee, who answers according to the fact, that he made and delivered such note and is indebted upon it to the holder, and that he has been notified of its negotiation to a third person, cannot be condemned to pay it to the garnishor.<sup>294</sup> In the case of garnishment by service on the maker of negotiable promissory notes supposedly belonging to the defendant, an answer of the garnishee that he does not know by whom his notes are held has been decided to be sufficient to prevent judgment against him because his debt upon such notes is owing only to whosoever may happen to own them when they mature.<sup>295</sup>

An admission by a garnishee that he made and delivered to the defendant a negotiable promissory note which is outstanding and not yet due is not an admission of indebtedness upon it to the defendant.<sup>296</sup> An answer of a garnishee

<sup>282</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>283</sup> Enos v. Tuttle (1819) 3 Conn. 27.

<sup>284</sup> Wood v. Bodwell (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 268; Collins v. Smith (1859) 12 Gray (Mass.) 431; Willis v. Heath (1889) 75 Tex. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 876, 12 S. W. 971.

<sup>285</sup> Daniel v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403.

<sup>286</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 75 Am. Dec. 257.

<sup>287</sup> Comstock v. Farnum (1806) 2 Mass. 96.

<sup>288</sup> Davis v. Pawlette (1854) 3 Wis. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 690.

<sup>289</sup> Fay v. Sears (1872) 111 Mass. 154.

<sup>290</sup> Huff v. Mills (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 42; Turner v. Armstrong (1836) 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412.

<sup>291</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (Tex.) supra.

<sup>292</sup> Gatchell v. Foster (1891) 94 Ala. 622, 10 So. 434.

<sup>293</sup> Wohl v. First Nat. Bank (1908) 154 Ala. 332, 46 So. 231.

<sup>294</sup> Yarborough v. Thompson (1844) 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 291, 41 Am. Dec. 626.

<sup>295</sup> Sheets v. Culver (1840) 14 La. 449, 33 Am. Dec. 593. In that case the court supported its decision by reasoning thus: L.R.A.1918C.

"As to notes indorsed in blank which circulate and pass from hand to hand by mere delivery, it has never been nor can it be pretended that any notice of transfer is necessary. If, then, no such notice is ever given, how is a garnishee who has issued his promissory note indorsed in blank to know in whose hands it happens to be at the precise moment when he is called upon to answer interrogatories? And if, perchance, he were to know that his note was still the property of the defendant, and were so to declare it, could such a proceeding restrain its negotiability? Could it affect the rights of a bona fide holder? Surely not. The ownership of negotiable paper is incessantly varying before its maturity, and the obligation of the maker of such instruments is not to pay any particular person, but the holder at maturity, whoever he may be. Thus it is obvious that the garnishee in this case could give no other answer than that he has made, and it is equally obvious that, by pursuing this course, the plaintiffs have attached no property out of which their judgment can be satisfied." Ibid.

<sup>296</sup> Littlefield v. Hodge (1859) 6 Mich. 326.

that he made and delivered to the defendant his negotiable promissory note or bill single, but that he does not know who holds it, neither admits an indebtedness to the defendant nor entitles the attaching creditor to a judgment.<sup>297</sup>

But an answer by a garnishee indebted upon an overdue promissory note, pleading ignorance as to whether or not the defendant still held and owned it when the process was served, is not conclusive to shut out further inquiry.<sup>298</sup>

And an answer by the maker of a negotiable promissory note as garnishee upon process in favor of an execution creditor of the payee, setting up that his note had been transferred to another holder before its maturity, may be traversed and proof may be received to show that the transfer was made without consideration, of purpose to hinder, delay, and defraud the defendant's creditors.<sup>299</sup>

Suppose the maker of a negotiable promissory note admits in his answer as garnishee that he is indebted in the sum due upon it to the defendant in garnishment, what is the effect of such an admission?

It cannot affect the rights of a prior indorsee who is the holder of the paper in good faith; no admission that the garnishee makes can conclude him.<sup>300</sup>

The effect upon himself may be disastrous.

The maker of a negotiable promissory note who should, in answer to a garnishment, admit without reserve or qualification an indebtedness upon it to the defendant, would, it has been said, do so at his peril, and would certainly render himself liable as garnishee.<sup>301</sup> An answer of a garnishee acknowledging an indebtedness to the defendant at the time of the service of the garnishment upon an unpaid, overdue, negotiable security which had not been transferred, makes him liable to the attaching creditor.<sup>302</sup> A maker of a negotiable promissory note who suffers a judgment to be taken against him as garnishee of the payee knowing that the paper has been transferred to a stranger puts himself in the position of a defendant who, by failing to set up his defense in an action, permits judgment to go against him by default.<sup>303</sup>

If a maker of a negotiable promissory note which the payee had transferred without his knowledge before it matured to a bona fide holder for value, negligently, ignorantly, or inadvertently upon a subsequent garnishment admits being indebted to the payee, and allows judgment to be taken against him as garnishee, he alone must bear the consequences, and cannot transfer his loss to the indorsee of the paper.<sup>304</sup> If, in such a case, the garnishee fails to insist upon either a surrender of the paper or indemnity against it, he must pay twice if it turns out that his note had passed to a bona fide holder for value before it matured.<sup>305</sup>

The unfortunate garnishee who may have answered and admitted his indebtedness to a defendant upon his negotiable commercial obligation, and then discovered later that it had been transferred to and was held by a stranger, has not invariably been mulcted by double payment; on occasions the door has been held open for his escape.

Should the maker of a negotiable promissory note who has been garnished as debtor thereon to a supposed holder learn and be able to show before he pays it that it does not belong to the defendant, but to another person, he may, it is said, take steps (presumably efficient) to arrest the garnishment proceedings.<sup>306</sup> Again, it has been held that although a garnishee indebted upon a negotiable promissory note may have answered the garnishment and admitted an indebtedness to the defendant, nevertheless, if, in fact, such note had been previously negotiated to a bona fide holder, a payment to him will protect the garnishee against the garnishment plaintiff.<sup>307</sup>

And if a maker of a negotiable promissory note who had admitted in his answer as garnishee his debt upon it to the defendant discovers before final

<sup>297</sup> Huff v. Mills and Turner v. Armstrong (Tenn.) supra; Matheny v. Hughes (1873) 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

<sup>298</sup> Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge (1898) 116 Mich. 101, 72 Am. St. Rep. 507, 74 N. W. 310.

<sup>299</sup> Quarles v. Porter (1848) 12 Mo. 76.

<sup>300</sup> Lorain v. Lorain Sav. & Bkg. Co. (1895) 2 Ohio N. P. 108, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 84.

<sup>301</sup> Cross v. Haldeman (1854) 15 Ark. 200.
L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>302</sup> Daniel v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403.

<sup>303</sup> Yarborough v. Thompson (Miss.) supra.

<sup>304</sup> Myers v. Beeman (1848) 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 116.

<sup>305</sup> Shuler v. Bryson (1871) 65 N. C. 201; Brittain v. Anderson (1874) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 316.

<sup>306</sup> Colcord v. Daggett (1853) 18 Mo. 557.

<sup>307</sup> Long v. Johnson (1884) 74 Ga. 4.

judgment that it had been negotiated and transferred to another holder, he may, it has been said, apply to the court for leave to set up such negotiation and transfer, and should be given an opportunity to prove it.<sup>308</sup> Notwithstanding the garnishee admitted his indebtedness to the defendant in his answer to the garnishment, and had a judgment taken against him, if, in point of fact, his note had previously been indorsed over to a bona fide holder before it became due, he is held to be entitled to have the judgment set aside and to amend his answer so as to set up the negotiation and transfer of the paper upon making a prompt application to the court during the same term.<sup>309</sup>

But such a garnishee is held bound to diligence in applying for relief. If he delays his application until after the term has expired at which the judgment was taken against him on his admission of indebtedness in his answer, he is considered to be too late; he is held to be not then entitled to have the judgment vacated upon proof that when he answered he was ignorant that his note had been negotiated and no longer belonged to the defendant.<sup>310</sup>

An attaching creditor has been held entitled to a judgment against a garnishee upon his answer which averred that he had made and delivered to the defendant his bill single, and did not allege that it had been negotiated to another, but merely alleged that the defendant had sued him upon it, and that the action was pending yet.<sup>311</sup>

XIII. Effect of garnishee's payment to holder of negotiable paper.

A debt evidenced by a negotiable promissory note held by a defendant, but discharged and extinguished by the payment of money and property accepted as full satisfaction, is not a subject of garnishment.<sup>312</sup> Neither is a debt evidenced by negotiable promissory notes made and delivered to the defendant, but transferred by him before maturity to a third person, and collected by him from the maker.<sup>313</sup> The payment of a negotiable promissory note by the maker to a purchaser in good faith, for value, before it fell due, is a protection against garnishment;<sup>314</sup> but such a payment is no protection when it is made to one who acquired the paper by indorsement after maturity.<sup>315</sup> It is no defense to the maker of a negotiable instrument who was served with process of garnishment in an action against one who held and owned it when it matured that he afterwards paid it to a subsequent indorsee.<sup>316</sup>

The opinion was expressed in an early Massachusetts case that a trustee who, in good faith, should make a payment upon or give a negotiable note or acceptance for an attached debt before he had any actual notice of the attachment, although it might have been legally but not personally served, would doubtless be protected against liability as trus-

<sup>308</sup> Cross v. Haldeman (Ark.) supra.

<sup>309</sup> Patterson Produce & Provision Co. v. Wilkes (1907) 1 Ga. App. 430, 57 S. E. 1047.

<sup>310</sup> A. J. Harwi Hardware Co. v. Klippert (1903) 67 Kan. 743, 74 Pac. 254.

<sup>311</sup> Huff v. Mills (1834) 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 42, supra. After the court in its opinion in this case had said that the question whether or not a debt secured by negotiable paper could be attached by service on the maker as garnishee depended upon the answer, which, in Tennessee, was conclusive, and added that if he answered that he had executed his negotiable note or bill single, and knew not where it was or who held it, a judgment could not be taken against him because the answer disclosed no indebtedness to the defendant, it went on to say that if the garnishee answered that he had executed his negotiable bill single for the debt, and had been sued upon it by the defendant, and it had not been assigned, to his knowledge, he would then be liable as garnishee to a judgment. To support this statement the court cited the case of Hightower v. Smith, decided at Nashville in 1831, the opinion in which, according to the L.R.A.1918C.

reporter's note, reads: "We have examined with solicitude to see if there was any way of excepting out of the general law relating to garnishments those [cases] where the indebtedness arose upon negotiable paper. We are aware of the hardships that have arisen and that may arise under a determination that reaches by garnishment such as have given and have outstanding negotiable paper. But there is no way to escape from it. The acts make no exception and we can make none. The remedy for the evil is with the legislature."

<sup>312</sup> Greer v. Powell (1867) 1 Bush (Ky.) 489.

<sup>313</sup> Burton v. Wynne (1876) 55 Ga. 615.

<sup>314</sup> Ibid.; and also Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>315</sup> Exchange Bank v. Gulick (1880) 24 Kan. 359.

The payment after garnishment of commercial paper to the defendant or his general assignee for creditors is no defense to the garnishee. Cleneay v. Junction R. Co. (1866) 26 Ind. 375.

tee;<sup>316</sup> and, conformably, afterwards in the same state it was held that a debtor of a defendant in attachment who, without notice of the service of trustee process, had paid his debt in part in cash and the remainder by making and delivering his negotiable promissory note in good faith, could not be charged as trustee.<sup>317</sup>

XIV. Effect of renewing negotiable paper under garnishment.

The opinion that efforts to avoid or defeat attachments and garnishments of debts due upon negotiable commercial paper by renewing it with like paper are doomed to failure appears to prevail without dissent.

The maker of promissory notes under garnishment before they have matured cannot escape liability as garnishee by renewing them as they severally mature with other negotiable notes, the holders of which are unknown.<sup>318</sup>

A garnishment of the maker of a negotiable promissory note as the debtor of the payee cannot be defeated by a subsequent transfer of it before maturity to a new holder, and its after-surrender and cancelation upon the making and delivery of a new note, payable to the indorsee or his order.<sup>319</sup>

In one case the maker of a negotiable promissory note who had innocently and in entire good faith taken it up with another, payable to an indorsee who received the original without giving a consideration, and to further a scheme of the payee to defraud his creditors, notwithstanding the renewal note had been paid after an action had been brought upon it by the holder in another state, but after trustee process had been served on the maker as the first payee's debtor, was charged as trustee and compelled to pay a second time.<sup>320</sup>

XV. Garnishment as a protection to garnishee against claim of indorsee of negotiable paper.

The reason for exempting the maker of a negotiable promissory note from garnishment as a debtor of the payee fails whenever a judgment against him as garnishee will protect him from liability upon his obligation to a later holder.<sup>321</sup>

In the absence of a protective statute, such a judgment will not protect the garnishee if his note is transferred before it has matured, to an innocent holder for value, and he cannot be charged as trustee of the payee, whether he has or has not knowledge of the transfer of the paper.<sup>322</sup>

A judgment against the maker of a negotiable promissory note out in circulation as garnishee of the payee or his indorsee is no protection to him when a later holder sues him for the debt,<sup>323</sup> even when, in ignorance that his note has been negotiated, he admits being indebted thereon to the defendant in garnishment, and thus suffers a judgment.<sup>324</sup> A judgment against a garnishee as defendant's debtor upon negotiable paper is no defense to him in an action by a subsequent holder of it, who acquired it before the garnishment, when the garnishee neglected to invoke the benefit of a statute which required the delivery of the paper to him, or that he be exonerated or indemnified before he should be made liable.<sup>325</sup>

In respect of commercial paper negotiated before maturity to a bona fide holder for value, it may be said to be virtually undisputed, where no statute interferes, that garnishment is no protection whatever to the maker when the holder calls upon him to pay his obligation.

It was indeed held in an early case in Maryland that a judgment condemning the maker of a negotiable promissory note which had been attached as a credit belonging to the defendant to pay as garnishee protected him from liability in a subsequent action by a later holder of the paper, who had acquired it before maturity and without notice of the garnishment,<sup>326</sup> but afterwards that case

<sup>316</sup> Williams v. Marston (1825) 3 Pick. (Mass.) 65.

<sup>317</sup> Robinson v. Hall (1841) 3 Met. (Mass.) 301.

<sup>318</sup> Leslie v. Merrill (1877) 58 Ala. 322.

<sup>319</sup> Girard v. Cyrs (1896) 5 B. C. 45.

<sup>320</sup> Wheeler v. Winn (1865) 38 Vt. 125.

The court went upon the theory that the original payee continued the beneficial owner of the renewal note, and that the payment of it to the fraudulent indorsee before he recovered a judgment was a voluntary one: hence, the debt was at the mercy of the trustee process.

L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>321</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (1886) 66 Tex. 156, 18 S. W. 350.

<sup>322</sup> Hinsdill v. Safford (1839) 11 Vt. 309; Little v. Hale (1839) 11 Vt. 482.

<sup>323</sup> Denham v. Pogue (1868) 20 La. Ann. 195.

<sup>324</sup> Myers v. Beeman (1848) 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 116.

<sup>325</sup> Yocum v. White (1873) 36 Iowa, 288.

<sup>326</sup> Somerville v. Brow (1847) 5 Gill (Md.) 399.

was virtually overruled and the contrary was decided.<sup>327</sup>

It is different in cases of garnishment of debts due upon negotiable paper held by the defendants when it matures, and not transferred until overdue and dishonored. The right to charge the makers of such paper as garnishees of the payees in such cases is said to be generally recognized.<sup>328</sup>

A maker of an overdue promissory note who has disclosed an indebtedness thereon to the defendant in garnishment, and, without waiting for judgment, has paid the plaintiff the debt, is fully protected thereby against the claim of an indorsee after maturity of the paper, if he had no notice of his transfer,<sup>329</sup> and a judgment in the garnishment proceedings against the garnishee affords him a good defense in a later action upon his note by a holder who did not acquire it until after it was past due.<sup>330</sup>

Garnisheeing the maker of a negotiable promissory note as debtor of the payee after he has had notice that the note had been transferred to another has no effect upon the right of the indorsee to recover upon it, and therefore a judgment against the garnishee, taken afterwards, affords him no defense when the indorsee sues him on the note.<sup>331</sup>

A judgment against the maker of a negotiable promissory note as trustee of the payee is no protection to him in New Hampshire against the claim of an indorsee who was not given the notice of the trustee proceedings required by the statute of that state.<sup>332</sup>

In Ohio an attachment of a debt due upon a negotiable promissory note in justice's court, and an order of the justice directing the maker of it to pay the sum due upon it to the plaintiff, is not conclusive. It only confers upon the plaintiff a right of action against the garnishee, who may show in defense that before the garnishment, or before the note became due, it was indorsed over to a bona fide holder for value, and that he is entitled to the proceeds.<sup>333</sup>

In the Dominion of Canada it appears to be the law that a payment by a garnishee of the sum owing by him upon an overdue negotiable promissory note to an attaching creditor will constitute a good defense and protect him in a later action brought by an indorsee of such note.<sup>334</sup>

XVI. Right of indorsee of negotiable paper to recover from garnisher money collected by garnishment.

Privity of contract and estate is wholly lacking between an indorsee of a negotiable instrument and a creditor of a prior holder; hence there is difficulty in perceiving a logical ground upon which to rest a right of the former to recover of the latter money collected by means of an attachment or garnishment of the debt due upon such an instrument from the obligor. Jurists have, however, differed in opinion respecting the existence of such right. It has been held that the holder and indorsee of a negotiable promissory note transferred to him in good faith, for value, and before maturity, cannot, in an action for money had and received to his use, recover from a creditor of the payee the money that he collected thereon from the maker upon garnishee process, for the reason that his right to recover upon the note from the maker was unaffected and unimpaired by the garnishment and payment under it;<sup>335</sup> but, again, it has been held that a creditor of the payee of a negotiated promissory note who collected his debt from the maker by means of a gar-the plaintiff in the garnishment without waiting for a judicial order or judgment directing him to do so, and the conclusion of the court rested upon the view that negotiable instruments were not within the statute.

The opposite doctrine was adopted later by the Canadian supreme court in Roblee v. Rankin (1884) 11 Can. S. C. 137, where it was held that an overdue negotiable promissory note, was subject to garnishment under the statute, and, if attached and paid by the garnishee, certainly after a judicial order, and in compliance therewith, such payment would and did constitute a complete defense in a subsequent action upon the note, brought by an indorsee after maturity.

<sup>335</sup> Corey v. Webber (1893) 96 Mich. 357, 55 N. W. 982.

<sup>327</sup> Cruett v. Jenkins (1880) 53 Md. 224.

<sup>328</sup> Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (Tex.) supra.

<sup>329</sup> Somers v. Losey (1882) 48 Mich. 294, 12 N. W. 188.

<sup>330</sup> Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186; Daniels v. Rawlings (1846) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 403; Thompson v. Gainesville Nat. Bank (Tex.) supra; Hinsdill v. Safford (Vt.) supra.

<sup>331</sup> Yarborough v. Thompson (1844) 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 291, 41 Am. Dec. 626.

<sup>332</sup> Horn v. Thompson (1855) 31 N. H. 562; Thompson v. Carroll (1857) 36 N. H. 21.

<sup>333</sup> Secor v. Witter (1883) 39 Ohio St. 218.

<sup>334</sup> The contrary was held in Rankin v. McFadyen (1881) 2 Pr. Edw. Isl. 461, in which the garnishee had paid his note to L.R.A.1918C.

nishment to which the holder by a previous transfer was not a party was liable over to such holder for the sum received from the garnishee, in a subsequent action.<sup>336</sup>

At one time, in Missouri, the latter ruling agreed with the views of several judges.<sup>337</sup> Later, however, the doctrine of accountability and responsibility of an attaching creditor for money collected by garnishment from the maker of commercial paper to the holder thereof was repudiated by the courts of that state.<sup>338</sup>

In New Hampshire, where an attaching creditor through trustee process had collected from the maker the amount of a negotiable promissory note without strict compliance with the state statute in respect of notifying a later holder of the paper of the proceedings, so that the judgment against the trustee was erroneous and gave him no protection in a subsequent suit upon the note by an indorsee, the court adjudged the attaching creditor to make restitution with costs, to the end that the maker might not be compelled to pay his note twice.<sup>339</sup>

XVII. Legal presumptions in garnishments of negotiable paper.

The courts indulge certain presumptions in cases where debts due upon negotiable paper have been attached or garnisheed.

It is presumed that a negotiable promissory note sued upon by an indorsee was transferred to its holder before it matured, in the usual course of business.<sup>340</sup> In the absence of all evidence to the contrary, a negotiable promissory note in the possession of an indorsee is presumed to have been indorsed and transferred to him at or about its date.<sup>341</sup> In an action upon a negotiable promissory note by a plaintiff having possession of and asserting his property in it, there is a presumption in his favor, as against a garnishment creditor of a prior holder, that he became the owner of the note before it matured.<sup>342</sup>

This presumption is not a strong one, and slight suspicious circumstances are sufficient to overcome and rebut it;<sup>343</sup> but, nevertheless, the garnishor is bound to overcome it by proof that the defendant in garnishment owned the paper when it fell due and when the process was served.<sup>344</sup>

The New York court of appeals has declared that there is no presumption that a negotiable instrument attached before maturity was held by and belonged to the attachment defendant, but that the fact must be proved;<sup>345</sup> but the supreme court of Illinois is authority for the statement that while it must appear, to warrant a judgment against a garnishee indebted upon a promissory note payable to the defendant, and attached before its maturity, that it had not been transferred to another holder before it fell due, there is, nevertheless, a presumption that the payee continued to hold it until it matured, where no cir-

<sup>336</sup> Garrott v. Jaffray (1874) 10 Bush (Ky.) 413.

<sup>337</sup> Tompkins, J., who, in Scott v. Hill (1831) 3 Mo. 88, 22 Am. Dec. 462, dissented from the conclusion of the court that an attaching creditor in a garnishment of the maker of a negotiable promissory note indorsed to the defendant was not entitled to judgment against the garnishee until he proved that the defendant was the holder of the paper when the attachment was served, took the ground that the judgment would protect the garnishee against the claim of an indorsee because the latter might come in and interplead under the attachment, or, if he had no notice of it, might have his action afterwards against the attaching creditor to recover money had and received to his use.

The statute, said the court, in Quarles v. Porter (1848) 12 Mo. 76 (referring to the act under which, as construed by it, debts due by makers of negotiable paper were attachable to satisfy judgments against the payees), prescribes no mode by which an assignee can be brought before the court and have his rights litigated; but, as the judgment is not conclusive against him unless he has notice and chooses to come in and interplead, he would have a right at any subsequent time before the money was paid over to the attaching creditor to arrest the payment, or, after payment, a right to his action to recover it back; we apprehend no very serious injury could result to him.

Again, according to the court in Colcord v. Daggett (1853) 18 Mo. 557, a creditor of a defendant who, to all appearances, was the owner and holder of a negotiable promissory note which had been collected from the maker by means of garnishee process, would be liable over to the true owner and holder should he be another person.

<sup>338</sup> Funkhouser v. How (1856) 24 Mo. 44; Dickey v. Fox (1856) 24 Mo. 217.

<sup>339</sup> Thompson v. Carroll (1857) 36 N. H. 25.

<sup>340</sup> Hill v. Kroft (1857) 29 Pa. 186.

<sup>341</sup> Mason v. Noonan (1859) 7 Wis. 609.

<sup>342</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (1858) 22 Tex. 230, 73 Am. Dec. 257.

<sup>343</sup> Hill v. Kroft (Pa.) supra.

<sup>344</sup> Bassett v. Garthwaite (Tex.) supra.

<sup>345</sup> Bills v. National Park Bank (1882) 89 N. Y. 343.

cumstances indicate and no testimony is adduced to prove the contrary.<sup>346</sup>

XVIII. Conclusion.

Little need be said in conclusion. One constantly should keep in mind that any conclusion may be disturbed, profoundly modified, or even reversed, by pertinent local legislation. Disregarding for the nonce all statutes that so operate, it may be asserted with some confidence that the following statements are supported by the weight of authority: Debts owing a defendant, evidenced by negotiable paper due or to grow due by mere efflux of time, ordinarily are liable to garnishment. If the paper is immature and held by a bona fide indorsee for value, garnishment will not reach the debt it represents. Debts represented by negotiable paper under garnishment escape the process when the paper is transferred before maturity to a bona fide indorsee for value. Overdue negotiable paper under garnishment passes to such an indorsee subject to the garnishment. If the plaintiff in garnishment can successfully establish mala fides or want of consideration in the negotiation of the paper, he can maintain the supremacy of the garnishment lien against the indorsee whether the garnishment preceded or followed the negotiation, and whether the transfer was made before or after the paper matured. An unassailable title to negotiable paper transferred either before or after it falls due is acquired by a bona fide indorsee for value in the usual course of business, and his title as against the lien of a previous garnishment, if acquired before the maturity of the paper, is superior, but inferior and subject to the garnishment if not acquired until the paper was past due. The garnishee of a debt evidenced by negotiable paper is entitled to every possible protection afforded in law against liability to pay his debt twice, but he is bound to diligence in invoking and securing the protective aid of the courts.

Whether the claim of a bona fide indorsee of overdue negotiable paper is superior or subordinate to a garnishment served after he acquired it, but before he notified the maker of the transfer to him, the courts are not agreed. Although it be conceded, in conformity to the common-law rule respecting assignments of choses in action where the assignee has neglected to give notice to the debtor of the assignment, that the maker of an overdue negotiable obligation known to have been held by the payee when it fell due, who has had no notice of any transfer of it to another, would be fully protected if he should pay it to the payee or to the plaintiff in a garnishment in all respects regular, against the indorsee's claim, this does not settle the rival rights of indorsee and garnishor, because, when the paper was negotiated, the maker ceased to be indebted to the payee and became the debtor of the new holder, whether he knew it or not, and garnishment reaches no debts evidenced by negotiable paper that are not owing to the defendant. The rule of the common law was obviously made to protect the debtor from duplicating a payment made in good faith in discharge of his debt. The extension of the rule to give an advantage to a creditor of the creditor to which otherwise he would not be entitled seems unwarrantable. J. B. G.

<sup>346</sup> Snider v. Ridgeway (1869) 49 Ill. 522.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

HENRY M. JONES et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
CITY OF PORTLAND.

(245 U. S. 217, 62 L. ed. —, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112.)

Constitutional law — municipal taxation — establishing coal and fuel yard.

Municipal taxation to raise the money necessary to enable the municipality to establish and maintain a permanent coal and fuel yard for the purpose of selling wood, coal, and fuel to its inhabitants without financial profit, conformably to state legislation purporting to be passed in the public interest, and so declared to be by the highest court of the state, cannot be said to deny the taxpayers the protection which the constitutional guaranty of due process of law affords against the taking of their property for uses that are private.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. 6, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 10, 1917.)

Note. — The right of a municipal corporation to engage in an enterprise generally regarded as of a private character, including the sale of coal, is discussed in the notes to Holton v. Camilla, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 116, and Laughlin v. Portland, 51 L.R.A.1918C.

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1148; and see later cases Union Ice & Coal Co. v. Ruston, L.R.A. 1915B, 859; Andrews v. South Haven, L.R.A.1916A, 908; and Milligan v. Miles City, L.R.A.1916C, 395.

ERROR to the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine to review a decree sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a bill filed to enjoin the establishment of a municipal coal and fuel yard. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Eben Winthrop Freeman, for plaintiffs in error:

Taxation for a use not public is invalid.

Nichols, Taxn. in Mass. 1913, p. 47, note 2; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Re Tuthill, 163 N. Y. 133, 49 L.R.A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574, 57 N. E. 303; Brannon, 14th Amend. 1901, p. 160; Cooley, Const. Lim. 696 et seq.; Gray, Limitations Taxing Power, §§ 169 et seq.; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185.

What is or is not a public use is a question of general jurisprudence which the Federal courts will determine for themselves.

McGehee, Due Process of Law, p. 230; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 159, 41 L. ed. 369, 388, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56.

The conduct of private business is not a public purpose.

1 Cooley, Taxn. 1903, p. 206; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L.R.A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245; Brooks v. Brooklyn, 146 Iowa, 136, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 425, 124 N. W. 868; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 687, 106 N. W. 208; Opinion of Justices, 155 Mass. 601, 15 L.R.A. 809, 30 N. E. 1142, 182 Mass. 610, 60 L.R.A. 592, 66 N. E. 25; Pond, Pub. Utilities, 1913, §§ 58, 61; State ex rel. Mueller v. Thompson, 149 Wis. 488, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 339, 137 N. W. 20, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 774; State v. Nelson County, 1 N. D. 88, 8 L.R.A. 283, 26 Am. St. Rep. 609, 45 N. W. 33; Geneseo v. Geneseo Natural Gas, Coal, Oil, Salt & Mineral Co. 55 Kan. 358, 40 Pac. 655; Vail v. Attica, 8 Kan. App. 668, 57 Pac. 137; Keen v. Waycross, 101 Ga. 588, 29 S. E. 42; Hayward v. Redcliff, 20 Colo. 33, 36 Pac. 795; Mauldin v. Greenville, 33 S. C. 1, 8 L.R.A. 291, 11 S. E. 434; Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 150 Mich. 310, 121 Am. St. Rep. 625, 113 N. W. 1107; People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; State ex rel. Monnett v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L.R.A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, 47 N. E. 551; State ex rel. Toledo v. Lynch, 88 Ohio St. 71, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 720, 102 N. E. 670, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 949; Bussey v. Gilmore, 3 Me. 191; Opinion of Justices, 58 Me. 590; Libby v. Portland, 105 Me. 370, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 141, 74 Atl. 805, 18 Ann. Cas. 547; Opinion of Justices, 190 Mass. 611, 77 N. E. 820, 204 Mass. 607, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 483, 91 N. E. 405, 211 Mass. 624, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 221, 98 N. E. 611; Wheelock v. Lowell, 196 Mass. 220, 124 Am. St. Rep. 543, 81 N. E. 977, 12 L.R.A. 1918C.

Ann. Cas. 1109; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 696; Judson, Taxn. § 350; Abbott, Pub. Securities, 1913, § 101, note p. 213; Nichols, Taxn. in Mass. p. 49.

Messrs. Carroll S. Chaplin, Guy H. Sturgis, and Henry P. Frank, for defendant in error:

The constitutionality of a legislative enactment is to be presumed until the contrary is shown beyond a reasonable doubt.

Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 614, 43 L. ed. 823, 831, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

The question of a public exigency is a question of fact, and, if the use is public, the determination by the legislature that an exigency exists, and that a proposed law is necessary for the use, benefit, and welfare of the public, is final and conclusive. The legislature is to determine the wisdom, propriety, and necessity of a contemplated use, and whether or not the object in view will be accomplished by the means proposed.

Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Opinion of Justices, 58 Me. 590, 155 Mass. 598, 607, 15 L.R.A. 809, 30 N. E. 1142; Laughlin v. Portland, 111 Me. 499, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1143, 90 Atl. 318, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 784; Talbot v. Judson, 16 Gray, 417; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Livingston County v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 407, 416, 25 L. ed. 1015, 1019.

The nature of the use, whether public or private, is ultimately a judicial question.

Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008.

A public use must subserve some public interest or demand, and be available to all persons alike. It must be such a use as the public needs and requires for its welfare and prosperity, and which, under existing conditions, can best be provided by the government itself.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 768; Weisner v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 100, 21 Am. Rep. 586; Sun Printing & Pub. Asso. v. New York, 152 N. Y. 264, 37 L.R.A. 788, 46 N. E. 499; Gaylord v. Sanitary Dist. 204 Ill. 576, 63 L.R.A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235, 68 N. E. 522; Opinions of Justices, 150 Mass. 597, 8 L.R.A. 487, 24 N. E. 1084; Brown v. Gerald, 100 Me. 372, 70 L.R.A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526, 61 Atl. 785.

One of the requisites of a public use is that existing conditions demand it. These conditions may be new, arising from the advancement of society and the development and growth of new wants necessary for the comfort and welfare of the people, unknown and unnecessary in earlier times.

Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L.R.A. 729, 26 N. E. 1061; Re Tuthill, 36 App. Div. 500, 55 N. Y. Supp. 657; Holton v. Camilla, 134 Ga. 560, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 116, 68 S. E. 472, 20 Ann. Cas. 199; Judson, Taxn. § 346; Laughlin v. Portland, 111 Me. 491, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1143, 90 Atl. 318, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 734; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221; Sun Printing & Pub. Co. v. New York, 8 App. Div. 230, 40 N. Y. Supp. 607.

The establishment and maintenance of a municipal fuel yard under the authority and limitations of the statute in question serves a public demand for heat in the colder latitudes where the people need and require heat for their welfare and prosperity, and is, to this extent, within the accepted definition of a public use.

Laughlin v. Portland, 111 Me. 500, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1143, 90 Atl. 318, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 734; Holton v. Camilla, 134 Ga. 560, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 116, 68 S. E. 472, 20 Ann. Cas. 199; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 396, 32 L. ed. 979, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L.R.A. 729, 26 N. E. 1061; Opinions of Justices, 211 Mass. 624, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 221, 98 N. E. 611, 150 Mass. 595, 8 L.R.A. 487, 24 N. E. 1084; 155 Mass. 607, 15 L.R.A. 809, 30 N. E. 1142, 182 Mass. 611, 60 L.R.A. 592, 66 N. E. 25; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 687, 106 N. W. 208.

Taxation and eminent domain rest substantially on the same foundation, as each implies the taking of private property for the public use.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 715.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act of the legislature of the state of Maine, approved March 19, 1903, § 87, chapter 4, Revised Statutes of Maine 1903, it was provided:

"Any city or town may establish and maintain, within its limits, a permanent wood, coal, and fuel yard, for the purpose of selling, at cost, wood, coal, and fuel to its inhabitants. The term 'at cost' as used herein, shall be construed as meaning without financial profit."

The city of Portland, Maine, voted to establish and maintain within its limits a permanent coal and fuel yard for the purposes of selling at cost wood, coal, and fuel to its inhabitants, and that the money necessary for such purposes be raised by taxation, and that the term "at cost," as used in said vote, should be construed as meaning without financial profit. On February 3, 1913, the common council of the city, at a legal meeting, passed the vote, and on the same date it was passed by the board of aldermen of the city, and on February 4, 1913, the mayor of the city approved it, whereupon it became the vote of the city of Portland. The city voted to appropriate the sum of $1,000, to be devoted to carrying out the purposes of the vote, and the appropriation was passed by the common council, the board of aldermen, and approved by the mayor of the city.

This suit was brought by citizens and taxpayers of Portland in the supreme judicial court of Maine, in equity, to enjoin the establishment of the yard. The supreme judicial court sustained a demurrer to the bill, and dismissed it. 113 Me. 123, 93 Atl. 41. A writ of error brings the case here because of alleged violation of rights secured to the plaintiffs in error by the 14th Amendment. The contention is that the establishment of the municipal wood yard is not a public purpose, that taxation to accomplish that end amounts to the taking of the property of the plaintiffs in error without due process of law.

The decision of the case turns upon the answer to the question whether the taxation is for a public purpose. It is well settled that moneys for other than public purposes cannot be raised by taxation, and that exertion of the taxing power for merely private purposes is beyond the authority of the state. Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455.

The act in question has the sanction of the legislative branch of the state government, the body primarily invested with authority to determine what laws are required in the public interest. That the purpose is a public one has been determined upon full consideration by the supreme judicial court of the state, upon the authority of a previous decision of that court. Laughlin v. Portland, 111 Me. 486, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1143, 90 Atl. 318, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 734.

The attitude of this court towards state legislation purporting to be passed in the public interest, and so declared to be by the decision of the court of last resort of the state passing the act, has often been declared. While the ultimate authority to determine the validity of legislation under the 14th Amendment is rested in this court, local conditions are of such varying character that what is or is not a public use in a particular state is manifestly a matter respecting which local authority, legislative and judicial, has peculiar facilities for securing accurate information. In that view the judgment of the highest court of the state upon what should be deemed a public use in a particular state is entitled to the highest respect. Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 607, 52 L. ed. 637, 641, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008. In Union Lime Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 233 U. S. 211, 58 L. ed. 924, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522, this court declared that a decision of the highest court of the state, declaring a use to be public in its nature, would be accepted unless clearly not well founded, citing Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 160, 41 L. ed. 369, 389, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 369, 49 L. ed. 1085, 1088, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 200 U. S. 527, 531, 50 L. ed. 581, 583, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 203 U. S. 372, 377, 51 L. ed. 231, 236, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. supra. This doctrine was reiterated in O'Neill v. Leamer, 239 U. S. 244, 253, 60 L. ed. 249, 265, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54.

In the case of Laughlin v. Portland, supra, the matter was fully considered by the supreme judicial court of that state. After reviewing the cases which establish the general authority of municipalities in the interest of the public health, convenience, and welfare to make provisions for supplying the inhabitants of such communities with water, light, and heat by means adequate for that purpose, the court came to consider the distinction sought to be made between the cases which sustain the authority of the state to authorize municipal action for the purposes stated, and the one under consideration, because of the fact that, in the instances in which municipal authority had been sustained, the use of the public streets and highways for mains, poles, and wires in the distribution of water, light, and heat had been required under public authority, whereas, in supplying fuel to consumers, under the terms of the law in question, no such permission was essential; the court said (111 Me. 486, 496):

"Let us look at the question from a practical and concrete standpoint. Can it make any real and vital difference and convert a public into a private use that, instead of burning the fuel at the power station to produce the electricity, or at the central heating plant to produce the heat, and then conducting it in the one case by wires and in the other by pipes to the user's home, the coal itself is hauled over the same highway to the same point of distribution? We fail to see it. It is only a different and simpler mode of distribution, and, if the legislature has the power to authorize municipalities to furnish heat to its inhabitants, 'it can do this by any appropriate means which it may think expedient.' The vital and essential element is the character of the service rendered, and not the means by which it is rendered. It seems illogical to hold that a municipality may relieve its citizens from the rigor of cold if it can reach them by pipes or wires placed under or above the highways, but not if it can reach them by teams traveling along the identically same highway. It will be something of a task to convince the ordinarily intelligent citizen that an act of the legislature authorizing the former is constitutional, but one authorizing the latter is unconstitutional beyond all rational doubt. For we must remember that we are considering the existence of the power in the legislature, which is the only question before the court, and not the wisdom of its exercise, which is for the legislature alone."

Answering the objection that sustaining the act in question opens the door to the exercise of municipal authority to conduct other lines of business and commercial activity to the destruction of private business, the court said (111 Me. 500):

"But it is urged, why, if a city can establish a municipal fuel yard, can it not enter upon any kind of commercial business, and carry on a grocery store or a meat market or a bakery. The answer has been already indicated. Such kinds of business do not measure up to either of the accepted tests. When we speak of fuel, we are dealing not with ordinary articles of merchandise for which there may be many substitutes, but with an indispensable necessity of life; and more than this, the commodities mentioned are admittedly, under present economic conditions, regulated by competition in the ordinary channels of private business enterprise. The principle that municipalities can neither invade private liberty nor encroach upon the field of private enterprise should be strictly maintained, as it is one of the main foundations of our prosperity and success. If the case at bar clearly violated that principle, it would be our duty to pronounce the act unconstitutional; but, in our opinion, it does not. The element of commercial enterprise is entirely lacking. The purpose of the act is neither to embark in business for the sake of direct profits (the act provides that fuel shall be furnished at cost), nor for the sake of the indirect gains that may result to purchasers through reduction in price by government competition. It is simply to enable the citizens to be supplied with something which is a necessity in its absolute sense to the enjoyment of life and health, which could otherwise be obtained with great difficulty and at times perhaps not at all, and whose absence would endanger the community as a whole."

Bearing in mind that it is not the function of this court, under the authority of the 14th Amendment, to supervise the legislation of the states in the exercise of the police power beyond protecting against exertions of such authority in the enactment and enforcement of laws of an arbitrary character, having no reasonable relation to the execution of lawful purposes, we are unable to say that the statute now under consideration violates rights of the taxpayer by taking his property for uses which are private.

The authority to furnish light and water by means of municipally owned plants has long been sanctioned as the accomplishment of a public purpose justifying taxation with a view to making provision for their establishment and operation. The right of a municipality to promote the health, comfort, and convenience of its inhabitants by the establishment of a plant for the distribution of natural gas for heating purposes was sustained, and we think properly so, in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L.R.A. 729, 26 N. E. 1061. We see no reason why the state may not, if it sees fit to do so, authorize a municipality to furnish heat by such means as are necessary and such systems as are proper for its distribution. Heat is as indispensable to the health and comfort of the people as is light or water. In any event we are not prepared to say that when a state authorizes a municipality to tax with a view to providing heat at cost to the inhabitants of the city, and that purpose is declared by the highest court of the state to be a public one, that the property of a citizen who is taxed to effect such purpose is taken in violation of rights secured by the Constitution of the United States. As this view decides the questions open to consideration, it follows that the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine must be affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

R. S. ESKRIDGE et al.

v.

WELLINGTON THOMAS

and

TRADERS' NATIONAL BANK OF BUCKHANNON, Appt.

(— W. Va. —, 91 S. E. 7.)

Usury — effect of Negotiable Instruments Law.

1. The act known as the Negotiable Instruments Law does not, by implication or otherwise, repeal, limit, or qualify in any degree or in any particular, § 5, chap. 96, Code 1913 (§ 4164), declaring all contracts for the loan of money at a greater interest rate than now allowed by law void as to such excess.

For other cases, see Usury, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — effect.

2. A contract by statute declared void, because in part usurious, is, as to such usury, a nullity, and, although negotiable in form, no currency in the market and no innocence or ignorance on the part of the holder can impart validity to it.

For other cases, see Usury, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by LYNCH, J.

Note. — For usury as a defense against a bona fide purchaser of a bill or note, see annotation following this case, post, 773. L.R.A.1918C.

Discovery — injunction against action at law.

3. A bill merely praying an injunction to restrain the prosecution of an action at law until a discovery can be had in aid of the defense thereto, also prayed, is purely a bill of discovery, and not one for relief.

For other cases, see Discovery and Inspection, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — discovery — dissolution.

4. An injunction, awarded on such a bill, generally ought not to be dissolved on motion until defendant has a reasonable opportunity to answer the interrogatories propounded to him, or plaintiff a like opportunity to coerce such answer by proper procedure.

For other cases, see Injunction, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — speeding cause.

5. A defendant who answers such a bill may, in lieu of a motion to dissolve the injunction, move for an order to require plaintiff to speed the cause as to a defendant not answering, under penalty of a dismissal thereof or dissolution of the injunction, enforceable thereafter by notice and motion.

For other cases, see Injunction, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Discovery — termination of suit.

6. A bill framed for the purpose of discovery to aid in defense of a law action is limited to that object, and its attainment by an answer to interrogatories operates to end the suit, although the bill also prays for an injunction to restrain temporarily the prosecution of that action.

For other cases, see Discovery and Inspection, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 28, 1916.)

A PPEAL by the defendant Bank from a decree of the Circuit Court for Upshur County overruling a demurrer to a bill seeking discovery, and a motion to dissolve an injunction restraining further prosecution by the bank of an action on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Young & McWhorter, for appellant:

It was error to overrule the demurrer to the bill.

Logan v. Ballard, 61 W. Va. 526, 57 S. E. 143; 1 Barton, Ch. Pr. § 168; Brown v. Swann, 10 Pet. 497, 9 L. ed. 508.

The note is merely "voidable" as to usury, and, therefore; not void in the hands of a holder in due course, for value.

Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Green v. Kemp, 13 Mass. 515, 7 Am. Dec. 169; Weeks v. Bridgman, 159 U. S. 547, 40 L. ed. 255, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235; Dayton v. Nell, 43 Minn. 246, 45 N. W. 231; Breckenridge v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. Marsh. 236, 19 Am. Dec. 71; Cummings v. Powell, 8 Tex. 80; Callis v. Day, 38 Wis. 643; Slocum v. Hooker, 13 Barb. 536; Seylar v. Carson, 69 Pa. 81; Van Shaack v. Robbins, 30 Iowa, 201; Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 403, 40 S. E. 490; Maupin v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 590, 45 S. E. 1003.

A plea of usury is personal to the debtor, and he may or may not interpose the same, at his election.

Chenoweth v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 59 W. Va. 653, 53 S. E. 559.

Messrs. Higginbotham & Cutright for appellees.

Lynch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs made a negotiable note and several renewals of the same instrument payable to Wellington Thomas, who indorsed them in turn to the Traders' National Bank in due course. Neither the date of the transaction out of which the indebtedness originally arose, or of any of the renewals, is disclosed except the last one. On it the indorsee sued the makers and indorser. The former then filed their bill against the plaintiff in that action and the defendant Thomas to enjoin its further prosecution. They allege "usury in said note and the preceding notes and the transaction preceding the execution of the first note," and their lack of knowledge of the "amount of usury in said transaction," and "that it is material to them that said note be purged of the usury therein." Wherefore, "being remediless in the premises save by the aid of a court of equity," they pray L.R.A.1918C.

that defendants "be required to make full, true, and perfect answer to every of the" interrogatories propounded in the bill.

In this manner plaintiffs seek to ascertain from defendants "whether interest has been paid on said note, original note and renewals thereof, above 6 per cent, and, if so, to what extent," and, from Thomas, "whether in the first transaction, before the original note was executed," "there has been paid a greater amount of interest than 6 per cent, and, if so, to what extent."

Upon these allegations, the others being purely formal, the injunction prayed was awarded in vacation. To the bill Thomas has not appeared for any purpose; nor have any proceedings been instituted to compel his attendance. The bank demurred, and, the demurrer being overruled, filed its answer, and therein averred the negotiation of the several notes in due course before maturity, without notice of any defect in the instrument or infirmity in the title of the indorser. These averments, replied to generally, the bank proved by its cashier Graham. By counsel for the parties it was agreed that at the time the original note was discounted, and at the time of the renewals thereof, neither the bank nor any member of its board of directors "had any notice or knowledge of any claim of usury on the part of the plaintiffs as between them and the payee Wellington Thomas." At this stage of the proceeding, the bank moved to dissolve the writ restraining the prosecution of the action at law. This motion the court denied, but modified the vacation order so as to permit the bank to proceed to judgment against Thomas.

The appeal awarded to it can be entertained only by reason of the authority conferred by clause 7, § 1, chap. 135, Code, § 4981, as the order is interlocutory, not final. The demurrer and motion overruled raised precisely the same questions. To these our investigations necessarily are restricted. The facts are involved only incidentally.

It should be remembered that the sole purpose of this suit is to test the conscience of the defendants, that plaintiffs may from them personally extract knowledge or information of the transaction and its sequential results in which they were joint or separate actors. The bill, while praying for general relief, apparently is a pure bill for discovery. It does not contain sufficient averments or prayer to permit the adjudication of the whole subject-matter involved in the law action. The authorities generally hold that a bill making no relief other than discovery is limited to that object, and upon obtaining it by the answer of the defendant the suit is ended. This rule is sustained alike upon authority and principle. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 191; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1483; Mit. Eq. Pl. 16; Hurricane Teleph. Co. v. Mohler, 51 W. Va. 6, 41 S. E. 421. Nor does such a bill become one for relief because it seeks an injunction to stay the action at law until the discovery is obtained. Russell v. Dickeschied, 24 W. Va. 61. What plaintiffs assumed Thomas knew that they did not know, as an aid to their defense in the law action, was the real object prompting this proceeding, and not his admissions in pais. If any such admissions he made, they were available for use upon the trial stayed by the injunctive process.

Plaintiffs evidently were satisfied with the answer of the respondent bank, else they would not have signed the agreed statement of facts. That statement precludes a denial of its verity. It was accepted as true. But they did not by proper procedure require or attempt to require Thomas to answer. Nevertheless, their delay to inaugurate such proceeding did not alone warrant dissolution of the injunction. They could not, from the very nature of the bill, take proof to support its averments; wherefore they were not in default. While Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 667, says a plaintiff must be diligent in his effort to procure the answer of all the defendants upon whom rests the gravamen of the charges contained in the bill, it states the general rule to be that an injunction ought not to be dissolved until all the defendants implicated have answered. Russell v. Dickeschied, supra, applies this general rule to the dissolution of an injunction awarded upon a pure bill of discovery enjoining prosecution of a detinue action, and holds that until the defendant has answered, the injunction ought not to be dissolved. The record before us does not show lack of diligence on the part of the plaintiffs in not taking the necessary steps to coerce a response by Thomas to the interrogatories propounded to him. The injunction was granted March 10th; four days later the Traders' National Bank notified plaintiffs of its purpose to move a dissolution on March 15, 1916; the order refusing to dissolve was entered June 9th of the same year. At the same time, the court ruled upon the question of law raised by the demurrer. By its interposition the defendant challenged the legal sufficiency of the bill. For this delay plaintiffs were not in anywise responsible. They could not know what action the court would take on the demurrer or the motion to dissolve. Wherefore, the time intervening between the entry of the demurrer and the giving of the notice and the action of the court on both virtually operated in justification of plaintiffs' delay during that period. Besides, the defendant that answered was not wholly without a remedy for the default, if any, as by a motion for an order requiring plaintiffs to speed a hearing on penalty of a dismissal of the cause or dissolution of the injunction if thereafter they unduly delayed compliance with that requirement. We think, therefore, the court did not err in refusing to dissolve the injunction.
L.R.A.1918C.

Although meager, the averments of the bill may be deemed and treated as formally sufficient. Section 26, chap. 96, Code (§ 4165), permits any defendant sued on a contract for the loan or forbearance of money at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent to plead the usury in general terms, to which plea the plaintiff shall reply generally, and each party on the trial of that issue may introduce any available evidence that tends to sustain or traverse the existence of usury inhering in the contract in issue. Or the borrower may resort for aid in establishing the usurious character of the contract to § 7 (§ 4166), which gives him the right to exhibit his bill in equity against the lender, and coerce him to state upon oath the money or thing lent and all transactions referable to such loan, and the interest or consideration thereof. These provisions are quite liberal, and perhaps were intended to render unnecessary the usual formal averments required either at law or in equity.

But chiefly it is not the lack of such formality of which the Traders' National Bank complains. To defeat the discovery sought by the bill, it relies in its answer and demurrer upon the construction or interpretation of certain sections of the Negotiable Instruments Law. It is contended that, although § 5, chap. 96 (§ 4164), declares void all contracts for the loan or forbearance of money as to any excess of interest charged above the legal rate, yet, under §§ 52, 55, and 57 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, chapter 98a of the Code (§§ 4223, 4226, 4228), the defendant bank, as a holder in due course, took the instrument relieved of usury, if any, charged on the notes in the original transaction. Under § 52, it contends it was such a holder, because the instrument is complete and regular upon its face, was not overdue when negotiated, and the bank took it in good faith and for value, without notice that it had previously been dishonored, if such was the fact, or of any infirmity in the note or defect in the title of the indorser; that, under § 55, the title of Thomas was not defective, within the meaning of the act, unless he obtained the instrument or any signature thereto by fraud, duress, or other unlawful means, or for an illegal consideration, or in breach of faith or under such circumstances as amount to fraud; and that, if he did so obtain it, respondent, as a holder in due course, took the instrument, by virtue of § 57, "free from any defect of title of prior parties, and free from defenses available to prior parties among themselves, and may enforce payment of the instrument for the full amount thereof against all parties liable thereon."

These sections do, it is true, attempt to afford ample protection to persons purchasing negotiable paper, and to give it such facility of circulation as the exigencies of commercial business may require; indeed, to obviate and avoid every impediment or obstruction that in any substantial degree tends to destroy confidence in instruments of that character. Business enterprises suffer inconvenience from anything that impedes the facile circulation of any medium of exchange with banking institutions or money lenders. Financial emergencies arrest their progress frequently, and require immediate resort for relief to the monetary centers of influence. Business and industrial activities of every character depend in large measure for success upon the readiness with which they can float their bills and notes, checks, and other like instruments common in commercial usage. To meet these trade requirements, to facilitate the movement of capital, and to inspire confidence and correct some defects or deficiencies in the circulation of commercial paper, manifestly were some of the purposes to be subserved by the enactment of the Negotiable Instruments Law.

But, conceding the wholesomeness, materiality, and benign purpose of this legislation, that concession cannot be permitted to violate or ignore other equally beneficent and essential statutory provisions. These the lawmaking branch of the government, not the court, must repeal or amend, if necessary, to suit public convenience. It is not within the power or province of judicial tribunals to say what the law ought to be. Courts exercise a limited authority. They can legitimately inquire only what the legislature intended when it enacted a statute. To them belongs the right of interpretation and construction, to ascertain what the principles governing a given state of facts are, and, when ascertained, to apply the principles to the facts, irrespective of the interests helped or hurt.

Unrepealed and unamended stands an enactment of an earlier date and of equal dignity with the Negotiable Instruments Law. Long ago competent authority declared: "All contracts and assurances made directly or indirectly for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent, L.R.A.1918C.

except where such greater rate is now allowed by law, shall be void as to any excess of interest agreed to be paid above that rate, and no further." Code, § 5, chap. 96.

This legislative declaration, taken from the Code of Virginia, materially altered and amended a yet earlier statute forfeiting both principal and interest where the rate charged exceeded that fixed by law, and a subsequent one forfeiting the interest only. Now the contract or assurance is void only as to the excess of interest above the legal rate.

To bring the note in controversy within the protection of the Negotiable Instruments Act, as contended by the bank, would in effect substitute "voidable" for "void" in § 5, chap. 96. Much competent authority tends to support this argument. Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 145, 27 L. ed. 683, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Weeks v. Bridgman, 159 U. S. 547, 40 L. ed. 255, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Myers v. Kessler, 74 C. C. A. 62, 142 Fed. 730; Gordon v. Levine, 197 Mass. 263, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 243, 125 Am. St. Rep. 361, 83 N. E. 861; Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460, 112 Am. St. Rep. 370, 99 N. W. 399, 4 Ann. Cas. 347. The contrary proposition is upheld in numerous decisions of equally respectable courts. They declare unenforceable by an innocent holder any instrument by statute declared to be void because usurious, or because it arose out of gaming or other transactions in violation of a statute. These are collated in Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, supra. An act or contract so declared to be void has no legal force or effect. It is a nullity, and into it can be injected no vitality, although in some circumstances the conduct of the parties may be such as will, upon equitable principles, operate to estop them to deny they entered into or are bound by it, as where they accept the benefits thereof with knowledge of the infirmity. No currency in the market, and no degree of innocence or ignorance on the part of a holder for value, can impart validity to a negotiable instrument which is declared void by statute because based upon a gambling or usurious consideration. Daniel & D. Neg. Inst. § 221. Speaking of notes made void by statute, the Kentucky court said in Lawson v. First Nat. Bank, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 318, 102 S. W. 324: A statute that makes such notes void "is of a police nature, intended to prevent imposition and fraud. The Negotiable Instruments Act does not repeal this statute in terms nor does it by necessary implication. It has never been the policy of the courts to extend the doctrine of implied repeals further than the evident purpose of the last legislation required. The Negotiable Instruments Statute is a most comprehensive piece of legislation. It goes into minutest detail in dealing with the subjects embraced by it. The whole scope of it is shown to be the dealing with commercial paper, so as to protect innocent purchasers . . . against mere defenses available as between the original parties. It gives such paper currency, free from original defenses. But it applies to paper that might have been obligatory between the parties. But, where the parties were never bound because the law made the note void, as contrary to public policy as expressed in the statutes, the Negotiable Instruments Act does not apply, and ought not to. The prevention of crime is of more importance than the fostering of commerce. The later act should be read in view of its purpose, and not as intending to repeal other statutes passed in the exercise of the police power of the state to suppress crime and fraud."

That is in substance what this court said in Twentieth Street Bank v. Jacobs, 74 W. Va. 525, 82 S. E. 320, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 695, in which it was held that a paper negotiable in form for money lost in gaming is, under § 1, chap. 97, Code (§ 4168), void in the hands of the holder, even though he took it for value, without notice of the character of the consideration.

The obvious purpose and effect in enacting the Negotiable Instrument Law was the embodiment of the general law merchant as it had been previously applied by the courts. The presumption is that, when passing it, the legislature had in contemplation the existence of the usury statute and the decisions of Virginia and this state construing it as invalidating all contracts comprehended within its scope. It knew, as we must assume, that, by a prior general rule, where a statute declares an instrument void, it gathers no vitality by circulation, although upon such instrument an indorser may be held liable to a bona fide holder without notice. Dan. Neg. Inst. § 673. The Virginia court had already declared that, as against an innocent holder, no defense can be made against a negotiable instrument declared by the usury statute to be void. "The original taint adheres to the paper, in whosoever hands it may come. It is void, and the defense may be set up, as well against the innocent holder as the usurer or gambler himself." Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. (Va.) 324. Where there is nothing in a statute indicating an intention to the contrary, the well-recognized doctrine is: "That the legislature did not intend to innovate upon, unsettle, alter, violate, repeal, or limit another general statute or statutory system, the entire subject-matter of which is not directly nor necessarily involved in the [subsequent] act." Twentieth Street Bank v. Jacobs, supra.

From these conclusions it follows that, as the rulings on the demurrer and motion to dissolve were not erroneous, our order will affirm the decree complained of, and remand the cause for further proceedings therein, agreeably with equitable principles governing courts of equity in cases of this nature.

Annotation—Usury as a defense against a bona fide purchaser of a bill or note.

The present note is confined to an investigation of the question how far usury between prior parties to a negotiable instrument is a defense as against one who thereafter takes the instrument for value, before maturity, and without knowledge of any defenses thereto; in other words, whether or not it is a defense against one who is a bona fide holder as that term is understood in the law relating to commercial paper. The purchase of paper at a discount as usury has been discussed in a previous note in this series of reports.<sup>1</sup> That note includes the question whether a purchase of paper which had no prior inception by one who had no knowledge of that fact is usurious. The present note, as above indicated, is confined to cases in which there is no charge of usury against the plaintiff. The right of a bona fide indorsee against his indorser has not, in general, been considered.<sup>2</sup>

The note is confined to paper which is not usurious on its face.

It is well settled that the right to set up the defense of usury against a bona fide holder depends upon the character of a usurious contract as to being void or not. If the usurious contract is void, the courts are practically agreed that usury is a defense available against a indorsee against him as indorser on the ground of the usury. The defendant is stated to have been estopped from setting up the usury. This case was followed in Morford v. Davis (1864) 28 N. Y. 481.

<sup>1</sup> Note to People's Bank & T. Co. v. Fenwick Sanitarium, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211.

<sup>2</sup> In M'Knight v. Wheeler (1844) 6 Hill (N. Y.) 492, the payee of a usurious note who had sold and indorsed the same was held to have no defense to an action by his L.R.A.1918C.

bona fide holder; but if the contract is not void, it is not a defense available against such a holder.

Rule under statutes declaring usurious contracts void.

The character of a usurious contract

* German Bank v. De Shon (1883) 41 Ark. 331; Early v. McCart (1834) 2 Dana (Ky.) 414 (dictum); Sauerwein v. Drunner (1827) 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 477; Bridge v. Hubbard (1818) 15 Mass. 96, 8 Am. Dec. 86; Union Bank v. Gilbert (1894) 83 Hun, 417, 31 N. Y. Supp. 945; Sabine v. Paine (1911) 148 App. Div. 730, 132 N. Y. Supp. 813; Crusins v. Siegman (1913) 81 Misc. 367, 142 N. Y. Supp. 348; Collier v. Nevill (1831) 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 30 (see North Carolina cases under revised form of statute, infra, note 10); Solomons v. Jones (1812) 3 Brev. (S. C.) 54, 5 Am. Dec. 538; Flemming v. Mulligan (1822) 2 M'Cord, L. (S. C.) 173, 13 Am. Dec. 707; Payne v. Trezevant (1796) 2 Bay (S. C.) 23; Andrews v. Hoxie (1840) 5 Tex. 171; Gilder v. Hearne (1890) 79 Tex. 120, 14 S. W. 1031, approved in First Nat. Bank v. Ledbetter (1896) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 1042; Miles v. Kelley (1897) 16 Tex. Civ. App. 147, 40 S. W. 599; Rodecker v. Littauer (1894) 8 C. C. A. 320, 19 U. S. App. 455, 59 Fed. 857 (dictum); Lowe v. Waller (1781) 2 Dougl. K. B. 736, 99 Eng. Reprint, 470; Young v. Wright (1807) 1 Campb. (Eng.) 140; Ackland v. Pearce (1810) 2 Campb. (Eng.) 599; and Lowe v. Mazzaredo (1816) 1 Starkie (Eng.) 385 (the last three cases holding a bill which had been discounted at a usurious rate void in the hands of a bona fide holder to whom it afterwards came). See Vallance v. Siddel (1837) 6 Ad. & El. 932, 112 Eng. Reprint, 356, infra, note 20.

In Owings v. Grimes (1824) 5 Litt. (Ky.) 332, it is stated obiter that a note given for a usurious consideration, which was void under the statute then in force against usury, was void "in the hands of the assignee, as well as in the hands of the obligee or payee."

It is regarded as settled in Wilkie v. Roosevelt (1802) 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 206, 2 Am. Dec. 149, that usury is a defense against the bona fide holder. The statute is referred to, but not set out, so that its provisions cannot be ascertained.

It is stated in Powell v. Waters (1826) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 669, that a note void in the hands of an indorsee, who had purchased it at a usurious consideration, would be void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, to whom it might be transferred by such indorsee.

In Clafin v. Boorum (1890) 122 N. Y. 385, 25 N. E. 360, it is stated that "a note void in its inception for usury continues void forever, whatever its subsequent history may be. It is as void in the hands of an innocent holder for value as it was in the hands of those who made the usurious L.R.A.1918C.

as to being void or not is usually fixed by statute. Under statutes expressly declaring usurious contracts void, it is uniformly held that usury is a defense that may be set up against a bona fide holder.<sup>3</sup> This has also been held under statutes making the usurious contract void contract. No vitality can be given to it by sale or exchange, because that which the statute has declared void cannot be made valid by passing through the channels of trade."

The New York rule is applied to a mortgage in Re Kellogg (1902) 113 Fed. 120, affirmed without reference to the point in (1903) 57 C. C. A. 547, 121 Fed. 333.

It seems that the South Carolina statute expressly made the note void in the hands of an innocent holder, for, in Gaillard v. Le Seigneur (1840) 1 McMull. L. (S. C.) 225, the court states that the note upon which the action was brought in that case "was given entirely for usurious interest, and both by the Acts of 1777 and 1831 (a) was absolutely void, as well in the hands of an innocent holder as between the original parties to it."

But in Foltz v. Mey (1795) 1 Bay (S. C.) 486, it was held that a note executed by the drawer and given to an agent for the purpose of being discounted at a bank, but which was by the agent misappropriated and discounted on his own account at a usurious rate of interest, was valid in the hands of a bona fide holder to whom the note afterwards came in the usual course of trade, the court stating that the note appeared to be fair in its creation or making, made for a legal purpose in the course of trade, and came fairly into the hands of the plaintiff, and that "no intermediate contingencies or usurious transactions between other persons, through whose hands it may have passed, can affect it in the hands of an innocent indorsee."

A note given directly to creditors of the lender was held open to the defense of usury in an action by the payees, although such payees knew nothing of the usury in the original agreement between the borrower and lender. Tait v. Hannum (1890) 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 349. The Tennessee statute was subsequently changed. See Bradshaw v. Van Valkenburg (1896) 97 Tenn. 316, 37 S. W. 88.

A mortgage given to secure the note was held good by virtue of a statute in Coor v. Spicer (1871) 65 N. C. 401. This case is disapproved in Ward v. Sugg (1893) 113 N. C. 489, 24 L.R.A. 280, 18 S. E. 717, and Faison v. Grandy (1901) 128 N. C. 438, 83 Am. St. Rep. 693, 38 S. E. 897.

That the New York statute relating to usury has been repealed so far as it affects state banks, and such banks put on a parity with national banks, is held in New York. Accordingly, when a state bank becomes a bona fide holder of a usurious bill or note, it is held to take free from the defense of usury, although the contract would as to all but the principal sum or void as to the interest.<sup>4</sup>

It is held in some cases in which the form of the statute does not appear, that a usurious contract is void in the hands of an indorsee for a valuable consideration, without notice of the usury.<sup>5</sup> In other cases it is merely stated that usury is a defense that may be made against an assignee, without stating whether or not the assignee is an innocent holder.<sup>6</sup>

The effect of the Negotiable Instruments Law upon the rights of a bona fide holder is discussed in a subsequent part of this note.

Rule under statutes not expressly declaring usurious contracts void.

Where the statute does not expressly declare the usurious contract void, the courts are not agreed as to the rights of a bona fide holder. It has been held under statutes which do not expressly make the contract void, but provide that no recovery shall be had thereon, or in be void in the hands of private parties. Schlesinger v. Kelly (1906) 114 App. Div. 546, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1083; Vann, Gray, and Chase, JJ., in Schlesinger v. Gilhooly (1907) 189 N. Y. 1, 81 N. E. 619, 12 Ann. Cas. 1138. This statute receives a complete discussion both as it relates to banks that are bona fide holders and those that are not, in the note to Schlesinger v. Lehmaier, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626, and reference should be had thereto.

It has been held in case of a note originally drawn to borrow money at illegal interest that if the holder did accordingly obtain money thereon at a usurious consideration, the note is void, and a bona fide holder cannot, under any circumstances, recover on it; but if, on the other hand, the note was bona fide in its origin, the bona fide holder might recover upon it, provided he had no knowledge of its being subsequently passed upon a usurious consideration. Burt v. Gwinn (1816) 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 507. See Ayer v. Tilden (1860) 15 Gray (Mass.) 178, 77 Am. Dec. 355, infra, note 9, and Freeman v. Brittin (1839) 17 N. J. L. 191, infra, note 12.

<sup>4</sup> Saltmarsh v. Planters & M. Bank (1848) 14 Ala. 668, on second appeal in (1850) 17 Ala. 761; Pearson v. Bailey (1853) 23 Ala. 537.

<sup>5</sup> Townsend v. Bush (1814) 1 Conn. 250; Bacon v. Norton (1811) 5 Day (Conn.) 128.

<sup>6</sup> True v. Triplett (1862) 4 Met. (Ky.) 57.

<sup>7</sup> Laramore v. Bank of Americus (1882) 69 Ga. 722; Angier v. Smith (1897) 101 Ga. 844, 28 S. E. 167; Atlanta Sav. Bank v. Spencer (1899) 107 Ga. 629, 33 S. E. 878; Bacon v. Lee (1857) 4 Iowa, 490; Burrows v. Cook (1864) 17 Iowa, 436; Perry Sav. Bank v. Fitzgerald (1914) 167 L.R.A.1918C.

case of those statutes providing merely that the interest shall not be recoverable, that usury is a defense against a bona fide holder.<sup>7</sup> The Iowa court, after stating that the Iowa statute did not expressly declare the contract void, continues: "But the same end is reached, and the same effect is given to its provisions, by declaring that in no case where unlawful interest shall be contracted for shall the plaintiff, in a suit brought upon the contract, have judgment for more than the principal sum loaned."<sup>8</sup> So it has been held that usury is a defense against a bona fide holder under a statute limiting the rate of interest, providing for the recovery of costs by the defendant in an action on the usurious contract, and for forfeiture by the plaintiff of three times the interest unlawfully reserved or taken.<sup>9</sup> So, under a statute providing that the taking of interest at more than the stipulated rate "shall be deemed a forfeiture" of the entire interest which has

Iowa, 446, 149 N. W. 497; Union Nat. Bank v. Fraser (1885) 63 Miss. 231; Armor v. Bank of Loudon (1905) 86 Miss. 658, 39 So. 17.

In Bailey v. Lumpkin (1846) 1 Ga. 392, the court states that the contract is void as to the interest in the hands of the original payee "or an innocent holder, without notice." Apparently the term is used in the sense of a bona fide holder, and it is so interpreted in the subsequent case of Miller v. Gould (1868) 38 Ga. 465. The statute involved in this case declared that usurious contracts, bonds, etc., "shall not be void, but the principal due thereon shall be recoverable at law, and no more."

<sup>8</sup> Bacon v. Lee (1857) 4 Iowa, 490. The court, after stating that such a provision as that set out in the text extends to the note, even in the hands of an innocent holder, continues: "We are strengthened in this conclusion by the language of the subsequent section, which provides that the proper bona fide assignee of any usurious contract may recover against the usurer the full amount of the consideration paid by him for such contract, deducting the amount of the judgment for the principal sum recovered against the makers."

<sup>9</sup> Kendall v. Robertson (1853) 12 Cush. (Mass.) 156; Knapp v. Briggs (1861) 2 Allen (Mass.) 551; North Bridgewater Bank v. Copeland (1863) 7 Allen (Mass.) 139; Whitten v. Hayden (1865) 7 Allen (Mass.) 407.

But in Ayer v. Tilden (1860) 15 Gray (Mass.) 178, 77 Am. Dec. 355, where a note which had been negotiated so as to become a valid and binding contract upon a lawful consideration was subsequently transferred at a usurious consideration, the usury was held to be no defense to an ac-been agreed to be paid, it has been held that usury is a defense against a bona fide holder; such a statute is regarded as making the contract, as to the interest, void.<sup>10</sup> Usury is a defense to the maker against a bona fide holder of a note given as the last of a series of renewal notes, all of which were tainted with usury; and this is true although the note renewed by the note in suit had been discounted by the payee, who agreed upon the renewal while it was out of his hands, where the payee took it up upon the renewal.<sup>11</sup> The underlying theory of these cases is that, although the usurious contract is not expressly declared void by the statute, it is void, and therefore falls within the general rule that usury is a defense available against a bona fide holder where the usurious contract is void.

A majority of courts, however, do not regard a statute not expressly declaring usurious contracts void as rendering them void by construction, and therefore take the view that, under such a statute, usury is not a defense available against a bona fide holder.<sup>12</sup> This has been held under a statute merely prohibiting the taking of more than a stated rate of interest;<sup>13</sup> also under a statute prohibiting the taking of more than a stated rate of interest, and imposing a penalty for so doing;<sup>14</sup> and under a statute providing that a loan at a greater rate than that authorized "shall be deemed to be for an illegal consideration, as to the excess beyond the principal amount so loaned or forborne;"<sup>15</sup> also under a statute making the contract voidable as to the usury, at the instance of the debtor;<sup>16</sup> and under a statute providing that no person shall recover in any court more than a certain rate of interest, and that any payments made above this rate shall be deemed to be payments on the principal, and the court shall render judgment for any balance tion of a bona fide holder thereof against the maker. See Burt v. Gwinn (1815) 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 507, supra, note 3, and Freeman v. Brittin (1839) 17 N. J. L. 191, infra, note 12.

<sup>10</sup> Ward v. Sugg (1893) 113 N. C. 489, 24 L.R.A. 280, 18 S. E. 117; Faison v. Grandy (1901) 128 N. C. 438, 83 Am. St. Rep. 693, 38 S. E. 897, opinion upon rehearing of (1900) 126 N. C. 827, 36 S. E. 276.

<sup>11</sup> Knapp v. Briggs (1861) 2 Allen (Mass.) 551.

<sup>12</sup> Conkling v. Underhill (1842) 4 Ill. 388; Saylor v. Daniels (1865) 37 Ill. 331, 87 Am. Dec. 250; Hemmenway v. Cropsey (1865) 37 Ill. 358; Kleeman v. Frisbie (1872) 63 Ill. 482; Richter v. Burdock (1913) 257 Ill. 410, 100 N. E. 1063; Smith v. Mohr (1895) 64 Mo. App. 39.

This rule is recognized in Woodworth v. Huntoon (1865) 40 Ill. 131, 89 Am. Dec. 340.

In Gaul v. Willis (1856) 26 Pa. 259, where an accommodation note was sold by the accommodation party, who was the payee, at a usurious rate of interest, and by the purchaser sold to the plaintiff at a usurious rate of interest, the defense of usury was made in an action by the plaintiff against the makers, but whether it was usury in the first or second purchase that was the basis of the defense is not disclosed. The court treated the plaintiff as a bona fide holder and entitled to recover.

It is assumed in Haynes v. Gay (1905) 37 Wash. 230, 79 Pac. 794, that a bona fide holder of a usurious note can recover thereon, but no statute is set out. This is assumed also in Keene v. Behan (1905) 40 Wash. 505, 82 Pac. 884, but the plaintiff in that case was denied recovery because he failed to prove that he was a bona fide holder. It seems the Washington statute did not make a usurious note void; at any rate, it is so stated in American Sav. Bank L.R.A.1918C.

& T. Co. v. Helgesen (1911) 64 Wash. 54, 116 Pac. 837, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 390, rehearing in (1912) 67 Wash. 572, 122 Pac. 26, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 396; it was accordingly held in the latter case that the defense of usury is not available to the maker against the holder acquiring the note in good faith, for value, before maturity.

Hornblower, Ch. J., in Freeman v. Brittin (1839) 17 N. J. L. 191, states that "if a note, whether for value received, or for accommodation only, is fairly negotiated by the payee, and a subsequent party indorses it upon a usurious discount, and it afterwards gets into the hands of a bona fide indorsee, without notice of the usury, he may strike out the names of the usurious parties, and make title through the payee, or any innocent indorser subsequent to him, and recover upon the note." And see Ayer v. Tilden (1860) 15 Gray (Mass.) 178, 77 Am. Dec. 355, supra, note 9; Burt v. Gwinn (1815) 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 507, supra, note 3.

<sup>13</sup> Young v. Berkley (1821) 2 N. H. 410; Forbes v. Marsh (1824) 3 N. H. 119. The rule of these cases is recognized in Williams v. Little (1840) 11 N. H. 66.

<sup>14</sup> Creed v. Stevens (1838) 4 Whart. (Pa.) 223; Bank v. Flanigan (1882) 39 Phila. Leg. Int. (Pa.) 264.

<sup>15</sup> Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. Scott Bros. (1895) 91 Va. 652, 29 L.R.A. 827, 50 Am. St. Rep. 860, 22 S. E. 287.

In the early Virginia case of Whitworth v. Adams (1827) 5 Rand. (Va.) 333, a bona fide indorsee of a note which had previously been transferred upon a usurious consideration was held entitled to recover thereon.

<sup>16</sup> Bradshaw v. Van Valkenburg (1896) 97 (Tenn.) 316, 37 S. W. 88; Hamilton v. Fowler (1899) 40 C. C. A. 47, 99 Fed. 18, writ of certiorari denied in (1900) 176 U. S. 685, 44 L. ed. 639, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1027.

after deducting such payments;<sup>17</sup> and under a statute relating to banks, declaring that the discount and purchase of a bill at more than a stated rate "shall be deemed and held usurious and unlawful within the meaning of the act;"<sup>18</sup> and under a statute expressly providing that a usurious contract shall not be void, but that in any action "the plaintiff shall only recover the principal without interest, and the defendant shall recover costs."<sup>19</sup>

Some statutes expressly relieve a bona fide holder of the defense of usury.<sup>20</sup> The Minnesota statute to this effect has been interpreted to preserve in favor of negotiable paper in respect to the defense of usury the same privileges and immunities accorded to such paper at common law in respect to defenses generally; and it has been held that in an action upon such paper the defense of usury may be interposed only where any other defense, if it existed, might be interposed.<sup>21</sup> Accordingly, the statute protects one who took after maturity

<sup>17</sup> Day v. Walker (1876) 16 Kan. 326 (dictum); Gross v. Funk (1878) 20 Kan. 655.

A bona fide holder was held entitled to recover in Holden v. Clark (1876) 16 Kan. 346, as against a defense of an alleged partial failure of consideration and usury, but there is no discussion of the defense of usury.

<sup>18</sup> Pickaway County Bank v. Prather (1861) 12 Ohio St. 497, approved in Farmers & M. Bank v. Parker (1867) 37 N. Y. 148, in dealing with an Ohio contract.

<sup>19</sup> Wortendyke v. Meehan (1879) 9 Neb. 221, 2 N. W. 339 (allowing the defense against the plaintiff because he had not shown himself to be a bona fide holder); State Sav. Bank v. Scott (1880) 10 Neb. 83, 4 N. W. 314; Cheney v. Cooper (1883) 14 Neb. 415, 16 N. W. 471; Evans v. De Roe (1884) 15 Neb. 630, 20 N. W. 99; Sedgwick v. Dixon (1886) 18 Neb. 545, 26 N. W. 247; Cheney v. Janssen (1886) 20 Neb. 128, 29 N. W. 289; Lincoln Nat. Bank v. Davis (1889) 25 Neb. 376, 41 N. W. 281 (allowing the defense of usury because plaintiff was not shown to be a bona fide holder).

This rule is recognized in Olmsted v. New England Mortg. Secur. Co. (1881) 11 Neb. 487, 9 N. W. 650; Darst v. Backus (1885) 18 Neb. 231, 24 N. W. 681; Knox v. Williams (1888) 24 Neb. 630, 8 Am. St. Rep. 220, 39 N. W. 786; Blackwell v. Wright (1889) 27 Neb. 269, 20 Am. St. Rep. 662, 43 N. W. 116; Richardson v. Stone (1891) 32 Neb. 617, 49 N. W. 763; Colby v. Parker (1892) 34 Neb. 510, 52 N. W. 693; Suiter v. Park Nat. Bank (1892) 35 Neb. 372, 53 N. W. 205; McDonald v. Aufdengarten (1894) 41 Neb. 40, 59 N. W. 762; Bovier v. McCarthy (1903) 4 Neb. (Unof.) 490, 94 N. W. 965.

It has been held under the Nebraska statute that usury is a defense to an action in foreclosure of a mortgage securing a note, where the plaintiff took by transfer by a written assignment on the mortgage only, for value, before maturity, and without notice of any defects. Doll v. Hollenbeck (1886) 19 Neb. 639, 28 N. W. 286.

In Cheney v. Campbell (1889) 28 Neb. 376, 44 N. W. 451, where interest notes given wholly for usurious interest were assigned to a bona fide holder for one half their face value, the purchaser refusing to pay more because of the fact that the notes were secured by a second mortgage, and there was danger that the security would be inadequate, the purchaser was permitted to recover the amount paid by him, with lawful interest thereon.

<sup>20</sup> Statute involved in First Nat. Bank v. Bentley (1880) 27 Minn. 87, 6 N. W. 422.

It is assumed in Hass v. Camp (1889) 40 Minn. 329, 42 N. W. 20, that a bona fide purchaser of usurious paper is entitled to recover thereon; no statute is mentioned, and it is not clear that the statute involved in First Nat. Bank v. Bentley was still in force.

The Minnesota statute was held not to protect a bona fide purchaser of a mortgage securing negotiable paper, in Scott v. Austin (1887) 36 Minn. 460, 32 N. W. 89, 864, and Smith v. Parsons (1893) 55 Minn. 520, 57 N. W. 311.

The Statute 58 Geo. III. chap. 93, provides that no bill of exchange or promissory note given for a usurious consideration or upon a usurious contract shall "be void in the hands of an indorsee for valuable consideration, unless such indorsee had at the time of discounting or paying such consideration for the same, actual notice that such bill of exchange or promissory note had been originally given for a usurious consideration, or upon a usurious contract." This statute was held not to relieve a bona fide holder of a usurious note who had taken the same for an antecedent debt, of the defense of usury, in Vallance v. Siddell (1837) 6 Ad. & El. 932, 112 Eng. Reprint, 356. This decision was followed in Geddes v. Culver (1845) 3 U. C. Q. B. 162, under the Statute of 7 Wm. IV. chap. 5.

The New York Revised Statutes of 1830, 1 Rev. Stat. 772, § 5, expressly relieved a bona fide holder of the defense of usury (Hackley v. Sprague (1833) 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 113); but this statute was subsequently repealed.

A statute enacted in Massachusetts, providing that usury between the payee and maker of a promissory note payable on time shall be no defense as against the bona fide indorsee of the note, taking it before maturity, was held in North Bridgewater Bank v. Copeland (1863) 7 Allen (Mass.) 139, not to apply to a contract in existence at the time of the enactment of the statute.

<sup>21</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Bentley (Minn.)

from a bona fide holder who purchased for value, before maturity.<sup>22</sup> Such a statute, which relieves a bona fide holder of the defense of usury in any "action" brought on the paper, applies in equity as well as at law.<sup>23</sup>

It has been held generally by cases that make no reference to the statute, that a note is valid in the hands of a bona fide holder regardless of usury in its inception.<sup>24</sup>

Effect of Negotiable Instruments Act.

There is a difference of judicial opinion as to the effect of the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act with reference to bona fide holders, upon the availability of the defense of usury against such a holder. It is the view of some courts that that act does not relieve a bona fide holder of the defense of usury where a general statute makes usurious contracts void.<sup>25</sup> This has also been held where the statute relating to usury, while not expressly making the usurious contract void, has been construed by the court to have this effect.<sup>26</sup>

The provision of the Negotiable Instruments Act which has been relied upon to relieve a bona fide holder of the defense of usury is that providing that the holder in due course holds the instrument "free from any defect of title of prior parties, and free from defenses available to prior parties among themselves, and may enforce payment of the instrument for the full amount thereof against all parties liable thereon."<sup>27</sup>

The reasoning by which the courts arrive at this conclusion is, in brief, that to thus relieve a bona fide holder of the defense would be in effect to repeal the general statutory provisions relating to usury. Such statutory provisions not being directly repealed by the Negotiable Instruments Act, it is necessary to bring into operation the doctrine of repeal by implication, which is not favored.

The courts therefore conclude that the general statutory provisions must be given effect.<sup>28</sup>

Entering into the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act more specifically, it has been stated that the clause of that act that a holder in due course takes "free from defenses available to prior parties among themselves" must be construed in connection with the law as it existed prior to the enactment thereof. In a state in which usury is treated as in the nature of a forfeiture, and properly urged against the contract, into whosoever hands it may pass, it is stated that usury is in the nature of a defense which is not "available to prior parties among themselves" alone, but is available as between the maker of the instrument and the world. A fair construction of this provision of the Negotiable Instruments Act is held to be that a holder in due course is protected against such defenses as are available between prior parties, but takes the instrument subject to any defense that the parties thereto may have, under the law then in force, urged against the instrument in the hands of third parties.<sup>28</sup>

The provision of the Negotiable Instruments Act that a holder in due course may enforce payment of the instrument against all parties liable thereon has been stated to mean that payment of the instrument may be enforced in the supra. Practically the same construction is put upon the New York statute of 1830 in Hackley v. Sprague (N. Y.) supra.

<sup>22</sup> Robinson v. Smith (1895) 62 Minn. 62, 64 N. W. 90.

But such holder must prove his bona fide character when usury is shown. Seymour v. Strong (1841) 1 Hill (N. Y.) 563.

<sup>23</sup> Coatsworth v. Barr (1863) 11 Mich. 199.

<sup>24</sup> Tucker v. Wilamowicz (1847) 8 Ark. 157. Apparently this case was decided by virtue of a statute; at any rate, a statute is cited as authority for the proposition of the text above, although the statute is not set out. A statute making a bill of exchange or promissory note, void in its inception on account of usury, valid in the hands of a bona fide holder, was held unconstitutional in the subsequent case of German Bank v. De Shon (1883) 41 Ark. 331.

In Chadbourn v. Watts (1813) 10 Mass. L.R.A.1918C.

121, 6 Am. Dec. 100, the parties to a usurious loan had a settlement in which the amount found due, including usurious interest, was merged into a new note: subsequently another settlement was had on which the interest was calculated at the lawful rate and another note given for balance due. In an action by an indorsee of this note, the maker was not allowed to set up usury in the first loan. Compare with Massachusetts cases cited in note 9, supra.

<sup>25</sup> ESKRIDGE v. THOMAS, ante, 769: Cru-sins v. Siegman (1913) 81 Misc. 367, 142 N. Y. Supp. 348. But see other New York cases contra, note 29, infra.

<sup>26</sup> Perry Sav. Bank v. Fitzgerald (1914) 167 Iowa, 446, 149 N. W. 497.

<sup>27</sup> ESKRIDGE v. THOMAS; Perry Sav. Bank v. Fitzgerald (Iowa) supra.

<sup>28</sup> Perry Sav. Bank v. Fitzgerald (Iowa) supra.

full amount thereof against parties claiming as a defense thereto that the title of the indorser was defective, or a defense which was only available between the prior parties thereto.<sup>28</sup>

On the contrary, it is the view of some courts even in jurisdictions in which usurious contracts are declared void by statute that the Negotiable Instruments Law does relieve a bona fide holder of the defense of usury.<sup>29</sup>

Estoppel, or waiver of defense.

While the general question of estoppel or waiver is beyond the scope of this note, it has seemed advisable to call attention to the fact that the maker of a usurious bill or note may preclude himself from taking advantage of the usury. No exhaustive citation of cases is attempted in this connection. The maker of a note may thus preclude himself by representations. The subject of estoppel by representations has already been covered in this series of reports and reference is made thereto.<sup>30</sup>

A renewal of the note in the hands of the bona fide holder has been most frequently invoked to preclude the maker from setting up the defense of usury. A large number of cases support the rule that the maker of a usurious note who renews the note in the hands of a bona fide holder with no knowledge of the usury precludes himself from relying on the defense of usury.<sup>31</sup> But if the renewal is made after the bona fide holder has acquired knowledge of the usury, the new instrument is subject to the defense of usury as against him.<sup>32</sup>

It has been held that the makers of a usurious note who renewed the same by agreement with the payee, but drew the note in favor of a third person to whom the payee subsequently transferred it, are entitled to make the defense of usury against such third person.<sup>33</sup> It was urged in this case that by making the promise directly to the plaintiff the makers of the note in fact represented to her that the transaction in which the note originated was a lawful one, and that they were estopped to deny the truth of that representation. In answer to this argument the court states that this would be so if the note had been made with the consent of the plaintiff, upon her agreement to take it from the makers in payment of the debt due from the original payee, but no such fact was found.

The fact that the note contains a stipulation that it is to be "without defalcation or discount, and waive all defense to the payment of this note in the hands of a bona fide purchaser or holder," does not preclude the makers from availing themselves of the defenses allowed by the usury statute as against the bona fide holder. The negotiability of promissory notes is stated to be regulated by the statute, and not by the contract of the parties, evidenced by the instrument; that to give such a stipulation the effect of precluding the defense

<sup>29</sup> Wood v. Babbitt (1907) 149 Fed. 818; Klar v. Kostiuik (1909) 65 Misc. 199, 119 N. Y. Supp. 683; Ernst Oeser & Co. v. Behrend (1915) 89 Misc. 391, 151 N. Y. Supp. 873.

Laughlin, J., in Schlesinger v. Kelly (1906) 114 App. Div. 546, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1083, and Willard Bartlett, J., in Schlesinger v. Gilhooly (1907) 189 N. Y. 1, 81 N. E. 619, 12 Ann. Cas. 1138, are of this opinion.

Apparently the reason for the decision in Emanuel v. Misicki (1914) 149 N. Y. Supp. 905, to the effect that usury is not an available defense against a bona fide holder, is that the Negotiable Instruments Law precludes this defense.

Contra, Crusins v. Siegman (1913) 81 Misc. 367, 142 N. Y. Supp. 348, supra, note 25.

<sup>30</sup> See note to Holzbog v. Bakrow, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023, particularly on page 1031, as to estoppel to set up the defense of usury.

<sup>31</sup> Masterson v. Grubbs (1881) 70 Ala. 406; Powell v. Waters (1826) 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 669; Brinckerhoff v. Foote (1839) Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 291; Smedberg v. Whitteley (1846) 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 320; McWhirter v. Longstreet (1903) 33 Misc. 831, L.R.A.1918C.

<sup>32</sup> N. Y. Supp. 334; Smalley v. Doughty (1860) 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 66 (part of the obligation was paid and a new instrument given for the balance); Flemming v. Mulligan (1822) 2 M'Cord, L. (S. C.) 173, 13 Am. Dec. 707; Palmer v. Call (1881) 2 M'Crary 522, 7 Fed. 737, affirmed in (1885) 116 U. S. 98, 29 L. ed. 559, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301; Cuthbert v. Haley (1799) 8 T. R. 390, 101 Eng. Reprint, 1450.

Mitchell v. McCullough (1877) 59 Ala. 179. Upon a subsequent appeal of this case, reported in (1879) 64 Ala. 250, it was shown that the holder of the note had been informed of the usury at the time of taking it. Upon these facts the court held that to cut off the defense of usury against non-commercial paper there must be more than a transfer of the paper to one who receives it in good faith and without notice of the usury,—there must, in addition to this, be a renewal of the debt by giving a new security, payable to the transferee.

The rule is recognized in Glendenning v. Blood (1884) 12 Daly (N. Y.) 421; Smedberg v. Simpson (1848) 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 85.

<sup>33</sup> Theobald v. Crickmore (1819) 2 Barn. & Ald. 594, 106 Eng. Reprint, 483.

<sup>34</sup> Treadwell v. Archer (1879) 76 N. Y. 196.

of usury would be in effect to repeal the statute, and this it is not competent for the parties to do.<sup>34</sup>

A different question is presented where the purchaser had notice of the usury before he took a transfer of the note; in such a case the purchaser is not an innocent holder, and although the maker has stated that there was no defense to the note, the purchaser is not deceived in making the purchase; accordingly, it has been held that the maker has not waived the defense of usury as against a purchaser who took with notice of the usury.<sup>35</sup>

<sup>34</sup> Union Nat. Bank v. Fraser (1885) 63 Miss. 231.

<sup>35</sup> Torrey v. Grant (1848) 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 89. The court here treats the usury as an illegal consideration,—a consideration prohibited by law; and holds that no waiver of the defense is binding as to a party who has notice. W. A. E.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

A. P. SIMONSON

v.

CARL F. WENZEL et al.

and

M. C. KRUPP et al., Appts.

(27 N. D. 638, 147 N. W. 804.)

Mortgage — of contract to purchase — record — effect — purchase of interest of vendor.

W., who held an unrecorded executory contract for the purchase from D. of certain real property, under which he was in possession, executed and delivered to plaintiff a mortgage thereon, which was recorded. Subsequently W. assigned his interest under such contract to K. for a valuable consideration, who in good faith paid the consideration, including the amount due to D., the vendor, under such executory contract, and procured a deed from such vendor without actual knowledge of the existence of such mortgage. In an action by plaintiff to foreclose his mortgage, held:

1. That W. had a mortgageable interest in the property.

For other cases, see Mortgage, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

2. That the mortgage of his equitable interest to plaintiff constituted a "conveyance," within the meaning of our Recording Act.

For other cases, see Records and Recording Laws, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

3. That the record of such mortgage operated as constructive notice to K., who, with actual knowledge of W.'s equities, purchased an assignment of his contract for deed.

For other cases, see Records and Recording Laws, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

4. That to the extent of the amount paid by K. to D., with interest, he has an equity

Headnote by FISK, J.

Note. — For taking deed from stranger to record title as constructive notice of instruments of record to or by him, see annotation following Brannan v. Marshall, post, 787.

L.R.A.1918C.

superior to plaintiff's claim, which should be recognized and protected by the decree. For other cases, see Mortgage, VI. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 5, 1914.)

APPEAL by defendants Krupp et al. from a judgment of the District Court for McHenry County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Christianson & Weber and Engerud, Holt, & Frame, for appellants:

The interest of a vendee, under an unperformed executory contract, does not constitute real property of such vendee.

Miller v. Shelburn, 15 N. D. 182, 107 N. W. 51; Cummings v. Duncan, 22 N. D. 534, 134 N. W. 712, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 976.

This equitable fiction is based on the maxim that equity regards as done that which ought to be done, but even in equity such maxim will not be enforced to the injury of innocent third parties.

Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779.

A mere contract or covenant to convey at a future time, on the purchaser performing certain acts, does not create an equitable title. It is but an agreement that may ripen into an equitable title.

Bispham, Eq. § 365; Chappell v. McKnight, 108 Ill. 570; Warvelle, Vend. & P. p. 187, § 2; Sutherland v. Parkins, 75 Ill. 338; Smith v. Jones, 21 Utah, 270, 60 Pac. 1104; Miller v. Shelburn, 15 N. D. 186, 107 N. W. 51; Cummings v. Duncan, 22 N. D. 534, 134 N. W. 712, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 976; Davis v. Williams, 130 Ala. 530, 54 L.R.A. 751, 89 Am. St. Rep. 55, 30 So. 488; Smith v. Forbes, 21 Utah, 270, 60 Pac. 1104; Bradwell v. Bank of Bainbridge, 103 Ga. 242, 29 S. E. 756.

The recording of an instrument not required or entitled to be recorded has no effect whatever.

Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 297; Lewis v. Barnhart, 145 U. S. 56, 36 L. ed. 621, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 772; Burck v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 634, 38 L. ed. 578, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696; Lynch v. Murphy, 161 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 688, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Ludlow v. Van Ness, 8 Bosw. 178; Lenoir v. Valley River Min. Co. 113 N. C. 513, 18 S. E. 73; Bassinger v. Spangler, 9 Colo. 175, 10 Pac. 809.

Any instrument executed by anyone not having a record title would be out of the chain of title, and not binding either upon the Dakota Development Company or Krupp.

Garber v. Gianella, 98 Cal. 527, 33 Pac. 458; Doran v. Dazey, 5 N. D. 167, 57 Am. St. Rep. 550, 64 N. W. 1023.

When one searches till he finds the deed by which his grantor acquires the title, he is not bound to look for deeds made prior to that time. Such prior deeds are not "in the line of title" as that term is used by conveyances and searches.

Ford v. Unity Church Soc. 120 Mo. 498, 23 L.R.A. 561, 41 Am. St. Rep. 711, 25 S. W. 394; Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Corbin v. Sullivan, 47 Ind. 356; Losey v. Simpson, 11 N. J. Eq. 246; Odle v. Odle, 73 Mo. 289; Hibbs v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 40 Ohio St. 543; Sands v. Beardsley, 32 W. Va. 594, 9 S. E. 925.

Where one gives a mortgage on property to which he has not yet acquired title, the record of it is not constructive notice to a purchaser in good faith; since the mortgage will not appear in the chain of title, but will appear to have been given by a stranger, nor will it be notice to his vendor, who, on giving a deed, takes back a purchase-money mortgage.

Bingham v. Kirkland, 34 N. J. Eq. 229; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Maltby, 8 Paige, 361; Calder v. Chapman, 52 Pa. 359, 91 Am. Dec. 163; Bright v. Buckman, 39 Fed. 243; Donovan v. Twist, 105 App. Div. 171, 93 N. Y. Supp. 990.

The registration of the mortgage, having occurred before the records disclosed title in the mortgagor, was not constructive notice to the second grantee, who purchased the property after the title had been transferred to his grantor.

2 Devlin, Deeds, 3d ed. pp. 1330, 1331, § 724; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Maltby, 8 Paige, 361; Losey v. Simpson, 11 N. J. Eq. 246; Calder v. Chapman, 52 Pa. 359, 91 Am. Dec. 163; Page v. Waring, 76 N. Y. 463; Buckingham v. Hanna, 2 Ohio St. 551; Doswell v. Buchanan, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Hetzel v. Barber, 69 N. Y. 1; Schoch v. Birdsall, 48 Minn. 441, 51 N. W. 382; Turman v. Sanford, 69 Ark. 95, 61 S. W. 167.

So far as the Dakota Development Company is concerned, the recording of the L.R.A.1918C.

mortgage from Wenzel to Simonson in no manner constituted constructive notice.

Sarles v. McGee, 1 N. D. 365, 26 Am. St. Rep. 633, 48 N. W. 231; Union Nat. Bank v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 7 N. D. 201, 73 N. W. 527.

The stipulation contained in the contract against the assignment or hypothecation of Wenzel's contract rights was a valid, integral part of the contract itself.

Mueller v. Northwestern University, 195 Ill. 236, 88 Am. St. Rep. 194, 63 N. E. 110; Barringer v. Bes Line Constr. Co. 23 Okla. 131, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597, 99 Pac. 775; Zetterlund v. Texas Land & Cattle Co. 55 Neb. 355, 75 N. W. 860; Grigg v. Landis, 19 N. J. Eq. 350; Schearff v. Dodge, 33 Ark. 340; Marvel v. Ortlip, 3 Del. Ch. 9; Bonds-Foster Lumber Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Wash. 302, 101 Pac. 879; Devlin, Deeds, 3d ed. § 850a.

Plaintiff slept on any rights which he might have had, and cannot at this time be permitted to assert his alleged right against another who has not only acquired the equitable, but also the full legal, estate to the premises involved.

Jones v. Rush, 156 Mo. 364, 57 S. W. 118; Hayden v. Huff, 60 Neb. 625, 83 N. W. 920; Peters v. Huff, 63 Neb. 99, 88 N. W. 179; Bruce v. Vogel, 38 Mo. 105; McNary v. Southworth, 58 Ill. 473.

The holder of a junior equity, by acquiring the legal title before he has notice of a prior equity, obtains the superior right.

Carlisle v. Jumper, 81 Ky. 282; Newton v. McLean, 41 Barb. 285; Rexford v. Rexford, 7 Lans. 6; Carroll v. Johnston, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 120; Hoult v. Donahue, 21 W. Va. 294; Fitzsimmons v. Ogden, 7 Cranch, 2, 3 L. ed. 249; Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271, 26 L. ed. 1087.

Messrs. C. W. Hookway and D. J. O'Connell for respondent.

Flisk, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the district court of McHenry County, decreeing the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage in plaintiff's favor. The appeal is upon the judgment roll proper; appellants' contention being that the conclusions of the trial court are not warranted by the findings of fact. Such findings of fact are in substance as follows:

That on and prior to March 20, 1906, the defendant Dakota Development Company was the owner in fee of the real estate in controversy, as disclosed by the public records in the office of the register of deeds. On such date this company entered into an executory contract with defendant Carl F. Wenzel, in the usual form, whereby, for a stated consideration of $100, $35 of which was paid in cash and the balance to be paid in equal instalments on March 20, 1907, and March 30, 1908, with interest, it promised and agreed to sell and convey such premises to the said Wenzel, such contract obligating the purchaser to pay all taxes and assessments levied, assessed, or imposed upon the premises in each year, and also contained a stipulation that "no assignment or transfer of any interest in and to this agreement or the lands described, less than the whole thereof, will be recognized by said vendor under any circumstances or in any event whatever, and no assignment shall be binding upon the vendor unless approved by its president." It also contained a stipulation "that time is to be the very essence of this agreement." Such contract also contained other stipulations relative to the vendor's right to declare a forfeiture in case the vendee failed in any respect to comply with his part of the contract, but we deem it unnecessary to set such provisions out in extenso.

Defendant Wenzel entered into the possession of the premises and constructed a dwelling house thereon, which he and his family occupied as their homestead until about January 20, 1908, when he sold and assigned such contract to defendant M. C. Krupp.

On April 17, 1907, Wenzel and wife, for a valuable consideration, executed and delivered to plaintiff their promissory note for the sum of $914.70, payable on November 1st thereafter, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and to secure the payment thereof they executed and delivered to plaintiff a mortgage on the land in controversy, which was filed in the office of the register of deeds of McHenry county on April 18, 1907, and recorded in book 31 of mortgages, at page 516.

That such note and mortgage have not been paid, and plaintiff is the present owner and holder thereof.

That Carl F. Wenzel paid to the Dakota Development Company the sum of $35 at the time of the execution of the contract for deed, but made default in the payment due March 20, 1907, and the same was not paid until after the assignment of such contract to defendant Krupp, as hereinafter set forth. That such contract for deed was at no time recorded or filed for record in the office of the register of deeds of McHenry county, and the record title of the premises at all times up to January 29, 1908, remained in the Dakota Development Company.

On or about January 20, 1908, Wenzel, while in possession of said land as his homestead, entered into negotiations with defendant Krupp for the sale to him of the contract for deed aforesaid, and the premises therein described, upon the terms that such contract was to be assigned to Krupp, who was to receive a warranty deed of the premises direct from the development company. Wenzel and wife thereupon assigned their interest in such contract to Krupp, and the latter paid to the development company the amount then remaining due upon said contract ($65 and interest), and Krupp also paid to Wenzel the agreed consideration of $1,000, less the payment aforesaid to the development company; and the development company did not, nor did its president or any one of its authorized officials, have any knowledge or actual notice of the execution or delivery of the mortgage to the plaintiff aforesaid.

That defendant Krupp purchased Wenzel's interest in such contract in good faith and without any actual notice or knowledge of the existence of plaintiff's mortgage, and he had no intent to cheat or defraud the plaintiff, but acted in absolute good faith in the making of said purchase, and purchased and paid for the same in utter ignorance of the plaintiff's mortgage, but he knew that Wenzel and family were living on and occupying said premises, but had no notice or knowledge of such mortgage other than that imparted by the record thereof.

On January 24, 1908, the development company duly executed and delivered to Krupp a warranty deed in the usual form, conveying the premises to him, which deed contained the usual covenants, and which was duly filed for record on January 29, 1908.

The trial court also found that the defendant Wenzel was on March 3, 1910, adjudged a bankrupt in the Federal court, and on June 22, 1910, that court, in due form, discharged him from all debts and provable claims; the notes held by plaintiff being scheduled in such bankruptcy court.

Upon such findings of fact the district court made conclusions of law favorable to plaintiff, adjudging a foreclosure of his mortgage.

Among other conclusions, the trial court found that, at the time of the execution of the mortgage by Wenzel, he had a mortgageable interest in and to the said premises by virtue of the contract for deed, and that the recording of such mortgage was due and legal notice to all the world of the rights of the plaintiff as mortgagee, and that defendant Krupp therefore had constructive notice of such mortgage at the time he purchased the assignment of the contract for deed to the said premises, and the conveyance of the premises to him by the development company was subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage.

From the above it is apparent that the crucial question for decision is whether appellant Krupp, who, as the trial court found, in good faith and for value purchased an assignment of the Wenzel contract and a deed of the premises from its codefendant, the development company, without any actual knowledge of the plaintiff's mortgage, was nevertheless affected with constructive notice thereof so as to confer upon plaintiff a lien under his mortgage superior and paramount to the rights of such defendant. In answering this question we must bear in mind the fact, as found by the trial court, that the contract for deed executed and delivered by the development company to Wenzel was not entitled to record, nor was the same disclosed in any way by the public records, and, as far as such records disclosed, Wenzel had no interest whatever in the property in controversy, but the same stood in the name of and was owned exclusively by the development company. It is no doubt true that Wenzel, by such executory contract of purchase which gave him possession, acquired an equitable interest in such property which he might sell or mortgage (Cummings v. Duncan, 22 N. D. 534, 134 N. W. 712, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 976), and it is likewise no doubt true that his possession under the contract operated to convey notice to the world of his equities thereunder. But Wenzel's interest under such contract was cognizable merely in equity, not in law. Miller v. Shelburn, 15 N. D. 182, 107 N. W. 51; Cummings v. Duncan, supra. His possession under such executory contract operated, no doubt, as notice to the world of his equities thereunder. It is, however, quite a different proposition to say that such possession constituted notice of the rights of persons claiming to hold as assignees, vendees, or mortgagees of such equitable interest.

Was appellant Krupp, under the facts, charged with constructive notice of plaintiff's mortgage? As stated by appellant's counsel, this suggests two main inquiries: First, Was the mortgage a conveyance within the meaning of the recording laws? Second, Was it a conveyance in the chain of title?

Plaintiff's right to recover depends upon an affirmative answer to both of these questions. Counsel for appellant assert, with apparent confidence in the correctness of their position, that both of such questions must receive a negative answer, and they have presented a very able and ingenious argument in support of their contention. They apparently concede that under the L.R.A.1918C.

general statutory rule in other states, either in express terms or by judicial construction, the record of an instrument conveying or encumbering a mere equitable estate or interest, as well as a legal estate or interest, operates to give constructive notice thereof, but they seek to differentiate our recording act from the statutes of other states, and contend for a construction eliminating from its operation mere equitable interests or liens. As suggested by them, it is undoubtedly true that the doctrine of constructive notice by recording instruments is of purely statutory creation, and that the recording of an instrument not within the statute does not impart constructive notice thereof. This, of course, is elementary. 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 646, and cases cited.

The recording acts of this state are embraced in §§ 5038, 5039, and 5042, Rev. Codes, 1905, Comp. Laws, 1913, §§ 5594, 5595, 5598.

Section 5038 reads in part as follows: "Every conveyance by deed, mortgage or otherwise, of real estate within this state, shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county where such real estate is situated, and every such conveyance not so recorded shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, of the same real estate, or any part or portion thereof, whose conveyance, whether in the form of a warranty deed, or deed of bargain and sale, deed of quitclaim and release, of the form in common use, or otherwise, is first duly recorded. . . ."

Section 5039 defines the term "conveyance" as used in the last section as embracing "every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged or encumbered, or by which the title to any real property may be affected, except wills, and powers of attorney."

Section 5042 provides: "An unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof; but knowledge of the record of an instrument out of the chain of title does not constitute such notice."

The first clause of the section last quoted constituted the entire section as originally enacted, but in 1899 the legislature, by chapter 167, Laws of 1899, added thereto the latter clause which, no doubt, as counsel state, was for the purpose of changing the rule announced by this court in Doran v. Dazey, 5 N. D. 167, 57 Am. St. Rep. 550, 64 N. W. 1023. In that case it was held that actual knowledge of the record of an instrument out of the chain of title was constructive notice of the original instrument and of the rights of the parties under it, and by such amendment the rule was changed so that now mere knowledge of the record of an instrument out of the chain of title does not constitute notice thereof.

Our first inquiry, therefore, is whether plaintiff's mortgage, which covered Wenzel's equitable interest under his executory contract to purchase the real property in question, is such an instrument as was entitled to be recorded. In other words, Was such mortgage a "conveyance," within the meaning of the recording laws aforesaid? The able counsel for appellant argue that it was not; their line of reasoning being that the executory contract for the purchase of the property by Wenzel, and under which he took possession of the property, gave him no estate or interest in the property, but merely a chose in action. They criticize and attempt to differentiate the holding of the Michigan court in Balen v. Mercier, 75 Mich. 42, 42 N. W. 666, wherein it was held that the vendee under such an executory contract acquired an interest in the land which could be sold, assigned, or mortgaged, and counsel assert that this court, in the cases of Miller v. Shelburn, 15 N. D. 182, 107 N. W. 51, and Cummings v. Duncan, supra, expressly held contrary to the Michigan holding in the above case. Counsel are in error in this respect. In Miller v. Shelburn, it is true, it was held that at law such an executory contract "produces no effect upon the respective estates and titles of the parties, and creates no interest in nor lien or charge upon the land itself. The vendor remains, to all intents, the owner of the land; he can convey it to a third person free from any legal claim or encumbrance. . . . In short, the vendee obtains at law no real property nor interest in real property." But the court expressly recognized the universal rule that in equity such contracts are regarded as transferring to the vendee in possession an equitable estate or interest which he may sell, assign, or mortgage, as stated by the Michigan court, and in Cummings v. Duncan, such equitable rule was also recognized. We there expressly held that the vendee's equitable interest in the real property under such a contract could be levied upon and sold under execution. Surely if this be true, and there can be no doubt upon this proposition, then such vendee had an estate or interest in the land which he could sell, assign, or mortgage, and such is, as we understand it, the universal holding of the courts.

In support of the correctness of our views, we will content ourselves by citing 27 Cyc. 1037, and cases cited, from which we quote: "The purchaser under an executory contract for the sale of land, or a bond for title, being in possession and having partly performed his part of the contract, although the legal title remains in the vendor, has an interest in the premises which he may mortgage to a third person."

The fact that in the technical legal sense no estate or interest in the real property is conveyed to the vendee under such a contract is not controlling. Wenzel clearly had a mortgageable interest in the real property under all the authorities. 27 Cyc. 1037 and 1139, and cases cited. Houghton v. Allen, 2 Cal. Unrep. 780, 14 Pac. 641; Jones v. Lapham, 15 Kan. 540; Laughlin v. Braley, 25 Kan. 147; Crane v. Turner, 67 N. Y. 437; Smith v. Patton, 12 W. Va. 541; Muehlberger v. Schilling (Sup.) 19 N. Y. S. R. 1, 3 N. Y. Supp. 705; Scott v. Farnam, 55 Wash. 336, 104 Pac. 639; Heard v. Heard, 181 Ala. 230, 61 So. 343; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 136.

Do our recording laws include such a mortgage? We are entirely satisfied that this question must also receive an affirmative answer. The contention of appellant's counsel to the contrary is, we think, based upon an unwarranted and erroneous construction of our statute. We are unable to distinguish our law from the Michigan law and the corresponding statutes in most states. The fact that the Michigan statute, in defining the word "conveyance" as used in its Recording Law, in addition to the language in § 5039 of our Code, adds the words, "in law or equity," does not make their statute broader than ours. We think the statute would convey the same meaning without these words, and they were evidently inserted through a superabundance of precaution. Furthermore, the language in the first portion of the section, "the term conveyance . . . shall be construed to embrace every instrument . . . by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged or assigned," clearly was intended to cover a mortgage of an equitable title. In support of our views, see Clark v. Lyster, 84 C. C. A. 27, 155 Fed. 513, 27 Cyc. 1157, and cases cited in note 28 on page 1158; also 1 Jones, Mortg. § 476.

Having reached the conclusion that plaintiff's mortgage was entitled to record under our recording acts aforesaid, it only remains for us to determine whether the record thereof imparted constructive notice to defendant Krupp at the time he purchased an assignment of Wenzel's contract and procured the deed from Wenzel's grantor, the Dakota Development Company. In considering this question, it is important to bear in mind the fact that Krupp knew that Wenzel was in possession of the premises, asserting equitable ownership under the contract of purchase, and that he expressly recognized Wenzel's contract rights by purchasing from him an assignment thereof.

In the light of these facts can Krupp successfully urge that Wenzel's mortgage to plaintiff was out of the chain of title, and hence, under § 5042, Rev. Codes, Comp. Laws 1913, § 5598, the record of such mortgage did not constitute notice thereof to him? We think not. The basic fallacy in appellant's argument, as we now view it, consists in the unwarranted assumption that such mortgage, as to him, was out of the chain of title. The reverse is true. He dealt with Wenzel and therefore was bound in law to know, and in fact did know, that he was the equitable owner of the premises and that his equitable title came from the Dakota Development Company through such contract. He was also bound in law to know, therefore, that Wenzel had a mortgageable interest in the premises, and that he might have sold, assigned, or mortgaged such interest, and the conveyance in either form would have been entitled to record. As to Krupp, therefore, the chain of title did not stop with the development company, but the last link in such chain was in Wenzel. He was therefore charged with constructive notice of plaintiff's mortgage and bought subject thereto. It would have been entirely different had he dealt alone with the development company, in ignorance of Wenzel's rights. In such event § 5042, supra, would have afforded him protection, but under the facts it can have no application.

As said in 1 Jones on Mortgages, § 476: "The registry of a conveyance of an equitable title is notice to a subsequent purchaser of the same interest or title from the same grantor. . . . The record of a mortgage or other conveyance which is entitled to be recorded operates as constructive notice to subsequent purchasers claiming under the same grantor, or through one who is the common source of title,"—citing Edwards v. McKernan, 55 Mich. 520, 526, 22 N. W. 20.

See also Jones v. Lapham, 15 Kan. 540, wherein Judge Brewer, while on the supreme bench of Kansas, in speaking to the point, said: "As to Maggie Murray, it appears that she had knowledge of the equitable interest, but not of the mortgage. Hull, however, was in possession of the lots, and had made valuable improvements on them. These improvements she bought. Now § 20 of the Conveyance Act (Gen. Stat. p. 187) provides that 'every such instrument in writing [and this, by prior description, includes mortgages, and mortgages upon equitable interests] shall from the time of filing the same with the register of deeds for record impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof; and all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed to purchase with notice.' While this general provision, as respects notice, may be limited, so far as relates to conveyances or mortgages of equitable interests, by the condition of the legal title, and the knowledge which the holders thereof have of the existence of the equity, as indicated in Kirkwood v. Koester, 11 Kan. 471, yet, aside from that limitation, it is of controlling force. Whoever buys a legal estate, having knowledge of an outstanding equitable interest, is chargeable with notice of any record of conveyance or encumbrance thereof. Whoever buys an equitable interest in land is also chargeable with like notice. In fact, knowledge of an equitable interest carries with it notice of the condition of such interest as is apparent from the public records."

We understand that the rule thus stated by Judge Brewer is generally recognized and well established, and we do not think that such rule is changed in this state by chapter 167, Laws of 1899, heretofore referred to.

We do not think there is any merit in appellant's last contention, to the effect that the contract under which Wenzel occupied the land in express terms prohibited any assignment thereof without the vendor's consent, and that such a stipulation is valid, and a violation thereof confers no rights on the assignee. The vendor, the Dakota Development Company, is not here urging any such question, and certainly Krupp, who dealt with Wenzel in recognition of his equitable interest, cannot be heard to raise such question.

We think it clear that Krupp purchased with constructive notice of plaintiff's mortgage, and that therefore the district court did not err in its conclusions and judgment in plaintiff's favor.

We think the judgment appealed from is correct except in one particular. Such judgment in effect decrees that plaintiff's mortgage covers not only the equities held by the mortgagor, Wenzel, but also the interests purchased by Krupp from the development company. Clearly this cannot be true. Wenzel, of course, could hypothecate nothing that he did not own. The interest of the development company consisted of the legal title held in trust as security for the payment of the remainder due it on the purchase price. To the extent of such interest, the development company manifestly had rights superior to those of the mortgagee; and Krupp, by his purchase from such company, succeeded to such rights. Hence the decree should recognize and protect these rights in some proper manner. It seems to us that a proper method for so doing would be to adjudge that, out of the proceeds of the sale, defendant Krupp be first paid or reimbursed the amount paid by him to the development company as the balance remaining due on the purchase price, with interest thereon from the date of such payment.

The District Court will modify its judgment accordingly, and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed. No costs shall be taxed to either party on the appeal.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

L. I. BRANNAN, Appt.,

v.

JOHN B. MARSHALL.

(184 Ala. 375, 63 So. 1007.)

Record — notice — deed from stranger to title — registered encumbrance.

The rule that one who purchases from a stranger to the record title is charged with constructive notice of all registered conveyances executed by his grantor to other persons, which purport to affect his title, is applicable where a purchaser of an apparently perfect record title, who on that account would not have been chargeable with notice of conveyances outside the chain of title, took at the same time a quitclaim deed from his grantor's brother as a precaution against any claim arising from the relationship: since he is, in law, claiming and holding under each of his grantors.

For other cases, see Records and Recording Laws, III. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 27, 1913.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Mobile County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to establish priority of mortgage and for foreclosure. Affirmed.

Statement by Somerville, J.:

The agreed statement of facts shows the following: Eliza Kiernan was the owner of the land in suit. She conveyed it by warranty deed to Francis Kiernan on November 26, 1910, and he mortgaged it to complainant for value on December 29, 1910. This mortgage was filed for record on January 18, 1911; but the deed from Eliza Kiernan to the mortgagor was not filed for record until July 12, 1911. On July 11, 1911, Eliza Kiernan conveyed this land by warranty deed for value to the respondent Brannan, who in turn mortgaged it to respondent Cowan for value on February 6, 1912. After Brannan had contracted for the purchase of the land from Eliza Kiernan, and after his attorney had examined the deed record, and found her title perfect thereto, and the deed had been drafted, Brannan's attorney requested said Francis Kiernan, who was the brother of Eliza, and also her agent and representative in the sale of the land to Brannan, that he make to Brannan a quitclaim deed to the land. To this he assented, and, at the same moment when he delivered to them Eliza's deed duly executed, he delivered to them also his own deed quitclaiming, releasing, and conveying the land to Brannan; the consideration being $1, and the consideration paid to Eliza being $300. Neither Brannan nor his attorneys had any actual knowledge or notice of the mortgage given by Francis Kiernan to complainant, nor that either of them owned or claimed any interest in the land. In his answer Brannan admits that, through his attorneys, he secured the quitclaim deed from Francis Kiernan, with the explanation that it was merely for the purpose of estopping him from subsequently claiming the land by virtue of his relationship to Eliza Kiernan. The chancellor decreed that the facts showed constructive notice to Brannan and Cowan of complainant's mortgage, and that they were not entitled to protection against it as innocent purchasers, and decreed the relief prayed for.

Messrs. Gordon & Edington for appellant.

Mr. D. B. Cobbs for appellee.

Somerville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is well settled by numerous decisions in this state that the registration of a conveyance executed by one who is a stranger to the title as it is shown by the records—that is, by a grantor who does not appear in the chain of recorded conveyances or other title records as one who has acquired an interest in the land in question—is not constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser in the regular chain of title. Fenno v. Sayre, 3 Ala. 458; Gimon v. Davis, 36 Ala. 589; Scotch Lumber Co. v. Sage, 132 Ala. 598, 32 So. 607, 90 Am. St. Rep. 932; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Gardner, 131 Ala. 599, 32 So. 622.

It is, however, also settled that one who purchases from a stranger to the record title is charged with constructive notice of all registered conveyances executed by his grantor to other persons, which purport to affect the title; and further, that the grantee's knowledge of such conveyances is sufficient to suggest title or claim of title in the grantor, and hence to demand a reasonable inquiry with respect thereto.

Note. — For taking deed from stranger to record title as constructive notice of instruments of record to or by him, see annotation following this case, post, 787. L.R.A.1918C.

This doctrine has been applied where a purchaser under an unregistered deed afterwards procured his grantor to execute a new deed to a trustee in trust for his wife, which was registered, and the title of the plaintiff, claiming under an execution sale against the husband, was held superior to the title of one who subsequently purchased by a deed from the trustee in which the wife and husband joined as joint grantors. Gimon v. Davis, 36 Ala. 589. It was stated in that case that if the defendant had not held under the husband, and if the husband had been entirely outside of the plaintiff's chain of title, the result would have been different.

The rule of Gimon v. Davis was reaffirmed and applied in a later case where the same constructive notice was imputed to a remote grantee in the regular chain of record title—an apparent stranger to the title, though in fact the owner, having joined in one of the antecedent conveyances with the apparent record owner. Creel v. Keith, 148 Ala. 233, 41 So. 780.

In Scotch Lumber Co. v. Sage, 132 Ala. 598, 606, 90 Am. St. Rep. 932, 32 So. 607, the application of the doctrine was denied, on the ground that the claimant under the record title was not in privity with the unregistered owner, who was not a grantor in his chain of title, and that he was not claiming under the latter.

The question to be determined in the present case is whether the fact that Brannan—who purchased from Eliza Kiernan an apparently perfect record title, and simultaneously purchased also from Francis Kiernan by a quitclaim deed—took separate deeds, delivered at the same instant of time, differentiates this case in principle from Gimon v. Davis and Creel v. Keith, where the stranger to the record title joined in the same deed with the apparent owner.

Appellant insists that it is thereby differentiated, and that the rule of those cases does not apply, because Brannan's purchase from Francis Kiernan was merely collateral and incidental to the real purchase from Eliza, and was but a precautionary afterthought; that Francis was not supposed to have any title to release or convey; that he is not in Brannan's chain of title; and that, on the face of the transaction, it is clear that Brannan never claimed title nor held under Francis, but entirely under Eliza, who alone appeared to have any title.

It is obviously not necessary that the stranger grantor should be one of an unbroken series of grantors and grantees, for this would deny the rule in all cases to which it could apply; and it is also obvious, we think, that one who contemporaneously procures whatever number of conveyances, from whatever number of grantors, and takes possession of the land conveyed, is, in law, "claiming and holding" under each and all of them—however he may differ in his estimation of the value and effect of his several deeds.

The use of the terms in this connection imports no more than the privity of estate that technically results from the relation of grantor and grantee in a deed of conveyance, prior to or contemporaneously with the acquisition of the title of the record owner, and this seems to be the essential basis for our decisions in the cases referred to.

Appellant's case, as presented by the record, is a hard one; but we are unable to distinguish it in principle from the Gimon and Creel Cases, supra, and by those cases our decision must be controlled.

It results that the decree must be affirmed.

Dowdell, Ch. J., and McClellan and Sayre, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Taking deed from stranger to record title as constructive notice of instruments of record to or by him.

For conveyance recorded before grantor obtained title as notice, see annotation following Richardson v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Corp. post, 792.

It will be observed that it is the doctrine of BRANNAN v. MARSHALL, ante, 786, that the purchaser from a stranger to the record title, prior to or contemporaneously with his acquisition of the record title, takes constructive notice of prior instruments of record made by such stranger.

This doctrine is supported by the cases of Gimon v. Davis (1860) 36 Ala. 589, and Creel v. Keith (1906) 148 Ala. 233, 41 So. 780, which are sufficiently referred to in the opinion in BRANNAN v. MARSHALL.

In Tarbell v. West (1881) 86 N. Y. 280, it was held that the registry of a mortgage of his interest in a firm by one partner, where the title to the firm's real estate is in the other partner, is no notice to a purchaser of the legal title, the court stating that it would have been notice to a purchaser from the mortgagor of his interest.

But under a West Virginia statute the rule was held otherwise. There the holder of an equitable title executed a trust deed of the land to secure a debt to B, which was recorded; thereafter he contracted to sell the land to C, and later procured a deed from the owner of the legal title to C. It was held that the title of C was superior to the trust deed, as such title was not derived from the person who made the trust deed within the meaning of the statute providing that "a purchaser shall not, under this chapter, or chapter 75, be affected by the record of a deed or contract made by a person under whom his title is not derived, nor by the record of deed or contract made by any person before the date of a deed or contract made to or with such person, which is duly admitted to record, and from which the title of such person is derived." Hoult v. Donahue (1883) 21 W. Va. 294. Followed in Sands v. Beardsley (1889) 32 W. Va. 594, 9 S. E. 925.

It will be observed that in Simonson v. Wenzel, ante, 780, it is held that one buying an equitable title not of record from one in possession has constructive notice of recorded conveyances of such title by his grantor.

In Eversole v. Virginia Iron, Coal, & Coke Co. (1906) 122 Ky. 649, 92 S. W. 593, one taking a deed from a stranger to the legal title who had the equitable title, and was in possession, was held to take with constructive notice of an earlier recorded deed by such stranger.

So, in Digman v. McCollum (1871) 47 Mo. 372, where A made title bond to B who assigned it to C who, being in possession, assigned it to D who paid A the price and took deed from him, it was held that D had constructive notice of a recorded trust deed made by C before he assigned the title bond to D, although C had no title of record. In this case the purchaser at a sale by the trustee in the trust deed brought into court and tendered the amount D paid A.

In Martin v. Brown (1860) 4 Minn. 284, Gil. 201, A conveyed to B by a deed which was never recorded; B conveyed to C, the deed being recorded, and C, after being in possession twenty-two months under his deed, got a quitclaim from A and put it on record, and five months later conveyed to his brother D who had lived with him on the land since he received his first deed. It was held that D was chargeable with notice of the first deed to C and of the unrecorded deed from A to B, and consequently with notice of a recorded mortgage made by B when B took title. The court considered that the fact of C's possession for twenty-two months before he took the quitclaim deed, together with the character of that deed, were sufficient to have put D upon an inquiry which would have disclosed the facts.

Where the recording statute requires a numerical index, a recorded mortgage out of the chain of title is constructive notice. Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Tinker (1908) 22 S. D. 427, 118 N. W. 700, 18 Ann. Cas. 11. In that case a mortgage had been made by one in possession under a contract of purchase, who afterwards sold to another who took the title from the owner of the legal title. His remote grantee was held to take subject to the mortgage. B. B. B.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS MONROE RICHARDSON, Respt.,
v.

ATLANTIC COAST LUMBER CORPORATION, Appt.

(93 S. C. 254, 75 S. E. 371.)

Estoppel — after-acquired title — rights of stranger to deed.

1. One who conveys real estate and subsequently reacquires the title from his grantee, having remained in possession during the interim, is not estopped to deny the L.R.A.1918C.

title of one who took a conveyance from the grantee before the latter acquired the title, although such conveyance was on record at the time he regained his title.

For other cases, see Records and Recording Laws, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — of first grantee.

2. One who takes a deed covering property not owned by the grantor is estopped, because of his failure to ascertain the state of his grantor's title, to set up title against its owner, who subsequently conveys to the grantor and then takes back a deed from him, remaining in possession in the interim, without notice of the former conveyance. For other cases, see Estoppel, III. i, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For conveyance recorded before grantor obtained title as notice, see annotation following this case, post, 792; and references therein to annotations on collateral points.

(July 22, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Marion County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for cutting timber on a certain tract of land. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. C. Woods for appellant.

Messrs. L. M. Gasque and A. F. Woods, for respondent:

A purchaser of real estate is not charged with constructive notice of the record of a deed executed and recorded before the grantor had any title or was connected with the title in any way by possession or otherwise.

Wadsworthville Poor School v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 168, 42 Am. St. Rep. 854, 18 S. E. 257, 891; Lake v. Shumate, 20 S. C. 23; Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Maltby, 8 Paige, 361; Oliphant v. Burns, 146 N. Y. 218, 40 N. E. 980; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 1 Leach, C. L. 146, 1 East, P. C. 468, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. 734; Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Doswell v. Buchanan, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Blake v. Graham, 6 Ohio St. 580, 67 Am. Dec. 362; Woods v. Farmere, 7 Watts, 382, 32 Am. Dec. 772; Calder v. Chapman, 52 Pa. 359, 91 Am. Dec. 163; M'Lanahan v. Reeside, 9 Watts, 508, 36 Am. Dec. 136; Bingham v. Kirkland, 34 N. J. Eq. 234; Ford v. Unity Church Soc. 23 L.R.A. 561, and note, 120 Mo. 498, 41 Am. St. Rep. 711, 25 S. W. 394; Wheeler v. Young, 76 Conn. 44, 65 Atl. 670.

Gary, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal raises the question whether the record of a deed conveying certain lands with the usual covenants of warranty, which includes a tract of which the grantor was not then owner, but which was subsequently conveyed to him by the owner, and afterwards reconveyed to the owner by him, affords such constructive notice as will prevent the owner from relying upon the plea of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice against the grantee of the recorded deed, when it appears that the owner was in the actual possession of his land, under a previously recorded deed, at the time it was wrongfully conveyed.

The facts are thus stated in the brief of L.R.A.1918C.

the appellant's attorney: "B. Talley Richardson and T. Monroe Richardson are father and son, and reside together in Button's Neck township, Marion county. On February 24, 1899, B. Talley Richardson conveyed to Tilghman Lumber Company, with general warranty, certain timber and easements on 168 acres, more or less. This conveyance was duly recorded. By successive conveyances, also all duly recorded, the timber and easements conveyed by Richardson to Tilghman Lumber Company became the property of Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation. It subsequently transpired that Richardson did not own all of the land within the boundaries, on which he undertook to convey the timber and easements, but that the boundaries in his grant included about 15 acres that belonged to his son, T. Monroe Richardson. On October 22, 1904, while the grant to Tilghman Lumber Company was still of force, T. Monroe Richardson conveyed to B. Talley Richardson the 15 acres in question, and B. Talley Richardson became the owner in fee of all of the land embraced within the boundaries of the timber deed. B. Talley Richardson retained title to the 15 acres until November 8, 1907, a little over three years, when he conveyed the same back to T. Monroe Richardson. In 1908 the Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, claiming under the grant to Tilghman Lumber Company, which was still of force, entered upon the entire tract of land and cut the timber therefrom, including the 15 acres which originally belonged to T. Monroe Richardson, which T. Monroe Richardson had conveyed to his father, B. Talley Richardson, and which B. Talley Richardson had reconveyed to his son, T. Monroe Richardson. T. Monroe Richardson then sued for damages for the timber cut, and recovered a verdict for $750 actual damages and $150 punitive damages. The Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation in due time appealed to this court, and the cause now comes to this court on the exceptions set forth in the record."

To which should be added the statement that the respondent, T. M. Richardson, went into possession of the 15 acres of land under a deed from J. T. and Martha Dimery, dated the 3d of May, 1892, which was recorded on the 21st of July, 1892, and he has continued in actual possession thereof without interruption, except by the alleged trespass of the defendant, until the commencement of this action.

In the language of the appellant's attorney, the ruling of his Honor, the presiding judge, was as follows: "Defendant claimed at the trial below, and still claims under this state of facts, that when B. Talley Richardson acquired the title to the land on which his son's timber stood, under his general warranty, the title to the timber which stood on this land immediately inured to the benefit of the grantees of the Tilghman Lumber Company, and became vested in them. His Honor ruled and charged that, had B. Talley Richardson continued to hold title to the land which originally belonged to his son, he would be estopped from denying the title of Tilghman Lumber Company's grantees, but that his son would not be estopped from denying such title, unless the son had actual notice of the claim of the grantee of the Tilghman Lumber Company; and, further, that the fact that the deed of the Tilghman Lumber Company and its grantees was recorded was no notice with which the son was chargeable." We shall discuss this question at some length, as it is, perhaps, one of the most important affecting the title to real estate.

The principle is settled beyond controversy in this state that, if a grantor conveys land with the usual covenants of warranty, to which at that time he has no title, but afterwards acquires a title, he is estopped from claiming that he did not have title at the time of the sale; and the after-acquired title inures to the benefit of his grantee. Reeder v. Craig, 3 M'Cord, L. 411; Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. C. 592; Gaffney v. Peeler, 21 S. C. 55. But the question now under consideration has not heretofore been judicially determined in this state.

The principle is thus stated in Pom. Eq. Jur. vol. 2, § 658: "If the records show a good title vested in the vendor at a certain date, and nothing done by him after that time to impair or encumber the title, it would seem that the policy of the registry acts is thereby accomplished; the purchaser is protected; he is not bound to inquire further back, and to ascertain whether the vendor has done acts which may impair his title, prior to the time at which it was vested in him as indicated by the records. This view is supported by many decisions—it seems by the weight of authority—which hold that a purchaser need not prosecute a search for deeds or mortgages made by his own vendor, further back than the time at which the title is shown by the records to have been vested in such vendor; or in other words, a purchaser is not bound by the registry of deeds or mortgages from his vendor made prior to that time."

When B. T. Richardson reconveyed the land to T. M. Richardson on the 8th of November, 1907, there was nothing upon the record indicating that B. T. Richardson had ever acquired any other title than that derived from T. M. Richardson on the 22d of October, 1904.

